Little Daylight Activity

Only a few scouting Axis planes were seen scattered over parts of England during the daylight hours of the first day of 1941.

The evening's communique of the Air Ministry and Ministry for Home Security, issued at about the same time as London't first night alert, said of the day's German activity: "There is nothing to report."

R. A. F. Conducts Daylight Raids

The British announced yesterday a series of daylight raids against Nazi targets which neutral observers regarded as the most daring and significant blow of this winter's European air war.

Attacks Tuesday on selected objectives from the nearby Dutch coast to the Rhineland were disclosed by the Air Ministry to have been carried out with the loss of only two planes.

Neutral sources said this accomplishment—on the last day of 1940—indicated not only the growing strength of the R. A. F.'s bomber squadrons but the ability of new long-range fighters to protect a striking force far from home airdromes.

Nazi Anti-Aircraft Ship Hit

The Air Ministry, listing the R. A. F.'s targets during the daylight hours Tuesday, said bombs were seen to hit a factory at the Rhineland city of Cologne; that an anti-aircraft ship (something new in German coastal defense, apparently) was put out of action off the Dutch port of Flushing and that the docks at Ijmuiden and objectives at Rotterdam, the Netherlands, were attacked.

Also "an important bridge" near Emmerich, on the right bank of the Rhine, was bombed and demolished, official sources stated, and an airdrome building at Haamstede, on the Dutch island of Schouwen, was damaged.

The Blenheim (British-built) bombers, they said, flew through constant anti-aircraft fire on both land and sea.

Respite Welcome To London

The year-end silence in London was as welcome as the tenth round bell to a tiring fighter, for the British are confronted with an entirely new German air scheme—mass bombardment by incendiary bombs.

Firemen, with their hose dried by the raid recess, were at full strength for the next onslaught.

Plans for quick assemblage of fire-fighting equipment in the area around London were worked out by officials and the recruiting of a huge army of civilian "fire watchers" was begun.

1,180 Hours Of Raid Warnings

During 1940 London had 1,180 hours of air-raid warnings—forty-nine whole days if placed end to end—and the sirens sounded the "raiders approaching" signal 400 times.

Defense forces are prepared for continuation of the air war on the same or a larger scale.

Berlin Reports Attacks On British Shipping

Berlin, Jan. 1 (AP)—An attack by German warplanes on British naval and merchant ships off England's east coast in which several of the British vessels were damaged was reported tonight by DNB.

The official news agency said a direct hit was observed on one patrol boat while another patrol boat was seen to burst into flames. Bad weather, it said, prevented full observation of the effects of the attack, made by "armed reconnaissance planes."

Greece Reports Italian Network Of Forts Taken

Elaborate Defense Line at Klisura Falls and Tanks Fail in Sortie on Coast

ATHENS, Jan. 1 (AP).—Stemming fierce Italian counter-attacks, the Greeks were reported tonight to have captured an elaborate fortification line outside Klisura and to have turned back a tank assault along the coastal road to the Albanian port of Valona.

An official said the entire defense works, including machine gun nests and field guns, fell before the Greek advance in the snow-covered Klisura sector.

The system was described as deep, with inter-communicating trenches protected by double lines of barbed wire. A dozen heavy guns, fifteen machine guns, a number of trench mortars and automatic rifles were among materials left behind by the retreating Italians, the official said.

Efforts by tanks to halt the Greek advance along the coast, he continued, failed, and the Italians suffered heavy losses.

In the north, where weather conditions were bad, Greek troops were said to have occupied new heights. Greek planes machine-gunned and bombed enemy columns moving up to the front.

Premier Gen. John Metaxas declared in a New Year message that the Greeks were ready to fight "to the last breath until the enemy is exterminated."

"For this strife of ours—with full confidence it is right—we pray to God to ask His help," he said.

Italians Report Repulse Of Two Attacks in Libya

British Thrust Back at Bardia and Jarabub, Rome Hears

ROME, Jan. 1 (AP).—British attacks on Italian outposts in Libya were repulsed yesterday, the high command said today.

A communique said that the British had attacked an Italian outpost in the Bardia sector with armored cars, and that an attack had been made also on Jarabub, south of Bardia near the Egyptian frontier. Both attacks were thrown back, general headquarters of Italian armed forces said.

Activity in Albania was confined to scouting patrols and skirmishes between advanced units, the communique said.

Lictor Line Costs Up in Italy

ROME, Jan. 1 (AP).—The official gazette showed today that the cost of Italy's Lictor Line of forts on the Alpine frontier is rising. A decree in the gazette authorized the War Office to pay contractors more for materials used in the fortifications to meet "market conditions and burdens to which firms have been subjected." (The Lictor Line faces France, Switzerland and Germany.)

Call Wheeler Talk Impressive

ROME, Jan. 1 (AP)—Dispatches in the Italian press reported today that Senator Wheeler's speech criticizing President Roosevelt's policy toward the war caused "a very deep impression" in all circles in the United States. Fascist newspapers, however, did not comment on Mr. Wheeler's suggestion of "a working basis" for peace negotiations.

TENSION GROWS AS VICHY WAITS HITLER'S REPLY

Führer To Answer Petain Plan For Limited Collaboration

Marshal Fails To Give Any Hint Of Friction In His New Year Greeting

[By the Associated Press]

Vichy, France, Jan. 1—Tension noticeably increased in official circles tonight as the Government awaited, amid rumors of ruptured negotiations, Adolf Hitler's reply to the proposals of Chief of State Petain for limited French-German collaboration.

[A Reuters dispatch from Lisbon to London said negotiations between the two countries had been broken off, but this dispatch was not confirmed from other sources.]

The Government met all reports with silence, and at Marshal Petain's New Year's reception of foreign diplomats there was no indication of new friction in the negotiations. But Petain did tell those assembled:

"I am certain my country will resume its place among nations."

Negotiations At Standstill

Negotiations between Petain's Government and Germany have been at a stanstill since Naval Minister Jean Darlan took the old Marshal's latest proposals to Hitler somewhere in occupied France Christmas Day.

A reply was not expected before January 3, and the subsequent dead silence has caused a flood of rumors in Vichy.

In informed quarters, however, a German move to occupy unoccupied France suddenly is not expected. Instead these sources foresee a possible closing of the line of demarcation to cut communication between the two zones and thereby cut off food to occupied France except through Germany.

May Set Up Paris Regime

Germany might use this situation to force establishment of a friendly government in Paris, possibly under ousted Vice-Premier Pierre Laval. Laval still is in Paris.

Offsetting the possible food weapon of Hitler is the question of what might become of the French fleet and what the colonies, particularly those in North Africa, might do.

The fleet and most of the empire has sworn fealty to Petain, and in North Africa Gen. Maxime Weygand has at his command a sizeable colonial army.

A few parts of the empire have joined Gen. Charles de Gaulle's Free French movement, which probably would join forces with Weygand if the Franco-German armistice were denounced by Hitler.

De Gaulle 'Stay In' Test Declared Inconclusive

[By the Associated Press]

Bern, Switzerland, Jan. 1—The first "stay in" test of the strength of Gen. Charles de Gaulle's Free French movement in occupied and unoccupied France passed today without a clear decision.

For a week de Gaulle broadcast appeals to Frenchmen to remain indoors between 3 and 4 P. M. in occupied France and 2 and 3 P. M. in unoccupied France as a "protest" of sympathy for the Free French movement.

The demonstration was timed simultaneously for both areas since the occupied territory is on German time, an hour earlier than unoccupied France's.

Streets Bare

Streets were bare almost everywhere in both zones as the hour passed, but whether this bespoke a Frenchman's thoughts or de Gaulle and his movement or simply the day after the night before, when a Frenchman's fancy fondly turns to thoughts of a New Year's dinner and rest, could not be determined.

The hour de Gaulle chose was unusual in that it collided with his countrymen's beloved holiday dinner time.

In some French Alp and Riviera resorts, where the population is well acquainted with the British through the tourist trade, inhabitants indicated they had listened to and heeded de Gaulle.

Streets Deserted

During the "stay-in" hour the streets were virtually deserted, but promptly at 3 o'clock hundreds of promenaders poured out of homes for strolls along such avenues at Cannes' Boulevard des Anglais.

However, in Lyon and Marseille it was impossible to tell what was a pro-de Gaulle demonstration and what was just New Year's Day relaxation.

Officials at Vichy understandably declined any comment. As usual, the city was wild with rumors that Chief of State Philippe Petain still expected to achieve some show of this country's desire for German collaboration within limits.

One well-founded report from informed sources in Vichy said twelve to eighteen German divisions were concentrated on the eastern frontier of the occupied zone, but whether they were there for action or merely a threat remained to be seen.

SMUTS PREDICTS U.S. WILL ENTER WAR

Such Intervention Necessary for Britain to Win, Premier of South Africa States

NAZI 'MENACE' STRESSED

Roosevelt Leadership Praised —Choice Between a Free and a Slave World Is Cited

LONDON, Jan. 1 (AP)—General Jan Christiaan Smuts, World War veteran and now Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa, predicted today that the United States would intervene in the European war and said such intervention was necessary for Britain to win.

General Smuts, who directed British World War campaigns in South Africa and led his dominion into the present war against Germany, said in a New Year message to the world as published in London:

"Deeply as America desires to keep out of this war, they will find the necessity laid upon them and in the last resort they will not let freedom perish from the face of the earth.

"I feel assured that American intervention is necessary for victory and for the peace which must be shaped thereafter."

General Smuts said that the menace of Nazi Germany was such a real thing that he was "convinced that in the last resort America will not, as indeed she cannot afford to, stand out."

"Under the great and inspiring leadership of President Roosevelt," the statement continued, "she will once more freely and of her own choice dedicate herself to the greatest of human causes.

"In the spirit of Abraham Lincoln once more she will take her rightful place among the champions of a free world against a slave world."

Hitler Seen Exhausting Resources

The rest of General Smuts's address, as broadcast by the British Official Wireless and recorded by THE NEW YORK TIMES follows:

"The year, in spite of its black beginning, ends on a cheerful note and so far as Mussolini is concerned even on a comic note. One of the two powers in the Axis is a very sick man and the Axis is in a bad way. Britain with her own gathering strength and with that of the Empire and Commonwealth behind her, is much stronger than she was at the beginning of the year.

"Hitler's position has definitey deteriorated. He is rapidly exhausting his own resources and those of the countries he has overrun and the final upshot of his victories earlier in the year will be to surround Germany with a wall of implacable hate of all neighboring countries which before had been good and friendly neighbors to her—a blockade of hate established by herself, far worse than the blockade by the British fleet.

"The final harvest which she will reap from her criminal victories over innocent neighbors may and probably will be deep fear and fierce hatred which may make the conclusion of a real peace in Europe almost impossible. World opinion no longer regards German victory as certain or even probable. The attitude of the neutrals will become stiffer.

"The glamor of a German connection has disappeared. The possible alternative before Hitler has thus become definitely more limited. Hitler's initial failure against Britain and Italy's disaster in North Africa have seriously changed the situation and have narrowed the choices before Hitler. This fact and his own pride and instinct will in all probability lead him to a desperate plan of winning the war in Britain itself.

"While other moves will have to be carefully prepared against, the defeat of Hitler in the invasion of Britain must, therefore, be and remain the pivot of British war policy. They say Hitler will probably seek a decision in 1941. If he is going to stake his fortune on the successful invasion of Britain, there would be no object in delaying the attempt. I presume Hitler is fully prepared. The British war effort is growing rapidly and behind that expansion is the immense effort of the United States of America to provide Britain with war supplies. The longer the invasion is delayed the stronger veritably the defense will become. A position, to be favorable for Hitler, must, therefore, be sought as soon as possible. It may come very soon in the new year and in any case he is not likely to delay beyond 1941.

Special Reasons Possible

"Of course Hitler may have special reasons for delaying the invasion. He may wish to continue Britain's air attacks on an intensified scale to destroy Britain's industrial and transport resources and sap the people's morale. Or he may plan to intensify his campaign against British shipping with more U-boats. Or he may intend to give time to his third partner in the Axis to develop her aggressive policies in the Far East and so deflect American attention and her resources in that direction.

"I doubt whether she would succeed in any of these objects, but they may at least cause him to postpone the moment of striking. However, with Italy in mortal difficulties and the internal situation in Germany and their occupied territory deteriorating all the time, it is questionable whether he can afford to wait beyond 1941. When the attack does come off, Hitler will put all the vast strength of his incomparable war machine into it. For him and his Nazi order it will be a mortal issue—a question of life and death.

"But so, also, it will be for Britain, her empire and the whole British commonwealth too. And so it will be for the cause of freedom throughout the world. It will be Armageddon from which will issue either a new birth of human liberation or an eclipse of human spirit and the falling back to another dark age. The year may, therefore, be the most fateful year in modern history for the New World as much as for the Old.

"Consciousness of the immensity of the issues at stake and their world-wide reach has been rapidly growing in America. I feel convinced that in the last resource America will not, as indeed she cannot afford, to stand out."

this serious moment, our national saying that God helps those who help themselves.

"Let us remember another ancient truth, namely, that every nation must shape her own destiny. That is why we must be aware of the fact that it depends largely on us what 1941 brings."

Immediately after the address, the Premier boarded a train for Vienna. He was accompanied by his wife.

Although officially he was taking the trip only for the sake of his health—and was expected to consult specialists in Vienna—some observers believed he would talk with German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop or some other high Nazi official to learn what the Reich plans to do with its big army in the Balkans, and what part Bulgaria will be asked to play.

Philoff told the Bulgars "if we want to secure the vital interests of our country, if we want to secure a better future for our sons and grandsons, and if we genuinely want a happy new year, let us be ready to make all sacrifices imposed by the necessities of the moment for our well-being and success."

In Bulgaria: Unity Urged By Premier

[By the Associated Press]

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 1—Bulgarian Premier Bodgdan Philoff announced he would go to Vienna today for "medical consultation," then told Bulgars in a radio speech before leaving that "God helps those who help themselves."

The Premier spoke as Germany continued sending a steady stream of troops and materia' through Hungary to swell the already large Nazi army lined up close to Bulgaria's northern frontier.

Thanks Axis Leaders

The studious professor-Premier thanked the "great leaders of Germany and Italy" for their support in helping Bulgaria regain Dobruja from Rumania, then expressed his hope for a "better future for Bulgaria."

"But let us not forget," he said, "in

Scene Of Axis Sessions

Observers here recalled that Vienna, where conferences were held in which Rumania lost Transylvania to Hungary and southern Dobruja to Bulgaria, seemed to be a favorite place for the Axis to decide Balkan questions.

Philoff, however, has been kept away from his office for several days by kidney ulcers.

THANKS AXIS FOR GETTING BACK DOBRUJA

Trip Said To Be For Health, But He May Seek To Learn Hitler Plans

Minister Of Interior, In Favor Of Reich, Named Leader By Boris

[By the Associated Press]

London, Thursday, Jan. 2—The London Daily Mail reported early today it had picked up a radio broadcast by Joseph Stalin in which the Russian dictator declared "Soviet Russia is ready for every eventuality, and for this purpose is in a state of total mobilization."

[By the Associated Press]

Sofia, Jan. 1—Bulgarian Premier Bogdan Philoff, with a powerful German army steadily expanding in neighboring Rumania, dashed off to Vienna today "for his health," leaving the pro-Nazi Minister of the Interior to act as Premier in his absence.

Just before taking a train, Philoff made a New Year's radio address in which he thanked the Axis dictators for helping Bulgaria get back southern Dobruja from Rumania, but warned his people that the coming year might be a tough one.

Philoff's Vienna trip was described officially as for "medical consultation," but some observers believed his chief object was to learn what Adolt Hitler plans to do with Nazi troops in the Balkans and what part Bulgaria would be asked to play.

"God Helps Those . . ."

"God helps those who help themselves," the Premier told Bulgarians in his broadcast. "Let us remember another ancient truth: Namely, that every nation must shape her own destiny."

When Philoff left Sofia today King Boris III appointed dynamic Peter Grabovsky, Bulgaria's leading pro-Nazi and Minister of the Interior, as acting Premier.

Where Axis Takes Over

His trip to Vienna was considered especially significant as that city seems to be the favorite place for the Axis leaders to decide Balkan questions. It was there that the Axis dictated the arbitration award by which Rumania lost Transylvania to Hungary and southern Dobruja to Bulgaria.

The Premier, however, has been kept from his office several days by kidney ulcers, a fact which gave weight to the official explanation of his visit.

Reports from Budapest said the steady movement of German troops through eastern Hungary into Rumania continued. Hungarian censorship cloaked the extent of these movements, but the best available sources estimated the flow at 10,000 men a day with complete equipment.

Rumania was virtually blacked out by censorship, so it was difficult to ascertain just where German troops were being sent inside the little kingdom which has become little more than a Nazi protectorate.

Viewed As Next Objective

Bulgaria, caught between leanings toward Soviet Russia and increasing Axis pressure, long has been viewed as the next possible objective of an Axis thrust into the Balkans, toward Greece, Turkey or both.

The nation had been considered a likely convert to the Axis, but Berlin sources disclosed over a month ago that Bulgaria, for the present at least, was staying out.

Diplomatic circles in Sofia at that time took this to mean that Germany and Russia had failed to see eye-to-eye on their respective spheres of influence in the Balkans and a high Bulgarian official commented:

"It now appears certain that Bulgaria will not be involved in war this winter."

NEW YEAR'S DAY IN EUROPE—

In France: Pathos

[By the Associated Press]

Vichy, France, Jan. 1—Chief of State Philippe Petain told the diplomatic corps at the New Year's Day reception today that "I am certain my country will resume its place among nations."

His statement was in reply to Msgr. Valerio Valeri, Papal Nuncio and dean of the diplomatic corps, who said diplomats who saw France fall also saw "the spectacle of rapid recovery" because of Petain's prestige and the confidence of the French people in him.

"I am profoundly touched," the Chief of State replied. "France occupies too great a place in the Western Christian civilization for this civilization to exist without France."

Today's reception was the first outside Paris in sixty-five years. It was held at Petain's residence, the historic Sevigne Pavillion. The diplomats attended without uniforms.

Berlin-Vichy Break Reported

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 1—A Reuters (British news agency) dispatch from Lisbon today said Chief of State Marshal Philippe Petain's Vichy Government and Germany had broken off negotiations.

(The Associated Press has received no confirmation of this report from other sources. A dispatch from Vichy reporting Marshal Petain's New Year reception of foreign diplomats gave no indication of fresh French-German troubles.)

Authoritative quarters here said "all reports of this character should be treated with reserve." No confirmation was avaliable in London.

(In Berlin informed persons said that "nothing is known here" concerning a British report that negotiations between Germany and the Vichy Government of France had been ruptured.)

Virtual Stalemate

Negotiations looking toward collaboration of the Petain Government with Germany have been in a virtual stalemate since December 14, when the old marshal ousted Pierre Laval, his vice-Premier and Foreign Minister, from his government.

Until then, Laval had been the chief negotiator with the Germans. He was replaced by Fernand de Brinon, designated chief representative for Petain in Paris.

Following conferences between Petain and Otto Abetz, Adolf Hitler's ambassador to Paris, Laval was released from custody by Petain and went to Paris, but the Vichy regime made it clear he was not there in any official capacity.

Darlan-Hitler Conference

Naval Minister Jean Darlan went to Paris Christmas Eve and was reported in advices reaching Bern, Switzerland, to have presented to Hitler, Petain's proposals on how French-German collaboration could be carried out.

The Darlan-Hitler meeting was said to have taken place in occupied France, somewhere north of Paris, on Christmas Day. Hitler was known to have been in France with his troops on Christmas Day.

Darlan was said, however, to have aroused the Führer's ire by being forty-five minutes late for the conference, which informed Bern sources said was held at a village near Beauvais. These informants said Darlan's chauffeur got lost.

Not Yet At Peace

At this meeting Hitler was said to have agreed to consider Petain's proposals and answer them. Informed quarters in Vichy said the reply was not expected until January 3 or later.

Technically, Germany and France are not yet at peace, but merely in a state of truce, their relations governed by the armistice signed in the forest of Compiegne, June 22. Germany can denounce this if she holds France has not fulfilled her obligations.

Threats Germany holds over France include the occupation of the entire country. France holds a card in the position of her still powerful army in northern Africa, commanded by Gen. Maxime Weygand, who, some observers believe, might take independent action should German pressure on the Vichy regime become too severe.

In Italy: 'Watch Turkey'

Rome, Jan. 1 (AP)—The authoritative Fascist editor, Virginio Gayda, started the new year today by declaring the "hostile" attitude of Turkey toward the Axis powers is "worthy of observation."

In the first Italian complaint about Turkey's position since the Fascist invasion of Greece, Gayda wrote in the newspaper Il Giornale d'Italia that Turkish newspapers for several weeks had been "raising their tone of irascibility toward Italy."

"What does all this mean?" he asked. "Does it deal of tribute on paper paid to the cause of the alliance with Great Britain or does it deal with other obscure reasons?

"We do not venture diagnosis and prognostications. It is enough for us to point out the facts, without comments."

In England: 'Direct Hit'

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 1—A single German combat plane, said to have dived to within almost one hundred yards of its target, was credited today with scoring direct hits on a British armaments factory at Essex.

The German high command said the factory was attacked yesterday along with other raids on "war-vital objectives" in London.

It reported two British planes shot down yesterday of a total of four attempting to raid a west German industrial area.

Both the German and British air forces abstained from attacking New Year's Eve, it said.

Warehouses Fired

The communique follows:

"On December 31 a German combat plane in a daring solo attack from only 100 meters (328 feet) altitude bombed an armaments factory in Essex, scoring numerous direct hits. In London also war-vital objectives were bombed.

"Further attacks aimed at a railway station as well as a harbor in the southeast of the island had observable results which were considerable damage to war-vital facilities and numerous fires in warehouses.

Blenheims Bagged

"Four enemy planes attempted under cover of clouds to fly over a west German industrial area. Of this number, two British Bristol Blenheims were shot down on the coast by anti-aircraft and the others were forced back before reaching their goal.

"Also yesterday there were no losses for us.

"On New Year's Eve the German air force made no attacks. The enemy also abstained from attacking."

In Germany: Moderation

The rule was that since soldiers had to stand guard, the homefolk should be moderate in celebrations. Most Berlin amusement centers closed at 11 P. M. last night.

A custom of shooting fireworks and burning pinwheels and sparklers from balconies was eliminated under war blackout orders.

Petain's New Personal Ensign Flown In Vichy

Emblem Has Effect Similar To Fascists'—Chosen By Marshal Himself

Vichy, Jan. 1 (AP)—A new personal ensign chosen by Marshal Petain himself was flown from the Chief of State's automobile today when he was driven to his official residence for his New Year reception to foreign diplomats.

The emblem is a marshal's baton flanked on each side by battle-axe blades with French tricolors as a background. The effect is similar to that of Italian Fascist emblems.

Guarded 2,000 Convoys, Totaling 200,000,000 Tons

LONDON, Jan. 1 (AP).—Royal Air Force planes of the coastal command were reported by the Air Ministry today to have flown 34,000,000 miles during 1940, escorting more than 2,000 convoys representing 200,000,000 tons of shipping.

The Ministry said more than 3,500 enemy planes were shot down over Great Britain, the surrounding seas and the French coast during the year, admitting the British had lost 1,059 planes.

British fighter planes were credited with downing most of the German and Italian planes destroyed, but anti-aircraft gunners were credited with 444—334 since Sept. 1.

The Air Ministry news service said Berlin had been raided repeatedly, not in retaliation for attacks on London but because "it is the hub of all railways of central Europe and is a great industrial center as well."

It added that British bombers were following a systematic plan "from which they could be distracted by nothing except an urgent necessity, as when Germans made preparations in the Channel ports for invasion of this country, or a sudden opportunity as when German warships came into the open sea."

Dublin, Ireland, Jan. 1—An airplane of unidentified nationality dropped bombs in County Meath near Drogheda, thirty miles north of Dublin, tonight. First reports indicated no damage.

Member Of Parliament Dies On Bombing Flight

John Rankin Rathbone Was Married To Boston Girl—Date Not Given

London, Thursday, Jan. 2 (AP)—John Rankin Rathbone, 30, Conservative member of Parliament for Bodmin since 1935, has been killed while engaged in bombing operations, it was announced today.

Rathbone's widow is the former Miss Beatrice Clough, daughter of the late F. Roland Clough, of Boston. They were married in 1932.

The time of his death was not given, but he previously had been reported missing.

SURVIVORS OF 3 VESSELS STILL ON SEA RAIDERS

496 From 7 Ships Freed On Pacific Isle Tell Of Others' Captivity

Germans Used Japanese Names And Colors, Some Of Rescued Say

[By the Associated Press]

Canberra, Australia, Jan. 1—Survivors from seven merchant vessels sunk by German warships in the Pacific disclosed today that passengers and crewmen from three other craft were still held captive by the raiders.

Vivid stories of the weeks that they were prisoners came from 496 survivors—including seventy women and seven children—brought to Australia after they were marooned December 21 on the lonely island of Emirau.

They reported their treatment was good, but rations were short. The thunder of guns in fresh engagements, they said, came to them several times between decks.

Japanese Colors And Names

Some survivors said the German raiders masqueraded under Japanese colors and names.

"The raider that captured us," said one of the rescued, "was steaming under the name Manyo Maru and was provisioned from a storeship under the name Tokyo Maru. Immediately before my ship was shelled the raider hoisted the Nazi flag."

[Lloyd's Register of Shipping lists a 2,904-ton Japanese freighter Manyo Maru and two Japanese-flag vessels named Tokyo Maru, one a 6,486-ton freighter and the other a 903-ton tanker.]

The former captives, apparently put ashore because the Germans could not continue feeding them, were rescued four days later—on Christmas Day—by an Australian ship.

Turakina Put Up Battle

Those reported still held captive were the crews and passengers of the 9,691-ton British ship Turakina, the 7,203-ton Norwegian ship Ringwood, and the 2,489-ton Notou, a French vessel.

From their German guards, the other survivors brought to Australia said they learned the Turakina, armed only with a defensive gun aft, fought for two and a half hours before it surrendered to a faster Nazi warship armed with several guns and a trained fighting crew.

35 Of Crew Reported Killed

Unconfirmed reports were that only twenty-three of the Turakina's crew of fifty-eight were alive when the battle ended.

The seven sunken ships from which the survivors here were taken were the 16,712-ton Rangitane, the 6,387-ton Triadic, the 6,032-ton Triaster, the 4,413-ton Triona, the 3,900-ton Komata and the 773-ton Holmwood, a four-masted schooner, all British, and the Norwegian merchantman Vinni, of 5,181 tons.

Raider "A Floating Fortress"

The Holmwood's crew and passengers were under three months of floating captivity.

"Our German captors treated us well and none of us had a really bad time," one of them asserted.

"A warning shot was fired by the raider. We stopped, and the captain addressing the passengers, said:

"'I'm sorry but we are going on a long cruise with the enemy. We must make the best of it.'"

The passengers were astonished by the efficiency of the German crews and the quantity of armaments on the raider.

Searchlight, Then Shells

The crew of one ship became aware of danger, the survivors said they were told, only when a searchlight suddenly bathed their ship in light and shells began dropping around them. The attackers were accused of attempting to prevent the merchantman from sending distress signals by "jamming" the ether.

The Rangitane, largest of the craft known to have been destroyed in the German forays into Pacific waters, suffered "many casualties" when set ablaze by shellfire November 26, they said.

Food staples were listed as black bread, raw bacon and sausage.

Pot Of Rice For 132 Prisoners

In one case, it was said, 132 prisoners were held beneath a single hatch for three days with only a pot of rice to share for their breakfast.

Captains and crewmen among the survivors told of being threatened with death if they were again taken by the Germans from armed ships.

After being landed on Emirau, an island of the Bismarck Archipelago 1,650 miles southeast of the Philippines, the survivors obeyed a warning from the captors to delay for twenty-four hours any attempt to reach Kavieng, in the mandated territory of New Guinea.

Italian Prisoners Reach India

LONDON, Jan. 1 (Canadian Press)—The first group of Italian prisoners from the western desert arrived today at Bombay, India, and left for a camp in the interior, the British Broadcasting Corporation reported tonight. The B. B. C. said the group consisted of four generals, 300 officers and 127 men.

TANGIER INTRIGUE HINTED BY SPAIN

'Misguided Pretentions' Of Certain Party Are Given As Cause of Madrid's Action

MADRID, Jan. 1. (AP)—Foreign Minister Ramon Serrano Suner declared in a published interview today that Spain's hand was hurried in taking over the internationalized zone of Tangier in Africa by "the excessive and misguided pretentions" of a certain party which had not comprehended the "reality" of the situation in Europe.

The "party" was not named, being referred to only as "not one which could logically have expected anything in Tangier, regardless of what may be the final result of the war." This party, he said, "wanted others to share with Spain in the defense of Tangier."

(Spanish rule over the 225-square-mile area of Tangier, commanding the approach to the Strait of Gibraltar from the Atlantic, became absolute on Nov. 4, when Spain ordered dissolution of the four-power control commission, the legislative assembly and the international information office. Before then she had shared international control with Britain, France, and Italy.)

Recounting reaction of various countries to the absorption of Tangier, Serrano Suner dealt sternly with France.

"A people whose military prowess was not this time accompanied by fortune," he said, had surprised Spain with their lack of understanding.

The French, he added, had given themselves to "too simple worries, unjustified suspicions, formal words and useless process."

Japanese Accused of Mauling U. S. Marines in Peiping Fracas

By The Associated Press

PEIPING, Jan. 1.—Col. Allen H. Turnage, commander of United States marines here, was understood today to be preparing to demand a formal apology from the Japanese for asserted maltreatment of five marines after a cabaret fracas.

American officials said that the five were held for seventeen hours and that four of them were injured by Japanese gendarmes.

The American version was that the five were arrested in the cabaret just before midnight Monday by gendarmes, who threatened all marines present with pistols and swords and refused to admit Marine Corps military police who arrived during the incident.

Released after three demands by Col. Turnage, the five marines said they had been insulted and threatened in the cabaret by armed and drunken Japanese civilians. One of the marines was said by American sources to have been floored and kicked in the face by the gendarmes.

The four injured men were taken to the Marine Guard hospital, where it was said none was seriously hurt. The five men are Corp. George Petroff, of Washington; Corp. Francis A. Berber, of Dorchester, Mass., and Privates Walter G. Allen, of Waxahachie, Tex.; Hubert Sims, of Big Creek, Mich., and Merlin W. Ankrom, of Portland, Ore. Which men were injured was not indicated.

Peiping is under occupation by the Japanese Army. The United States government maintains a guard of two companies of marines here for its embassy.

ECCLES WOULD HALT ROOSEVELT'S POWER TO DEVALUE DOLLAR

Federal Reserve In Move to Curb Inflation Lists 5 Changes In Monetary Control

'Greenback' Legislation Repeal, Balanced Budget, Checks On Lending Also Asked

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1—In an unprecedented move to forestall any possible inflation of the nation's money, the Federal Reserve System proposed today removal of the President's power to devalue the dollar, repeal of "greenback" legislation, an eventual balanced budget, and restrictions on bank lending.

System officials said it was not presented as an Administration proposal, and neither the White House nor other official quarters would express an opinion on the plan, which would require congressional action to make it effective.

First reaction among the few members of Congress in town was generally favorable. For example, Senator King (D-Utah) said the plan was "by and large very wise" and that the President's monetary powers constituted a "sword of Damocles hanging over the financial system."

Only Precautionary

At the Federal Reserve Board, spokesmen said that while the program was only precautionary and did not imply that there was any immediate t[illegible] of inflation, the rapidly incr[illegible]e of business under the [illegible]rogram had changed conditions so that so-called inflationary legislation of the past was no longer desirable, whatever merits it had before.

The plan was presented in five points in a "joint report"—first of its kind—by the Federal Reserve Board, the presidents of the 12 Federal Reserve Banks, and the Federal Advisory Council, which represents the 7,000 individual banks belonging to the Federal Reserve System. Federal Reserve Chairman Marriner S. Eccles said the 30 members of the three groups had approved it unanimously.

The report gave no explanation of exactly what the inflation danger was, except to say the "vast expenditures of the military program and their financing create additional problems in the monetary field which make it necessary to review our existing monetary machinery and to place ourselves in a position to take measures, when necessary, to forestall the development of inflationary tendencies attributable to defects in the machinery of credit control."

Inflation Feared

As explained by government economists, the fear was that, either for monetary or industrial reasons, the day might come when prices of most articles got so high that money would lose much of its purchasing power. In Germany, after the World War, a monetary inflation went so far that a bushel basket of paper currency would not buy a loaf of bread.

The report asserted that while it dealt primarily with monetary aspects of the situation, protective steps should also be taken in other fields, "such as prevention of industrial and labor bottlenecks, and the pursuance of a tax policy appropriate to the defense program and to our monetary and fiscal needs."

At the White House, it was learned that the plan had been presented to President Roosevelt before its publication, but he was not ready to comment on it. A Treasury spokesman said Secretary Henry Morgenthau, also consulted by Eccles about it, was unwilling to comment but "saw no objection to the discussion of these problems at this time." Leo J. Crowley, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, also begged time to study the plan before saying anything about it.

Opposition Not Hinted

Officials warned, however, against interpreting this silence as a hint of opposition. They noted that Eccles has been one of Mr. Roosevelt's closest advisers on many kinds of economic problems for years, even though the President has not always followed his advice.

The report listed five points as follows:

1. Restrict bank lending by increasing the percentage of deposits that the banks must lay aside as reserves. The banks now have a record total of $7,000,000,000 of idle money in excess of existing reserve requirements, and an increase in reserves would make some of this money ineligible for lending or investment.

2. Remove the President's power to make a further reduction in the gold content of the American dollar. (The President exercised this authority once, in 1934, and under remaining powers he could create nearly $4,000,000,000 of new money by raising the legal price of gold from $35 to $41.34 per ounce. This power will lapse next June 30, unless renewed. When the President asked its renewal in 1939 and obtained it over bitter congressional opposition, he said he had no intention of using it except when necessitated by a great emergency.) Repeal the "greenback" powers of the 1933 agricultural adjustment act, under which the Treasury could issue $3,000,000,000 of new money, backed only by the government's credit, instead of gold or silver. Repeal the Treasury's unused power to issue $1.29 worth of currency for every ounce of foreign silver purchased, regardless of actual cost. This metal is bought currently at 35 cents. The report made no recommendation about similar powers to issue $1.29 worth of currency for every ounce of domestically-mined silver bought by the Treasury, currently at 71.11 cents.

Neutralize Gold Flow

3. Neutralize the credit effects of imported gold. No method was suggested, but in 1936-38 the Treasury tried to do this by using borrowed money to pay for the gold. This meant that the Treasury was borrowing money from the public as fast as foreigners were creating new bank deposits with the cash they got for their gold, and the net effect was no substantial change in the amount of money available for credit in this country. At present, the Treasury pays cash for gold and gets the cash by reselling the metal to the 12 Federal Reserve Banks.

4. Sell government bonds, in the future to the general public and not to banks. Monetary experts said that when the Treasury spends borrowed money, the contractors, employes or others who get the money deposit it in banks, generally, and thus create new lending powers for the banks. They suggested that if the government should borrow its money from individuals or corporations who would have to draw money out of banks to pay for the securities, this would offset the deposits made later by those who receive funds from the government.

Balance Budget

5. Balancing of the federal budget, increasing taxes gradually until they equal expenditures, was advocated by the report on a "some day" basis. Officials indicated no hope of accomplishing it quickly, since President Roosevelt was reported to be preparing a $17,000,000,000 budget for the next fiscal year which may involve a deficit of as high as $9,000,000,000. The report said the balance should be achieved "whenever the country approaches a condition of full utilization of its economic capacity." This was interpreted to mean a time when every employable person has a job and every factory is going full blast.

Apparently, the only immediate, positive action sought by the Reserve System was an increase in bank reserve requirements. The report asked that present powers of this type over banks in the Federal Reserve System be extended to all banks, including the village banks in rural areas and the huge "private" banks such as J. P. Morgan and Company.

Only One Immediately

The report asked Congress to make one small increase immediately—an increase that the Reserve Board already has power to make. It also requested authority to double any or all of the new reserve rates in the future.

The proposed immediate increases were:

Savings and time deposits in all cities, from $5 to $6 per $100 deposit. This meant that a bank receiving a $100 savings deposit, would have to set aside $6 in a reserve fund and could use the remaining $94 for loans and investments.

Demand (usual checking account) deposits—in New York and Chicago, from $22.75 to $26 per $100; in Boston, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Richmond, Cleveland, St. Louis, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Dallas and San Francisco, from $17.50 to $20 per $100; in all other cities, from $12 to $14.

MARSHALL ATTACKS PLAN TO LEND ARMS

No Foreign War Committee Head Says "Our Own House Is On Fire"

Broadcasts Demand That Administration Reveal Peace Agenda

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 1—Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee, reiterated tonight his organization's determination "to prevent the Roosevelt Administration from giving away our national defenses, or even loaning those defenses."

"In fact," he said, "we don't even favor lending that garden hose to a neighbor, since we believe our own house to be on fire."

Marshall, speaking over the Columbia Broadcasting System described William Rhodes Davis, wealthy oil executive, as among those who "really are his (Marshall's) friends," and a participant in the committee's campaign.

Wants Agenda Released

He demanded that the Government "release to the world" an agenda for peace which he said Davis brought back to Washington from Berlin in 1939.

Davis said yesterday that he had submitted a "peace plan" initiated by German officials and expressed confidence that his information would be made public when, "in the opinion of the Administration, the best interests of the country can be served."

He said he was "tremendously interested in any movement that might bring peace to the world."

Lee Issued Charges

Senator Lee (Dem., Okla.) charged yesterday that Davis was the committee's "angel" and that his record "shows conclusively the great financial stake he has in a complete Nazi victory."

Marshall charged that certain groups and publications were attempting to "smear" him, his organization and his friends.

"Those who know me outside of New York city—back in the United States of the Middle West—will attest as to my readiness to make both friends and enemies, the latter being individuals of whose antagonism I am exceedingly proud," said Marshall.

Willkie Again Urges All To Aid Britain

Tells Orange Bowl Crowd He Believes It Is Resolve Of U. S. To Give Things Necessary

Miami, Fla., Jan. 1 (AP)—Wendell L. Willkie, former G. O. P. Presidential candidate, spoke out again here today for aid to Britain.

Willkie told the massed thousands attending the Orange Bowl game that "preservation of the free way of life in Britain is essential to its preservation in our own land."

He added that he believed it was America's resolve "to give those things necessary to aid the fighting men of Britain so the free way of living may continue in other portions of the world."

WPA LEADER PROPOSES WOMEN BE MOBILIZED

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1 (AP)—Mrs. Florence Kerr, assistant WPA commissioner, proposed tonight that millions of women join in a voluntary mobilization for home defense.

After submitting to President Roosevelt a program to train women for national defense, Mrs. Kerr said in a statement that millions of women were ready to be "mobilized" in their home towns for a program of action.

She proposed setting up training programs for women "so broad that every woman in every home town in the nation who wants to do so can find her place in America's mobilization of women for home defense."

Fields of training, she said, might include:

Food training programs, training in aptitude testing, first aid, safety programs, community organization, map reading, map making, drafting, programs for children and civic aides, pre-vocational and vocational training, community health, sanitation and hygiene, communications and auxiliary nursing.

Probers Say Drill Manuel Proves Bund Military Unit

Dies Group Bares Booklet of Instructions For Nazi OD, Including Duties, Attack Signals, and Pledge to Risk Life

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1 (AP)—The Dies committee made public today what is called a German-American Bund manual which, the committee said, "proves conclusively that the bund is an absolutely militarized organization, patterned after the ruthlessly efficient military set-up which characterizes Hitler's machine in Germany."

The document declared that members of the Bund's "Orderly Service," or "OD," must be Aryans of "unshakable faith," willing to risk their lives in opposition to "Jewish-Marxism" or in defense of "everything that constitutes American-Germania."

The manual went on to say that the uniformed OD was not "a military order" but that "some drill is necessary in order to develop a disciplinary spirit." Members of the OD, it added, must defend with their lives the flags of the United States and Bund.

In a statement, the committee said:

"While this committee has had the Bund under investigation for almost three years, and has, as a result of its investigations, clearly established the fact of the Bund's tie-up with Nazi Germany, this is the first time that the completely military character of the organization has been exposed. * * *

"The document also shows the absolute loyalty which is demanded of the storm-troopers in the German-American Bund — a loyalty which comes before everything else and extends to the minutest details of the storm-troopers' life."

In a lengthy set of drill regulations, the manual set forth such commands as "signal to attack: Three short blasts. OD men off-duty and the roller command attack." The manual gave no explanation of who might be "attacked" but said that the duty of the "roller detail" was to remove "disturbers" from Bund meetings.

"No oath of any kind is required of any fuehrer in our ranks," the document continued, "but within the limits of the law every OD man is required to render absolute obedience and unreserved loyalty to his fuehrers.

"In this connection, however, it is to be observed that the orders of each successively ranking fuehrer are conclusive; the loyalty of the OD man does not terminate in the division fuehrer, but in the final analysis belongs to the fuehrer of the Bund above all others.

"Personal loyalties or dislikes play no part in the service of the proper OD man; the commands of a superior are to be enforced so long as he holds his position and does not oppose or contradict the commands of his superiors.

"The OD man must understand that from the day on which he became clad in the robes of honor of OD, renouncing all personal considerations, he became a defender of our movement and its fuehrers against all subversive and destructive movements from within or without.

"The OD man guarantees the assurance, at the risk of his life if necessary, that our movement will continue to remain the relentless opponent of Jewish Marxism and the uncompromising champion of everything that constitutes American-Germania, even though such a course might be regarded as improper by any group within the Bund.

"Whoever is not possessed of this unshakable faith and whoever cannot go along as a fanatic crusader has no place in the OD; for to have accepted the National-Socialistic concept of international relations means to have abandoned absolutely all associations with liberalistic half-measures. * * *

"We want men who would exterminate with all their power the stinking poison of Red Jewish infection in America."

The manual said that arming of the OD was prohibited but that drilling was important to the group since "drill demands absolute physical and mental subordination to the will."

Reuther 500-Plane-a-Day Plan Is Rejected by Defense Experts

Lack of Tools and Aluminum and Need of Plants for Other Armament Orders Cited as Obstacles to C. I. O. Official's Production Proposal

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—The Reuther plan for utilizing automotive industry facilities to turn out 500 warplanes a day was reluctantly termed impracticable today by high defense production experts. The plan, calling for use of now idle automobile plants and machinery to step up aircraft production, was fathered by Walter Reuther, director of organization for C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers at General Motors plants. It was submitted to President Roosevelt by Philip Murray, C. I. O. chief. Mr. Roosevelt said then that it was receiving serious consideration, but today defense experts who declined to be quoted by name listed these obstacles:

The impossibility of obtaining sufficient aluminum products in the six-month preparatory period before the projected start of 500-a-day plane production.

The fact that automobile plants already were being assigned major defense jobs—the production of thousands of engines and of other parts for 3,600 bombers to be assembled in four Middle Western plants.

Lack of immediate armament for so great a number of planes as the U. A. W. plan contemplates.

Production experts said they were reluctant to find fault with the plan because it demonstrated the desire of labor to contribute to the defense program. But they added that the practical difficulties made it impossible, and insisted that the facilities of auto plants would be enlisted in plane production under present schedules as rapidly as other elements in the industrial picture would permit.

Mr. Reuther, in his proposal, asserted that many of the most precise parts for Allison liquid-cooled plane engines were being made with retooled machinery. The view of the production experts is that the automobile companies which have received or are about to receive defense orders may be relied upon to use existing machinery where possible.

As to aluminum, it was declared that the aluminum industry has had to expand swiftly to turn out the products for the current output of about twenty-five planes a day. Further rapid expansion of the industry is planned to keep pace with the increased plane production now in sight, but no official interviewed believed it possible to step up the production of aluminum forgings in six months to the 500-plane-a-day level.

British Believed to Have New Plane Detector To Enable Fighters to Combat Night Bombers

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1 (AP)—Military men expressed belief today that the British had developed a way to equip their warplanes with a detector for locating enemy aircraft in the dark.

Ground detectors of that nature have been in use in Britain for some time, and well-informed sources here said the statement of Air Chief Marshal Sir Hugh Dowding at Ottawa earlier this week, that the menace of enemy night bombers would be greatly reduced sometime this Spring, indicated the device had been adapted for installation in Royal Air Force planes.

"It is just a repetition of the old military maxim that for every new weapon there is always a defense developed," one official said. "The question is whether the British can develop the defense in time."

Sir Hugh said the necessary equipment for Britain's new defense was being completed rapidly and by springtime would remove the "whole weight and sting" of the Luftwaffe night bombers. Both the United States and Britain have been working for years on various types of plane detectors, but War and Navy Department officials have maintained a tight-lipped silence regarding the success or failure of their experiments.

Some published accounts of a ground type of plane detector have described it as capable of accurately locating airplanes 100 miles away—150 miles under favorable conditions. It is said that clouds, fog and noise cannot interfere with it and airplane engines cannot be shielded or protected against it. The latter fact led to conjecture in some quarters that the device picks up infra-red rays from the exhausts of airplane engines.

Military aviators said that if such a device were perfected so that it could be installed in fighter planes, it would be quite possible to synchronize the plane's guns with it and thus make the detection and destruction of enemy craft almost automatic. If the equipment can be used only in the larger types of planes, such as bombers, its usefulness would be restricted. Adaptation for use in single-seat fighters and pursuit ships, however, one qualified official said, would be tantamount to the elimination of the factor of darkness, and aerial combat would resolve itself largely into contests between small, speedy fighters.

CHINA MAY OBTAIN PLANES IN SPRING

Capital Officials Say British Needs Bar U. S. Help Now To Nation Battling Japan

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1 (AP)—Possibility that China might be allowed to obtain several hundred fighter planes from the Curtiss Wright Corporation next spring was discussed in government circles today.

These conversations followed a statement by Secretary Morgenthau that President Roosevelt's lease-lend plan of supplying aid to Breat Britain "might apply" to Greece and China or "anybody."

Officials said that production of several hundred P-40 pursuit ships for the embattled Chinese might be sandwiched in next spring between completion of an existing British order and the change-over to an improved model ordered by the United States Army Air Corps.

This government has been informed that China's few present planes are no match for bombers brought out by Japan in the last year and a half. Bombers which are faster than the Chinese fighter planes are able to bomb bridges on the Burma Road, China's "life line," almost at will, according to this information.

Recently, a Chinese military mission headed by Maj.-Gen. Fan Chu-Mow has been in Washington conferring with Administration officials in an effort to obtain the release of modern fighter planes.

Asked this week why the Chinese had not received any planes recently, Morgenthau replied:

Present indications are that virtually all plane production which American military authorities believe can be spared will remain available to the British during the next 90 days, a period considered one of gravest peril to Britain.

After that, officials said today, it might be possible to let the Curtiss Aeroplane Division of Curtiss Wright Corporation turn out several hundred of the P-40 fighters for China.

(OF THE 10 ONLY THE TURAKINA, NOTOU AND HOLMWOOD PREVIOUSLY HAD BEEN REPORTED LOST, THE FIRST OF THEM THE TURAKINA WHICH THE GERMAN HIGH COMMAND LAST AUG.24 REPORTED SUNK "IN AUSTRALIAN WATERS.")

ADMIRAL SIR GEOFFREY LAYTON, COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE BRITISH CHINA FLEET, SAID BOTH THE BRITISH AND AUSTRALIAN NAVIES WERE "WELL AWARE OF THE ACTIVITIES OF THE RAIDERS AND APPROPRIATE MEASURES ARE BEING TAKEN."

IN VIEW OF THE LARGE EXPANSE OF OCEAN TO BE COVERED, HE ADDED, "IT MIGHT TAKE TIME TO BRING THE RAIDERS TO BOOK, AS IN THE LAST WAR, BUT DOUBTLESSLY THEY WILL BE ACCOUNTED FOR."

OTHER NATIONS WHERE MORE THAN A MILLION DOLLARS WAS SPENT FOR RELIEF INCLUDED FINLAND, $1,879,000; GREECE, $1,069,000, AND FRANCE, $1,838,000.

RED CROSS FUNDS AND GARMENTS PRODUCED BY RED CROSS CHAPTERS ACCOUNTED FOR $11,887,000 OF THE TOTAL DISBURSEMENTS. THE REMAINING $4,803,000 WAS IN EXPENDITURES AND COMMITMENTS FROM A $50,000,000 CONGRESSIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR PURCHASE OF SURPLUS FOODS FOR REFUGEES.

THE DANGERS OF SUCH AID."

THE ASSOCIATION, A PRIVATE RESEARCH ORGANIZATION, LISTED THE FOLLOWING AMONG BRITISH NEEDS:

"IRON AND STEEL:" ENGLAND REACHED HER MAXIMUM PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY OF 14,000,000 TONS ANNUALLY LAST SUMMER AND THIS "FALLS SHORT OF DOMESTIC REQUIREMENTS."

FOOD: "SERIOUS SHORTAGES X X X HAVE DEVELOPED IN SPECIFIC FOODSTUFFS."

FINANCIAL NEEDS: BRITAIN HAS NOT YET REACHED THE END OF ITS FINANCIAL RESOURCES, THE ASSOCIATION REPORTED, BUT "THE CONSTANT DRAIN" COMPELS HER TO CONSIDER FUTURE OBLIGATIONS.

"SINCE THE OUTPUT OF THE AMERICAN MUNITIONS INDUSTRY CANNOT, AT BEST BE INCREASED VERY RAPIDLY," THE REPORT SAID, "THE UNITED STATES CAN HELP BRITAIN IN THE IMMEDIATE FUTURE ONLY BY ASSIGNING TO IT A LARGER SHARE OF CURRENT PRODUCTION."

SUCH PROPOSALS AS SEIZING AXIS MERCHANT SHIPS IN AMERICAN PORTS, THE USE OF AMERICAN WARSHIPS AS CONVOY ESCORTS, AND THE EXTENSION OF THE NEUTRALITY PATROL, THE REPORT SAID WOULD INVOLVE "THE RISK OF WAR WHICH COULD BE PRECIPITATED THROUGH HOSTILE GERMAN REACTION AS WELL AS BY THE DECISION OF THE UNITED STATES.

"NEITHER THE SERIOUSNESS OF BRITAIN'S SITUATION NOR THE DRASTIC STEPS NECESSARY TO AMELIORATE IT APPEAR TO BE GENERALLY APPRECIATED," THE ASSOCIATION SAID IN SUMMATION. "GERMAN AIR RAIDS AND SEA WARFARE ARE SLOWLY BUT SURELY UNDERMINING BRITAIN'S PRODUCTIVE POWER AND HENCE, IN THE LONG RUN, ITS MORALE AND FIGHTING STRENGTH. WHILE DEFINITE INFORMATION REGARDING THE EFFECT OF AIR RAIDS ON BRITISH WAR INDUSTRIES IS NOT AVAILABLE, IT IS CLEAR THAT PRODUCTION IN MANY INDUSTRIAL AREAS HAS BEEN SLOWED DOWN.

"THERE IS CONSEQUENTLY LITTLE PROSPECT THAT BRITAIN MAY ACHIEVE SUPERIORITY OVER GERMANY IN AIRPLANES AND OTHER WEAPONS. MEANWHILE LOSSES TO CONVOYS IN THE ATLANTIC HAVE RISEN TO AN ALARMING LEVEL, NECESSITATING STRINGENT FOOD RATIONING TO CONSERVE TONNAGE FOR OTHER IMPORTED PRODUCTS."

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S CHARGE THAT THE FIERCE NAZI ATTACK ON LONDON YESTERDAY WITH INCENDIARY BOMBS WAS A DELIBERATE ATTEMPT TO DESTROY THE CITY BY FIRE---A CHARGE WHICH CIRCUMSTANCES DO NOT REFUTE ---GIVES US AN ALTOGETHER TERRIFYING PREVIEW OF THE HELL WHICH THE WAR STILL HOLDS IN RESERVE.

IT IS INCREASINGLY CLEAR THAT AS THIS LIFE AND DEATH CONFLICT AMONG EMPIRES BECOMES MORE AND MORE CRITICAL, AND THE PROBABLE WINNER IS BETTER DEFINED, WE MAY EASILY WITNESS ACTS OF DESPERATION BESIDE WHICH THE EFFORT TO BURN THE HEART OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST METROPOLIS IS HELD. ↘

IT IS WITH CONSIDERABLE HESITATION THAT I RAISE THE SUBJECT OF CHEMICAL WARFARE. THE WORLD HAS BEEN PRAYING THAT THIS HORROR MIGHT BE AVERTED AND HAS AVOIDED DISCUSSION OF THE SUBJECT.

HOWEVER, WITH THE SMOKE RISING FROM OLD CHURCHES AND OTHER MONUMENTS WHICH HAVE LINKED ENGLAND WITH HER ANCIENT PAST, THERE WOULD SEEM TO BE SMALL REASON NOT TO FACE THE POSSIBILITY OF THE EMPLOYMENT OF GAS.

THERE HAS BEEN NO REPORT OF THE USE OF GAS THUS FAR IN THE PRESENT WAR. THIS PROBABLY HAS BEEN DUE TO TWO THINGS:-- (1). THE MECHANIZED WAR OF MOTION ON THE GROUND HAS BEEN TOO FAST TO PERMIT OF ITS EMPLOYMENT. (2). FEAR OF REPRISALS HAS RESTRAINED ANY BELLIGERENT FROM SPRAYING GAS FROM WARPLANES OR DROPPING GAS-BOMBS.

THERE ARE TWO SCHOOLS OF OPINION AMONG MILITARY MEN. ONE HOLDS THAT FEAR OF REPRISALS WILL CONTINUE TO PRECLUDE THE USE OF GAS. THE OTHER BELIEVES THAT IT WILL BE EMPLOYED IF IT SEEMS TO SERVE ANY USEFUL PURPOSE.

MANY EXPERTS HAVE BEEN WATCHING FOR ITS USE FROM THE AIR AGAINST MOBILIZATION AND MANUFACTURING CENTERS---AND EVEN AGAINST CIVILIAN POPULATIONS TO BREAK MORALE. DESPITE THE FACT THAT ALL MAJOR COUNTRIES ARE PREPARED TO DEFEND THEMSELVES AGAINST GAS, THERE IS SMALL DOUBT OF ITS EFFECTIVENESS UNDER MANY CONDITIONS.

THE GERMANS INTRODUCED GAS AS AN EFFECTIVE WEAPON IN WARFARE IN APRIL OF 1915 DURING THE WORLD CONFLICT. THEY USED CHLORINE AGAINST THE FRENCH ON A FOUR-MILE FRONT AND, BECAUSE OF THE SURPRISE, PARALYZED RESISTANCE TO A DEPTH OF SEVERAL MILES. THE ALLIES WERE QUICK TO REPLY IN KIND.

THE UPSHOT OF ALL THIS WAS THAT GAS ACCOUNTED FOR 800,000 CASUALTIES IN THE WORLD WAR.

MOST OF THESE, HOWEVER, WERE AMONG THE FIGHTING FORCES. THE WORLD IS STILL AWAITING THE USE OF THIS FRIGHTFUL WEAPON AGAINST CIVILIANS.

AT LEAST A SECTION OF BRITISH MILITARY OPINION BELIEVES THAT GAS WILL BE USED AGAINST ENGLAND, AND THE COUNTRY IS PREPARED BOTH DEFENSIVELY AND FOR REPRISALS. GERMANY HASN'T EXPRESSED ANY VIEW PUBLICLY, BUT SHE, TOO, IS SET FOR ACTION IF AND WHEN THE OCCASION ARISES. FOR THAT MATTER, WHEN I WAS IN BERLIN AT THE TIME OF THE MUNICH CRISIS, A YEAR BEFORE WAR BEGAN, CIVILIANS WERE PROVIDED WITH GAS MASKS AND WERE ORDERED TO KEEP THEM HANDY.

HOWEVER, WHILE CIVILIANS IN ALL BELLIGERENT COUNTRIES ARE SUPPOSED TO CARRY GAS-MASKS CONSTANTLY, AND THERE ARE GAS DETECTORS EVERYWHERE IN PUBLIC PLACES, EXPERTS HAVE SMALL DOUBT THAT THERE WOULD BE GREAT LOSS OF LIFE IF GAS WERE EMPLOYED AGAINST BIG CITIES. MASKS GET WORN OR DAMAGED, AND PEOPLE ARE CARELESS ABOUT CARRYING THEM.

THE WAY THINGS STAND AT THE MOMENT, WERE GAS WARFARE TO BREAK OUT BETWEEN GERMANY AND BRITAIN, THE LIKELIHOOD IS THAT THE LATTER WOULD GET THE WORST OF THE EXCHANGE. BRITAIN IS TINY, AND HER BIG INDUSTRIAL POPULATION IS CONCENTRATED IN THE CENTRAL PART OF THE COUNTRY -- A READY MARK FOR GAS.

ALSO, SINCE THE NAZIS ARE ABLE TO WORK FROM AIRDROMES IN OCCUPIED TERRITORY THEY ARE BUT A SHORT FLIGHT FROM THEIR OBJECTIVES. THE BRITISH, ON THE OTHER HAND, HAVE A VAST AREA TO COVER AND THE FLYING DISTANCE TO GERMANY IS GREAT.

APART FROM POSSIBLE ATTACKS ON CIVILIAN POPULATIONS TO SHATTER MORALE, GAS COULD BE USED EFFECTIVELY AGAINST AIRDROMES AND INDUSTRIES TO IMMOBILIZE THEM. EVEN IF NO LOSS OF LIFE WERE CAUSED, THERE MIGHT

BE A SERIOUS HOLD-UP OF OPERATIONS.

ONE IS INCLINED TO BELIEVE THAT GAS WILL BE EMPLOYED ONLY AS A LAST RESORT. IT MAY BE USED BY A COUNTRY WHICH IS ON THE VERGE OF DEFEAT AND THEREFORE DESPERATE. OR IT MIGHT BE TRIED BY A COUNTRY WHICH SEEMED ABOUT TO ACHIEVE A VICTORY, AND WANTED TO STUPEFY THE ENEMY SO AS TO PERMIT OF DELIVERING THE FINAL BLOW.

Churchill Devotes 17 Hours A Day to His Only Hobby—War

England's Premier Keeps Phone by Bed —And Room a Secret

DEC-29

By Hugh Wagnon

London (Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—Winston Churchill is giving full measure of the "blood and tears, toil and sweat" which he told Britain were all he had to offer when he became the empire's war leader.

He bends every moment to war service, wasting hardly a minute or thought on anything but that paramount object to which he is devoting the wide experience, great talent and contagious energy with which he seems able to endow the whole empire.

Ten Secretaries Busy

Churchill keeps ten secretaries on the run, confers daily with the war cabinet and other key ministers. As his own defense minister, he keeps in closest touch with developments and strategy in every corner of the empire, every phase of the imperial war effort.

From the time he arises—usually about 7 a. m.—he expends his prodigious energy without a let-up until he finally gets to bed, generally about midnight, but sometimes as late as 3 a. m.

There is no time in his crowded day for amusements. Even his enjoyment of the parliamentary give-and-take in the House of Commons has been curtailed. Frequently he is absent, leaving his deputy, Clement R. Attlee, Lord Privy Seal, to answer questions in his behalf.

Churchill has little time for ordinary family life, but he sees Mrs. Churchill every day and the rest of the family "as much as possible." There are frequent family dinners.

Does Business at Lunch

Since even a Prime Minister must eat, he makes use of luncheons and dinners to see many persons he otherwise could not accommodate on his calendar.

Many people, however, see him every day—"too many to remember," a secretary says. The war cabinet meets before luncheon, and a parade of generals, admirals, air marshals and intelligence officers lasts throughout the afternoon and often into the night.

Churchill gets no regular exercise except that of striding about Whitehall or walking tirelessly on tours of inspection of fighting commands, defense areas and bombed sectors. He wants to see for himself.

To sum it up, an aide says, "he works like a beaver; duty gives him no alternative."

Incessant work has even forced a reduction of the Prime Minister's cigar smoking. He now consumes about six long Havanas a day instead of the ten or dozen in less urgent times.

Keeps Phone by Bed

As First Lord of the Admiralty—the post he held during the World War and resumed at the start of the present hostilities—Churchill lived at Admiralty House, a few steps from the Admiralty itself. A telephone stood beside his bed so that he could be informed constantly of anything extraordinary. He still keeps a telephone at his bedside—but where that is has been kept a state secret.

His day begins with a cup of tea, followed by the usual hearty English breakfast—porridge, kippers or kidney (both of which are unrationed) and eggs, topped off with toast and marmalade and coffee.

Then he reads the morning papers, digests dispatches and correspondence. Some sifting is done by his confidential secretaries, but he keeps this to a minimum because he likes to know everything that is going on.

Mail Is Immense

He disposes of an immense mail with lightning rapidity. A master of organization, he tackles the stacks of papers systematically, dictating terse general instructions to two women secretaries and leaving secondary matters to subordinates. On matters involving major policy, he digs to the bottom himself, evolving minute instructions which he insists must be followed to the letter.

Churchill employed as many as half a dozen secretaries during his private life, so it is easy to see why he would need ten of them now—all of the kind President Roosevelt was looking for when he sought men with "a passion for anonymity."

Churchill generally is considered easy to work with, but his temper flares awesomely when he is displeased.

He is ordinarily conservative in routine matters, but liberal in outlook, and likes to slash "red tape" when it hampers direct action.

"For Action This Day"

In an effort to speed tedious governmental machinery, he instituted a system of stickers bearing the label, "For action this day"—which means exactly that. And woe to those who fail to act at once on documents bearing this urgent command.

The two women secretaries take turns in keeping up with his dictation, which is apt to erupt any time. He has been known suddenly to call them at a late hour and start a rush of work.

He speaks rapidly, meanwhile breaking matchsticks into bits and throwing them about on the floor. Sometimes he jumps to his feet to emphasize a point, then bounces back into his chair.

At table, he eats "what he can"—and his taste is catholic. One of his favorite dishes is famous: "The roast beef of Old England." He also enjoys a thick steak, rare.

At luncheon with a group, he slouches in a chair, eats and talks at the same time. He generally monopolizes talk during a meal if he is interested. If bored, he squirms restlessly in oppressive silence, alarming to dinner partner or hostess. But his quick smile always wins forgiveness.

Seldom Sees Press

He seldom sees the press. He made an exception for one American correspondent, with whom he talked for 30 minutes off the record, and the subsequent uproar from the Empire press representatives in London caused him to grant an off-record luncheon for all.

His secretaries are almost as inaccessible as Churchill himself, for they respect his wishes and fear his displeasure.

Although as a professional journalist Chuchill has written about many personalities, he dislikes personality items about himself.

As for hobbies which might lighten his day, he has none in wartime—unless war strategy could be called a hobby. It has been his lifetime interest.

He showed such talent as a lad in playing with toy soldiers that his father sent him to Sandhurst, Britain's West Point, as the first step in the fabulous Churchill career as soldier, war correspondent, historian and statesman.

roll out in the perfect marching order that has given him a world-wide reputation as a phrase-maker.

He opposed woman suffrage so intensely that he twice was attacked by irate suffragettes armed with dogwhips.

He smokes big cigars which he holds fondly in full hand, for all the world like a child with a peppermint stick. He likes to take snuff.

There you have just a few aspects of the many-sided personality and character of Prime Minister Winston Churchill, who embodies all of Britain's hopes for the future.

He is the epitome of imperial determination to win the war at all costs.

His stout, thick-set figure comes close to being a perfect model of the cartoonist's John Bull, except that he slouches carelessly. His heavy shoulders hunched, his large head bent forward, he walks like a charging football player.

Knows How to Wear Clothes

When he clamps his jaw in determination, he could pose for that other favorite sketch of British character—the bulldog.

And if the mood or the time permitted, he doubtless could array himself impressively in the draperies of Brittania, for he is nothing if not versatile in dress.

In London he dresses in rumpled formality, cocky bow tie askew. In the country, where he now is seldom seen, he is likely to don overalls for a stint of bricklaying—although he has long since lost his union card because bricklaying is not his means of livelihood.

His hats—some of which he designs himself—are either the admiration or despair of sartorial enthusiasts, ranging from some of the more colorful headgear available to anyone, such as gray toppers, to those perquisites of his many offices such as the admiral's cockade.

His fat, round, puckish face is even more expressive of his moods than the infinite variety of his garb. When he smiles mischievously, it is like that of a small, wayward boy. When he scowls, it is prodigious. Most of his wartime photographs show him the picture of settled determination or smiling confidence.

Youthful Boast Made Good

A relative once said Churchill had "a double portion" of natural self-confidence. When he was not yet 21 he gave a dinner for "those who are yet under 21 years of age, but who in 20 years will control the destinies of the British Empire." Churchill alone made the boast come true. He was elected to Commons in 1900 when he was 26.

He is surprisingly candid in private conversation and gives the impression of thinking aloud as he talks ramblingly, interjecting a wisecrack now and then with just a twinkle in his blue eyes.

Churchill never laughs at his own quips, but his orator's sense of timing is acutely trained and he never muffs a punch line. Often he uses a short, bald Anglo-Saxon term or American slang—seemingly speaking his mind without a second thought—and then corrects himself by translation into diplomatic language.

Once he used the word "ratting"—then said, "I should have said 'failing to live up to commitments.'"

Shortly after Germany's Goering was made a field marshal, Churchill referred to him in Commons as "General." Then, with elaborate sarcasm, he said, "beg pardon—Field Marshal Gen. Goering."

His humor currently is of the political, crushing club variety, rather than the rapier thrust of wit. In a report to Commons December 19, he said he didn't like to compare Adolf Hitler with Napoleon because "I don't like to insult the dead."

Backer of Lost Causes

At the time when he was whipped by the two suffragettes, the women chained themselves in Downing Street and said they would stay there until women were given a vote. Churchill snorted:

"A man might as well chain himself to the railings of St. Thomas' Hospital and say he won't leave until he has a baby."

But he has backed many a lost cause. Churchill, as he likes to say of Britain, often seemed to "lose every battle save the last."

He has been in and out of office, in and out of parties, in and out

...ritain's Hopes for Future Personified in Churchill

Called 'Eccentric Dunce' in School, He Rises From Many Political Defeats to World-Wide Acclaim as Savior of the Empire

DEC-29

By Hugh Wagnon

London (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—He was called "an eccentric dunce" at school, but was famed for his brilliance at 25 and later won acclaim as a genius.

Instead of singing in the bath, he likes to try out phrases until they of public favor, but always the center of turmoil and attention. British politicians of the past regarded him as an infant terrible and disliked his propensity for jumping flat-footed into the middle of controversies.

Many times the political wiseacres have predicted the end of his meteroic career, as when he vainly supported King Edward VIII against Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin's successful plans for his abdication.

But always Churchill came back bigger than ever, until today he is the empire's leader and inspiration, popular to the point of adulation.

He might add a final word of his own. On one occasion, in response to fulsome praise by a lady admirer for his accomplishments, he said:

"But you have forgotten my most brilliant achievement—my ability to persuade my wife to marry me."

Hitler Leads Life Of Wakeful Spartan

Gets but Four to Six Hours of Rest a Day; Quarters Are Simple

(Spend a day with Adolf Hitler in this third of four daily stories on the opposing war leaders, Winston Churchill and Hitler.)

By Preston Grover

Berlin (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—Adolf Hitler lives a personal life of Spartan simplicity.

His daily life is a mass of hard work but by no means is it regulated to conform to the tradition of "Prussian discipline." In training and contacts he is an unregimented Bavarian, although he has molded the country into a disciplined whole strictly after the Prussian fashion.

The Reichschancellery, where he spends much of his time, is one of the richest buildings in Berlin and compares in interior decoration with the ancient palaces of the Kaiser.

He Sleeps Little

But in the center of the massive building are Hitler's private quarters in a contrast of unadorned simplicity.

He sleeps little, going for days on end with but four to six hours rest in 24. He pops out of a simple army-styled bed at 8 a. m., at least by 9.

The only exception to this routine comes when he is at his Berchtesgaden retreat, in the Bavarian Alps near Oberalzburg. There he lets himself go, if he is not pressed with emergencies, and sleeps himself out.

He has three personal servants—named Linge, Krause and Junge—but shaves himself each morning after arising.

Servants on 8-Hour Shifts

The three servants, all married and with children, rotate 8-hour shifts. They travel with him to Berlin, Munich and Berchtesgaden.

After shaving and dressing, Hitler begins work at once on any pressing tasks. He breakfasts at 11 o'clock, usually on fruit, and lets Kannenberg, his favorite cook for many years, rack his brains over some new vegetable dish for the day's remaining two meals.

Except that he takes no meat, Hitler is not an especially choosy eater. It is unclear even to his closest friends whether he sticks to vegetables as a necessity due to his World War gassing or as a matter of principle.

He likes small animals, and it is known that he hates the killing of animals. He refuses to see them in captivity and once freed a magnificent eagle sent to him by his supporters. Upon becoming Chancellor in 1933 he issued an anti-vivisection order.

Drinks 1½ Per Cent Beer

Hitler occasionally drinks tea or weak coffee and no alcohol except 1½ per cent beer.

After breakfast he comes down from his quarters to work in his expansive chancellery office where he has three private secretaries, Fraulein Wolf, Schroeder and Darranowski.

On his desk first are placed the main German newspapers. He reads them quickly but carefully, not overlooking the sports and theatrical columns.

Always In Touch With Berlin

At no time is Hitler out of connection with Berlin, even when traveling by plane, train or automobile caravan. His special train includes a car loaded to the windows with radio equipment to receive and send messages as well as to bring in a complete world news report. The same system is devised for auto caravans.

In his office he dictates letters and speeches for the most part into recording machines. Often, however, he dictates to a secretary who takes it directly on a typewriter while he paces the room.

During these hours the Fuehrer permits no interruptions. He edits his own speeches for accurate literary style. Some of his sentences, by the way, prove inexpressively tough for translating into English.

Often he calls in his advisers for roundtable discussions.

Called a Good Listener

Contrary to the prevailing belief abroad that he often bullies his intimates to force his own views on them, associates insist he is easy to talk to on the most difficult problems, is an extremely good listener and possesses a phenomenal memory.

From time to time he supplements his memory by jotting down notes in a small book he always keeps handy. If an adviser opens up a field of thought strange or interesting to him, Hitler questions him closely. He is said readily to accept the ideas of others when convinced they are better than his own.

Jodl is a comparative youngster with many fresh ideas appealing to Hitler. During the course of the war Keitel has become increasingly close to him because of his capacity for using drawings to clarify complex military situations.

Close associates say Hitler has an almost limitless capacity to absorb and remember details and that he often confounds his own advisers by recalling even the most technical matters.

Night finds him continuing his study, in recent months more especially of military problems. Before the beginning of the Western Front campaign last spring, his work desk each night was a tangle of military maps and texts from which he studied battle plans reaching back as far a 1,000 years.

Hitler likes the opera, vaudeville and the movies. He especially is pleased with one love story filmed in Bavaria and called "The Naughty Village." His favorite composer is Wagner.

Hates Closed Cars

He plays no games of diversion, follows no sport.

He detests closed cars, rides only in open ones, and most often sits up front beside the chauffeur.

His personal exercise is limited, but he burns up a tremendous amount of energy on the job. He enjoys an occasional walk in the chancellery grounds or out on the street in the evenings. He prefers to walk alone, although frequently in his chancellery strolls he is accompanied by diplomats and others.

The black-shirted S. S. Corps was formed early in the '20s for his special protection, but on his walks he does not accept such a guard. At Berchtesgaden he is accompanied by a shepherd dog, apparently his only pet. Years ago two of his dogs were poisoned in Munich, and he angrily told one intimate he felt as if he had "lost half his voters."

Say He Likes Children

Associates insist Hitler has a personal fondness for children, although he has never married. Nevertheless, his poses with children as disclosed in "publicity pictures" show him stiff, uncomfortable.

His only recent public demonstration of much outward emotion came when he was advised of Marshal Petain's offer of France's capitulation.

Warlord Hitler Designs Table Silver in Spare Time

Prussian Punctuality of Underlings Often Irks Fuehrer, Who Is Not Given To Over Care in Minor Matters

JAN 2 - 1941 JAN-1-1941

By Preston Grover.

Berlin (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—Adolf Hitler, in leisure moments, will quietly sit down at a table and test the weight and balance of knives, forks and spoons he is planning to give away as wedding presents.

Surprises his intimates—from whom these details of his daily life were obtained—that the man who is giving Europe a painful face-lifting operation would, for instance, devote considerable time to designing silverware.

But this he does; in fact he designed the silverware for his Berchtesgaden retreat, as well as for the big Reichschancellery in Berlin.

His associates describe him as "not overly particular about little things of his daily life." In turn, he worries somewhat about the Prussian punctuality that is the very spirit of his underlings in the Reichschancellery.

On coming from his quarters in the chancellery down to his workroom, he shakes hands with each of his help, asking after their particular joys or troubles, a custom followed more generally in Germany than America.

Has Several Private Dwellings

Besides the Reichschancellery, he has several private dwellings—and an apartment in Munich upon which he has paid rent regularly each month for the last 20 years and upon the door of which still is tacked the nameplate, "Adolf Hitler, author."

After all, he is the writer of one of the best-sellers of all time—"Mein Kampf"—of which some 6,000,000 copies have been issued. It is no secret here or abroad that various editions have been changed from time to time, one of the most recent ones coming out without such stern criticism of Russia as formerly.

Recently, a more palatial dwelling has been built for him by the state in Munich. But his favorite place is his Berghof at Obersalzburg, near Berchtesgaden. There in the Alps the Fuehrer retires when state affairs are not pressing.

It is understood all his houses are well-provided with bomb-raid cellars. This is certainly true of the Reichschancellery, where a group of several dozen children from an orphanage are brought nightly in huge government buses for undisturbed sleep.

Besides his private dwellings, several hotels about Germany have special apartments set aside for him. These quarters never are occupied by anyone else.

One is in the House Elephant, at Weimar, an old hotel rebuilt with Nazi Party funds into the most modern sort of hostelry, although it is not large.

Book Affords Adequate Income

Equally pretentious is his special apartment in the Hotel Dresden, at Godesberg, which, while compact, is somewhat gaudily furnished. It has a broad view of the Rhine Valley.

Like all other Munich citizens, he has a stammtisch—table reserved for a special group. One is at the Carlton Tea House, a quite elegant spot seldom found by strangers.

His revenue from "Mein Kampf" alone, assures him an adequate private income—the amount of which is undisclosed.

He has a special chauffeur, S. S. Brigade Leader Kemka, who has driven the Fuehrer's car since his favorite chauffeur, Julius Schreck, died in 1936.

Hitler's favorite towns are Munich, Godesberg and Bayreuth. The list fails to include Prussian-directed Berlin.

His intimates say he is a good mixer, tells a good story well and has an endless list of tales of party battles ranging back through the 20 years of the Nazi rise to power.

Necessarily he often gives huge chancellery banquets, but more often he dines with a few cronies.

Known for Kindly Acts

One frequent guest is Frau Winifried Wagner, daughter-in-law of Composer Richard Wagner, and her son, who was wounded in the war.

The towering traffic policeman in front of the Reichschancellery, known all over Berlin as Siegfried, tells of the time his wife was critically ill, and Hitler, learning about it, sent her to the hospital and paid the bill.

Hitler's private life, associates say, is distinguished by such acts of kindness which so many find hard to associate with a man who is able to order destruction of an entire city in order to further military operations.

Associates say Hitler has almost hypnotic capacity to incite men to extend themselves to the utmost. In this connection they cite his own definition of his power in a speech in the early days of the war.

Then, he said it was his capacity to act over people like a huge magnet and draw from them their greatest efforts.

EIRE RAIDED FOUR TIMES, DUBLIN HIT; R.A.F. SETS VAST FIRES IN BREMEN; NAZI PLANE CORPS IS SENT TO ITALY

Irish Capital Counts 12 Injured; 2 More May Be Trapped in Wreckage

3 Killed in Attacks In Environs Earlier

Sea Mines Are Dropped by Parachute; German Markings on One Bomb

By The Associated Press

DUBLIN, Jan. 3 (Friday).—A single unidentified warplane bombed this capital of neutral Ireland before dawn today, injuring at least twelve persons and damaging several houses. The bombing followed a series of aerial attacks which began Wednesday night on an area within a sixty-mile radius of Dublin. Some of the explosives dropped in the attacks were identified by Irish officials as of German type.

The persons injured here were in two houses on Donore Terrace which received direct hits. Windows were blown from several other houses. Two persons were believed trapped in wreckage.

Dublin's modified screened street lighting was in force when the bombs fell in the capital at about 4 a. m. Thus far there has been no demand for a complete blackout of the city. Crowds poured into the damaged area. Their attitude appeared to be one of surprise and bewilderment rather than outrage.

Synagogue Is Wrecked

[A high explosive bomb damaged two blocks of houses in South Dublin, the explosion being felt throughout the city, The United Press said. The bomb fell within 150 feet of Griffith Barracks, in the midst of what is known as Dublin's Ghetto. Windows of houses for several blocks were shattered and residents were forced to evacuate the dwellings. The city's principal synagogue also was wrecked, it was said.]

The attack apparently was made by a lone plane which approached Dublin from the north and flew over in a straight course.

Five areas were struck by bombs in the raid on Wednesday night, it was announced, including a plain which is headquarters for the Irish Army. One of the bombs, the Irish Defense Department said, bore German markings.

The missiles dropped from the unidentified planes included parachute-borne sea mines, which, the Irish government said, fell on shore yesterday morning and are lying unexploded in the fields.

Bombs Close to Irish Sea

Last night's bombs came down near Enniscorthy, sixty miles southwest of Dublin and less than fifteen miles inland from the Irish Sea, which separates Ireland and England. No damage or casualties were reported in this case, and the identity of the raiders was not mentioned.

In the attacks on Wednesday night, however, at least three civilians were killed and two injured at Knockroe, County Carlow.

The mines which fell at Enniskerry, County Wicklow, were said by experts to be of the German magnetic variety used early in the war before Great Britain devised a defense system against them.

They were carried to earth by parachutes of emerald-green silk, also said to be of German manufacture.

The government information bureau said army engineers would destroy the mines today and warned residents in a three-mile radius to open their windows. Residents for a half-mile about have been moved out of their homes.

List of Localities Bombed

In the five-hour bombing Wednesday night and yesterday morning the Department of Defense listed these localities as struck:

Duleek, five bombs, and Julianstown, three bombs. Both towns are near Drogheda, center of the Irish cattle industry supplying Liverpool, England.

Rathdown Park, Terenure, a Dublin suburb, two bombs; two houses smashed, several damaged; seven persons trapped in wreckage, but rescued; "several" persons injured. A fortified road in the Laverna Grove area of the same district, two bombs which fell in "waste ground," "some" houses damaged.

Knockroe, number of bombs not stated.

The old Curragh (County Kildare) racecourse — now Irish Army headquarters—three high explosive bombs and "a large number" of incendiaries in the area, the only damage reported being done to haystacks.

The Enniskerry - Kilmacanogue district, County Wicklow, number of bombs not stated; those found being examined by experts.

The Curragh, 4,858 acres, lies twenty-five miles southwest of Dublin, along the Southern & Western Railway. It is a site for military reviews, horse races and similar spectacles.

It was suggested in some unofficial quarters that the raiding planes were German craft repulsed by the British in an attack on Liverpool, 150 miles east across the Irish Sea.

This was the most widespread bombing of Irish territory so far, although there have been previous less serious incidents.

The Irish government announced that the German government had expressed regret for the bombing of Campile, on the southeastern Irish coast, in which four girls were killed on Aug. 25. Germany was represented then as not acknowledging that it was a German affair, but as "prepared to admit the possibility" that a Nazi pilot might have lost his way.

DUD IDENTIFIED AS GERMAN

Dublin, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—Invading aircraft cruised within a sixty-mile radius of this capital of neutral Ireland (Eire) for five hours last night and early today, killing at least three persons with high explosive bombs and dropping fire bombs, one of which was officially identified as of German origin.

An announcement by the Irish department of defense said that a fire bomb picked up in the vicinity of the Curragh of Kildare, one of five localities bomber, bore German markings. This area is a great level tract near the center of county Kildare. It was formerly British crown property but now is the headquarters of the Irish army.

"A series of bombs was dropped in various parts of the eastern counties last night and early this morning. The first bombs fell near Drogheda—five at Duleek and three at Julianstown. At neither place was there any casualties.

Two Houses Demolished.

"This morning two bombs were dropped at Rathdown Park, Terenure, Dublin. Two houses were demolished and several houses were damaged. Seven persons were trapped in the demolished houses, but later rescued. There was no loss of life, but several people were injured. Two other bombs were dropped in a fortified road in the Laverna grove area of the same district. Those fell in waste ground. Some houses were damaged but there were no casualties.

"At Knockroe, near Borris, County Carlow, bombs also were dropped. Three persons—Mary Ellen Shannon, 50, Kathleen Shannon, 16, and Brigid Shannon, 40, were killed. Two others—James Shannon, 40, and Michael Shannon, 20, were very seriously injured.

Incendiary Bombs Dropped.

"On the Curragh race course three high explosive bombs were dropped and a large number of incendiary bombs also were dropped in this area. A substantial quantity of hay straw was destroyed at the farm of James Cox, Walshetown, near Newbridge.

"An incendiary bomb picked up near Carragh, was identified as German. Bombs also were dropped in the Enniskerry-Kilmacanogue, County Wicklow district. These have been collected and are being examined by experts."

All attacks took place between midnight and 5 A. M.

The bombs dropped closest to Dublin were those which wrecked the homes in the capital's southwest suburb of Terenure.

The Curragh, a great level tract of 4,858 acres, lies twenty-five miles southwest of Dublin, along the Southern and Western Railway. It is a site for military reviews, horse races and similar spectacles.

Some unofficial spokesmen suggested that the raiders were Germans who had been repulsed by British fighters from an attack on Liverpool.

Raid Alarm in London.

London, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—The alert sounded early in London tonight and the city's anti-aircraft guns began an immediate barrage against the raiders. German planes also were reported over a town in southwest England, another in the west and a third in South Wales.

The day had been quiet.

German planes made small-scale attacks on widely scattered sections of England and Wales last night after a bomb-free New Year's eve.

The raiders killed a small number of persons, injured others and damaged some houses in the London area and in the northwest of England, the communique said, but elsewhere there was little damage.

In London three alarms were sounded, the last ending just before dawn. Liverpool, other Merseyside cities and towns in the east of England were subjected to scattered bombings, and some fires were reported, all brought quickly under control.

Meanwhile today the winter's first heavy snow fell on the Strait of Dover. The sea was moderately calm despite a brisk northeast wind.

This afternoon, however, the skies cleared and the sun shone, disclosing the French coast as plainly as on a summer day.

The Government permitted publication today of the fact that in a recent raid the famous Manchester Cathedral, dating from the fifteenth century, was damaged along with the Cotton Exchange, the Royal Exchange, Chetham Hospital and Free Trade Hall, all in Manchester.

Sheffield and Harwich Attacked.

Berlin, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—Liverpool, London, Sheffield and Harwich were raided on a minor scale by German warplanes during the night, informed Nazi spokesmen reported today.

R.A.F. LAUNCHES NEW ASSAULT ON FRENCH COAST

Flares Seen, Blasts Heard As Bombers Pound Nazi Invasion Bases

[By the Associated Press]

London, Friday, Jan. 3—The German air force singled out a town in South Wales for its overnight fire-bomb attack while raiding other parts of Britain on a far lighter scale.

The casualty list was not expected to be heavy, however. London had an early-evening alarm, but the all-clear signal came before midnight. Towns in the west and southwest of England also reported small raids.

JAN 3 - 1941

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 2—A new assault by British bombers upon the Nazi invasion bases along the French coast was signaled tonight by flashes of flares and muffled explosions visible and audible from across the cold and wind-swept straits of Dover.

German positions between Calais and Boulogne appeared to be under attack, with the Boulogne region and the Nazi big-gun emplacements at Cap Gris Nez getting special attention.

This attack, in which the R. A. F.

had to plunge through severely unfavorable weather, followed a foray which the Air Ministry declared paid Nazi bombers back with fire for fire. A tremendous raid on the airplane factories and other industrial plants of Bremen left flames visible 120 miles away.

New Attacks Hinted

There were indications that the Bremen attack was being followed by new assaults on Germany. The Deutschlandersender radio station, Germany's network, went off the air twice, once from 6.18 P. M. to 7.01 P. M. and again from 10 P. M. to 11.15.

Twenty thousand incendiary bombs and a great load of high-explosive missiles were dumped on the German North Sea military and naval port last night by relay after relay of planes, official accounts related. This, the British declared, was "partial retaliation" for last Sunday night's devastating fire raid on London.

Oil Refinery Damaged

The Deutsche Vacuum oil refinery, one of the largest in Germany, was greatly damaged, and railways of the port were hit "again and again," the bulletin continued. Factories along one railway line were declared to have been gutted.

To "long processions" of British flyers still en route an hour after the dusk-to-midnight raid began, the glow of Bremen's fires could be seen from over Holland's Zuider Zee.

"As they covered this last lap," said the bulletin which amplified an earlier communique, "the glow resolved itself into a blaze and the blaze into a raging furnace.

Hint Other Objectives

"The smoke rose to the height of clouds and was mingled with them. Some pilots found the particular objective which they had been detailed to attack so thoroughly ablaze that rather than waste their bombs on buildings already gutted, they sought other factories or dockyards in the city."

The news service said official reports of the raid broke into "exceptional eloquence" and described it as much worse than the attack on Mannheim, submarine building center raided for seven hours December 17.

Like Mannheim, Bremen also has important shipbuilding yards, which were among the targets of the raid. Starch and rice mills, docks and warehouses of a port rivaling Hamburg in importance, and other industrial objectives were declared hit.

Pilots who attacked the food mills reported eight large fires broke out and eventually came together "in one great conflagration" visible as they crossed the Dutch frontier on the way home.

At several shipbuilding yards where warships, especially submarines, were under construction, the bulletin said the raiders scored repeated hits with heavy explosive and incendiary bombs.

"On two of these yards nothing could be seen but a sheet of fire so brilliant and of such uniform intensity that bursts of high-explosive bombs could not be distinguished among the flames.

"The Atlas shipbuilding yards also were ablaze and a whole line of warehouses beside the No. 2 harbor was alight."

One pilot who "splashed" bombs into the blazing airplane factory reported six explosions followed.

R. A. F. Bombers Hammer Nazis on Occupied Coast From Flushing to Brest.

London, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—The major German port of Bremen was pounded for three and a half hours last night in the main attack carried out by the Royal Air Force against Nazi objectives, the Air Ministry announced today.

In partial retaliation for last Sunday night's fire raid on London, the British said, a concentrated discharge of incendiary and high explosive bombs was showered on Bremen's shipbuilding and dock yards and railway station and large fires and explosions were stated to have resulted.

The communique said that ports in German-occupied territory, including Flushing, Ostend and Brest, were also attacked, and in all these operations, the British said, not a single attacking plane was lost.

The Press Association said that apart from big loads of high explosives, the bombers carried large quantities of incendiary bombs. "This was the first opportunity they had had of giving the Germans a taste of what the city of London endured in the Nazi's wanton raid of Sunday night," it added.

Three Factories Bombed.

Berlin, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—Three factories and numerous houses were hit by bombs in British air raids on German points during the night, DNB, the official German news agency, reported today, and added that there was no damage to military objectives. The British planes, it was acknowledged, penetrated the defenses of North and West Germany, but Nazi pursuit planes shot down one, the agency asserted.

ENGLAND SEEKS MORE AMERICAN DESTROYERS

London Said To Be Urgently Asking Warships For Convoy, Sub Duty

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 2—Britain was said reliably tonight to be urgently seeking additional United States destroyers for convoy duty and to use as anti-submarine patrols on her transatlantic lifelines.

An informant, who termed this one of the most important ways in which America could expand her aid, intimated that the destroyer question and the need for cargo ships to replace those being sunk would be among the first matters brought up when Lord Halifax arrives in Washington as the new British Ambassador.

British maritime circles pointed to the recent assertion of Food Minister Lord Woolton that "the enemy is making a direct attack on our foodstuffs" and that "the danger is much worse than it was in the last war."

Need Convoys And Hunters

To all this, they said, the only answer was more convoy and hunting craft.

In sixteen months of this war approximately 4,500,000 tons of British, allied and neutral shipping have gone down. In the entire period from 1914 to 1919 the British lost 7,759,000 tons of merchant shipping and in that war Britain had United States shipping which now is kept from British waters by neutrality laws.

From time to time over the last year Britain and United States shipping circles are understood to have discussed the possibility of a working agreement to have United States ships take over British routes in South American and Pacific waters and thus release British merchantmen for service in the Atlantic.

Fear Loss Of Trade

This would give work to some United States ships thrown out of service by the neutrality law. The British, however, reluctantly face the possibility that the Americans might gain a trade foothold in territory traditionally British—a foothold which might be hard to dislodge after the war ends.

This reluctance is one reason why this scheme has never got beyond the stage of discussion. Another is that many American ships already are in Pacific and South American trade on a competitive basis.

One source said that while Britain needs more cargo ships an even graver need is for more destroyers to escort them.

"The more unprotected ships there are on the Atlantic routes the more targets," he added. "We want destroyers to protect them and to hunt and catch and kill the submarine and surface raiders."

Britain's Export Curb Seen As Blow To Eire

London, Jan. 2 (AP)—The British imposition of a licensing system on Irish exports, announced yesterday by the Ministry of Economic Warfare, was viewed here as adding a finishing touch to Eire's economic dependency on the country she refuses to fight for.

The ministry said that, beginning January 22, exporters in Ireland must procure navicerts (British cargo certificates) for shipments to several European neutrals, Soviet Russia, French West Africa and certain smaller territories. The United States is excepted.

Rationing Exports

Britain already has started rationing Irish imports with restrictions on cattle, feed, fertilizer and other supplies. Eire is mainly dependent on British shipping arrangements both for importing and exporting, and her money is tied up with the Bank of England.

The Irish pound is payable in London, and Irish bankers are careful to prevent clients from circumventing British defense regulations conserving foreign exchange.

Under the navicert system, the Irish can export to neutrals only when and what Britain sees fit. If they have a surplus of hogs, for instance, and want to sell them to Russia, Britain can prevent it if she takes the view that the ultimate destination might be Germany.

Pressure Increased

Economic pressure has been added to the British press campaign criticizing Eire's refusal to turn over her ports to the British navy, which would use them as advance Atlantic bases in the anti-submarine and anti-raider campaign.

Some sections of British opinion have been advocating that Eire be "cut adrift" completely if the ports are not handed over.

Eamon de Valera, Prime Minister, contends that handing over the ports would put Eire in the war and subject her to Axis bombing, for which she lacks defense.

Bombing of this kind, many Irishmen say, would turn Irish anger on Britain for involving them in the war and would reopen the old hatreds.

GREEK TROOPS PUSH ADVANCE ON NORTH FRONT

JAN 3 - 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Athens, Jan. 2—Despite bad weather and stiffening Italian resistance, Greek troops in the northern sector of the Albanian battle front were reported tonight to be slowly continuing their advance.

A Government spokesman said conditions in this area "have not completely stopped our troops from pushing their lines forward after crushing stiff enemy resistance and occupying some villages."

Hampered By Bad Weather

On other parts of the front, the spokesman said, "operations in the last few days were hampered by bad weather, above all torrential rains and stormy winds."

"Enemy aviation, apparently on account of the unfavorable weather conditions, has not displayed any action," the spokesman said.

Reports Downing Italian Plane With His Propeller

On the Southern Albanian Frontier, Jan. 2 (AP)—A Greek pilot claimed today he had downed an Italian bomber with the propeller of his plane after running out of machine-gun ammunition and captured its crew of three at pistol point.

His story, as related by military sources, said he exhausted his ammunition in a dogfight, then streaked for the bomber's tail and veered away just in time to avoid a full collision.

His blade cut the Italians' rudder and elevator surfaces and forced them to land, he reported, and he sat down in the same pasture with his propeller bent. The Greek met the Italians with his pistol drawn and they surrendered.

Greeks Win on Three Fronts

JAN 3-1941

Athens, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—The capture of heavily fortified Italian positions north of Klisura, near the center of the Albanian battle front, was announced by an official Greek spokesman today, while the Greek High Command reported the capture of prisoners, guns and other materials in local operations.

Strong Italian counter-attacks in the snow-covered mountains around Klisura were beaten back, the spokesman said, before the Italian defense works fell—a deep system of inter-communicating trenches protected by a double line of barbed wire entanglements and fortified with field guns and machine-gun nests.

In the north, where the weather conditions were particularly bad, the Greeks were declared to have seized new heights in fierce fighting after planes had bombed and machine-gunned the Italian columns. In the south, where the Greeks are driving toward the port of Valona, heavy Italian casualties were reported in a battle in which the Greeks captured numbers of Italian tanks.

Italian resistance is now said to be quite strong in the Klisura-Tepeleni sector, but the situation in all sectors was said to be satisfactory.

On retreating from Porto Edda before that town fell a few weeks ago, the Italians were today accused by the Greek Ministry of Home Security of having abducted fifteen Greek notables, whose fate is unknown.

Report Air Activity.

Rome, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—Despite unfavorable weather conditions, Italian bombing planes were today stated to have made successful attacks on Greek positions and troop concentrations along the Albanian battle front. Land operations on this front, however, were of a purely local character, the Italian High Command reported.

Greeks' Spirit Praised By U. S. Army Observer

Maj. Craw, at Front, Escapes Italian Bomber's Bullets

SOMEWHERE ON THE SOUTHERN ALBANIAN FRONT, Jan. 2 (AP).—A United States Army observer declared today that the Greeks held the initiative on every front he visited during a week's tour of the southern Albanian sector.

"Their fighting spirit is superb," said Maj. Thomas T. Craw, of the United States Army Air Corp, who arrived here today in a Greek staff car which was machine-gunned by an Italian dive-bomber along the Adriatic coast. One bullet, Maj Craw said, missed him by three feet in the ditch where he had dived to escape the attacker.

"The Greeks are doing marvelously with what equipment they have," he continued. "If I were to list the things they still need, I would say airplanes, trucks and pack mules."

German Raider in the Pacific Described as ex-British Ship

Hongkong Hears Craft Is Under Command of a 'Count von Lucknow'—Rescued Victims Recount Their Experiences.

Hongkong, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—The Nazi raider responsible for most, if not all, the sinkings of British ships in the Pacific was declared by travelers arriving here today to be the speedy, comparatively new former British-owned Glengarry, reported seized by the Germans at Copenhagen and converted into an auxiliary cruiser.

[The German "Who's Who" does not list a Count von Lucknow. The name recalls the exploits of Count Felix van Luckner, world war commander of the Seeadler, one of the German sea raiders which preyed on Allied shipping in the Atlantic and South Pacific. The British charged last June that Von Luckner carried out a spy mission when he visited Australia in 1938 during a round-the-world cruise. Von Luckner, now 55, has made frequent lecture tours of the United States.]

The 7,100-ton Glengarry formerly was operated in the Pacific by the Glen Line. She was launched at Copenhagen in 1939 and is reported to have a speed of twenty-two knots.

A group of 496 passengers taken from seven ships sunk by a Nazi raider in the Pacific reached Australia yesterday and reported that crews and passengers of three other sunken craft still were being held prisoner aboard the raider. The survivors who were landed by the raider on lonely Emirau Island in the South Pacific, said that the ship was operating under the name of Manyo Maru and that she was provisioned by a storeship under the name of Tokio Maru.

Raider's Shell Killed 6 Women.

Melbourne, Australia, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—The first shells fired by a German raider in the sinking of the 16,712-ton British passenger steamer Rangitane, in the Pacific Ocean on November 26, killed six women, according to the story told today by survivors.

Persons who escaped in that sinking and the destruction of nine other vessels by German raiders in the Pacific reached Australia yesterday. This group, 496 in all, was picked up by Australian vessels from lonely Emirau Island, just south of the equator, where they had been landed by the Germans.

The first shells exploded on the Rangitane before daylight, smashing through the ship's upper deck and killing the six women in their rooms, it was said. Fifteen women who survived told of the days they spent as captives in a small room below the waterline of the raider after the Rangitane had been sunk.

Survivors Questioned.

They said the raider's officers questioned them fruitlessly for days for information on the movement of ships. And before their release, they added, they found a microphone in a ventilator—apparently intended to pick up any conversation. The women said their food was unpalatable and scant and that they were given no water for bathing.

Men from the Rangitane said they were kept in the hold of a supply ship called the Tokio Maru, with a machine-gun trained on them. Their food, they said, was mostly black bread and their water, for drinking and sanitation was supplied by hose.

Father Kelly, a Liverpool priest, who was imprisoned with them, spoke highly of their conduct. They held nightly prayers and occasionally sang.

Two of the women killed in the Rangitane shelling were identified as stewardesses and one as an escort to 500 British children who had been taken to Australia. Survivors said the shells continued to crash onto the Rangitane as the passengers and crew tried to reach lifeboats. The ship's physician attended the wounded while stewards wrapped them in blankets and helped them into boats.

Miss F. Mundie, who also had helped to escort the children to Australia and was returning home, said that occupants of cabins on both sides of hers were killed and that she was struck in the face. Flying fragments ripped her clothing.

Berlin Says Craft Has Sunk 64,155 Tons to Date.

BERLIN, Jan. 2 (A. The crews of the ships were broughtt os afety o na South Sea isle by the German warship, the communique stated. It described the report filed by the warship on its activities as a partial one.

VON LUCKNER IS REPORTED RAIDING AGAIN

JAN 3 1941

Terror Of World War Days Believed Active Now In Pacific

Recent British Losses Thought Victims Of His Command

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 2—Naval circles said tonight the commander of a wide-ranging and destructive German raider in the Pacific "probably" is Count Felix von Luckner, World War commander of the German raider Seeadler.

These sources said they knew von Luckner went to America soon after the war began and that, although he was not a regular officer in the Nazi navy, the command of a Pacific raider was the sort of a job he would get.

It was reported in Hongkong that the speedy raider is the comparatively new former British-owned Glengarry, seized by the Germans at Copenhagen and converted into an auxiliary cruiser.

Back In Old Haunts

If the raider, capable of twenty-two knots, actually is skippered by von Luckner, the now 54-year-old Count has returned to haunt British shipping where he got in some of his most powerful blows twenty-odd years ago.

Playing a lone hand, in command of the Seeadler, von Luckner was credited with sinking twenty-five merchant ships in the Atlantic and South Pacific up to August, 1917, when a tidal wave swept the Seeadler ashore on a deserted South Pacific island. There the then-youthful commander and his crew were seized and interned in New Zealand for the duration.

Following the World War, von Luckner made frequent lecture tours of the United States and lived in this country seven years. Only last June the British charged that while on a Nazi-sponsored 'round-the-world "good will" tour in 1938, von Luckner in reality carried out a spy mission during its stay in Australia. The British "Who's Who" of 1940 lists him as "good-will missioner and sailor."

Accounts of the new will-o'-wisp sea raider came from widespread sources.

British Liner Shelled Without Warning, Claim

Melbourne, Australia, Jan. 2 (AP)—Destruction of the big British liner Rangitane by a German raider which stole alongside an hour before dawn and fired without warning was described today by survivors of the disaster.

Six women were killed outright by the shelling, and many of the survivors displayed wounds on faces, legs, arms and bodies.

One of the women related that the German captain, when ushering them aboard the raider as captives, asked, "Don't you British women ever cry?"

Among 496 Survivors

They were among 496 survivors of seven ships who were rescued by Australian ships after being marooned December 21 on the Island of Emirau, near New Guiana, by the sea raider and a Nazi supply ship on which they had been imprisoned when their ships were sunk.

The Rangitane's quartermaster, L. Valerie, said he was at the wheel on the morning of November 26 when he noticed the black shape of another vessel near by.

Thrown Out Of Control

At once the stranger opened fire, he said. The first shot crashed through the steering gear and threw the Rangitane out of control.

Other shells screamed into the 16,712-ton vessel rapidly, he said, killing six stewardesses in their rooms.

"Ship's Surgeon Crawford," Valerie continued, "gave first aid and the stewards gathered the dead and injured in blankets. There was no time to get stretchers."

Valerie and other survivors said the shelling continued even as they were trying to reach the boats.

Two Brothers Victims

Two brothers, named Stickfuss, from the engine room, were mortally wounded.

A Mrs. Langan, sitting beside her 10-year-old son Jimmie, who had part of his leg blown away by a shell, said:

"I half-carried Jimmie and his brother Brian to a lifeboat. As I did so I realized that Jimmie was hit, but he never whimpered.

"To think we were only three miles from home in Nauru when it all happened."

Fifteen women asserted they had spent nearly two months as captives in a small room below the water line in the German raider, that their food was scant and unpalatable and that they were given no water for bathing.

Under Machine-Gun Muzzle

Male survivors of the Rangitane reported they were imprisoned in the hold of a supply ship called the Tokyo Maru with a machine gun trained on them. Their food was mainly black bread.

Thirteen New Zealand airmen, among those landed on the island, said they had obtained their release from the Nazis by promising not to fight in the war. Five of their fellow-flyers were said to have refused to make such a promise, and thus still were in German custody.

Officials Fear Raiders Know British Naval Code

Canberra, Australia, Jan. 2 (AP)—Navy Minister W. M. Hughes said today the Australian Naval Board was investigating statements of rescued survivors of merchant ships sunk by German Pacific raiders "indicating that the raiders know the British Admiralty code for communicating with merchant shipping." Interviews with the survivors were said thus far to have provided no hint to the whereabouts of the base where the raiders and their supply ships are refueled and refitted.

Both Planes and Pilots Joined to Force on Mediterranean.

MANY FASCISTS CALLED HOME

Most of Units Ordered to Return From Channel Zone—R. A. F. Raids Italy and Africa.

Rome, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—German planes and pilots have been sent into Italy, an official announcement said today. It stated that they had come "to help in the bitter aero-naval fight now developing in the Mediterranean basin."

A published statement by Gen. Francisco Pricolo, chief of the Italian Air Force, said the German air corps should be considered as a great Italian unit and given every facility in Italy.

General Pricolo and Field Marshal Gen. Albert Kesselring, commander of German aviation on the coast opposite Britain, disclosed that, with the exception of one pursuit group, all Italian planes which had been aiding Germans in the air siege of England had returned home.

The size of the German air forces in Italy is a military secret, but observers assumed the Nazis would be as generous in their help as the Italians who were reported to have sent hundreds of planes and thousands of men, as well as trainloads of supplies, to the channel front. The official announcement seemed to support the general view here that no call was made or contemplated for infantry troops.

Move Called a Warning.

The transfer of Nazi flyers to the Mediterranean front was interpreted in foreign circles as indicating Axis air activity would be intensified and concentrated in this area during January, which usually is stormy over the English Channel.

La Tribuna said that the massing of Axis air forces in the Mediterranean sector was "a warning to those still counting on the British guaranty" and forecast that "the enemy's haughtiness" would be broken "at any cost with iron and fire."

Flew Troops to Albania.

Hitherto Italy's only acknowledgment of direct Nazi aid in the air was that German Junkers were used to transport troops to Albania, and that Italian flyers were using a number of German Stukas (dive bombers).

Dispatches said the German and Italian flyers on the channel front had fraternized well, and had learned to understand one another with the aid of dictionaries and grammars which were distributed among them.

Kesselring telegraphed the commander of the Italian air forces in German-occupied territory that the "pursuit group which still remains my dependent represents an ideal link of conjunction and I hope that war and destiny will again reunite the posts of commands and the groups which are now so much drawn together."

The German commander said the Italian flyers showed that they were not afraid to fight British Spitfires and did good work in the night bombing of England. He announced further that the commander of the Italian Air Corps in Germany had been awarded the eagle shield.

Meanwhile the Italian High Command reported today that British mechanized forces and redoubts were machine-gunned and bombed by Fascist warplanes on the North African front.

Attack by R. A. F. Planes.

British bombers struck back with attacks on Italian air fields in Libya, but caused only slight damage because of the counteraction of Fascist fighter planes and anti-aircraft batteries, the communique declared. It also acknowledged that British raiders bombed unidentified objectives in Ethiopia, but said that there, too, the damage was immaterial. One British plane was shot down over Libya, while all Italian craft returned safely from their operations against the British ground forces, the High Command reported.

Artillery, munitions and motor trucks were abandoned by the British on the western desert near Jarabub in the course of attacks by Italian aircraft mentioned in yesterday's communique, it was said.

The High Command in reporting on the land fighting in the Bardia sector merely noted continued artillery and patrol activity.

R. A. F. Bombs Bardia.

Cairo, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—R. A. F. bombers smashed at Bardia during the night, an official communique announced today, but still there was no sign of the all-out, land, sea and air assault counted necessary to wrest that eastern Libyan base from the Italian garrison which has held it for seventeen days' of siege.

In fact, reports from the western desert suggested the British army might not wait to take Bardia before striking at a second big Italian base, Tobruk, west of Bardia and eighty miles inside Libya from the Egyptian frontier.

The British said their mechanized patrols were operating regularly seventy-five miles beyond the border, and their mobile units were reported to have taken a firm grip on a long stretech of the road leading from Bardia to Tobruk.

The weather, however, was expected to prove a big factor in determining Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell's plans. In Libya during the next month or so this is generally the worst of the year, with torrential rains, sandstorms and bitterly cold nights.

Derna Is Raided Also.

Derna, 175 miles within Libya, and Tmimi and Gazala, in the Libyan part of the western desert, also were attacked by the R. A. F. Tuesday night and yesterday, the British announced. The bombardments centered on landing fields. Four grounded Italian planes, in all, were reported destroyed and a number of others damaged.

The R. A. F. has also raided points as far apart as lower Italy and Ethiopia in the last two days.

JAN 3 - 1941

Lower Italy Bombed.

This aerial offensive, one of the biggest in scope yet carried out in the Mediterranean theater of war, got under way Monday night and went on throughout the day Tuesday, the British said.

At Taranto, the Italian naval base where the British claimed to have crippled three of Italy's six battleships as well as four other warships on Armistice Day, eleven bombs were seen to burst around the units of the Italian fleet anchored there, the British reported. Palermo harbor, in Sicily, also was attacked, as were Naples and the suburb of Torre Annunziata. Bombs were dropped on a chemical factory at Crotone, in Southern Italy, according to the British.

Fires were set in a Fascist military camp near Gubbi, Eritrea, and stores and warehouses were bombed at Assab, Eritrea, the British said. Numerous fires were left at Danghela, Ethiopia, it was said.

Hitler Said To Regard Mediterranean As Better Winter War Theater

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 2—Italy announced officially today that a German flying corps has reinforced il Duce's aviators on Italian soil, and indicated this massing of Axis airmen would intensify the assault both on the Greeks in Albania and the British in North Africa.

The Germans, said the announcement, will "help in the bitter aero-naval fight now developing in the Mediterranean basin." (The British have been conducting widespread raids on Fascist objectives from the Italian Alps to the Red Sea.)

Italians Called Home

Coincidentally, it was disclosed that all the Italian air corps assigned to help the Germans bomb Britain from bases on the English Channel have been called home to Italy, except for a group of fighter planes.

Foreign observers believed that the wintry weather which, presumably, has been hampering attacks on Britain was one cause for this, and that the Mediterranean sector was considered a better field for action just now.

Axis Move "A Warning"

The newspaper La Tribuna said the Axis air coordination, coming when the British are exerting a strong effort to defeat Italy decisively, is "a warning to those who still count on the British guarantee and an announcement of new events for the enemy's haughtiness, which will be broken at any cost with iron and fire."

Greece and Turkey are guaranteed by the British, the latter having a mutual assistance pact with London.

Lavoro Fascista added that the German air corps would be assigned "a certain military task predetermined by the two commands" and that "all equipment and resources are pooled to make the attack against the common enemy more efficient."

Nazi Blow At Greeks Seen

This was interpreted in foreign circles as meaning the German flyers would attack the Greeks, with whom Germany nominally is at peace, as well as the British.

The size of the German corps is a military secret, but observers assumed the Nazis would be as generous in their help as were the Italians when, last October, they sent hundreds of planes, thousands of men and trainloads of supplies to the Channel front.

Today's announcement, made by Gen. Francisco Pricolo, chief of the Italian air force, also seemed to support the general view in Rome that German aid to Italy consists to date of specialized effectives, without any call yet made or contemplated for infantrymen.

Troop Planes Used

Heretofore it has been acknowledged that German transport planes were being used to take Italian troops to Albania and that Italian flyers were using some German Stukas.

General Pricolo called upon Italian air commanders cooperating with the German aviators to be "lavish in assisting our comrades who are arriving in our country, and furnish them with the utmost collaboration, both in the supply and operations fields."

Gayda No Longer Threatens Neutrals

JAN 3 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 2—Praise for the "political independence" of Brazil, Argentina, Portugal and Russia was expressed today by Virginio Gayda, whose writings often represent official Fascist opinion.

The editor of Il Giornale D'Italia reversed his recent procedure, which had been to warn neutral countries for what he considered were press and radio infractions of impartiality between the Axis powers and the democracies.

Gayda even found words of commendation for some Turkish newspapers, whose editorials, he hoped, would offset the "angry tendentiousness against the Axis" of other Turkish papers he had cited on previous days.

Concerning Brazil

After asserting that some Turkish papers had taken the Axis part, Gayda declared:

"But more notable manifestations are to be observed in the world. Important above all are yesterday's declarations by the President of Brazil, Getulio Vargas, regarding his country's firm intention to maintain its neutrality in the face of the European belligerents and to compel the same respect from all.

"These resolute words of warning sound an especially revealing note in the political history of this war. They confirm the force of independent loyalty and not less the wisdom of the great Brazilian nation. They also mean an important counter-balance to other, different political manifestations from other parts of the Western Hemisphere. By them Brazil showed the wish to form her policies and temper her interests without subjection to foreign interests.

As To Argentina

"Also significant is the firm insistence of Argentina in maintenance of the ban on circulation in her territory of the dishonest and defaming film which Charlie Chaplin, serving the interests of Anglo-American banks and businessmen, has put together with coarse means to exalt British imperialism and de[illegible]ince the war of liberation of the A[illegible] powers.

"This ban is maintained against North American diplomatic pressure. It, too, is an expression of political independence by the Argentine Government and its correctness in interpreting its moral and material duties of neutrality."

Lauds Portugal

Gayda also lauded Portugal for expelling the Lisbon correspondent of the Times of London, whom he described as "a clandestine agent of the (British) Intelligence Service."

Russia, the editor said, is showing through her press and radio a tone of "cordial tranquillity" toward Italy which "should be remembered and appreciated."

FASCISTS PRAISE ROOSEVELT REPLY

Say Peace He Wishes Italy Is Their Aim in War.

Rome Jan. 2 (A. P.).—Italian political spokesmen said today that they interpreted President Roosevelt's wish for a righteous peace for Italy in 1941 as meaning that peace with justice for which Italy is fighting; hence the message which the President sent King Victor Emanuel on Tuesday, in reply to a greeting from the monarch, has created, they said, a favorable impression here.

The President expressed the hope "that during the year to come the Italian people may be enabled to enjoy the blessing of a righteous peace."

The Italian newspapers failed to report the exchange of messages, but Fascists said that the omission was without significance, because "Italian papers never publish such telegrams which it is customary to exchange in accordance with etiquette." A righteous peace, foreign correspondents were told by Italian spokesmen, would mean, from the Italian viewpoint, "the freedom of our empire, freedom of our sea (the Mediterranean), and Europe's freedom from meddling by other Powers."

BRITISH DRIVE PAST BARDIA TO TOBRUK SEEN

Army Pushing West Without Awaiting Fall Of Besieged Port

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 2—British mechanized forces were reported operating seventy-five miles before the Egyptian border in Libya today in a possible prelude to an attack on the big Italian bases at Tobruk even before the anticipated fall of besieged Bardia.

With these forces declared to be firmly holding a stretch of the road leading from Bardia to Tobruk, eighty miles west of the Egyptian border, the R. A. F. lashed out anew last night against Bardia, on the Mediterranean coast, and other Fascist objectives deep into the Libyan desert.

Air Bases Attacked

Besides Bardia, the R. A. F.'s objectives included Derna, 175 miles within Libya, and the air bases at Tmimi and Gazala. The R. A. F. command said landing fields were blasted, resulting in the destruction of four grounded Fascist planes and damage to others.

After seventeen days of siege there still was no indication of any immediate British attempt to wrest Bardia from its 20,000 beleaguered defenders.

"No Sign Of Activity"

British general headquarters said: "The garrison of Bardia shows no sign of activity and is allowing us to continue our preparations and concentration without any interference."

Indications pointed to a likely thrust against Tobruk, where Italian forces have been busily strengthening their defenses. Just what the British will do probably will be governed by the weather for the next thirty days—a period in which there usually are torrential rains, sandstorms and freezing nights.

A general headquarters communique said the battle of Sidi Barrani, and the subsequent advance into Libya, had yielded the British 329 Italian artillery pieces, including twenty heavy and forty-eight light anti-aircraft guns.

Rome Reports Repulse Of Attacks By British

Rome, Jan. 2 (AP)—A North African correspondent of Stefani reported tonight that the Italians had repulsed repeated British attacks in the Giarabub zone just west of the Egyptian frontier in Libya.

The British action, he wrote, started December 24 with an attack of motorized units against the outposts of Melfa and Ain Gfetaia, but the immediate intervention of a fast Italian column with cannon and machine guns parried the threat. After four hours of sharp fighting, he added, the British were thrown back.

Thrust Reported Broken

On the following day, the correspondent reported, the British attacked about Garet Barud, four miles north of Giarabub, but an Italian garrison with the aid of bombers again broke the thrust, inflicting "notable losses."

Motorized Libyan troops were declared to have pursued the British, taking some prisoners and materials.

On December 26, the dispatch continued, the British unsuccessfully resumed the attack against Ain Gfetaia and on December 29 against Garet Barud. Once again, he said, they attacked without effect on December 31.

Today's Communique

Today's high command communique was largely a summary of attacks by Italian warplanes on the British mechanized forces besieging Bardia, in Libya, and on Greek positions and concentrations in Albania.

British artillery, munitions and motor trucks were abandoned on the North African desert, it said, in the face of one of these attacks.

The communique acknowledged "slight damage" to Italian airfields in Libya by British bombers, and other raids on Ethiopia.

LONDON, Jan. 2 (AP).—Well informed London circles reiterated today that certain units of the French fleet had left ports in France for Casablanca and Dakar, in French Africa—despite the continued official statements here that the British government had no knowledge of such a movement.

The informants pointed out that the movement probably was well known to the Germans, since any shift of French warships without Nazi permission would be counter to the terms of the armistice. Furthermore, the German Armistice Commission has agents at every French port.

It was suggested in London that should the Germans flagrantly break any terms of the armistice it would be a signal for departure of large numbers of French troops and air force and naval units to North Africa. The German observers at French ports are now in sufficient force to prevent that, it was said.

Berne Reports Say Petain May Shuffle Cabinet

Nazi Reply to Proposals Expected Soon; Sudden Break Appears Unlikely

BERNE, Jan. 2 (AP).—Reports from Vichy said today that French Chief of State Marshal Henri Petain might make several changes in his Cabinet on receipt of a German reply to his proposals for continued Franco-German co-operation. Fernand de Brinon, Petain's ambassador in occupied France, is expected to go to Vichy from Paris with the Nazi reply within the next few days.

Although there was no direct news from Paris, informed sources said there seemed to be no question of a sudden rupture in the Franco-German negotiations.

Berlin Denies Rupture

BERLIN, Jan. 2 (AP).—Authorized sources here declared today that reports of a break in relations between Berlin and the Vichy government of France were without foundation. [Such a break was reported Wednesday by Reuters, a British news agency, in a Lisbon dispatch.]

The sources asserted that Fernand de Brinon, for France, and Otto Abetz, for Germany, still were in contact, and "so long as relations exist between these two men one cannot speak of a break."

While the recent removal of Pierre Laval as Vice-Premier and Foreign Minister by Chief of State Petain "still has not been clarified 100 per cent," these sources added, there still continues in force what Fuehrer Adolf Hitler and Petain agreed to—namely, a mutual desire to come to an amicable arrangement.

Restoration Of A Napoleon To Throne Of France Hinted

Petain Regime And Bonapartists Reported Negotiating For Return Of Emperor's Great-Grandnephew

[By the Associated Press]

Bern, Switzerland, Friday, Jan. 3—Possibility that a modern "L'Aiglon" might rule France was disclosed today when it was learned that the Government of Chief of State Philippe Petain and Bonapartists were negotiating for the return of Napoleon's great-grandnephew, last of the Emperor's line.

Since Adolf Hitler's gesture in returning the ashes of the original "L'Aiglon," Bonaparte's ill-fated son who never saw France, the name of the dark and handsome young Prince has been mentioned frequently among royalists.

Hitler's action was declared by some observers to be a forerunner of the Napoleonic restoration, but friends of Louis Napoleon Jerome Victor Emanuel Marie say he would not be a puppet ruler.

He now lives quietly in Switzerland.

Prior to learning of the current negotiations the influential weekly Gringoire, most widely read French weekly, published a laudatory article about the 26-year-old Prince.

Since Petain took office, it was learned authoritatively, the supporters of the Count of Montfort, as he is called, have been seeking to have the Vichy Government abrogate the law forbidding the return to France if any male descendant of a former ruling family of France.

Abrogation of the law would be the first step in restoration of the young prince or the Count of Paris, the Bourbon pretender.

The next would be obtaining the blessing of Hitler, which perhaps is more necessary than that of Petain.

In this connection it was recalled that Hitler on his arrival in Paris after its fall went almost immediately to Napoleon Bonaparte's tomb, over which he meditated for some time.

However, the Prince's associates say he has not been approached by the Germans seeking the "good Frenchman" whom they would have rule a dependent state.

Montfort in his expansive lake villa north of Nyon on Lake Leman, remains inactive politically in deference to Swiss neutrality laws.

The prince, an extremely active youth, is unmarried and his engagement to various European princesses has been rumored frequently.

Bulgaria Puts Hope in Russia To Check Nazis

Thinks Resistance Futile if Hitler Strikes, but Moscow May Prevent It

By The Associated Press

SOFIA, Jan. 3 (Friday).—Differences between Germany and Soviet Russia over their interests in Bulgaria appear to offer the main hope of this country's retaining its independence, informed sources declared today.

[Dispatches from Yugoslavia pictured Bulgaria as apparently supine before a big German army concentrated in Rumania near the Bulgarian border.]

The general opinion of informed quarters was that Bulgaria would judge resistance futile if the Germans decided to move in. There has been no official intimation to this effect, however, and it was said that an official statement was extremely unlikely at this delicate moment, since the Germans might construe it as an invasion invitation.

The Germans were described as preoccupied over an increase in Communist propaganda in Bulgaria. Such propaganda was said to strike a responsive chord with the people's traditional sympathy for Russia, which in Czarist days supported them in winning freedom from the Turks.

Some observers reasoned that Germany was not likely to undertake any military action prejudicial to Bulgaria's integrity until assured of Moscow's attitude. This was considered especially probable because of the belief that Russian and Turkish policies might be co-ordinated in the event of any German move to occupy Bulgaria.

Many Bulgars suspect the present government of pro-Nazi leanings, since the country's chief Nazi advocate, Minister of Interior Peter Grabovsky, was named Acting Premier during the Vienna visit of Premier Bogdan Philoff.

Philoff reached Vienna yesterday on a trip described officially as for "medical consultation." Since the German Minister to Bulgaria, Baron Herbert von Richthofen, accompanied him, political circles considered it extremely likely that there might be political consultations also. It was believed that such talks, if they occurred, would certainly touch on Russia's efforts to strengthen its position in Bulgaria at Germany's expense.

(Once before, Bulgaria was looked on as the next likely convert to the Axis bloc, but on Nov. 25 Berlin sources said she was staying out, at least for the present, a fact which diplomatic circles in Sofia attributed to failure of Germany and Russia to agree fully on their Balkan spheres.)

It was learned today that King Boris III paid his customary New Year's visit to the Turkish Minister as dean of the diplomatic corps, and political observers regarded it a certainty that he took advantage of this opportuntiy to discuss Turkey's attitude toward the German military threat.

Bulgars Await Hitler's Plan

Philov Expected to Hear at Vienna What Role His Nation Must Play.

Belgrade, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—Bulgaria lay apparently supine before a big German Army massed along her Rumanian border today as her Premier, Bogdan Philov, hastened to Vienna for an expected conference with German leaders, leaving his pro-Nazi Minister of the Interior, Peter Grabovsky, in control of the Government.

Diplomats here expressed the belief that Philov would learn in Vienna just what Adolf Hitler plans to do with the Nazi forces in the Balkans and what part Bulgaria will be asked to play in the scheme. They said the stage appeared already set for a German drive through Bulgaria toward Greece or the Dardanelles.

Friends of the Bulgarian King, Boris III, said he may permit the passage of German troops through his little kingdom under protest; deemed it unlikely that he would call upon his people to resist, and said that his most earnest desire was to keep his country from becoming a battleground. The German force in Rumania is estimated to outnumber five or six times Bulgaria's entire army of 100,000 men.

Just before boarding his train at Sofia yesterday, Philov made a New Year's radio address in which he thanked the Axis Powers for helping Bulgaria get southern Dobruja back from Rumania, but warned his people that the coming year may prove difficult. The official announcement concerning his trip said that he was going to Vienna for medical consultation and made no mention of a meeting with German leaders. He has, in fact, been ill for some time.

However, he was accompanied in his special railway car by the German Minister to Bulgaria—Baron Herbert von Richthofen, brother of the world war ace—and there were reports that these two would be met in Vienna by the German Foreign Minister, Joachim von Ribbentrop, or some other high Nazi official.

Berliners Speculate Too.

Berlin, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—The fact that the Bulgarian Premier, Bogdan Philov, is on his way to Vienna excited speculation in political circles today, but the German authorities declined to attach any political importance to the trip.

One reason for the widespread interest in Philov's movements is the fact that authorized German spokesmen have consistently declined to comment on a secret address which he is reported to have delivered behind closed doors before Christmas. One opinion frequently expressed in non-official circles is that the German Government wants to know just what Philov said on that occasion and what, in consequence, Bulgaria's future relation to the Axis is to be.

Valona, Elbasani Held Keys To Italian Front

[By the Associated Press]

Bitolj, Yugoslavia, Jan. 2—The struggle by Italian troops to hold their lines around the southwest Albanian port of Valona and Elbasani, about sixty miles northeast, probably holds the key to the fate of the entire Albanian campaign, neutral observers asserted today.

In these quarters, the outcome of the battle now going on in the snow-mantled mountain peaks of southern Albania is considered so far a tossup.

Greeks Have Initiative

While the Greeks still are keeping the initiative, the Italians aided by Arctic weather conditions—are reported here as putting up their best resistance since the Greek counter-advance began.

If the present fighting goes against the Italians, and Greek troops occupy Valona and Elbasani, military experts said they expected the Italians to make a last stand in central Albania on a shortened line between Tirana, the Albanian capital, and Durazzo, strategic port west of Tirana.

The Italian command was said to be confident its forces would be able to hold that line and thus would not be obliged to face an Albanian Dunkirk at San Giovanni di Medua, tiny northern port.

So long as the Fascists are able to hold the Valona-Elbasani line, it was considered strategically possible for them to reorganize for a fresh attack in the spring.

If they are forced to withdraw on the Tirana-Durazzo line they could entertain scant hope of regaining the initiative. The problem of supplying the army through Durazzo, subject to frequent air attacks, would in itself preclude any further large scale Italian operations, competent observers said.

There was a possibility that the British might eventually attempt to send an expeditionary force to reinforce the Greeks in Albania wit hthe object of establishing a Balkan front for the invasion of Central Europe, similar to that carried out from Salonika, Greece, during the World War.

Japanese Apology Demanded

U. S. Marine Chief at Peiping Acts in Case of Men Arrested After Fracas.

Peiping, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—Col. Allen H. Turnage, commander of the United States marines stationed here, presented to the Japanese tonight three demands arising from the alleged maltreatment of five marines arrested after a cabaret fracas.

The demands were announced as follows: 1. That the Chief of the Japanese Gendarmerie apologize to Col. Turnage for the unlawful arrest and unwarranted use of force in seizing the Marines on December 30; 2. That the Japanese promise to take steps to prevent a repetition of such incidents, and 3. That the persons responsible for the arrests be punished.

They were handed to a representative of Lieut.-Gen. Hayao Tada, the Japanese Army commander for North China, when he appeared at Col. Turnage's office at the American's invitation.

Calls Men Innocent.

United States officials asserted that the five marines had been held for seventeen hours and that four of them had been injured by Japanese gendarmes. Col. Turnage said that all five were innocent of any wrongdoing.

The marines declared they were insulted and threatened in the cabaret by armed and drunken Japanese civilians. When the gendarmes arrived, they continued, they menaced all marines present with pistols and swords and refused admission to the marine military police. One of the five marines was said by American spokesmen to have been floored and kicked in the face by the gendarmes.

The five, four of whom were treated at the Marine Guard Hospital, are Corporals George Petroff of Washington, D. C., and Francis A. Barber, Dorchester, Mass., and Privates Walter G. Allen of Waxahachie, Tex., Hubert Sims of Big Creek, Miss., and Merlin W. Ankrom of Portland, Ore. The injured men were reported swiftly recovering.

Threatens to Go Higher.

After delivering the demands, Col. Turnage told the Japanese that unless they were complied with he would not consider the incident closed but would carry the matter to higher authorities. The Japanese indicated yesterday that they wished to consider the incident closed. Tonight, however, they refused to discuss the issue.

Germans Claim Lead of 25 to 1 In Bomb Raids

Semi-Annual Report on War Lists 3,900,000 Tons of British Shipping Sunk

BERLIN, Jan. 2 (AP).—The German high command claimed for its air force today a twenty-five-to-one superiority over the British in bombs dropped during the last half of 1940, credited the air force and the navy together with sinking 3,900,000 tons of British shipping, and declared that 1941 "will bring proof" of the effectiveness of "the battle against Britain."

The 1,500-word semi-annual report was confidently phrased. It said: "Accustomed to victory and steeled in the fight, the armed force looks back upon a year of proudest successes. Certain of victory and stronger and better armed than ever, it looks forward to the coming year."

The report declared that the European coast from Narvik, Norway, to the pyrenees frontier of France and Spain had been made impenetrable to any British landing operations.

The high command said German airmen dropped twenty-five pounds of bombs on England for every pound dropped on German or German-controlled territory by the Royal Air Force, and added these assertions:

In 2,000 attacks since Aug. 8 (the beginning of the "retaliation" siege of Great Britain), the German air force has dropped on Britain 92,400,000 pounds of high explosive and 3,520,000 pounds of incendiary bombs.

Three British planes were destroyed for every German craft lost definite figures were not given).

Britain's most important harbors were attacked 350 times, with "heaviest damage to Britain's imports and the capacity of these important harbors."

There have been 130 major air attacks (in each of which 100 tons or more of bombs were dropped) on the Bristish isles since Aug. 8, and more than 100 attacks on London since Sept. 6, "some of which were of tremendous size."

Since Nov. 16 eighty major air attacks and 325 smaller ones have been launched against Britain's munitions industry centers alone—the review said the Midlands was the chief target of the Luftwaffe; one thousand smaller attacks were said to have been made on supply centers, barracks, airports, power stations, oil tanks, grain elevators and other military objectives;

Of the 3,900,000 tons of shipping said to have been sunk by the German Navy and air force since the armistice with France, the air force accounted for 700,000 tons; at least 264 ships totaling 2,000,000 tons were damaged or incapacitated, and to these figures must be added damage by mines strewn "even in the most distant seas."

One hundred and twenty-seven units of the British combat fleet, displacing a total of 190,000 tons, were sunk—ninety-five by the navy and thirty-two by the air force. The navy sank twelve destroyers, eight submarines, nine auxiliary cruisers, three gunboats and sixty-three smaller warcraft; air force sinkings were not broken down;

Germany lost only eight submarines, five mine sweepers, three torpedo boats and twelve smaller craft.

The high command acknowledged, in its daily communique, that British bombers hit three factories and "numerous houses" last night in northwestern Germany,

On the offensive side, the German air force was reported to have raided Liverpool, London, Sheffield and Harwich.

NAZIS TURN DOWN WHEELER'S PLAN

JAN 3 - 1941

Say They Need No Advice From Other Continents.

BERLIN, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—An unofficial source which undoubtedly reflects responsible Nazi opinion replied to United States Senator Burton K. Wheeler's "peace plan" today with the comment that "the new order in Europe is something concerning which we need no advice from any other continent, just as we do not offer advice to other living spaces and don't intend to give any in the future."

"We are not making any plans for a new order in America, either," this source said, in giving what was emphasized as being a purely personal opinion.

Official German circles consistently have declined to reply authoritatively to opinions and plans voiced by United States statesmen who are not part of the administration.

Dictators' Greetings Speak of Conquest

Berlin, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—In an exchange of New Year's greetings, Adolf Hitler wired Benito Mussolini that Italy and Germany in coming years will fight to a "decisive defeat of the common enemy." Mussolini's message declared that "our revolutions and people march in tested comradeship to victory."

It was announced that Hitler received messages from numerous heads of States, but King Vittorio Emanuele of Italy was the only one specifically named.

British Air Strength Greater Than Ever, Beaverbrook Asserts

London, Jan. 2 (AP)—Lord Beaverbrook, the Minister for Aircraft Production, said today Britain has "more planes in service and more in reserve than ever before," and that a "very good flow" is coming from the United States, some of them flown across the Atlantic.

The ministry, he asserted at a press conference, is pushing industry "to the last point of endurance," but he confessed he did not know whether production was anywhere near that of Germany.

Four new types are in production, Lord Beaverbrook disclosed, and three of them already are in the air. They are the Manchester bomber, Sterling bomber, Whirlwind fighter and Tornado fighter. The last he described as "a gem—the most successful new fighter," with greatly increased range and speed.

Britain Accepts Women As Fire-Bomb Fighters

Can't Keep Them Away From Dangerous Work In Country's Defense, Says Morrison

London, Jan. 2 (AP)—Women as well as men will be accepted for Britain's volunteer fire-bomb fighting brigades, Herbert Morrison, Minister of Home Security, announced today.

"Fighting fire bombs is dangerous work," Morrison said, "but the time is long gone by when women can be kept away from dangerous work in defense of their country."

Morrison said "great numbers" of men and women had answered his appeal for volunteers.

Anzacs Paroled by Nazis Face Ethical Dilemma

Up to Flyers Whether They'll Keep Word Not to Fight

MELBOURNE, Australia, Jan. 2 (AAP).—Thirteen New Zealand airmen, from whom the crew of a Nazi raider exacted a pledge to stay out of the war, are wondering today where their duty lies.

The men were among a group of 500 men, women and children who were landed on a South Sea island by a Nazi raider after their vessels were sunk. They arrived here today.

The airmen obtained their release from the Nazis by promising not to fight in the war. Five of their fellow flyers are still prisoners because they refused to take the oath.

Navy Minister W. M. Hughes of Australia said the men's consciences must decide whether the pledge was valid. Promises under duress are not binding, he said, but it is customary to honor the terms of parole.

The pledge not to participate in the war did not prevent seamen from resuming their normal occupations.

Arias Promises Panama's Help In U. S. Defense

Nation's Sovereignty Must Not Suffer, He Qualifies; Bid for Bases Under Study

PANAMA CITY, Jan. 2 (AP).—President Arnulfo Arias, in a speech devoted largely to relations between Panama and the United States, said today his government was "ready to lend its co-operation to facilitate the defense program which the War and Navy Departments of the United States contemplate."

In exchange, he said, Panama expected "understanding and unselfishness from the United States government to compensate fully for the burdens and perils which, by reason of this co-operation, the Panamanian people must confront." He emphasized that such co-operation "does not and can not signify the cession of sovereignty or unrestricted jurisdiction over any portion of the nation, nor can it prejudice the vital interests of the country."

Arias said his government was studying a request by the United States for the establishment of new air bases and detector and searchlight stations in different parts of Panama. "The great development in importance of military aviation makes it indispensable that vigilance and alert stations be extended to territories that are outside the boundaries of the Canal Zone proper to insure the Canal's due protection and command," he said.

The President's address came as he joined deputies of the National Assembly in swearing to uphold Panama's new constitution, which, among other things, leaves between 70,000 and 90,000 persons without a country—mostly the children of Negroes whose language of origin was not Spanish, and the children of Asiatics. The constitutional provision is retroactive, denying citizenship to persons of those bloods born after Nov. 3, 1903, the date of Panamanian independence from Colombia. The majority of those denationalized are of British West Indian extraction, descendants of laborers imported to help dig the Panama Canal.

One of the most important effects concerns employment. Panamanian law requires that three-fourths of any concern's pay roll go to "Panamanians."

SUPPORT GIVEN BALDOMIR

Herrerista Party Votes to Aid Uruguayan Bases Plan

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Jan. 2 (AP)—In an about-face, the Herrerista party voted in caucus today to support President Alfredo Baldomir's proposals for naval and air bases within the Pan-American defense system.

Thus the country's largest minority party, which under the Constitution controls half the seats of the Senate and three Cabinet posts, ended two months of bitter opposition directed by its leader, Senator Luis Alberto Herrera. The Senator had denounced the proposed bases, which would be built in collaboration with the United States, as a threat of domination by the northern power.

A rider in the resolution demanded that the whole question must be reviewed with each step taken toward achieving the bases.

SOVIETS ON GUARD

Stalin's Warning Broadcast to the Russians.

Moscow, Jan. 2 (A. P.).—The Communist party adopted for its new year slogan today a call issued three years ago by Joseph Stalin: "Keep the State constantly mobilized as preparedness in the face of danger from military attack so no 'accident' to peace, no tricks of our foreign enemies, can catch us unaware."

The advice, repeated by Pravda, Communist party organ, was contained in a letter which Stalin wrote to the young communists on February 12.

The call for preparedness was also repeated on the Soviet radio.

Stalin's statement antedated by about eighteen months the signing of the Russian-German nonaggression pact shortly before Germany invaded Poland September 1, 1939.

Denmark's Wholesale Prices Rise Sharply

Increase Of More Than 70 Per Cent. Is Shown Since Outbreak Of War

Copenhagen (Via Berlin), Jan. 2 (AP)—Wholesale prices in Denmark have risen more than 70 per cent. since the outbreak of the war, Government figures disclosed today.

On the basis of 1935 prices as 100, the Government index stood at 111 in August, 1939, and reached 190 last month.

JAN 3 1941

Curtailed opportunities for investment of capital have caused a huge increase in bank deposits, which, last month, reached the record total in Copenhagen's three principal banks of 319,700,000 kroner, an advance of 46,300,000 kroner from November. Previous to the German occupation of Denmark, the krone was quoted at about 21 cents; since that time, the currency has not been traded in the New York "free" market. The decline in agriculture is marked. Using the index of 1935 as basis, milk production now is 69, egg production is 44 and pork is 86.

Danish Bachelor's Choice: Cake Of Soap Or A Shaving Stick

Copenhagen (Via Berlin), Jan 2 (AP)—National soap rationing has confronted Danish bachelors with the choice between one cake of hand soap monthly or a shaving stick. They can't have both.

Households get about 14 ounces weekly per member and soap consumption in laundries, barbershops and public baths is cut to seventy-five per cent. of normal. Restaurant consumption has been cut fifty per cent.

JAN 3 - 1941

Rationing also is extended in other directions, including butter which has been fixed at twelve ounces per person weekly—much higher than in most European nations. Restaurant consumption of butter has been cut fifty-five per cent. from pre-war levels.

Margarine as well as other vegetable and animal fats is becoming scarce and expensive.

London Arms Bobbies, Buys U. S. Revolvers

First Firearms Ever Carried Intended to Repel Invader

WORCESTER, Mass., Jan. 2 (AP).—A $300,000 order from the British Purchasing Commission for 25,000 revolvers to arm the London bobbies was announced today by Joseph P. Carney, president of Harrington & Richardson Arms Company.

The London police have never been armed with revolvers or similar weapons, Mr. Carney said. The revolvers are to help repel any invader.

Wilmington Gives $55,602 to British

JAN 3 1941

Wilmington, Del., Jan. 2 (A. P.).—The Wilmington branch of the British War Relief Society during the last week forwarded $55,602.06 to New York headquarters, it was announced today.

This amount, according to Mrs. Petrus W. Meveringh, public relations officer of the branch, will be used to purchase mobile units and supplies used in aiding the civilian population of England.

Included in the total were gifts of $20,000, $5,000 and $800, contributed by three Wilmington women who requested that their names not be disclosed.

Japanese Asked To Be Calm

Consul in Honolulu Advises Friendly Terms With Americans

HONOLULU, Jan. 2 (AP).—Otojiro Okuda, Acting Japanese Consul General, told two hundred Japanese nationals at the consulate today they "must remain calm and on friendly terms with Americans and other people here, no matter what the situation is in 1941."

"I earnestly hope you will always remember," said Okuda, "that you are loyal subjects of Nippon, and at the same time fathers or brothers of good and loyal Americans, and will act accordingly."

HONOLULU, Jan. 2 (AP).—The Star Bulletin" said today that twelve VP-11 bombers arrived from the mainland Tuesday noon after a non-stop flight. Confirmation was not forthcoming in naval circles.

New York, Jan. 2 (AP)—Harold S. Vanderbilt, honorary chairman of the Greek War Relief Association, said today $1,000,000 had been cabled to Athens for the aid of the civilian and wounded population.

In the War Zone

Winner of War May Be Discernible Within the Next Six Months

JAN 3 - 194

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

This new year should give us a fair chance—not unlikely within the first half—to determine the ultimate winner of the European war.

While we can see certain tendencies, the only thing we can be dead sure of to my mind is that neither side has won this war yet.

However, the wheel of fortune is spinning fast and we may see a radical change in the situation in a short time. Actually there is a possibility that the conflict may be ended this year, though I certainly am not predicting that.

I believe we should be able to pick the champion if and when Hitler has tried his projected invasion of England, against which the Britons are guarding night and day. The consequences of that operation will be so far-reaching that he is likely either to emerge the conqueror of Europe or a badly beaten man who may still hang on for a time but ultimately must succumb.

Invasion of England is, in my view, the only chance of a very quick decision. If the Nazi chief finds this too risky, we shall have to await other major moves and the conflict will be drawn out.

Needs Great Air Superiority.

Most neutral military experts think the odds are heavily against the success of invasion. So far as appears now, the only way he could achieve it would be to produce sufficient air superiority to crush England before trying to land troops.

Last week after I had spoken in New York before the American Association of Teachers of Journalism, a man came to me and said:

"A year ago I heard you state you thought grains of wheat would have more to do with the outcome of the war than would bullets, that economic strangulation would be the winning factor. Do you still believe that?"

I told him yes. The British blockade which is raising havoc with Axis resources is far stronger than it was a year ago. The whole continent now is blockaded as the result of the Nazi occupation of neutral countries.

The British Ministry of Information in a year-end review stated that sea power was the hub upon which the whole allied cause revolved during the year. I believe sea power will continue to be the theme song of the Allies to the end. Naturally, naval operations will have to be supplemented with land offensives.

At the same time Hitler's fierce submarine counter-blockade is causing the British much concern. Premier Churchill has said still heavier U-boat attacks must be expected this year. Despite this the Government asserts there is no cause for despondency.

Britain enters the new year with a steadily increasing strength, which gives her confidence to face a Germany whose might undoubtedly has reached its apex. Churchill says "by efforts now being made and by the great supplies which are reaching and will reach us from the United States, we hope we shall become well armed during 1941."

That is two years sooner than most experts had expected a few years ago—a remarkable achievement.

The victories over the Italians have completely altered the picture in that vital zone, and vastly increased the Allied chances of winning the war.

The blockade has cut Italy off from essential supplies, including foodstuffs, and virtually isolated her from her colonies and African armies. If she doesn't collapse, she still won't be much of an asset in the partnership with Germany.

Small wonder that as we enter the new year President Roosevelt should say: "I believe that the Axis Powers are not going to win this war." I shouldn't want to bet that he is wrong.

The Texts of the Day's War Communiques

JAN 3—1941

British

LONDON, Jan. 2 (AP)—The Air Ministry issued the following communiqué today:

Bremen provided the main objectives in last night's offensive operations by the Royal Air Force. The attack was heavy and lasted some three and a half hours.

Shipbuilding and dock yards and the railway station were subjected to a concentrated discharge of incendiary and high-explosive bombs. Large fires and explosions were seen.

Ports in enemy-occupied territory, including Flushing, Ostend and Brest, were also attacked. None of our aircraft is missing.

A communiqué of the Air and Home Security Ministries:

Several enemy aircraft were active over widely separated districts of England and Wales last night. Few bombs were dropped, but in the northwest of England and the London area some houses were damaged. A small number of people were killed and some others were injured.

From elsewhere little damage, with very few casualties, was reported.

Another communiqué issued by the two Ministries:

During daylight today there has been a little enemy air activity in some coastal districts. Bombs were dropped in one town in Kent, but they caused little damage and only a few minor casualties.

Reports received since the last communiqué was issued show that a small number of persons were killed when a single enemy aircraft dropped bombs in a town in the west of England shortly before dawn this morning.

The Italian garrison of Bardia shows no sign of activity and is allowing us to continue our preparations and concentration without any interference.

Other fronts—No change in the situation.

Captured guns now counted over the extensive battlefield of Sidi Barrani and during our subsequent advance into Libya total 329, including 20 heavy and 48 light anti-aircraft guns.

The Royal Air Force issued this communiqué:

During the night of Dec. 31-Jan. 1 bomber aircraft of the Royal Air Force carried out raids on airdromes at Temimi and El Gazala [in Libya]. Further raids on the same landing grounds were made yesterday. At El Gazala three enemy aircraft were destroyed and a number of others seriously damaged. All bombs burst in the target area at Temimi, causing fires and damage to dispersed aircraft.

Bardia was raided last night and, while bombs burst in the objective area, details of the damage were not observed. Derna was attacked yesterday and one aircraft on the ground suffered a direct hit and a number of others were probably damaged.

In Italian East Africa aircraft of a Rhodesian squadron destroyed a number of buildings near Sabrerat [in Eritrea], while other aircraft of the same squadron carried out a dive attack on enemy positions at Keru, fifty miles east-northeast of Kassala [in the Sudan]. Motor transport vehicles were destroyed, one very large fire was started and several anti-aircraft guns silenced.

From all these operations our aircraft returned safely.

Greek

ATHENS, Friday, Jan. 3 (UP)—A Greek War Ministry communiqué today said:

There was successful local action [in Albania]. Prisoners and some machine guns were taken.

A Ministry of Home Security communiqué:

All was quiet in the interior of the country.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 2 (AP)—Today's Italian High Command communiqué:

In the Cyrenaica frontier zone [of Libya] there was artillery and patrol activity on the Bardia front. In the Jarabub zone we gathered armaments, munitions and motor trucks abandoned by the enemy on the battleground reported in yesterday's bulletin.

Enemy air raids on our fields in Cyrenaica produced slight damage without casualties. Intervention of pursuit planes and anti-aircraft reaction were effective. An enemy plane was shot down.

Our assault and fighter formations bombed and machine-gunned numerous mechanized forces and an enemy redoubt. All of our planes returned.

On the Greek front operations of a local character were reported. Despite unfavorable weather conditions, our air formations dropped shrapnel bombs successfully on the enemy preparations.

In East Africa there were local actions of patrols and artillery. Enemy planes bombed our localities in Ethiopia without causing damage.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 2 (AP)—Today's German High Command communiqué:

A German warship operating in the Pacific, according to a partial report on its activities, has sunk ten enemy merchant ships or ships in enemy service, totaling 64,155 gross register tons. The crews of the ships were brought to safety on a South Sea isle by the German warship.

In the course of armed reconnaissance on Jan. 1 a British outpost boat was set afire off Aldeburgh and another outpost boat east of Ramsgate was heavily damaged by bomb hits.

During the night of Jan. 1 German fighting airplanes successfully bombed numerous war-important objectives in Middle and Southeast England.

In the course of the night British airplanes dropped bombs in Northwest Germany, in three cases striking factory buildings and causing some damage. Five persons were killed and several wounded. An enemy airplane of the Vickers-Wellington type was shot down in an air fight.

QUITS PRO-ALLIED GROUP AS LEADER

JAN 3—1941

William Allen White Resigns As Active Chairman Of Committee

[By the Associated Press]

Emporia, Kan., Jan. 2—William Allen White resigned today as active chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

The Emporia editor will serve, however, as honorary head and as a member of the executive committee of the group he formed last May to help throw the economic and moral weight of the United States on the side of England and France in the European war.

"The need for hard concentrated intelligent work on the chairman job is too much for a man who has to earn a living running a country newspaper," White said in a statement. He suggested the post go to "some strong, high-visioned young man" who could devote full time to the work.

Accepted With Reluctance

The organization's headquarters in New York said White's resignation had been accepted with the "greatest reluctance" and added the executive committee would meet soon to name a successor.

Clark Eichelberger, national director of the committee, said the policy board and executive committee probably would meet in New York Tuesday to select White's successor. That meeting, he said, would follow one he intended to call for mid-Western chapter secretaries and executive committeemen on Monday in Chicago.

There has been much discussion recently of the committee's aims and some evidence of disagreement among members. Committee spokesmen insisted they wanted to give Britain all aid short of war. Critics contended the committee sought to put the United States into the war.

White in his statement today said:

"The menace of appeasement is heavily financed and only our committee is organized to meet this threat. The need to keep public sentiment alive to the terrible danger of a letdown in our armament program will require even more service from our committee than so far it has been organized to give.

Must Keep Life Line Open

"Finally, yet foremost, America must keep the lifeline open between the United States and Great Britain and must give the President every encouragement and support in his policy to aid Great Britain.

"We must impress upon Congress he need to back him. All these will call for strength, vision and a tenacity of purpose which makes the chairmanship of our committee some young man's full-time job. Making exit I pause to thank the 12,000 citizens who have financed this committee with $225,000 in small gifts. That sum has enabled half a million American citizens in 700 branches of our committee to feel that self-respect which is the essence of democracy.

"For each of these half a million Americans functioning through our committee has enjoyed a vital sense that he was making his private sentiment public opinion. We all joined from Portland to Portland, from Miami to San Diego and crisscross over this land in erecting a powerful engine of propaganda.

Gives Blessing To Successor

"In that engine we in the New York office were really insignificant—flies on the wheel of the dynamo that moved events. The workers in the 700 branch chapters furnished the power. It was an adventure in democracy.

"In releasing the lever now I wish to give my successor, some strong, high-visioned young man unknown to me, every good wish, every high hope, every blessing of an abiding faith that he will go forward to serve his country in the tragic need of this dark hour. Only as our democracy can organize and implement its power can it shield our country from danger and save the world for free men."

A recent statement in which White said his only reason for committee membership was "to keep this country out of war" brought from Mayor F. H. LaGuardia the assertion White had "done a typical Laval."

LaGuardia Honorary N. Y. Head

In New York the committee made public a telegram it sent to White at Emporia, which said in part:

"The committee assures you that it will go forward on a program of all material aid to Great Britain and her Allies and opposition to appeasement with the vigor that you have inspired thus far, and we only accept your retirement as active chairman with the knowledge that we will have that inspiration until our task is completed."

Marshal Von Blomberg Reported Imprisoned In Fortress By Hitler

New York, Jan. 2 (AP)—The British radio, in a broadcast heard here by NBC, declared tonight that Marshal Werner von Blomberg, one-time German Minister of War, is imprisoned in a Bavarian fortress by personal order of Adolf Hitler.

The British radio said the marshal, now 62, was imprisoned with four other officers and all were required to listen daily to the German high command communiques because they had opposed the present war.

This deepens the eclipse into which von Blomberg fell because of his marriage on January 12, 1938, to a carpenter's daughter named Erika Grohn.

Hitler himself attended the wedding, about which the German high command was distressed. It was said von Blomberg's fellow staff members felt he had married out of his class.

He resigned almost immediately as War Minister and went with his bride on a honeymoon to Capri.

Von Blomberg's whereabouts have been unknown generally since.

'TORPEDOED,' SAYS UNLISTED SHIP BY RADIO

Galgora's Position Given As 500 Miles Northwest Of Dakar

British Nalgora's Message About Mysterious Pursuer Recalled

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 2—Mackay Radio reported that the steamer Galgora had radioed at 5.10 P. M. today that she had been "torpedoed."

The ship's position placed her about 500 miles northwest of Dakar on the coast of West Africa, and about 500 miles south of Teneriffe in the Canary Islands.

There is no Galgora listed in Lloyd's or other standard shipping registries.

Nalgora Canceled

A British freighter Nalgora, 6,579 tons, radioed Monday that she was being traced by a mysterious ship approximately 1,000 miles north of the position given in this latest call. The Nalgora, ordinarily in trade to India, later canceled the call.

Tuesday night a ship identified herself as British and giving the name Zeal reported she had been torpedoed about 250 miles northwest of Dakar. She also was unlisted in shipping registries.

Maritime circles in New York later expressed the belief that the Zeal was the British Zeal, an 8,532-ton motor tanker built in 1937 for trade between England and the Near East oil fields. This ship was last reported at Cape Town last April.

saw in the situation evidence that Moscow was following a shrewd diplomatic policy in relations with Japan and Germany.

The fact that there was no announcement of a renewal of the fisheries pact before the end of 1940 caused surprise. If the delay should continue beyond the New Year holidays, observers said, it might indicate that Berlin had been unable to persuade Moscow to come to terms with Tokio.

Legion Backs 18 to 21 Draft For All Males

Washington, D. C., Jan. 2 (AP).—The American Legion began a drive today to have the draft law made permanent legislation, but with compulsory military training limited to men 18 to 21 years old. The legislative committee of the World War veterans' organization said Senator Sheppard (D-Tex.) and Representative May (D-Ky.) had agreed to introduce legislation embodying this program tomorrow, the first day of the new Congress.

The present draft law, making men 21 to 35 inclusive liable to a year's military training, will expire in five years, unless reenacted. The Legion's proposed amendment changing the age limits would strike out the clause limiting the legislation's life.

"By this simple amendment, universal military training would be made the permanent policy of the nation, and the training period of one year would fall within the younger age limits of 18 to 21, relieving older men from required military training in peace time," the legislative committee said in a statement.

ARMY PLANS TO ASK $3,000,000,000 MORE FOR DEFENSE TASK

JAN 3 - 1941

Request to the New Congress Aims at Billion for 3,600 Added Bombing Planes

TANKS, GUNS ALSO SOUGHT

New Sum Would Raise Beyond $20,000,000,000 Total of Arms Costs in Last Year

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2— The Army prepared today to ask the new Congress for an additional $3,000,000,000 to further its armament program.

The amounts to be asked after the new session opens tomorrow were reported to be as follows:

$1,000,000,000 for the production of 3,600 more bombing planes from parts made largely in existing automobile factories and assembled in four Midwestern plants operated by aircraft companies.

$1,600,000,000 for guns, tanks, planes and other matériel to round out equipment for an Army of 2,000,000 men.

$400,000,000 for the construction of additional munitions plants to give the country sufficient reserve capacity to supply land forces of 4,000,000 men in an emergency.

Plans call for maintenance of the munitions factories on a stand-by basis, similar to the role of Britain's "shadow plants" before the start of war with Germany. These new plants would be in addition to the eighty-four factories or special facilities provided for under the $800,000,000 appropriation which Congress voted for the purpose last Summer.

Billions Already Obligated

Roughly 75 per cent of the total of $6,600,000,000 appropriated for the Army last year has been obligated to date and, in so far as new munitions facilities are concerned, all but 5 per cent of available funds are obligated. The first of the new powder plants built under this program is scheduled to come into production in June, or possibly sooner.

The $3,000,000,000 to be requested of the new Congress would raise beyond $20,000,000,000 the total national defense expenditures authorized since the beginning of 1940.

In addition, more than $5,000,000,000 of production for the British is pending or in prospect, part of it for British cash, part under President Roosevelt's lease-lend plan.

Congress also must make regular appropriations for Army and Navy salaries and the other routine expenses of the next fiscal year.

Furthermore, there has been speculation that the Navy might ask authority to expand its current destroyer construction program.

Altogether the armament outlays already authorized by Congress or to be submitted to that body total about a third as much as the estimated national income for 1940. Some of the authorized expenditures, such as that for the two-ocean navy, however, will be paid out over a period of four or five years.

New Aid to China Possible

There were hints yesterday that American industry's tremendous backlog of armament orders might be further increased by expanded assistance to China under the "lease-lend" plan which President Roosevelt intends to submit to Congress.

Although the plan was designed primarily to aid Britain, Secretary Morgenthau said that it "might apply" to China and Greece. This assertion led to talk in government circles that several hundred fighter planes might be released to China in the Spring.

China needs the planes, it was said, because Japanese bombers which have been harrying China's Burma road "lifeline" were faster than any fighters the Chungking defenders could now put in the air.

Discussing the possibility, officials said that production of several hundred fighters for China might be sandwiched in next Spring between the completion of an existing British order and the start of production on an improved pursuit model for the United States Army Air Corps.

The Maritime Commission, meanwhile, announced its intention of ordering two 35,000-ton vessels "capable of quick conversion into aircraft carriers." The commission reported that in 1940 it had 179 ships building or built, as part of its program to strengthen the nation's merchant marine and the Navy's force of auxiliary vessels.

If some production under the Army plan should be released to the British, as considerable plane production for the Army has been in the past, the American forces probably would accept later deliveries and the appropriations would go ultimately for the purpose originally intended.

The cost was estimated at $11,132,440. The department said that negotiations for construction and operation of the plant on a cost plus fixed fee basis were under way. When completed, the department said, the plant would be operated by the Solvay Process Company, a subsidiary of the Allied Chemical and Dye Company, New York.

(ADVANCE) MOSCOW-(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)-THE WORD CHEKA, ONCE-DREADED NAME FOR THE SOVIET SECRET POLICE, HAS BEEN RESTORED TO THE RUSSIAN VOCABULARY.

OFFICIAL USE OF THIS LABEL HAD BEEN DROPPED FOR 17 YEARS.

THE CHEKA, OR EXTRAORDINARY COMMITTEE, CARRIED ON SECRET POLICE WORK IN THE EARLY DAYS OF THE REVOLUTION, WITH LIFE AND DEATH POWER TO COMBAT ENEMIES OF COMMUNISM.

WHEN, WHERE AND HOW IT WOULD STRIKE WERE NEVER KNOWN. IT BECAME THE SCOURGE OF SUSPECTED OPPONENTS OF THE SOVIET REGIME, AND ITS NAME WAS MENTIONED ONLY IN WHISPERS.

THE CHEKA WAS REPLACED IN 1923 BY THE OGPU, OR UNIFIED STATE POLITICAL DEPARTMENT, WHICH PERFORMED SIMILAR FUNCTIONS, BUT WHICH WAS SUPPOSED TO HOLD LESS SWEEPING POWERS, AND TO GRANT TRIAL TO ALL PERSONS IT ARRESTED.

THE OGPU WAS REPLACED IN 1934 BY THE NKVD, OR PEOPLE'S COMMISSARIAT FOR DOMESTIC AFFAIRS, COMBINING SECRET SERVICE WITH OTHER NORMAL WORK OF A MINISTRY OF INTERIOR.

THE COMMISSARIAT, HEADED BY LAURENTI BERIA, STILL REMAINS HEADQUARTERS FOR THE PRESENT SECRET POLICE.

WITH THE ARMY, NAVY AND AIRFORCE, AS A RUSSIAN DEFENSE UNIT.

WHETHER THIS MEANT A NEW EXTRAORDINARY COMMITTEE HAD BEEN FORMED WITHIN THE NKVD, OR ONLY THAT THE HISTORIC NAME FOR THE SECRET POLICE HAD BEEN REVIVED, COULD NOT BE DETERMINED.

WARSAW'S JEWS WALLED IN

LIVING IN GHETTO (330) PIX SERVICED

BY ALVIN J.STEINKOPF

(ADVANCE) WARSAW, POLAND (CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)- GERMAN OCCUPATION AUTHORITIES HAVE ALMOST COMPLETELY SEGREGATED WARSAW'S JEWS BEHIND AN EIGHT-FOOT WALL CUTTING ACROSS 200 STREETS AND STREETCAR TRACKS WHICH LEAD TO THE CENTRAL GHETTO DISTRICT.

OFFICIALS SAY THAT THE GRADUAL PROCESS OF CONCENTRATING JEWS WITHIN THE WALLED AREA IS COMPLETE.

ENTRANCE TO THE GHETTO IS POSSIBLE ONLY FOR PERSONS HOLDING PASSES RECOGNIZED BY THREE DISTINCT POLICE FORCES--GERMAN, POLISH AND JEWISH. OFFICERS CONTROL TRAFFIC AND PEDESTRIANS GOING TO AND FROM THE AREA ON 18 STREETS WHICH REMAIN UN-WALLED.

THE GERMANS IN EFFECT HAVE, AS THEY SAY, "TURNED OVER PART OF THE CITY TO JEWS TO DO WITH IT, UNDER SUPERVISION, AS THEY SEE FIT."

IN SEVERAL HUNDRED BLOCKS, POPULATED BY UPWARDS OF A HALF-MILLION PERSONS, THE JEWISH COMMUNITY COUNCIL IS THE AUTHORITY FOR MOST INTERNAL AFFAIRS. THE COUNCIL HAS ORGANIZED ITS OWN SECURITY FORCE OF A THOUSAND MEN HAVING A CERTAIN POLICE FUNCTION.

THE JEWISH "POLICE" ARE NOT UNIFORMED BUT WEAR UNIFORM CAPS, CARRY RUBBER NIGHTSTICKS AND WEAR ON THEIR RIGHT ARMS BANDS CARRYING THE BLUE STAR OF DAVID. THEY PATROL THE INNER STREETS, AND AT THE EXITS STAND NEAR POLISH AND GERMAN POLICE CHECKING PERSONS MOVING IN AND OUT.

SOME "ARYAN" WORKSHOPS AND OTHER FIRMS STILL REMAIN IN THE GHETTO AND THEIR EMPLOYES STILL ARE PERMITTED TO PASS TO AND FROM THE AREA ON SHOWING PASSES. BUT NEWSPAPERS ARE STRESSING THAT "ARYANS DO NOT GO IN--IT IS NOT DONE."

THERE SEEMS TO BE MORE CONCERN OVER LETTING PERSONS IN THAN LETTING THEM OUT OF THE GHETTO. THE WHITE AND BLUE ARMBANDS IDENTIFYING JEWS ARE TO BE SEEN OCCASIONALLY IN OTHER PARTS OF WARSAW BUT IN THE GHETTO ALMOST 100 PER CENT OF THE PEOPLE WEAR THEM.

GERMANS INSIST THAT THE SEGREGATION IS LARGELY A "HEALTH MEASURE." THE WALLED AREA IS POPULARLY KNOWN AS "THE DISEASE QUARTER." COLD WEATHER HAS BEEN ACCOMPANIED BY AN INCREASE OF TYPHUS.

THE LETTER SAID THAT THE SIGNERS, ACTING AS PRIVATE CITIZENS AND SPEAKING ONLY FOR THEMSELVES, "CAN NOT EXPRESS AN OPINION AS TO THE SPECIFIC MEASURES TO BE TAKEN."

(ADVANCE)-WASHINGTON,JAN 2-(AP)-A "TEST TUBE" SETTLEMENT PROJECT FOR EUROPEAN REFUGEES IN THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC HAS GROWN IN A YEAR INTO A THRIVING COLONY OF MORE THAN 1,000 PERSONS--BUT IT NEEDS MORE WOMEN.

THIS WAS DISCLOSED TONIGHT BY OFFICIALS OF THE INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE ON REFUGEES, WHICH ANNOUNCED THAT REPRESENTATIVES OF THE 32 NATIONS HAVING MEMBERS ON THE COMMITTEE WILL VISIT THE COLONY THIS MONTH TO SEE WHAT PROGRESS HAS BEEN MADE.

THE EXPERIMENT WHICH MAY FORM A PATTERN FOR LARGE-SCALE RESETTLEMENT OF EUROPEAN REFUGEES IN THE NEW WORLD ALREADY HAS OPENED UP A BRIGHT FUTURE TO THE MANY COLONISTS TRANSPLANTED THERE, OFFICIALS SAID

BUT ONE OF THE PROBLEMS FACED BY THE EARLY JAMESTOWN SETTLERS IN THIS COUNTRY--A SCARCITY OF WOMEN--HAS ARISEN IN THE DOMINICAN SETTLEMENT. TWO-THIRDS OF THE COLONISTS ARE MEN--MOST OF THEM IN THEIR EARLY TWENTIES--AND THEY NEED FEMININE HELP AND COMPANIONSHIP, OFFICIALS EXPLAINED.

SO THE REPRESENTATIVES IN EUROPE WHO PASS ON THE QUALIFICATIONS OF THE PROSPECTIVE COLONISTS, ARE LOOKING FOR SOME HARDY YOUNG WOMEN TO BECOME PIONEERS.

THE DOMINICAN PROJECT WAS STARTED BY THE INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE A YEAR AGO WITH THE ORGANIZATION OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC SETTLEMENT ASSOCIATION AFTER THE REPUBLIC AGREED TO RECEIVE 100,000 REFUGEES. THE ASSOCIATION, PRIVATELY SUPPORTED, WAS CAPITALIZED AT $10,000,000.

GENERALISSIMO RAFAEL TRUJILLO, FORMER PRESIDENT OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, PERSONALLY CONTRIBUTED AN ESTATE OF 65,000 ACRES WITH BUILDINGS AND EQUIPMENT AT SOSUA FOR THE COLONY.

THERE THE COLONISTS ARE TRAINED IN AGRICULTURE, HANDICRAFT AND OTHER WORK, AND GIVEN A START IN THEIR NEW PURSUITS. SO FAR THEY HAVE CONVERTED 3,000 ACRES INTO FARMING LAND AND ORGANIZED THEIR OWN DAIRY INDUSTRY.

JAN 3- 1941

COMING FROM VARIOUS EUROPEAN COUNTRIES, THEY ARE TAUGHT SPANISH AND OTHERWISE PREPARED FOR DOMINICAN CITIZENSHIP.

POLITICS HAS LITTLE PLACE IN THE COLONY, OFFICIALS SAID. EXAMINERS ARE CAREFUL TO KEEP OUT POTENTIAL POLITICAL AGITATORS.

THE MEETING OF THE INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE REPRESENTATIVES IN THE DOMINICAN CAPITAL, CIUDAD TRUJILLO, WILL START ON JANUARY 30, THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE SIGNING OF THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE DOMINICAN GOVERNMENT AND THE SETTLEMENT ASSOCIATION.

THE LATEST GROUP OF COLONISTS ARRIVED ABOUT A WEEK AGO FROM GREAT BRITAIN. A FEW MORE ARE ON THEIR WAY NOW AND FOR ONE OF THEM A HAPPY FAMILY REUNION WAITS. A REFUGEE FROM GERMANY, HE WAS IN BELGIUM WITH HIS WIFE AND THREE-YEAR-OLD DAUGHTER WHEN THAT COUNTRY WAS INVADED. THE FAMILY WAS SCATTERED. HE LANDED IN A CONCENTRATION CAMP IN FRANCE. HIS WIFE MADE HER WAY TO LISBON. AND BRITISH SOLDIERS, EVACUATED FROM BELGIUM, TOOK THE GIRL WITH THEM TO ENGLAND.

THE MOTHER, THEN THE DAUGHTER, WERE ACCEPTED FOR THE DOMINICAN COLONY. NOW THE FATHER IS ON HIS WAY TO JOIN THEM.

MARSHALL, IN A CBS RADIO BROADCAST, REPEATED THAT THE "AGENDA" HAD BEEN DELIVERED BY WILLIAM RHODES DAVIS, INTERNATIONAL OIL OPERATOR, AND ADDED:

REPLYING TO A NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE EDITORIAL HE DESCRIBED AS "A PERSONAL ATTACK ON ME X X X AND UPON THE COMMITTEE," MARSHALL ASSERTED THAT "MR.MARSHALL AND ALL THOSE WHO ARE REALLY HIS FRIENDS, INCLUDING WILLIAM RHODES DAVIS, HAVE BEEN UP TO JUST THIS AND NOTHING MORE: THE PLANNING AND ORGANIZING OF A CAMPAIGN BY AMERICANS AND FOR AMERICANS TO KEEP THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA OUT OF EUROPE'S SENSELESS WAR, AND TO PREVENT THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION FROM GIVING AWAY OUR NATIONAL DEFENSES, OR EVEN LOANING THOSE DEFENSES."

HE ADDED THAT THERE WAS NOTHING IN THE COMMITTEE PROGRAM WHICH WOULD "IN THE SLIGHTEST DEGREE HAMPER OR SEEK WITHDRAWAL OF FULL AND LEGAL HELP TO OUR SISTER ENGLISH-SPEAKING NATION. LET NO ONE TRY TO SMEAR US WITH THE BRUSH OF THE ANTI-BRITISH.

BY MAX BOYD

(ADVANCE) WASHINGTON, JAN. 2-(AP)-NEW SAFEGUARDS AGAINST A SURPRISE ATTACK FROM THE WEST UPON THE PANAMA CANAL ARE IN THE MAKING NOW THAT ANXIETY CONCERNING THE EASTERN APPROACHES HAS BEEN EASED BY THE AGREEMENT TO LEASE BRITISH BASE SITS.

THE PLAN TO STRENGTHEN THE NAVY'S MEANS OF DETECTING IN TIME ANY ENEMY PLANE CARRIER THAT MIGHT TRY TO SLIP WITHIN BOMBING RANGE OF THE FLEET'S LIFELINE FITS INTO THE CHAIN OF SOUTH AND CENTRAL AMERICAN AIR AND NAVAL BASES NOW BEING FORGED BY THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

JUST WHERE THE ADDITIONAL FACILITIES WOULD BE PROVIDED FOR THE CANAL'S PROTECTION WAS NOT DISCLOSED, BUT DEFENSE EXPERTS SAID THE IDEAL ARRANGEMENT WOULD INCLUDE THE RIGHT TO BASE UNITED STATES SUBMARINE AND SEAPLANE TENDERS ON THE WEST COAST OF MEXICO, COCOS ISLAND AND THE GALAPAGOS ISLANDS. THESE TENDERS ARE FILLING STATIONS OF THE SEA, PROVIDING FUEL AND REPAIR FACILITIES.

AS OUTLINED BY THESE EXPERTS, THE ONLY REAL DANGERS TO THE CANAL ARE SABOTAGE AND A SURPRISE ATTACK FROM THE AIR. THE ARMY IS TAKING EXTENSIVE PRECAUTIONS AGAINST SABOTAGE, AND NEW BASES FOR PLANE AND SUBMARINE SENTINELS IN THE CARIBBEAN ARE BEING OBTAINED FROM BRITAIN.

EVEN THOUGH IT MAY TAKE SOME TIME TO DEVELOP THESE BASES TO BE LEASED FROM THE BRITISH, THE ANCHORAGES THERE ARE AVAILABLE AT ONCE FOR THE TENDERS NECESSARY TO MAINTAIN PLANE AND SUBMARINE PATROLS.

ON THE WEST, THE CANAL IS PROTECTED BY THE GREAT EXPANSE OF THE PACIFIC, BY THE FLEET BASED ON HAWAII AND BY PLANES, SURFACE CRAFT AND SUBMARINES OPERATING FROM THE CANAL ITSELF.

THE EFFECTIVENESS OF THE LATTER WOULD BE MULTIPLIED GREATLY, OFFICIALS SAID, IF ANCHORAGES FOR THEIR TENDERS AND PERHAPS RECREATIONAL FACILITIES FOR THEIR CREWS WER

JAN 3- 1941

THE EFFECTIVENESS OF THE LATTER WOULD BE MULTIPLIED GREATLY, OFFICIALS SAID, IF ANCHORAGES FOR THEIR TENDERS AND PERHAPS RECREATIONAL FACILITIES FOR THEIR CREWS WERE AVAILABLE NEARER THE SCENE OF OPERATIONS THAN AT PRESENT. IN OTHER WORDS, THE PATROL CRAFT WOULD NOT HAVE TO SPEND HALF THEIR TIME OR MORE GOING TO AND FROM THEIR STATIONS.

ONE FINE ANCHORAGE IN WHICH THE NAVY IS KNOWN TO BE INTERESTED IS MAGDALENA BAY, ON THE WEST COAST OF LOWER CALIFORNIA. IT IS 17 MILES LONG AND 12 MILES WIDE.

ANOTHER POSSIBILITY WHICH HAS BEEN MENTIONED IS ACAPULCO HARBOR, GENERALLY CONSIDERED THE FINEST ON THE WEST COAST OF MEXICO. AROUND THIS HARBOR ARE HIGH MOUNTAINS WHICH AFFORD CONSIDERABLE SHELTER.

ABOUT 290 MILES BY MOTOR HIGHWAY FROM MEXICO CITY, IT HAS BEEN VISITED BY MANY AMERICAN TOURISTS IN RECENT YEARS.

A LITTLE MORE THAN 500 MILES WEST AND SLIGHTLY SOUTH OF THE CANAL ZONE IS COCOS ISLAND, ONE-TIME RENDEZVOUS OF BUCCANEERS, NOW UNDER THE FLAG OF COSTA RICA AND A MECCA FOR TREASURE HUNTERS. CHATHAM BAY THERE IS RATED A FAIR HARBOR IN FINE WEATHER, BUT SEAMEN SAY IT WOULD HAVE TO BE CLEARED DURING ANY ON-SHORE SQUALLS. EXPERTS ARE OF THEOPINION, HOWEVER, THAT TENDERS COULD RIDE IN THE LEE OF THE ISLAND EVEN DURING STORMS, AND THAT IT THEREFORE WOULD BE USEFUL.

FARTHER TO THE SOUTHWEST ARE THE GALAPAGOS ISLANDS, 600 MILES FROM THE COAST OF ECUADOR, WITH WHICH THEY ARE POLITICALLY ASSOCIATED. THE LARGEST OF THESE ISLANDS IS 72 MILES LONG. NUMEROUS SMALL ANCHORAGES ARE AVAILABLE AMONG THEM.

THE POSSIBILITY OF MEXICAN NAVAL BASES BEING PLACED AT THE DISPOSAL OF THE UNITED STATES HAS BEEN MENTIONED RECENTLY IN DISPATCHES FROM MEXICO CITY. THESE REPORTED THAT BOTH GOVERNMENTS WERE MOVING CAUTIOUSLY TOWARD THE DEVELOPMENT OF A FAR-REACHING PROGRAM OF MILITARY AND ECONOMIC COLLABORATION.

SUBSEQUENTLY, AUTHORITATIVE AMERICAN SOURCES REPORTED THAT ACTUAL WORK HAD STARTED ON THE SELECTION AND SURVEYING OF THE CHAIN OF AIR AND NAVAL BASES IN SOUTH AND CENTRAL AMERICA.

THE DEFENSE SITES WILL REMAIN THE PROPERTY OF THE SOUTH AND CENTRAL AMERICAN REPUBLICS AND BE UNDER THEIR SOVEREIGNTY, IT WAS SAID, BUT THE UNITED STATES WILL FINANCE IMPROVEMENTS, WHERE REQUIRED, BY LOANS TO THE VARIOUS NATIONS.

CABINET IN SECRET SESSION AS DUBLIN IS BOMBED ANEW

Berlin's Envoy May Get Papers if Attacks Are Continued.

2 HOUSES HIT, SCORE HURT

Anger of People at Fever Heat as Missiles Descend on Parts of Eire.

Dublin, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—The Government of neutral Eire today ordered its Charge d'Affaires in Berlin to make an energetic protest to the German Government concerning a series of bombing attacks in the last two days on the Dublin region.

Shortly after noon today Irish soldiers opened fire with machine-guns and rifles on what they took for a hostile plane over this capital after it had dropped flares on famous Glesnevin Cemetery, where many heroes of Ireland's revolutionary past are buried. At the time the flares were believed to be incendiary bombs.

This evening the Government information bureau described the craft as "a civil plane" flying from England to Dublin which had wandered off its course. It remained unexplained why, in broad daylight, the plane found it necessary to drop flares.

Feeling Grows Strong.

At that time Prime Minister Eamon De Valera was meeting with his Cabinet in a secret session which informed sources declared dealt with the recent bombings.

It was rumored that the strong feeling over the attacks—the latest a bomb which blasted two houses on Dublin's Donore avenue before dawn today—might lead the Government to follow up its protest to Berlin by handling the German Minister his passport.

The Government's action was disclosed in an official statement by the Department of External Affairs which read:

"Fragments of explosive and incendiary bombs dropped at Curragh, Julianstown, Duleek and Borris have been examined and found to be of German origin.

Investigation Is Proceeding.

"The charge d'affaires in Berlin has been instructed to make an energetic protest to the German Government against the violation of Irish territory by German aircraft and the loss of life and destruction of property which took place as a result of bomb explosions and fire.

"He was further instructed to claim full reparation and insist that effective steps be taken to avoid recurrence of such happenings.

"An investigation of bombs dropped at other places is proceeding."

Before the late afternoon statement, the nearest the Government had come to linking Berlin with the attacks was the official announcement that one incendiary and green silk parachutes which landed a number of magnetic sea mines were German-manufactured.

Public indignation mounted to fever heat. People on Dublin streets muttered that "the bombers must be held responsible." Others shouted defiantly that "Ireland's army will exact punishment."

The Donore avenue bombing, which injured a score of persons, was the work of one plane and a single bomb.

Gas Hinders Rescue Work.

A battalion of defense forces at Griffith Barracks turned out immediately to care for the injured and hunt through the ruined houses for persons at first thought to have been trapped in the wreckage. The rescue workers' flares cast an eerie light over this war-like scene in the capital of a country still at peace. The rescuers were impeded by gas escaping in the shattered houses. Large families had occupied each of the two wrecked buildings.

Meanwhile today the Irish Army engineers arranged to destroy a number of the magnetic sea mines which fell on land yesterday near Enniskerry, in the County Wicklow. Experts said that these mines were of the type Germany used against British shipping early in the war before the British devised a defensive system. People living within half a mile of the mines were moved out of their homes, and all persons within three miles were instructed to open their windows to prevent damage from the detonations.

Bombs Near Enniscorthy.

Looking anxiously to her defense needs and acknowledging the pinch of the blockades which Britain and Germany have clamped upon each other, Ireland has suffered half a dozen bombings in recent months. The German Government expressed regret for the bombing of Campile on August 25, when three girls were killed. It did not acknowledge responsibility, but admitted the possibility that a Nazi flyer might have lost his way over Ireland.

It was not until last Wednesday night, however, that anything like a concentrated bombing attack occurred. Then at least three persons were killed and several were injured in a five-hour raid on the region within a sixty-mile radius of Dublin. The Irish Department of Defense said that one of the bombs bore German markings.

Again last night three bombs fell near Enniscorthy, in the County Wexford, some sixty miles southwest of Dublin and this was followed by the blow at Dublin itself today.

Demand Damages

Dublin, Jan. 3 (AP)—Dublin was bombed before dawn today by a single plane, whose one explosive smashed two houses on Donore avenue, injuring twenty persons—and Prime Minister de Valera sent a stiff protest to Germany and met with his Cabinet in urgent secret session amid rumors that any further attack would mean the expulsion of the German Minister to Ireland.

The Irish Department of External Affairs formally blamed the Nazis for the bombing of three other areas in neutral Ireland—such incidents have been occurring intermittently since Wednesday night—and announced "an energetic protest to the German Government against the violation of Irish territory by German aircraft and the loss of life and destruction of property. . . ."

Demand Reparations

The Irish charge d'affaires in Berlin, it was added, had been "further instructed to claim full reparations and insist that effective steps be taken to avoid a recurrence of such happenings."

As to the additional bomb that fell today, the department announced, an investigation of its origin was still in progress.

This afternoon Irish soldiers fired with rifles and machine guns upon what they believed was a hostile plane over Dublin, but the Government's information bureau subsequently described it as "a civil plane," en route from England to Dublin, which had got into difficulty.

Dropped Flares In Daytime

The craft had dropped flares in the historic cemetery of Glesnevin, the burial place of many an Irish revolutionary hero, and these were generally accepted at first as incendiary bombs, since the use of a flare in broad daylight is extraordinary.

Informed sources used the incident to point out the tensity of feeling in Ireland.

The cumulative list of casualties in raids from Wednesday night through today stood at three dead and an undetermined number, considerably above twenty, injured.

Magnetic Mines Also

Not only bombs have fallen on Irish soil, but magnetic mines as well—these near Enniskerry, a short distance from the Irish Sea coast in County Wicklow.

On Wednesday night five areas within a sixty-mile radius of Dublin, including a plain on which is situated headquarters for the Irish army, were bombed in a five-hour raid.

Again, Thursday night, three bombs fell near Enniscorthy, County Wexford, some sixty miles to the southwest of Dublin.

The newspaper Irish Independent said the public expected German assurances to "be readily forthcoming" in view of Eire's scrupulous observance of neutrality in the war, but urged an immediate, continuous sitting of the Dail (Parliament) "until the position has been clarified."

The Irish press, regarded as the Government's voice, pointed out that even if a mistake in navigation had been made by the attacking aircraft "there still are the lights of our cities . . . to indicate our neutrality."

The new problems posed for the Eire government have heightened an already preplexed situation which de Valera acknowledged in a Christmas broadcast to the United States, appealing for American aid in obtaining supplies and defensive arms.

British restrictions on the re-export to Ireland of goods brought across the Atlantic under the protection of British guns have been tightened. Ireland has refused British suggestions that she allow Britain to use her western ports in convoy and anti-submarine activity.

London Feels Germany Aims To Get Eire Into War

London, Jan. 3 (AP)—Some British sources suggested tonight, in the light of the series of bombings in Ireland, that the Germans were trying to bring Ireland into the war on Britain's side.

Should Ireland enter the conflict, these persons said, Britain would be forced to help fortify that weak republic and thus drain her own resources.

Ireland, they stated, was hopelessly deficient in anti-aircraft guns, field artillery and ammunition.

More To Protect

Moreover, it was added, should Ireland come in on Britain's side the Royal Air Force would be handed the job of patrolling another nation against German bombers, the British army would be forced to protect scores of additional airdromes and potential landing fields against a possible attempt to land invading German troops.

Similarly, these persons asserted, Irish bases for the British navy such as Loch Swilly would be less advantageous to the British if Germany were at war with Ireland and able to bomb not only these bases but the roads and railroads leading to them.

Could Bomb Ulster Force

Should Germany get Ireland into the war—so ran this account—she would have the opportunity of bombing Britain's divisions in Ulster long before they could start the gigantic task of taking control of Ireland itself.

Latest reports, moreover, suggest that the German strength in Ireland is not limited to formal diplomatic representatives.

JAN 4 - 1941

Neutral sources in London flatly assert that the bombs which have fallen on Ireland were dropped from German aircraft.

London Accuses Berlin.

London, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—Informed neutral sources in London declared flatly today that the bombs dropped on Ireland in the last two days came from German planes.

JAN 4 - 1941

They took this as an indication that Germany had given up all hopes of Eire's remaining neutral or even being an ally of the Reich, if the Nazis should attempt to use her territory as an invasion approach to England.

Unofficial but reliable British military observers declared that the bombing and subsequent invasion of Eire would be only a part of sustained "preparation" for the invasion of Britain.

Nazis Say Bombs in Eire Are 'English or Imaginary'

By The Associated Press.

BERLIN, Jan. 3—"Those bombs are English or they are imaginary," an authorized German spokesman asserted tonight in reference to bombing incidents in Ireland (Eire).

"Our fliers are not and have not been sent to Ireland. Some one else will have to explain those bombs," he added.

JAN 4 - 1941

Irish In U. S. Protest

New York, Jan. 3 (AP)—The Friends of Irish Neutrality, claiming to represent 200 Irish organizations, tonight telegraphed the German Embassy in Washington a protest against "the unwarranted invasion of Ireland's neutral territory."

The association said it was "voicing the sentiment of many millions of Americans" in regarding "with great concern . . . the ruthless killing of Irish people which had occurred within the past two days and which allegedly has been caused by German action."

2 MORE BRITISH CITIES BLASTED BY FIRE BOMBS

Hundreds Battle Blazes Set By Raiders In Separate Areas

Assaults Assume Proportions Of Those On London, Cardiff

[By the Associated Press]

London, Saturday, Jan. 4—Hundreds of firemen and volunteers fought desperately early today against great German-set fires in two British towns—one in the western Midlands and the other in southwest England.

The assaults by German airmen hurling fire and explosive bombs began last night and appeared to have assumed the proportions early today of previous Nazi attacks on London's City, Cardiff, Birmingham, Coventry and Bristol.

Four Killed Fighting Flames

Four firemen and two soldiers were killed in the southwestern town in fighting the flames.

One hospital whose ground floor was badly damaged by explosives was reported to have been evacuated without casualties.

[This town possibly was Plymouth, or Cardiff which was violently assaulted Thursday night.]

London had three alarms by early today, but only an occasional plane was heard overhead accompanied by sporadic bursts of anti-aircraft fire.

Midlands Town Under Heavy Fire

Hundreds of incendiaries were cast upon the west Midlands town (possibly Birmingham). Civilians were kept busy extinguishing the fires that sprang up, and scores of buildings thus were saved.

A hospital was reported badly damaged by a high-explosive bomb; also reported hit were another hospital and nursing home, a municipal clinic, a convent, a movie theater, a hotel and three schools.

Other raiders were stated to be over a town in the northwest and Liverpool.

Snow fell last night and a northwest wind made the English Channel choppy.

Cardiff Raid Recalls Ypres

The British Press Association said that sections of Cardiff, Wales, hard hit by the Nazis Thursday night, were "reminiscent of scenes at Ypres (Belgium) in the World War."

The city, an import[illegible]l port, suffered its worst pounding yet. The Government announced that damage was "considerable" and disclosed that there had been an unstated number of casualties.

During the day, informed sources disclosed that it is planned to dynamite all save churches of the buildings damaged in the City of London—the oldest district—by the Nazi fire bomb raid of last Sunday night.

Sections Of City Likened To Ypres

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 3—Wave after wave of German bombers gave the big coal port of Cardiff, in South Wales, its worst pounding of the war last night, and the British Press Association said today that sections of the battered city "were reminiscent of scenes at Ypres in the World War."

In likening the Cardiff damage to that of Ypres, the Press Association referred to the Belgian city which was a battleground during most of the World War and suffered as nearly complete destruction as any city in that conflict.

JAN 4 - 1941

Admits "Considerable" Damage

The Government itself acknowledged that damage was "considerable" and said there had been some casualties.

Firemen and ambulance services worked through a shower of incendiary bombs and high explosives loosed by the Nazi raiders.

The communique said the only report of daylight bombing came from a Kent town, which suffered "very slight" damage and no casualties.

Theaters And Shops Hit

Movie theaters and shops were reported badly damaged in Cardiff and commercial buildings and homes also were said to have been hit.

Casualties were described as "very light considering the scope of the raid."

An air raid precautions official said it was "a very bad night but we cannot compare the raid to the biggest at other towns" in the past.

Raid Lasts Several Hours

The attack began soon after nightfall and continued several hours, with showers of incendiaries followed by high explosives.

Public services in Cardiff were reported functioning "fairly smoothly" today.

Bombs also were dropped in other sections of England, including London, but these attacks were on a lighter scale, a communique declared.

A blinding snowstorm swept over the Strait of Dover today and a strong northeast wind blew over the choppy sea.

Dynamiting of all buildings damaged by the German fire-bomb raid on London's "City" last Sunday night with the exception of some of the most ancient churches is planned by military engineers, informed sources said today.

Damaged buildings near these churches will be pulled down.

A block of buildings in Falcon street, Aldersgate, just north of the Guildhall and St. Paul's Cathedral, was blown up today.

The first big blast in the demolition work was set off yesterday and shook all of central London.

R.A.F. Pounds Bremen Heavily Again in an All-night Attack

German Port Raided From Early Evening Until Dawn and British Say Enormous Fires Were Set by Bombs.

JAN 4 - 1941

London, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—The second big British raid on Bremen in two nights lasted all last night and started enormous fires, the Air Ministry announced today.

The R. A. F. was sent back over Bremen, the Air Ministry bulletin said, "to continue the destruction of ship-building yards and factories . . . and to prolong the inevitable disorganization of the city."

Last night's raid was not, however, on the same scale as that of Wednesday night, but lasted much longer, it was said. The first of the bombers arrived over Bremen before 8 P. M., and the last did not leave until an hour or so before dawn, it was said.

The R. A. F. flew through a snow storm on the way to Bremen but once over the big seaport-naval base the flyers found a clear sky.

Report Shipyard Struck

"Several bombs fell directly on a large building forming part of the Deschinag shipbuilding yard," the bulletin said in part. "The building caught fire and burned so fiercely that within a very short time flames had spread to other buildings near-by."

Returning pilots were quoted as saying they could not see the burst of their own bombs because of the flames.

The Air Ministry said the attack "was not on so heavy a scale" as that of the previous night, but that the results of bombing the Bremen naval base, shipyards and railway station were "satisfactory."

Oil "targets" at Amsterdam, in Nazi-held Holland, were another objective for the R. A. F. pilots.

The announcement said the British raiders also struck at Emden, at the mouth of the Dortmund-Ems Canal, one of the marshaling centers for invasion supplies.

Emden's Twenty-Ninth Raid

Last night's assault on Bremen was described as a combination reconnaissance flight and a follow-up of the attack of the previous night.

The raid on Emden was the twenty-ninth carried out on that naval base since the start of the war, the British said. Previous raids acquainted British pilots with the layout of docks, airdromes and petroleum stores, and enabled them to direct their attack last night against "very definite military objectives," it was said.

which were so badly damaged on Wednesday night were bombed again," the Ministry's news service said.

BREMEN GETS 2D BAD BEATING

By ROBERT BUNNELLE

London, Jan. 3 (AP).—The big German port of Bremen underwent its second straight bath of bomb and fire last night in a mighty, all-night assault by the RAF in a continuation of its retaliation for the big Nazi fire raid on the heart of London, the Air Ministry announced tonight.

In addition, oil objectives at Emden and Amsterdam were given a heavy blasting, the Ministry said.

Recounting last night's raid on Bremen, the Air Ministry news service reported the RAF attackers swarmed over the city from shortly before 8 o'clock until almost daybreak, setting off enormous new fires in shipyards and factories which produce warships and other war materials. One British plane failed to return.

Besides the destruction the assault was described as for the purpose of "prolonging the inevitable disorganization of the city."

JAN 4 - 1941

The raid was not on so grand a scale as Wednesday night's when 20,000 fire bombs were dropped, the Air Ministry said, but it lasted much longer. The RAF pilots found the air clear over their targets after bucking a fierce snow storm to get there.

Germans List Eight Killed In Air Raids

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 3—The German high command acknowledged today that in night British bombardments of "two northern German communities" factory and storeroom fires were started and eight persons were killed and twenty injured.

The British identified the two places as Bremen and Emden. At Bremen, the British said, the Royal Air Force staged a reconnaissance-follow-up to the previous night's three-and-one-half-hour bombardment in which more than 20,000 incendiary bombs and also heavy loads of high explosive were dropped.]

At the same time, the daily high command communique told of an all-caliber German air bombardment of the city and harbor of Cardiff, Wales, last night in retaliation for attacks on Bremen. Some of the resulting "numerous fires" could be seen more than sixty miles from Cardiff, according to the Germans.

Along with factory and storeroom damage, the high command reported a hospital and several houses hit by the R. A. F. in the "two northern German communities," but declared the fires were quickly extinguished and "no noteworthy military or military-economic damage was caused."

Two British bombers were reported downed to one missing for the Germans.

From the Hague D. N. B. reported that the R. A. F. bombed two Dutch towns last night, destroying several dwellings and killing four civilians.

Yesterday's German attacks along the English east coast brought the sinking of a British patrol boat under a dive-bomber attack, the communique said.

Informed sources had anticipated the communique by saying that Cardiff was the main target of night raiders last night.

The Cardiff attack was carried out by several waves of strong combat units and resulted in explosions and fires which served as beacons for other raiders, it was said.

Weather conditions were reported as favoring the attack and permitting excellent observation of the results.

Britain Wants More American Destroyers To Battle Raiders

Matter Expected to Be One of First Taken Up by New Ambassador

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Britain wants more United States destroyers to help "hunt, catch and kill submarine and surface raiders," reliable sources declared today.

One informant intimated that Britain's need for additional United States destroyers and cargo ships to replace those being sunk would be among the first matters discussed when Lord Halifax reaches Washington to take up his post as the new British Ambassador.

4,500,000 Tons Reported Sunk.

In 16 months of war at sea approximately 4,500,000 tons of British, Allied and neutral shipping has been reported sunk, emphasizing the need for cargo ships and the graver need of more destroyers to protect them.

"The more unprotected ships there are on the Atlantic routes the more targets," one source asserted. "We want more destroyers to protect them and to hunt and catch and kill submarine and surface raiders."

In connection with the desire for more United States destroyers, maritime circles pointed to the assertion by Food Minister Lord Woolton that "the enemy is making a direct attack on our foodships" and "the danger is much worse than it was in the last war."

Sacrifice to Aid Armies.

Britons must reduce the meat in their daily diet because food-carrying ships have been diverted to transporting munitions to British armies in Africa, Lord Woolton said today.

Explaining a reduction, ordered yesterday and effective January 6, in the weekly meat ration from the equivalent of 44 cents to 36 cents, Woolton asserted:

"We are deliberately sacrificing meat at home for munitions in Libya."

REBORN THETIS CREDITED WITH SINKING FOE

British Submarine, Raised From Bottom, Destroys Italian Craft

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 3 — The submarine Thunderbolt, nee Thetis, whose tragic failure on her trial run cost ninety-nine lives in history's worst undersea boat tragedy, has come back from disaster and sunk an Italian submarine, the Admiralty disclosed today.

As the Thetis, displacing 1,090 tons, the Thunderbolt sank, off Birkenhead, June 1, 1939, during a trial run with 103 persons, almost twice her specified complement, aboard. Only four escaped with the Davis lung apparatus.

Two Other Subs Lost

The disaster was the second of three involving submarines within a month of that year. A week before, the United States submarine Squalus had gone down off Portsmouth, N. H., with a loss of twenty-six lives, and on June 16 the French submarine Phenix sank off Indo-China with seventy-one aboard.

A bit of enamel that blocked a test cock in a rear door of one of her torpedo tubes was blamed for the Thetis disaster. As she submerged on her trial in the Irish Sea the door opened and flooded the torpedo compartment.

Nose Pushed Into Mud

A bulkhead door leading to the compartment had not been tightly closed, and water poured into the rest of the submarine, sending her nosing into the mud 130 feet down.

A low tide disclosed her stern to searchers, but rescue efforts failed.

Not until nearly five months later was the Thetis raised and the bodies of her ninety-nine victims recovered.

She was repaired and renamed the Thunderbolt—and today had passed stiffer trials.

British Navy's Salvaged Submarine Thetis Destroys Italian Submersible in Sea Battle

London, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—The sinking of an Italian submarine was credited by the Admiralty today to the British submarine Thunderbolt, formerly the Thetis, which sank on June 1, 1939, taking ninety-nine men to death, but later was raised, reconditioned and renamed.

The Thetis, with a surface displacement of 1,090 tons, was on a trial run in the Irish Sea, carrying almost double her normal complement of fifty-three men, when—as later brought out—a bit of enamel blocked the test cock in the rear door of one of her torpedo tubes. On submersion the door opened and flooded the torpedo compartment. Failure to close tightly a bulkhead door between that compartment and the rest of the ship caused the Thetis to sink off Birkenhead. Four of the 103 men aboard escaped with the Davis lung apparatus, but it was not until the Thetis laboriously had been raised and beached nearly five months later that the dead were recovered. The Government rejected a suggestion in July, 1939, that the Thetis be left at the bottom of the sea.

Was Proceeding to Base.

The Italian submarine was proceeding to a base in what was described as enemy-occupied territory under escort, the Admiralty announcement said, when it was attacked by the Thunderbolt, commanded by Lieut. C. B. Crouch Run. According to the Admiralty communique, the Thunderbolt's commander, after firing his torpedo, "saw a tall column of water rise into the air from the Italian U-boat and a large explosion to occur, and when the smoke and spray cleared away only one end of the enemy vessel was seen sticking out of the water at a steep angle. This quickly disappeared."

"An escort consisting of three armed trawlers dropped depth charges as soon as they realized an attack was taking place," the communique continued. "Since the explosion of the torpedo was both seen and heard and since the enemy U-boat would not have dived while trawlers were dropping depth charges in its close proximity, it is considered certain the Italian U-boat was sunk. It is possible on this occasion to depart from the normal procedure of refraining from announcing losses inflicted among enemy U-boats since the incident was witnessed by enemy escorting vessels."

SIBERIAN IMPORTS TROUBLE BRITAIN

Trade War Chief Says Nazis Get U. S. Supplies.

London, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—Hugh Dalton, the Minister of Economic Warfare, said today that the "Vladivostok leak" of war supplies, including American cotton, through Soviet Russia into Germany was a source of worry to Britain.

Britain's Atlantic blockade of Germany is still extremely effective, the Minister said in an interview, but he indicated that American shipments of cotton and rubber scraps to Vladivostok are still very large.

Cotton, he explained, could be used in the manufacture of high explosives and rubber scrap is needed for making buna, the German substitute for rubber.

Mr. Dalton refused to say whether current shipments of these products across the Pacific were larger than pre-war shipments across the Atlantic. He suggested that it would be better if neutral nations stored such products, especially cotton, for sale to "recently freed nations" when the war is over.

The activity of British and French naval units in the Pacific cut into shipments to Vladivostok last February, Mr. Dalton said, but he declared they had increased since the fall of France.

Canada Could Not Fill British Isles Role, German Says

Dominion Declared Not Suited as Basis For Continuing War

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.
Associated Press War Correspondent.

BERLIN, Jan. 3.—Canada never can fill the place of the British Isles as the center of the British Empire after the war on the isles has been ended, an authorized economic expert sought to prove today in addressing foreign correspondents.

Proceeding on the assumption that the British Isles shortly will be defeated, this expert envisaged the British government emigrating to Canada and the Royal Navy also going there.

"But the army cannot go there, nor can England's population of 45,000,000. Nor can her complicated industry simply be exported," he said. "That is where the rub comes. Canada isn't at all suited as the basis for continuing the war. Her potentialities are exceedingly small. She has no munitions industry to speak of." Even her airplane factories were weak, he contended.

Canada, the expert said, would need much United States capital before being able to build up some sort of a munitions industry.

The overseas dominion is not able, he claimed, to afford proper space for the British fleet nor has the dominion sufficient skilled workers to care for the fleet.

Canadians Amused

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 3 (CP).—Canadian government officials read with amusement today a dispatch from Berlin describing a Nazi spokesman's comments doubting the possibility of Canada providing a new empire bulwark if Britain fell to the Germans.

"Let Hitler win the battle of Britain first," a spokesman said. "Then we will see what part Canada can play in reorganization of the empire."

Last year Winston Churchill, after he became Prime Minister, declared Britain would fight to the last to defend the island and if necessary would move, with the fleet, to the New World and carry on the battle.

Canada, organized industrially and armed as never before, would be prepared to receive the British government and royal family and carry on from here, officials say, but they do not expect that necessity to arise.

5,000 FASCISTS CAPTURED AT BARDIA, BRITISH SAY; ONE FOURTH OF GARRISON

Australian Troops Crash Through Outer Ring Of Italian Defenses

Supported By R. A. F. In Heaviest Air Bombardment Of African War

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 3—Australian troops storming the Italian fortress of Bardia, Libya, already have taken more than 5,000 prisoners, a quarter of the garrison, the British command reported tonight in a special communique.

The communique said merely: "Operations are developing successfully at Bardia. So far more than 5,000 prisoners have been captured."

Earlier dispatches from the battle zone declared that the sudden attack, led by the fight-hungry Australians, had broken through the half-ring of forts protecting the Italian port and that the assault was continuing, supported by tanks.

Heaviest Aerial Bombardment

The thrust was preceded and supported by the heaviest aerial bombardment yet conducted in the African war, authoritative sources reported.

All last night and this morning, from dusk until dawn, the Royal Air Force planes crossed and recrossed the perimeter of Bardia, dropping tons of explosives and incendiaries on the beleaguered Italians and starting huge fires all over the town, it was reported.

Drive Launched At Dawn

Then, at dawn, the Australians launched their drive.

They reported a fairly deep penetration in the southwest sector of the semi-circular Bardia defenses by noon today.

The British command conservatively indicated that if things continued to go well the fortress would be taken in "a few days."

The Italians were asserted to have the advantage in a number of well-built blockhouses, concealed machine-gun nests and barbed-wire entanglements, the whole network of defenses being backed by heavy artillery, including at least one big-caliber naval gun mounted ashore.

Defenses Pointed Other Way

But the Australians crashed through on the southwest of the ring which already had been weakened by the aerial onslaught and the almost daily pounding by air bombs and by the big guns of the British fleet offshore.

An attack on these positions apparently had been considered unlikely by the Italians whose defenses all had been sighted to point the opposite way.

Some 20,000 Italian troops have been penned up in Bardia for two weeks, with their backs to the sea, under constant fire from British guns ashore and afloat and British bombers above.

Five To Six Miles In Depth

The official announcement was barren of detail, because of military necessity. It said merely:

"Just after dawn this morning Australian forces supported by tanks penetrated a sector of the defenses of Bardia. Operations are continuing."

Military experts explained that the perimeter of pillboxes, anti-tank ditches and traps, supported by heavy guns on heights near the town and sheltering Bardia for a distance of seventeen miles from coast to coast, is some five to six miles in depth.

Regarded As Major Assault

They conceded the possibility that the Australian thrust might be only a large-scale raid, but they were more of the opinion that the anticipated major assault is under way, especially since "operations are continuing."

[From Rome, a radio report said the "sacrifice garrison" in Bardia "holds fast, in spite of every British attempt to pierce its defenses." A high command communique claimed that Italian bombers off the African coast had hit a British cruiser.]

It is at Bardia that the Italians have made their first real stand since the British offensive swept Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's troops back into Libya from the western Egyptian desert.

Raid On Tripoli Reported

Since then the British mechanized columns have gone far beyond Bardia to raid the precincts of Tobruk, some eighty miles within Libya, and they control a segment of the Bardia-Tobruk road. There is, however, no new information about this operation.

The R. A. F., hitting hard again, was reported to have started fires and explosion at Tripoli, all the way across Libya, in two heavy overnight raids January 1.

Bombs straddled a mole where five cruisers were moored; others spread flames in seaplane hangars, hit the customs jetty and damaged two big motor vessels and at least one other ship, a communique said. The flames were reported visible for sixty miles.

AUSTRALIANS PUSH THROUGH BARDIA FORTS

London Sees Major Attack Begun Against Port in East Libya.

MANY PRISONERS ARE TAKEN

Rome Asserts Its Forces Hold ---Tobruk Is Now Menaced--- Tripoli is Bombed.

Cairo, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—Australian forces have penetrated the Bardia defenses with the support of tanks and taken a number of Italian prisoners in their attack on the beleaguered Libyan base, latest dispatches from the front reported today.

The Australians have formed the bulk of the forces besieging Bardia since December 16, military sources disclosed. They added that, since the Anzacs had seen little or no action in previous operations in the Western Desert, they were thirsting for a fight.

[The official Italian radio, in a broadcast heard here today by CBS, said that the Bardia garrison "holds fast in spite of every British attempt to pierce its defenses," and had inflicted heavy losses on the foe. It added that British reports of a drive beyond Bardia on Tobruk were "nothing more than idle chatter."]

The East Libyan port of Bardia, which is defended by some 20,000 Italians, has been under British siege by land, air and sea for eighteen days. There the Italians have made their best stand since the start of the British offensive which drove Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's forces from Sidi Barrani and back into Libya.

Tobruk Now Is Threatened.

Reports from the front yesterday said that British mechanized forces had swept beyond Bardia to a point seventy-five miles from the Egyptian border, suggesting a blow against Tobruk even before the fall of Bardia.

These reports said that the British forces controlled a segment of the road leading from Bardia to Tobruk, which is eighty miles from the Egyptian border.

The R. A. F. helped pave the way for the penetration of Bardia's defenses by land forces. On the night of Wednesday-Thursday Bardia was repeatedly raided and large fires were started among stores and buildings. The airmen followed up with fresh raids yesterday, centering on a motor transport concentration west of Bardia. "Considerable damage was caused, the extent of which was confirmed by photographs," the R. A. F. said of the latter action.

Port of Tripoli Bombed.

Meanwhile the British Middle East Command announced that its bombers had plastered shipping in the Libyan port of Tripoli in two heavy raids on the night of January 1 and early yesterday.

A communique reported two large motor vessels hit and said that clouds of heavy smoke rolled up from them. Fires in the port were visible for sixty miles.

During the first attack bombs straddled the southeast mole, where five cruisers were moored and several fires were started near the seaplane hangars. Other bombs were reported to have hit one ship and the customs jetty.

In the second raid, the communique said, direct hits were registered on the customs jetty, causing five fires and three explosions, "probably on ships moored alongside."

May Prove Major Attack.

London, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—British military experts interpreted today's Cairo communique reporting a piercing of the Bardia defenses as the first word of a major attack on that base. These experts said that everything was likely to depend on how the initial stages of the present attack succeeded and how operations developed.

Even if the attack were only a large-scale raid, however, it indicated that preparations were under way to begin the all-out assault on Bardia.

The defenses were said probably to consist of a ring of pillboxes and anti-tank ditches and traps supported by heavy guns, centered on heights near the town.

Berlin Declares Air Aid to Italy Proof of Unity

Axis Ready to Fight Britain on Any Front, Nazis Say; R. A. F. Havoc Admitted

BERLIN, Jan. 3 (AP).—The appearance in Italy of German air force units is notice to Great Britain that the Axis powers will unite their military forces wherever necessary to face Britain, the well informed German commentary Diplomatisch-Politische Korrespondenz said tonight. It was the first comment from a German source on the presence of a Nazi air corps on Italian territory.

The commentary, often considered a Foreign Office mouthpiece, said the British apparently had assumed that Germany would confine herself to the northern theater of war while letting Italy take care of operations in the Mediterranean area But, it observed, the closest military cooperation between the Axis powers had been shown already by the facts that Italian warplanes had flown over England and that Italian submarines were operating in the Atlantic.

Germans learned the news today through a D. N. B. (German official news agency) dispatch from Rome which said Italian newspapers pointed jubilantly to the arrival of the Nazi air units "as an indication of the tightest solidarity of the two Axis powers." An official announcement was made yesterday at Rome but efforts to get a similar statement here were unavailing.

Captive Italians Reach Bombay

Bombay, Jan. 3 (AP)—Four Italian generals, captured in Africa, arrived here today under escort along with 1,000 other prisoners and will be taken to a camp in in northern India.

Rome Reports Bomb Success

Rome, Jan. 3 (AP)—Italian artillery and planes bombarded British warships off the North African coast and the bombers succeeded in hitting a cruiser, the high command reported today.

"In the Cirenaican (Libyan) frontier zone our artillery counter-fired on enemy mechanized formations" and naval units, the daily communique said.

"Bombing planes repeatedly attacked enemy advance bases and ships near the coast, hitting a cruiser. Other planes bombed and machine-gunned mechanized formations on the Bardia front and in the desert."

All the Italian planes returned safely, the high command said.

Italy Admits Some Civilian Losses In Elbasani Raid

Rome, Jan. 3 (AP)—The Italian high command today acknowledged "some losses among the civilian population" of Elbasani, Italian base in central Albania, as the result of a bombing raid by "enemy" planes.

Greek attacks of a "local character" in several sectors of the front were reported "decisively repulsed."

"A bold Italian raid put to flight enemy forces with the capture of prisoners," a communique said. The location of this action was not given.

Italian Defense Lines In Chimara Sector Pierced, Greeks Say

Fascist Tank Assaults On Northern Front Reported Repulsed

By the Associated Press.

ATHENS, Jan. 3.—Italian defense lines from the Chimara sector, on the Adriatic coast, to the Klisura-Tepeleni region, in Middle Albania, have been breached at various places, and fierce Fascist tank assaults along the coast and on the northern battle front have been repulsed and put to "headlong flight," the Greeks reported today.

A number of tanks were destroyed in both Italian thrusts, aimed at Greeks advancing up the coast and in the Pogradetz area, advices from the fronts said.

"The outstanding feature of the operations is the breaking through of Italian defenses at some places along their line extending from Chimara to the region of Klisura-Tepeleni," one dispatch said.

Tanks Destroyed.

"Already the whole region of Tepeleni-Klisura has been brought under control of Greek fire."

"During the Italian attacks by light tanks heavy anti-tank fire compelled a headlong flight. Several of these tanks were destroyed."

The weather continued severe, but the Greeks said fierce fighting was in progress, especially from the coast to Klisura.

Greek advance units were reported to have found the bodies of 200 Italian soldiers on camp beds in a mountain cavern which had been converted into a field hospital. The Greeks said they apparently froze after being abandoned by their retreating comrades. The bodies were said to have been removed and buried in the frozen earth with military honors.

Elbasani Is Raided.

Elbasani, Italian base in Central Albania, toward which the Greek right wing is driving, was heavily raided "with considerable success" by the Royal Air Force yesterday, a British communique reported.

(The Italian high command acknowledged "some losses among the civilian population" in a bombing raid on Elbasani.)

Elbasani is only 30 miles from Tirana, the Albania capital.

The communique said "all bombs, both high explosive and incendiary, were observed to fall in the center of the town and on the main road. Three large fires were started. A large building in the center of the town was hit and flames were seen coming from it."

R. A. F. headquarters said another military building in Elbasani "also was believed hit."

ITALIAN DEFENSES CRACK, GREEKS SAY

Way Declared Paved In Central Sector For "Important Development" In War

Gains In North In Drive Toward Valona, Berati And Elbasani Also Claimed

[By the Associated Press]

Athens, Saturday, Jan. 4—Greek troops broke through Italian defenses in Albania in the central sector to pave the way for what was authoritatively described early today as "an important development in the war."

Scene of the breaching was not located specifically, but was understood to be north and east of the Klisura-Tepeleni area, which a Government spokesman earlier had declared was pierced by the Greeks.

Gains northeast of Chimara on the coast also were chalked up by the Greeks in the drive north toward the important Fascist bases of Valona, on the coast, and inland Berati and Elbasani.

Accelerated Advance Indicated

An accelerated advance toward those Fascist points now is indicated in the announced successes.

Earlier the spokesman had declared that "desperate" Italian counter-attacks failed to dislodge the Greeks from newly acquired heights in the Klisura region, and that Italian tanks had been put to "headlong flight" from that region to the Adriatic Sea.

The Greeks said the Italians suffered heavy losses.

Under Control Of Greek Fire

"The whole region of the Tepeleni-Klisura has been brought under control of Greek fire," advices from the front said.

This was described as the "outstanding feature of the operations" on fronts from the coast to Lake Ochrida.

It is via the road running from Klisura through Tepeleni to the west that Greek forces in central Albania aim to press on the port of Valona simultaneously with the southern wing advancing up the coast from Chimara.

Also Claim Successes In South

In the latter sector and in the Pogradetz area south of Lake Ochrida, the Greeks claimed they had repulsed enemy tank assaults and destroyed a number of machines.

"During the Italian attacks by light tanks, heavy anti-tank fire compelled a headlong flight," the military reports said.

Heavy fighting continued, especially from the cost of Klisura, despite adverse weather.

The bodies of 200 Italians were reported found on camp beds in a mountain cavern converted into a field hospital. The Greeks, who said the men apparently froze to death after being abandoned by retreating comrades, gave the victims military burial in frozen ground.

R. A. F. Bombs Elbasani

In the north-central sector, Elbasani, Italian base thirty miles south of Albania's capital, Tirana, was heavily bombed Thursday by British airmen, a Royal Air Force communique said.

Three large fires were started, one in a big building in the center of the town, the British related.

A military barrack also was believed struck.

With the Greek Army in Northern Albania, Jan. 3—Little Greece's outnumbered airmen who dive on Italian infantrymen in these wild mountain passes "throw sticks and stones and even old boots" at the Italians when they run out of bombs and machine-gun ammunition.

The worse the weather is, the pilots say, the more they fly—because bad weather is their chief protection on flights where they might ordinarily find themselves outnumbered nine to one.

"Ideal Conditions" Cited

"Ideal conditions" on their charts are ceiling zero, six-inch-deep snows and 10 below zero temperatures.

They take off from makeshift "post-age stamp" fields deep in the wilds of Macedonia and Albania. The sight of these airports would make a United States Government inspector shudder.

"With 'ideal conditions' the Italians do not fly at all or fly so high they cannot see us," one young pilot said.

He grinned and pointed to mist hanging over a nearby peak and snow flurries obscuring visibility from one end of the field to the other.

"We fly low, about 600 feet, until we reach the Italian positions, when we drop down to 200 feet or less. We know all these mountains like you know your hand and we fly up valleys and across passes close to the ground.

"The Italians usually give plenty of clearance to these 6,000-foot peaks. We wind through the valleys and the mist screens us from those above."

Move To Save Bombs

These hide-and-seek tactics of the scanty Greek air force is designed to save bombs as well as planes.

"The other day," the pilot said, "we went out to silence an Italian battery, but a big Fascist squadron spotted us. We dodged up a small valley, came around the mountain, and were again sighted. Another run up a pass and we circled and dived on that battery before the Italian airmen saw us the third time. We don't want to waste our bombs.

"Crews of some of the smaller bomber-observation planes load tin cans and old boots filled with rocks or anything heavy. They throw those at the Italians, too."

Petain Shaking Up Cabinet

BY ROBERT OKIN

Vichy, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—The overhauling of Chief of State Philippe Petain's entire Cabinet was forecast today, with Admiral Jean Darlan, Gen. Charles Huntziger and Pierre-Etienne Flandin slated to assume broad powers under the old Marshal.

Authorized spokesmen said that Marshal Petain was studying the reorganization of his Government, but described as premature a statement that the changes involving the three members already had taken place. This contradicted what reliable informants described as an official announcement which definitely said the reorganization was in progress. Such a Cabinet shake-up long has been expected, but officials now say they do not know when it will be announced.

At least there was no question about one of the day's developments—the resignation of Paul Baudouin as Secretary of State for presidency of the council. An official statement said merely that he had asked Petain to accept his resignation and that the Marshal had done so.

Prediction of New Setup.

The new triumvirate will be headed by Admiral Darlan, Naval Minister, who will be charged with direction of the Interior Department. War Minister General Huntziger will take charge of defense and Foreign Minister Flandin of foreign and economic affairs. Interior Minister Marcel Peyrouton and Minister of Justice Raphael Alibert, who had been important members of the Cabinet and to whom it was believed the Germans objected, will be under Admiral Darlan's orders.

Had Directed Press Services.

The press services which had been under Baudouin's direction since Pierre Laval's ouster as Foreign Minister and Vice-Premier December 14 will be attached under the new set-up to the Presidency of the Council which is Petain's department. Baudouin's post as Secretary of State for Presidency of the Council was similar to the post of Under-Secretary of State attached to the Presidency of the Council under former French regimes.

Flandin was said to be taking charge of information services. The reported resignation of Jean Tixier Vignancourt, head of the press services, was denied, however.

Although persons in informed quarters said Baudouin's resignation was a result of the French-German negotiations it could not be ascertained whether the Germans had demanded his resignation.

Prisoners Transferred.

Meanwhile it was stated in informed quarters that all French political prisoners formerly held at Pellevoisin—including former Premier Paul Reynaud and former Interior Minister Georges Mandel—were transferred on Christmas Eve to another prison in southern France. Pellevoisin is near the line of demarcation between occupied and unoccupied France. The republican leaders, who are held under war guilt charges, were taken to a prison in Eredeche department.

Several other former high officials arrested after Frances capitulation were reported still in custody at Bourrasol Manor. Among them were Gen. Maurice Gustave Gamelin, former Premiers Leon Blum and Edouard Daladier an Guy Lachambre, former Air Minister. Jules Moch, a former Minister of Public Works, and Pau Louis Weiller, who during the war was one of France's leading aircraft makers, were believed to have been among those held at Pellevoisin. DASH

The new triumvirate chosen to direct the French government under the aged chief of state, Marshal Petain as made up of two fighting men and a veteran of two decades in the French political scene.

The chief triumvir, Admiral Darlan, was named "Admiral of France" in 1939, with supreme command of all naval forces. He became Minister of Navy in the Petain cabinet last June just before the fall of France.

Last month he received the bones of "L'Aiglon," Napoleon's only son, when the Germans returned them to Paris from Vienna and since that time had been reported actively engaged in the negotiations with the Germans.

Gen. Huntziger, one of the French delegates to whom German armistice terms were handed in Marshal Foch's railroad car in Compiegne Forest last June, retains his duties as defense chief in the new triumvirate. He also was a signer of the French-Italian armistice.

Became War Minister.

Gen. Huntziger became Minister of War in the Petain cabinet last September. He was reported to be opposed to French participation in the war against Britain.

The third member of the directorate, Foreign Minister Flandin, was Premier of France from November 8, 1934, to May 30, 1935, and holder of half a dozen different posts in French cabinets over a period of 20 years.

He became Foreign Minister after the resignation of M. Laval last month.

M. Baudouin was the original Foreign Minister in the Vichy government of Marshal Petain. He held the post until October 26, when he resigned to be replaced by M. Laval, and not long after become secretary of state for presidency of the council.

On December 14, when the ouster of M. Laval as Foreign Minister and Vice Premier was announced, M. Baudouin also was given charge of the information services—press, radio and cinema—which M. Laval had supervised.

Fought in World War.

He received German correspondents a week after M. Laval was ousted and informed them that French-German collaboration was not an issue in the Laval ouster, but that the former Vice Premier had lost Marshal Petain's confidence because of his methods of working.

The 46-year-old Baudouin, who fought in the World War as an artillery officer, won attention as a top-flight financial expert after the war, serving in the Finance Ministry in 1925 and 1926. He was director general of the Bank of Indo-China for several years.

He was made Undersecretary of State in the cabinet of Paul Reynaud in March last year and had been affiliated with the government most of the time since.

French Still Await German Reply To Note On Negotiations

BY RUTH ORKIN

[By the Associated Press]

Vichy, France, Jan. 3—Marshal Philippe Petain was said authoritatively tonight to be still studying a reorganization of his Government after a day of confusing and contradictory statements and the resignation of Paul Baudouin, a leading figure of the regime.

Authorized informants characterized as "premature" an apparently official announcement, made earlier in the day, that the Cabinet had been reorganized with sort of a directorate taking the place of the one-man vice-regency of Pierre Laval, ousted Vice-Premier.

The earlier announcement had indicated that two French fighting men and a political veteran would have broad powers under Petain. The three are:

CHARLES HUNTZIGER, 60, War Minister.

PIERRE-ETIENNE FLANDIN, 51, Foreign Minister.

Darlan To Interior Post

It was said at the time that Darlan would be in charge of the Interior Department; Huntziger charged with defense powers, and Flandin responsible for economic as well as foreign affairs.

Such a change in the Cabinet has long been expected, but officials said they did not know when it would be announced. It was indicated the Germans had been told about the plan, but it was uncertain whether they had approved.

The French are still waiting for Germany's reply to Petain's note on a plan for the resumption of French-German negotiations, stalemated since Laval was pried out of power three weeks ago. The best information is that the reply may be anticipated within a few days, and the impression got about that it will permit of some sort of an accord.

Baudouin's Reason Not Given

One thing seems certain: Baudouin, secretary for the presidency of the council, has resigned. No reason was given, a communique stating simply that he had asked Petain to accept his resignation and that Petain agreed.

Informed persons expressed the opinion he left because of disaccord with certain members of the Cabinet and the prospect that under the proposed Government change he would have less power. He has had direction over press and information services. These, it is supposed, soon may be under one of the proposed triumvirate

It also is believed that Marcel Peyrouton, Interior Minister, and Raphael Alibert, Minister of Justice, to whom the Germans are reported to have objected, will take orders from Admiral Darlan, if the projected shift is carried through.

Named Admiral In 1939

Darlan was named Admiral of France in 1939, with supreme command of naval forces. He became Minister of Navy in the Petain Cabinet last June just before the fall of France.

Last month he received the bones of L'Aiglon, Napoleon's only son, when the Germans returned them to Paris from Vienna. Since that time he had been reported actively engaged in the negotiations with the Germans.

General Huntziger, one of the French delegates to whom German armistice terms were handed in Marshal Foch's railroad car in Compiegne Forest in June, retains his duties as defense chief. He also was a signer of the French-Italian armistice.

Reported Opposed To War Plan

Huntziger became Minister of War in the Petain Cabinet last September. He was reported to be opposed to French participation in the war against Britain.

Flandin was Premier of France from November 8, 1934, to May 30, 1935, and holder of different posts in French cabinets over twenty years. He became Foreign Minister after the resignation of Laval.

Baudouin was the original Foreign Minister in the Vichy Government of Marshal Petain. He held the post until October 26, when he resigned to be replaced by Laval, and not long after become secretary of state for presidency of the council.

Took Over Laval's Duties

On December 14, when the ouster of Laval was announced, Baudouin also was given charge of the information services—press, radio and cinema—which Laval had supervised.

He received German correspondents a week after Laval was ousted and informed them that French-German collaboration was not an issue in the Laval ouster, but that the former Vice-Premier had lost Petain's confidence because of his methods.

Baudouin, 46, who fought in the World War as an artillery officer, won attention as a top-flight financial expert after the war, serving in the Finance Ministry in 1925 and 1926. He was director-general of the Bank of Indo-China for several years.

He was made Under Secretary of State in the Reynaud Cabinet in March, 1940, and had been affiliated with the Government most of the time since.

Bonapartists Active at Vichy

Twenty-six-year-old Prince Louis Napoleon Is Backed as Ruler of Modern France.

BY CHARLES FOLTZ

NYON, Switzerland, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—Bonapartists are negotiating with the French Government at Vichy for the return of Napoleon's great-grandnephew, Prince Louis Napoleon, that he may become the ruler of modern France, it was reported on good authority today.

The dark, handsome, twenty-six-year-old Prince is now living quietly at his villa, north of here and not far from the French border. To make his return possible, the Vichy government would have to abrogate a fifty-five-year-old law which bans from France any male descendant of a French ruling family.

His friends declare, however, that prior to the surrender of France the young Prince served in the present war under the name of Louis Blanchard as an armored car driver with the French Foreign Legion in Tunisia. He is athletically inclined, and his automobile racing experience equipped him admirably for this task, it is asserted.

Hitler's Blessing Needed.

Prince Louis Napoleon, who prefers to be called the Count of Montfort, has been mentioned frequently since Adolf Hitler transferred to Paris the remains of l'Aiglon, Napoleon's only son, three weeks ago. This gesture was believed by some observers then to be the possible forerunner of a Napoleonic restoration. Friends of Prince Louis Napoleon declared, however, that he had not been approached by the Germans, thus far at any rate, and that he would not be a puppet in any case. Yet, in order to return to France, it would be necessary for him to win Hitler's blessing, which some regard as more important than that of the French Chief of State, Philippe Petain.

In deference to the Swiss neutrality laws, he now remains inactive politically in his extensive Lakeside villa, which is well guarded, surrounded by barbed wire and bristling with tank barriers. This is part of the Swiss military precautions along the frontier, however, and not to guard the Prince.

Trusts in French Youth.

The author of a volume of letters compiled from Napoleonic manuscripts in his family's possession, the Prince is now engaged in completing a second volume. He speaks animatedly of everything concerning France, however, and declares that the nation's present sorrow is only temporary.

"I have faith in French youth," he asserted, "because it is suffering now and gaining moral values from the struggle. At last it will learn respect for authority which is necessary for peoples who wish to prosper."

Add NYON

Montfort is a great-grandson of Jerome, King of Westphalia and brother of Napoleon Bonaparte. His grandfather, the second Jerome, was bron at Trieste in 1822, and his father, Victor Napoleon Bonaparte, was born in Paris in 1862.

PHILOFF SEES DOCTOR

Premier of Bulgaria Now in Vienna Hotel.

Vienna, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—Premier Bogdan Philov of Bulgaria visited Prof. Hans Eppinger, a physician, today, and was told to return tomorrow.

The Premier had a quiet luncheon at the Imperial Hotel with a number of Bulgarian friends. So far there has been no indication there was a political purpose for his visit, and reports that he would confer here with German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop have not been confirmed.

[The German radio described Dr. Eppinger as a specialist in internal diseases and said that Philoff's wife also intended to consult physicians in Vienna.]

Berlin Silent On Bulgar Relations

Berlin, Jan. 3 (AP)—Authorized sources declined today to comment on German-Bulgarian relations and reiterated assertions that Bulgarian Premier Philoff's present visit to Vienna was made purely for "health reasons."

(There has been speculation in Balkan circles that Philoff would meet German leaders in Vienna for talks expected to clarify his country's relations with Germany, but the official announcement in Sofia concerning his trip said he had gone to Vienna for medical consulations.)

The fact that the German Minister to Sofia accompanied Philoff was a sign of "amicable relations relating between the two nations," German sources said, "and a gesture of courtesy toward the Premier of a befriended nation."

New Wave Of Uneasiness In Bulgaria As Nazis Act To Help Italy

[By the Associated Press]

Sofia, Jan. 3—The decision of Germany to give Italy aerial assistance in her Mediterranean war with Great Britain and Greece created a new wave of uneasiness in Bulgaria tonight.

There was concern in political circles that the German aid might alter the trend in the Greek-Italian war and thereby bring the conflict closer to Bulgarian frontiers.

Such a development, it was pointed out, might upset further the delicate balance in the military situation around Bulgaria by bringing into motion Turkish forces concentrated on the southern border, German forces on the north and Russian troops massed along the frontier of northern Dobruja.

Rumors Sweep Peninsula

As always in Balkan crises, rumors swept the peninsula. They included reports that the Russians had handed the Rumanians an ultimatum demanding control of the Danube river mouth; that Russian troops had crossed the Rumanian frontier, and that 150 carloads of Germans had moved into Bulgaria.

Rumanian officials denied the first two, and the third was ridiculed in authoritative circles here.

VON BLOMBERG STORY

Nazis Deny ex-Minister of War Is a Prisoner.

Berlin, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—Marshal Werner von Blomberg is vacationing at a well known German spa, authorized spokesmen said today, and reports of his arrest were declared to be false.

"The best answer we can give," the spokesmen asserted, "is the fact that Von Blomberg's son commanded an honor battalion at Compiegne. It would be incompatible with an officer's honor to have undertaken such an assignment if his father were in prison."

The reference to Compiegne apparently was to the signing of the armistice with France in that famous forest last June.

The British radio, in a broadcast heard in New York by the National Broadcasting Company last night, said that Von Blomberg, one-time German Minister of War, was imprisoned in a Bavarian fortress by personal order of Adolf Hitler.

The sixty-two-year-old Marshal fell into eclipse early in 1938 after his marriage to a carpenter's daughter, Erika Grohn. The German High Command was reported displeased with the marriage, which Hitler himself attended, and Von Blomberg immediately resigned his post as War Minister. Little has been heard of him since then.

LONDON, Jan. 3 (AP).—Great Britain was represented today as standing firm in her attitude toward India despite predictions that Mohandas K. Gandhi would extend his civil disobedience campaign next Sunday after a Christmas truce. Several leaders of Gandhi's Congress party and many other members were arrested before he called a thirteen-day halt in anti-war speeches "to avoid inconvenience to police" during the holidays.

The Congress party campaign started Oct. 17 after the British Viceroy, the Marquess of Linlithgow, rejected Gandhi's request for freedom to disseminate his anti-war views. The campaign tightened the long deadlock created by the Congress party's demand for independence for India. The holiday truce apparently failed to produce any change in atmosphere which would favor a resumption of talks between Gandhi and Lord Linlithgow.

Mystery Nazi Raider Captained By Von Luckner, British Say

Bluff 'Sea Devil' Believed Again On the Loose

BACKGROUND—

After World War Count Felix von Luckner, famed "sea devil," made several visits to America on lecture tours, last of which was in 1933, although it was reported he was in United States shortly before outbreak of present European conflict. In 1930 and 1931 he took several groups of American youngsters on cruises through West Indies.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—British naval circles, stirred by the recent depredations of a German sea raider in the Pacific, say it not only is possible but "probable" that Count Felix von Luckner, the German "sea devil" of World War fame, is again on the prowl.

The bluff 54-year-old seaman, who led British men o' war a merry chase more than 20 years ago, is just the man whom the Nazis might pick, these circles declare, to command the modern mystery raider.

Von Luckner, who is not a regular officer in the German Navy, was reported in America shortly before the war broke out, it was recalled.

(Travelers reaching Hong Kong identified the raider responsible for most of the recent sinkings in the South Seas as the 7,100-ton Glengarry, a ship reported seized by the Germans at Copenhagen.

(A "Capt. von Lucknow" was said by the travelers to be in command of the Glengarry. The German 'Who's Who' does not list such a name and it was believed to be a garbled version of Von Luckner.)

The most recent exploit credited to the Pacific raider was the sinking of the big British liner Rangitane on November 26. The ship's crew and passengers were landed on the little island of Emirau near New Guinea, whence they later were rescued.

Twenty-four years ago a picturesque German old windjammer, the Seeadler, made its appearance in the South Pacific and began raiding allied shipping. Count Felix von Luckner commanded her and in that 1916-17 period was credited with sinking more than 25 ships, earning the title of the "Sea Eagle," or "Sea Devil."

He provisioned largely from the ships he sank, imprisoning their crews until he could land them on South Pacific islands.

The sinking of the four-masted schooner Manila, an American vessel, finally led indirectly to his internment in New Zealand until the war ended.

The Seeadler approached the Manila in June, 1917, and sank her with time bombs after stripping her of valuables and taking her crew aboard. Months later, Von Luckner anchored off the reef of Montpelier Island to land the Americans and other prisoners he had aboard. In the attempt, a tidal wave drove the Seeadler on a reef.

Von Luckner and his men then took a small French vessel and got as far as the Fiji Islands, where they were captured.

After the war he lectured widely in the United States. Only last June he was accused by the British of conducting spy activities in Australia while on a "good will" visit there in 1938.

Von Luckner Again on Loose, Norwegians Quoted

HONG KONG, China, Jan. 3 (AP).—Survivors of two Norwegian vessels sunk by a German sea raider were quoted today as saying that Count Felix von Luckner, famed German "sea devil" of World War days, again is attacking shipping in the Pacific and Indian Oceans.

The story leaked out when the Norwegian survivors passed through Hong Kong en route home.

Some time ago, they said, the crew of the Nazi raider boarded one Norwegian ship in the waters off the Island of Sumatra after an exchange of gunfire which killed nine Norwegians. The raider first was mistaken for a peaceful merchantman, they related, but it turned out to be the Glengarry, a British ship reported seized by the Nazis at Copenhagen and sent to the Pacific by a devious route.

Von Luckner himself addressed the survivors, the Norwegians declared, saying that he regretted that his crew was compelled to fire on the Norwegian ship.

The Norwegians received "every consideration," they said, even to being given a "complaint book," which the German commander told them would receive his personal attention.

The German raider went to the Indian Ocean, approached another Norwegian vessel, sank her with shells after taking aboard her crew, and then headed for Kobe, where all of the prisoners were placed aboard the German liner Scharnhorst, according to the story told here.

Subsequently, a number of the Norwegians were released, and their return to Norway was arranged by British and Norwegian Consuls.

No Information Given At Von Luckner's Home

BERLIN, Jan. 3 (AP).—An attempt by telephone to locate Count Felix von Luckner at his home in Schloss Altfrancken, near Dresden, brought today the reply of a servant: "I am not permitted to give any information." She declined to say the count is either in Germany or out of the country.

VICTIMS TERM VON LUCKNER STILL GALLANT

Survivors In Sea Raider's Exploits Given "Complaint Book" By Count

Story Told Involves Crews Of Norwegian Ships, One Sunk And One Seized

[By the Associated Press]

Hongkong, Jan. 3—The story how Count Felix von Luckner, again at his old job of prowling the seas for Germany but, as always, a gallant, gave his victims a "complaint book" to keep during their captivity was credited today to the survivors of two Norwegian ships, one seized, one sunk.

The story came to light today through a European who said he had heard it when the Norwegians passed through Hongkong, en route home via Vladivostok.

Nine Killed In Shelling

Sometime ago, according to this account, the crew from a Nazi raider boarded a Norwegian ship in Sumatra waters after an exchange of fire in which nine Norwegians were killed.

The raider, at first mistaken for a peaceful merchantman, turned out to be the former British Glen liner Glengarry, 7,100 tons, seized by the Germans at Copenhagen, and sent into the Pacific by a devious route.

Addresses Them Personally

He addressed the survivors personally, saying he regretted that he had to fire. Then he presented them with the "complaint book" and assured them it would receive his personal attention.

The raider went into the Indian Ocean with the Norwegians below decks, approached another Norwegian ship and shelled and sank her; then took the survivors aboard and headed for Kobe.

There the prisoners were placed aboard the German liner Scharnhorst. Subsequently a number of the Norwegians were released and repatriated to Norway by arrangement of the British and Norwegian consulates.

Glengarry His New "Seeadler"

The most recent exploit credited to the Glengarry, reputedly Von Luckner's 1940 "Seeadler," is the sinking of the British liner Rangitane on November 26. The ship's crew and passengers were landed on a little island near New Guinea, anc later rescued.

It was in the Seeadler, a made-over windjammer, that von Luckner, twenty-four years ago, ran the Allied blockade and made his way to the South Pacific, leaving a trail of wrecked merchantmen.

In 1916 and 1917 he sank more than twenty-five Allied ships before a tidal wave drove him on the Montpelier Island reef while he was trying to land prisoners from the American schooner Manila. In another vessel he got as far as the Fiji Islands, where he was captured.

French Sub, Tanker Torpedoed On Way To Dakar, Says Vichy

Vichy, France, Jan. 3 (AP).—The torpedo sinking of the 1,500-ton French submarine Sfax and the 2,785-ton naval tanker Rhone in the Atlantic December 19 by a submarine of undetermined nationality was announced today by the Naval Ministry.

Sixty-four members of the crew of the Sfax and ten crewmen of the Rhone were lost. The ships were en route to Dakar, French West Africa, from Casablanca, French Morocco.

The Sfax, one of the fastest and most modern submarines in the French navy, was convoying the tanker. It was not disclosed whether other ships were in the convoy.

Vichy, Jan. 3 (A. The submarine was convoying the Rhone, but it was not learned if there were other ships in the convoy.

The text of the Admiralty communique follows:

"On December 19 the 1,500-ton submarine Sfax and the navy oil tanker Rhone were en route together from Casablanca to Dakar. At 4:40 P. M. the Sfax, after two heavy explosions aboard, disappeared.

"Forty-five minutes later the Rhone, which had picked up five members of the Sfax crew, was shaken by a violent explosion, probably torpedoed in turn by a submarine whose nationality still is unknown.

"The Rhone, set afire, finally sank. Sixty-four members of the crew of the Sfax and ten members of the crew of the Rhone are missing."

The British radio in a broadcast heard here today by the listening station of the Columbia Broadcasting System, said that the French Admiralty had announced at Vichy that the submarine Sfax and the auxiliary naval vessel Rhone sank after heavy explosions on their way from Casablanca, French Morocco, to Dakar, in French West Africa.

Jane's Fighting Ships lists the Sfax as one of the very successful ocean-going Redoubtable class, with a surface tonnage of 1,384 and armed with one 3.9-inch gun, two anti-aircraft guns and eleven torpedo tubes. The 2,785 ton Rhone is listed as an oil-tanker.

Says Small Steamers Still Dock At London

Dutch Manager Of International Cooperative Agency There Arrives In New York

New York, Jan. 3 (AP)—Waling Dykstra, Dutch manager of the international cooperative agency in London, said today small coastal steamers continued to use the port of London and that German bombers had only partly destroyed the huge dock and storage facilities there.

Western English ports were still poen to transatlantic trade, he said.

Dykstra came here to lecture in the Middle West on the invitation of the Consumer's Cooperative Association of Kansas City. He arrived today on a Dutch freighter which left Liverpool two weeks ago in a convoy of more than fifty ships, guarded by planes, destroyers and a balloon barrage.

Mystery Ship, Flag Missing, Reported Off Alaskan Coast

[By the Associated Press]

San Francisco, Jan. 3—A mysterious gray steamship, of unknown nationality and flying no flag, was reported off the Alaskan coast today.

A report received in marine circles here said the vessel refused to answer radio requests asking her identity and ignored light signals from passing vessels.

The craft was described as about 400 feet long with a cutter bow, square stern, bridge amidships and four arched cargo booms.

Up and down the coast men familiar with West Coast ships speculated as to its identity. One pointed out that a number of British passenger ships have been converted into armored cruisers or destroyers and might be anywhere along the coast. Others suggested it might be a Canadian or British ship off its course on the Great Circle route. In either case the craft would be silent because of war conditions.

U. S. LINER REACHES KOBE

The President Coolidge Has 779 Passengers, Many Navy Families

New York, Jan. 3 (AP)—Domei News Agency said in a broadcast that the American liner President Coolidge with 779 passengers aboard arrived at Kobe, Japan, today from Shanghai.

Most of the liner's cabin passengers were the families of crews of the United States Asiatic fleet, Domei said.

32 Lost in Wreck Of Yugoslav Ship

London, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—Reuters, the British news agency, quoted the Swiss radio as reporting today that thirty-two members of the crew of the Yugoslav steamship Srebreno were lost when the ship broke in two yesterday after having grounded on the Dalmatian coast.

The 3,304-ton vessel was en route to the United States.

Customs Autonomy Given To Indo-China by Vichy

New Setup Paves Way for a Pact With Japan

VICHY, Jan. 3 (AP).—A decreee giving French Indo-China customs autonomy as of Jan. 1 will be published tomorrow in the official gazette, it was announced today. Tariffs, on an ad valorem basis, will apply to imports from France and Algeira as well as foreign countries.

Under the new regime of customs autonomy, Indo-China intends to negotiate independent agreements with other countries, beginning with the agreement now being negotiated with Japan.

Economic unity with the French empire will be maintained by a system of reciprocal arrangements providing lists of duty-free articles in exchanges with France, Algeria, Tunisia, Morocco and French colonies.

Minor Clashes on Border

BANGKOK, Thailand, Jan. 3 (AP).—Minor clashes continue in various sectors of the Thailand (Siam)-Indo-China frontier, the Thai high command reported today, with hostilities extending from Chieng-rai in the north to Aranyapbades in the south.

One French soldier was reported killed and eleven wounded in a clash in the Chieng-rai region. Indo-Chinese soldiers in a boat opened fire on frontier police near Bhonbihai in the Nong-Khai region, a communique said, and a thirty-five-minute fight ensued before the boat withdrew.

SHANGHAI RADIO IS JAMMED AGAIN

American Owners of XMHA Blame Japanese.

Shanghai, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—Alleged Japanese interference with the broadcasting of the local American radio station XMHA continued tonight, jamming the station's broadcast of the full text of President Roosevelt's latest fireside address.

Since a recent American protest, the Japanese Consular authorities have repeatedly informed Americans that they hoped to arrange a cessation of interference.

Chinese Make Daring Raid On Enemy Post

Plain-Clothes Steals Into Nanking, Kills Two Japanese And Seizes Machine Guns

Chungking, Jan. 3 (AP)—A daring raid in which a Chinese plainclothes corps was declared to have stolen into Nanking and killed more than one hundred Japanese at a military post just inside the city's fortified wall, was described today in a Chine central news agency dispatch from somewhere in South Kiangsu.

The raid occurred December 22, the dispatch said, and the Chinese escaped after seizing two machine-guns.

Burma Road Terminus Raided With Leaflets

By the Associated Press.

KUNMING, China, Jan. 3.—Kunming, China, terminus of the Burma road, was visited late yesterday by 12 Japanese planes which dropped thousands of leaflets denouncing Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and urging the populace to support the Japanese-dominated Nanking government of Wang Ching-wei.

As if to lend emphasis to this exhortation, other Japanese planes bombed points west of the city, along the Burma road, China's main supply route for imported war materials. The explosions were clearly heard here.

Celebrating Marine Precipitated Row, Japanese Charge

Declare American Grabbed Pipe From Citizen's Mouth

By the Associated Press.

PEIPING, Jan. 3.—Japanese military officials, countering demands for an apology for the "illegal arrest" of five United States marines December 30 in a cabaret incident, charged today the affair was precipitated by "a celebrating marine who grabbed a pipe from the mouth of a Japanese."

The statement, coming from headquarters of Lt. Gen. Hayao Tada, commander of the Japanese army in North China, asserted further that all the marines involved had been "celebrating." It denied a charge by Col. Allen H. Turnage, United States marine commander here, that the incident was "Japanese-instigated."

The Japanese said "our highest authorities are investigating the affair," but indicated their own conclusions already had been reached. It was indicated no reply had yet been made to Col. Turnage.

Col. Turnage refrained from further comment on the incident while awaiting the Japanese reply, but continued to restrict the freedom of movement of men under his command.

He previously had said that if he failed to receive a satisfactory response to his demands, including punishment of those responsible and a guarantee against a repetition of the incident, he would carry the matter to higher authority than the Gendarmerie authorities to whom he protested.

KUNMING, CHINA, JAN 3-(AP)-THIS CHINESE TERMINUS OF THE BURMA ROAD WAS UNDER AIR RAID ALARM FOR FIVE HOURS TODAY AS JAPANESE DIVE BOMBERS ATTACKED AN EASTERN SUBURB.

SEVERAL PERSONS WERE REPORTED KILLED AND 20 INJURED, BUT CHINESE AUTHORITIES SAID MATERIAL DAMAGE WAS SLIGHT.

YESTERDAY JAPANESE PLANES PELTED THE CITY WITH LEAFLETS URGING THE POPULACE TO SUPPORT THE JAPANESE-DOMINATED NANKING GOVERNMENT OF WANG CHING-WEI.

POINTS WEST OF THE CITY ALSO WERE BOMBED YESTERDAY.

War Communiques

British

LONDON, Jan. 3 (AP).—An Air Ministry communique:

The naval base, shipyards and the railway station at Bremen again were attacked last night by aircraft of the bomber command. The attack was not on so heavy a scale as on the previous night, but the results were satisfactory.

So large were the fires started in the area of the docks and the main railway station that it was not possible accurately to observe the bursts of bombs dropped by aircraft arriving later during the course of the operations.

One of our aircraft is missing.

Tonight's Air Ministry-Home Security Ministry communique:

During daylight today there has been a little enemy air activity in some coastal districts. The only report of bombs is from one town in Kent, where the damage done was very slight and there were no casualties.

This morning's Air Ministry-Home Security Ministry communique:

The main enemy attack last night was on a town in South Wales, where considerable damage was done to houses and commercial and other buildings. A number of fires broke out, but the fire services had extinguished many and brought all the rest under control by an early hour this morning. A number of people were killed and others injured.

Bombs were also dropped on other parts of the country, but the damage done was small and casualties were very few.

The Admiralty communique:

One of our submarines, H. M. S. Thunderbolt (Lieut. C. B. Crouch, R. N.), has sunk an Italian U-boat which was proceeding under escort to a base in enemy-occupied territory.

After firing his torpedo the commanding officer of H. M. S. Thunderbolt saw a tall column of water rise into the air from the Italian U-boat, a large explosion to occur, and when the smoke and spray cleared away only one end of the enemy vessel was seen sticking out of the water at a steep angle. This quickly disappeared.

An escort consisting of three armed trawlers dropped depth charges as soon as they realized an attack was taking place.

Since the explosion of the torpedo was both seen and heard and since the enemy U-boat would not have dived while trawlers were dropping depth charges in its close proximity, it is considered certain the Italian U-boat was sunk.

It is possible on this occasion to depart from the normal procedure of refraining from announcing losses inflicted among enemy U-boats, since the incident was witnessed by enemy escorting vessels.

CAIRO, Jan. 3 (AP).—A British headquarters communique:

Libya: Just after dawn this morning Australian forces supported by tanks penetrated a sector of the defenses of Bardia. Operations are continuing.

Other fronts: Nothing to report.

A Royal Air Force Middle East command communique:

During the night of Jan. 1-2 the R. A. F. carried out two heavy raids on shipping in Tripoli Harbor.

During the first attack bombs straddled the southeast mole and five cruisers there. Several fires were started near the seaplane hangars, and other bombs hit the customs jetty and one ship. A number of explosions and fresh fires occurred and the seaplane hangars started burning.

During the second raid direct hits were registered on the customs jetty, causing five fires and three explosions, probably on ships moored alongside. Two large motor vessels were hit, and clouds of heavy smoke resulted. Fires were visible for over sixty miles.

In the western desert Bardia was again subjected to a series of raids. During the night of Jan. 1-2 as a result of the bombardment large fires were started among stores and buildings. Two further raids were carried out yesterday, mainly on a motor transport concentration and encampment west of the town. Considerable damage was caused, the extent of which was confirmed by photographs.

In Italian East Africa numerous reconnaissance flights were carried out, but there is nothing of outstanding importance to report.

From all operations on all fronts our aircraft returned safely.

Greek

ATHENS, Jan. 3 (AP).—The Greek high command communique tonight:

Reduced patrol and artillery activity.

The Ministry of Home Security communique:

No raids on Greece today.

A British Royal Air Force communique:

Bomber aircraft of the R. A. F. attacked Elbasani (in Albania) with considerable success yesterday. All bombs, both high explosive and incendiary, were observed to fall in the center of the town and on the main road. Three large fires were started. A large building in the center of the town was hit, and flames were seen coming from it. Another military building on the north bank of the river is believed to have been hit.

It now is confirmed that on Dec. 30, when our fighter aircraft shot down two enemy bombers as already reported, they also destroyed a third aircraft, a Cant 506. This aircraft was fired on, and the wreckage now has been picked up from the sea.

From all operations all our aircraft returned safely.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 3 (AP).—The Italian high command communique:

In the Cyrenaica frontier zone our artillery counter-fired on enemy mechanized formations and naval means.

Bombing planes repeatedly attacked an enemy advance base and ships near the coast, hitting a cruiser. Other planes bombed and machine-gunned mechanized formations on the Bardia front and in the desert. All our planes returned.

On the Greek front attacks of local character in several sectors have been decisively repulsed. A bold Italian raid put to flight the enemy forces with the capture of prisoners. The enemy bombed Elbasani, causing some losses among the civilian population.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 3 (AP).—The German high command communique:

In the course of the day (Jan. 2) our air force carried out attacks against objectives on the English east coast. One patrol boat was bombed and sunk in a dive attack.

Last night stronger combat units bombed with all calibers the city and harbor of Cardiff in retaliation for the British attacks on Bremen. Numerous fires were observed, some of which were seen for 100 kilometers (sixty-two miles).

British planes bombed two northern German communities. Again one hospital and several houses, mostly within definite residential sections, were hit. Fires were started at some storerooms and factories, but were quickly quenched by plant protection squads, so that no noteworthy military or military-economic damage was caused.

There were a total of eight dead and twenty injured.

Two British planes were downed and one German plane is missing.

Red Front Here Aids Nazis: Dies

Washington, D. C., Jan. 3 (AP).—Representative Martin Dies (D-Tex.), chairman of the House committee on un-American activities, said today "it is entirely possible that Russia has been acting as a front for Germany as far as obtaining credits in this country is concerned."

Dies, in an interview after his committee had issued its report to Congress, added that "I believe that the totalitarian credits available in this country for war probably exceed those of Great Britain."

Dies has asked that his committee, whose life expired with the 76th Congress, be recreated, and said that, if it were, it would investigate reports that Russia was obtaining supplies and funds for the Nazis in this country and transferring them to German agents.

$3,000,000 Transfer, Report.

Committee officials announced that investigators were inquiring into reports that Russia had transferred as much as $3,000,000 in recent months to the account of the German government in the Chase National Bank of New York.

They said they had been advised that on one day this fall $700,000 was transferred in a single item. Preliminary investigations have disclosed that the transfers were from the State Bank of Russia to the Reichsbank with headquarters in Berlin.

The committee, in making public its report, called on all progressive and patriotic groups to "disassociate" themselves from any Communist or Axis influence and asked Congress for added legislation to stamp out subversive elements.

The committee's third annual report to Congress was approved by six of the seven committeemen. All but Representative Casey (D-Mass.), who was out of the city, signed it after a two-hour meeting.

Ask 2 Years More.

They included a recommendation that the committee be continued for two years.

The committee's legislative recommendations fell into these main categories:

1. Deportation of alien spies and saboteurs and those aliens who advocate a basic change in the United States government.

2. Denial of employment in defense industries to those active in political organizations found to be under foreign control or guidance; requirements that all federal employees be American citizens.

3. The outlawing of all political organizations under foreign control, for "they furnish the legal apparatus for saboteurs.

The report also proposed that federal financial support be withheld from any educational institution which permitted a faculty member to advocate Communism, Fascism or Nazism to the student body "as a substitute for our form of government."

Accounts Often Transferred.

A spokesman for the Chase bank, after explaining that he could not discuss depositors' affairs, added:

"We have accounts from the leading banks of every country in the world. In the course of business, funds are frequently transferred from one to another. We presume that the transactions referred to are of this character."

It was pointed out to him that this statement might be interpreted as confirmation of the Dies committee's statement. "That still is our statement," was the reply.

200 Ships Planned On Mass Production

Washington, D. C., Jan. 3 (AP).—A gigantic shipbuilding program aimed at producing 200 new ocean-going cargo vessels at a rate reminiscent of World War days was announced today by President Roosevelt.

The vessels, aggregating 1,500,000 tons, will cost $300,000,000 to $350,000,000 and, Roosevelt said, some should be ready within a year.

Roosevelt said the cargo carriers were to be built because so many vessels were going to the bottom in the war that there were prospects of a world shortage of tonnage. He diverted press conference questions as to whether the program would aid Britain in any way or result in the release of American ships to the British to replace some of those sunk by enemy action.

The President said the ships would be government-owned and of one standardized type, resembling oblong tanks more than craft in whose lines a lover of ships, like himself, could take pride. Each ship will displace approximately 7,500 tons and will cost $1,500,000 to $1,750,000.

He indicated that they would be built in inexpensive new yards, operating as far as possible merely as assembly plants to put together pre-fabricated parts and steel plates and that special training of shipyard workers would be necessary.

Draws on Defense Fund.

To get the shipbuilding program under way, Roosevelt drew from a defense fund granted him by Congress $36,000,000 for the construction of yards.

F.D.R. offered no information on when building actually would get under way. He left that to the Maritime Commission, which will direct the program.

Although the ships will be assembled jobs, rather than "tailor-made" products, construction experts of the Maritime Commission said they would not be "temporary" vessels.

Plan to Build Bombers By Thousands in Car Plants.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 3 (AP).—A plan to build thousands of bombers with the help of the automobile industry took definite form tonight with the selection of Fort Worth, Tex., as the site of a fourth assembly plant.

In a compromise of a contest between rival cities, a previous allotment of a similar plant to Tulsa, Okla., was confirmed.

Under arrangements which were well advanced before a new proposal to build "500 planes a day" was put forward with the support of the CIO, the Fort Worth and Tulsa plants and others assigned to Omaha and Kansas City will turn out 300 lon-range bombers monthly from parts largely fabricated in motor-car factories.

Fifteen months is expected to be required to start production.

HARRY L. HOPKINS SENT TO ENGLAND

Will Personally Represent Roosevelt in London.

Washington, Jan. 3 (A. P.).—President Roosevelt disclosed today that he was sending Harry L. Hopkins, former Secretary of Commerce, to England shortly to be his personal representative until a new Ambassador is selected.

The President told reporters that he expected to send to the Senate next week the nomination of an Ambassador to succeed Joseph P. Kennedy, who has submitted his resignation.

Mr. Hopkins, he said, will have no official status, but merely will go to England to maintain the Chief Executive's personal contacts with the British Government.

The President said he expected Hopkins to leave for England soon and to remain perhaps two weeks. He said that Mr. Hopkins would have no specified mission and would have no duties outside of England.

Mr. Hopkins will not be the permanent, new Ambassador, Mr. Roosevelt asserted, because his health is not sufficiently good to allow him to take over a desk job.

Mr. Hopkins will have no title, Mr. Roosevelt said, but probably will receive his expenses from the Government. No other person will accompany him.

After he had turned aside a series of questions designed to bring out whether there was any particular purpose in sending Mr. Hopkins abroad, the Chief Executive smilingly remarked that Mr. Hopkins was just going over to say how do you do to a lot of the President's old friends.

LONGER WORK DAY ORDERED AT BASES

President Declares "Extraordinary Emergency" At New British Sites

Time-And-A-Half Will Be Paid For Labor In Excess Of 8 Hours, However

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 3—President Roosevelt cleared the way today for the army and navy to work mechanics and laborers more than eight hours a day on construction of new defense outposts to guard the Atlantic and Caribbean approaches to this continent.

In an executive order declaring an "extraordinary emergency" existed, the President cited as reasons for suspending the eight-hour day the isolation of the defense base sites from sources of labor supply in the United States, the urgency of the work and the desirability of conforming with local labor practices.

Officials said they were not yet acquainted in detail with the labor situation in the different British colonies involved, but that they expected the workers would be employed about ten hours a day. They would be paid time-and-one-half rates, one said, for work in excess of eight hours

Extension Of Policy

Suspension of the hours limitation for workers building army and navy facilities on the sites being acquired from Great Britain extended a policy applied previously by the navy in Alaska and on Midway, Wake, Palmyra and Johnston islands. Congress authorized the navy to suspend the limitation in the construction of these Pacific bases.

The eight-hour rule has not been lifted in the continental United States, or on the Island of Oahu, Hiwaii.

Mr. Roosevelt said in his executive order that an act of 1892, as amended in 1913, provided that mechanics and laborers employed by the Government should not be worked more than eight hours a day except in an extraordinary emergency.

Local Labor Used

Asked at a press conference to explain the circumstances behind his action, the President said that local labor was being employed almost entirely on the bases. The order was issued to make the working situation conform with that in the British colonies, he continued, adding that the United States was paying the top wage scale.

The President's order was one of several steps taken in recent months toward increasing hours of work on defense projects.

Last August, the War Department substituted a forty-eight-hour work week for a forty-hour week in its arsenals, agreeing to pay workers time-and-one-half rates for work in excess of the latter figure.

Action By Navy

The navy also directed that its workers could be employed forty-eight hours a week, provided time and one-half rates were paid.

Mr. Roosevelt was asked about the question, raised by a manufacturer recently, of whether the Government stood ready to adjust contracts so that private plants with defense orders could operate around the clock and pay time and one-half, or double time, for overtime work.

The Chief Executive said the inquiry was too general and sounded like a political question. He would require something more specific, he added, before he could reply.

Officials would not discuss wage rates at the different base sites. It was obvious, however, that the rates at some of the sites—certainly those in the Caribbean—were lower than in the continental United States.

77TH CONGRESS MEETS; WAR IS BIGGEST ISSUE

Washington, D. C., Jan. 3 (AP).—In subdued mood, the 77th Congress convened today for a session of heavy responsibilities and history-making decisions.

Quickly and solemnly, each House organized, elected officers, disposed of routine business, and then adjourned to meet again on Monday and hear President Roosevelt detail his views on America's place in a world at war, on "American help to Great Britain and on the American defense program."

References to the world situation cropped out from the very start. The Rev. James Shera Montgomery, House chaplain, prayed for the survival of democracy and Representative Sam Rayburn of Texas, in a short and simple speech after he had been re-elected speaker, emphasized a need for national unity.

Loan Plan Biggest Issue.

President Roosevelt's plan for lending war supplies to England immediately shaped up as one of the biggest issues of the Congress. Senator Barkley of Kentucky, the majority leader, made known that legislation to implement it would be introduced soon, and that it would probably contain no limitation on the amount to be expended.

Meanwhile, it became clear that the Roosevelt foreign policies would face an organized challenge. Senator Wheeler (D-Mont.) said there was a "rock bottom list" of 15 Senators who would speak against administration methods which they believe are tending toward war, and that an effort would be made to "organize the country."

Protests Against Langer

When the name of Senator-elect Langer (R-N.D.) was called, Senator Barkley announced that protests against seating him had been received accompanied by charges which, if true, would seriously affect his qualifications for a Senate seat. He asked and received permission that Langer take the oath "without prejudice," his continuance in office to be subject to the results of a later investigation.

The House meanwhile was similarly engaged in formalties. Rayburn's name and that of Representative Martin (R-Mass.) the Republican leader, were placed in nomination for the speakership. Rayburn received 247 votes to Martin's 159. A committee escorted him to the speaker's chair, amid a loud and prolonged ovation.

Rayburn swung quickly into a plea that partisanship be forgotten in dealing with the important problems of foreign policy.

Treasury Lists $9,800,000,000 Spent in 1940

$2,587,000,000 in Defense Orders Helped Increase Record Peace-Time Total

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3 (AP).—The Treasury spent about $9,800,000,000 in 1940, the largest amount in any year since the World War.

Making a calendar year analysis (Treasury figures customarily are based on a fiscal year ending on June 30), officials found that the year's record-breaking peace-time total was swelled by $2,587,000,000 worth of defense—a figure likely to be more than doubled in 1941.

Receipts were $5,834,000,000 last year, leaving a deficit of $3,966,000,000. However, since receipts went up faster than spending last year, the deficit was under $4,020,000,000 in 1939, when spending was $8,938,000,000 and receipts $4,918,000,000.

Figures were based on a Treasury statement, just completed as of Dec. 31, which marked the first half of the current fiscal year. In the last half of 1940, which the bookkeepers call the first half of the fiscal year, 1941, rapidl mounting defense expenditures were the feature.

On a monthly basis defense costs nearly quadrupled. Thus, in January, the Army and Navy spent $132,000,000. This pace changed little until the new fiscal year began on July 1, when the first of the large defense appropriations passed last spring became available.

Then the spending for defense took this course:

July, $177,291,781; August, $199,251,126; September, $218,432,482; October, $283,855,963; November, $365,033,578; December, $459,878,832.

The current budget calls for a $50,000,000 step-up in defense spending each month until the middle of 1941, when the monthly cost may reach $750,000,000.

Early last year the Navy was outspending the Army nearly two to one. Late in the fall, each service was spending about the same. In December, the Army spent $280,865,805 to the Navy's $179,013,027.

As the defense program picked up, Work Projects Administration costs went down slightly. Last January W. P. A. spent $119,000,000, and after a $134,000,000 peak in March, whittled its costs gradually until they reached $105,000,000 in November. With customary extra costs of winter, the December figure rose to $114,000,000.

Most of the deficit during 1940 was financed by borrowing, and just as the year ended, the public debt went over $45,000,000,000, the former statutory debt limit, recently raised to $49,000,000,000.

Glass Favors Lending 'Everything' to Britain

Virginian Thus Comments On President's Proposal To Lend Or Lease Military Equipment

Washington, Jan. 3 (AP) — Senator Glass (Dem., Va.) said today he favored "lending Great Britain everything we've got."

The veteran Virginian made that statement in commenting on President Roosevelt's proposal to lend or lease military equipment to Great Britain.

"As I've said many times," Glass continued, "I'd like to wipe Germany off the face of the earth."

Stimson Details Sales of Surplus War Materials

Reports on Transfers to U. S. Steel, Finland and Latin-American Countries

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3 (AP).—Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, gave Congress a detailed account today of the large quantities of "surplus" war supplies—tanks, rifles, artillery and ammunition—which the War Department sold to the United States Steel Company last year, presumably for resale to Britain.

The report, the first detailed accounting of the department's disposal of such materials, showed that quantities of military equipment also had been sold to Finland and Latin-American countries

A part of the department's surplus supplies went to other government agencies, such as shoes and airplane engines for training N. Y. A. mechanics, but the total of "outside" sales was shown as $22,929,438. The supplies so disposed of, Secretary Stimson said, had cost the government $59,853,179.

The supplies sold to U. S. Steel included 212 six-ton tanks at $240 each, 945,000 .30 caliber rifles, 17,716,500 pounds of TNT, 83,581 machine guns, 2,245 75-millimeter field guns, 316 3-inch Stokes mortars and 98,113 shells, 200,000 .45 caliber revolvers, 100,000 ammunition belts, 100,000 ammunition chests, 25,000 .30 caliber Browning automatic rifles with 1,000,000 20-round magazines, 1,081,000 rounds of ammunition for .38 caliber revolvers and 6,148,107 rounds of ammunition for .30 caliber machine guns, 4,000,000 rounds of .30 caliber rifle cartridges.

Finland bought 200 75-millimeter guns of the 1917 model, with carriages, limbers and sights, the report said, together with thirty-two 8-inch howitzers and 9,200 projectiles, 11,000 fuses and 11,200 powder charges for them. The sale was dated June 6, 940.

Planes Turned Back

The report also showed Panama purchased 1,000 .30-caliber rifles with banyonets and scabbards at $12.50 apiece. Five thousand rifles of the same caliber were sold a Nicaragua last July and 10,000 of them to El Ealvador in the same month.

The navy also has disposed of some war supplies under the same law governing the army's transaction. A number of fighting planes which had been assigned to the Marine Corps Reserve were turned back to their manufacturer for resale abroad.

Six Germans Flee U. S. on Jap Liner

San Francisco, Jan. 3 (AP).—Six physically fit German naval reservists boarded the Japanese liner Asama Maru through a ruse last Oct. 25 and sailed to Tokio, Paul D. Butler, British Consul-General here, said tonight.

The men were among 512 officers and crewmen of the German liner Columbus, who have been quartered on Angel Island immigration station in San Francisco Bay, since shortly after the vessel was scuttled several hundred miles off the Virginia Capes more than a year ago.

Butler said the six Germans—five deck officers and an engineer—boarded the Japanese ship by carrying the baggage of seven Germans who had been permitted to leave because of physical disability or ill health.

Physically unfit crewmen quartered on Angel Island have been permitted to trickle back to their homeland aboard various ships. About 430 men remain on the island.

16,885 FBI Cases In '40

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 3.—Investigations of national-defense matters increased tenfold during the 1940 fiscal year, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, reported to Congress today.

Hoover said the bureau had handled 16,885 cases involving defense investigations. By contrast, the 1939 total was only 1,651 and the 1938 figure 250. Hoover mentioned one extremely heavy day last May, when 2,871 complaints were received.

Reports Cooperation

The FBI was designated as the coordinating agency for defense investigations by President Roosevelt in September, 1939. Hoover reported "excellent cooperation" from State and local police and "very close and cordial cooperation" with army and navy authorities.

By June 30, Hoover said, the FBI had completed its defense surveys in 270 plants on a priority list of more than 800 supplied by the army and navy, and said that eventually it expected to survey some 12,000 establishments.

Wood Regrets Failure To Back White's Stand

Head Of America First Committee Comments On Neutrality Statement

Chicago, Jan. 3 (AP)—Gen. Robert E. Wood, national chairman of the America First Committee, today said he deeply regretted failure of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies to indorse the neutrality statement of its former chairman, William Allen White.

"I deeply regret," Wood asserted "that the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies has not seen fit to indorse Mr. White's statement of December 23 in which he urged maintenance of the neutrality law, opposed sending American snips and American convoys into the war zone and unequivocally denounced any efforts to get us into war.

"These views are undoubtedly shared by the vast majority of Americans. If the White committee had indorsed them, important progress toward national unity would have been made."

Navy's Call For Copper Declared To Show Lack

Only 2,100,000 Pounds Of 3,550,000 Pounds Sought Said To Have Been Offered

New York, Jan. 3 (AP)—Copper circles heard today that a Navy Department call for 3,550,000 pounds of copper brought bids for only 2,100,000 pounds.

Failure of suppliers to offer the required tonnage was attributed to the unusually heavy demand in recent months for metal for defense production.

Some metal authorities said they could recall no other instance of the navy being unable to secure all the copper it wanted when it wanted it.

Most of the tonnage offered to the navy represented holdings of custom smelting companies, it was said. None of the leading producing companies was among the bidders.

Under Any Name, Hitler's Move In Italy Is Declared a Rescue Party

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

Call it any name you like, and Hitler's move in sending an air force to Italy still is in the nature of a rescue party for Mussolini.

Italy's position is so precarious as a result of the debacles in Egypt and Greece that Rome is in grave danger of being knocked out of the war. That would represent a disaster not only for Il Duce but for his Axis partner as well, and the Fuehrer can't afford to let it happen.

Hitler held off as long as he could from sending aid, in order not to give Italian arms a black eye of to cause disquiet among the people of Italy. The fact that he finally has acted is confirmation of the seriousness of Mussolini's need.

To get the full meaning of this maneuver it is necessary to recall what the Hitler-Mussolini partnership was trying to achieve.

Naval Supremacy Crucial.

Britain's naval supremacy in the Mediterranean has enabled her to maintain the balance of power in Europe, and to defend her vast interests in the Middle and Near East. This sea has been determining the destines of nations since history began and is a main arterial road for the British empire.

It was logical for the Axis partners to set about to destroy this domination.

Theirt strategy provided tha the Fascist Army under Marshal Graziani in Libya should drive across Egypt, knock the British out on the sands of the desert, and capture the all-important Suez Canal—link with India and the Far East.

Meantime the much-sung Italian air-force would blast Malta and other British bases.

It was figured that might turn the trick. But, if necessary, the Axis armies would drive down the Balkans, force the Dardanelles and attack Britain on the Suez Canal from the east.

It looked like a neat set-up until somebody in Italy fumbled. A force was sent against Greece at the worst possible time of year and without adequate preparation.

Crete Base Valuable.

You know the rest. The talians suffered a terrific beating. The British were enabled to occupy Crete, giving them a base from which they could lash out in all directions.

This victory permitted the Allies to take the initiative in Egypt and administer the heavy defeat to Graziani's army.

In short, the Axis plans for the Mediterranean have been knocked into a cocked hat, and Italy herself is rocking on her heels.

So we see Hitler trying to save utter collapse.

Probably one of the first Nazi moves will be to try to keep the Romans from being thrown out of Albania by the Greeks. Loss of Albania would deprive the Axis of an invaluable base for the Balkans.

This may temporarily weaken the force of the Nazi air attack on England, though probably not much. Hitler presumably isn't ready to undertake his invasion because of the bad weather. He can withdraw his warplanes from Italy fast enough when he needs them over the English Channel.

AUSTRALIANS ENTER BARDIA

ANZACS SEIZE 8000 ITALIANS IN LIBYAN PORT

Official Report in Sydney Supports Cairo's Claim of a Victory.

FLEET BOMBARDS DEFENSES

Battleships and Cruisers Take Part in Fiercest Mediterranean Shelling of the War.

JAN 4 1941

Sydney, Australia, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—Major-Gen. Mackay, commander of the Australian Imperial Force in Great Britain's Army of the Nile, was reported officially tonight to have entered Bardia with his men and to have taken 8,000 prisoners with "comparatively few casualties."

The report came from Australian Army Minister Percy Spender, who sent a message from Africa where he is visiting the troops.

British Claim Victory.

Cairo, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—British military headquarters claimed victory in the siege of the Italian base of Bardia, in Libya, today, with almost half the Fascist defense positions taken and between a quarter and a third of the garrison captured.

An official communique said Australian troops, credited yesterday with the first penetration of the Bardia defenses, had carried on this break-through on a nine-mile front in the center of the Fascist lines.

Supported by dive-bombers which, the R. A. F. said, rained tons of bombs on the town and caused extensive damage, the Australians drove into the Italian positions for a depth of two miles.

The Australians were said to have carried out their attack "with great dash" and to have suffered "comparatively light" casualties. "Operations are continuing successfully," the communique added.

With more than 5,000 Italians reported captured in the initial penetration yesterday, military quarters indicated today the remainder of the defense forces—said to be some 20,000 in all—might as well surrender now.

Tombs Used as Forts.

After their opening drive from the southwest, apparently taking the Italians by surprise, the Australians were said to have moved south and launched an attack from the rear on the string of pillboxes and defense works guarding these approaches to the town. Ancient tombs were said to have made up part of the Fascist defense positions.

The Australians were reported to have swept through in armored cars preceded by tanks, which smashed barbed wire entanglements and rapidly broke up the defense units. The latter apparently surrendered en masse when they realized they were cut off from their positions further north.

Last night's figure of 5,000 prisoners was considered to be too low, and revised estimates today placed the actual total at closer to 8,000.

Next Drive at Valley.

The next stage of operations, it was believed, will be aimed at capturing the narrow, rocky valley down which winds the main road into Bardia. The valley forms a bottleneck there. Military informants said that, with the Australians controlling the south side of the valley, the Fascist defense position had become precarious.

BY EDWARD KENNEDY

WITH THE BRITISH FORCES OUTSIDE BARDIA, LIBYA--JAN. 3--(DELAYED) --(AP)--BRITISH ARTILLERY, BOMBERS AND WARSHIPS HAVE BEEN BOMBARDING THE BESIEGED LIBYAN PORT OF BARDIA WITH A WITHERING FIRE FOR THE LAST 24 HOURS.

THE ITALIAN DEFENDERS MOSTLY WERE SHELTERED IN DUGOUTS AND TRENCHES. THEIR GUNS REPLIED, BUT WITH DIMINISHING FORCE.

THE CANNONADING ECHOED MANY MILES THROUGH THE DESERT AND FLASHES AND EXPLOSIONS COULD BE SEEN FROM FAR. ADDITIONAL SUPPLIES HAVE BEEN ROLLED UP TO ASSURE CONTINUANCE OF THE BRITISH ATTACK.

BEHIND THE ARTILLERY BATTERIES WERE HEAVY DETACHMENTS OF INFANTRY, ANXIOUSLY WAITING THE COMMAND TO MOVE IN AND, IN VIEW OF THE FURY OF THE BARRAGE, IT APPEARED THIS WOULD COME ALMOST ANY TIME.

(THE BRITISH SAID LAST NIGHT THAT AUSTRALIAN FIGHTING MEN HAD BREACHED THE DEFENSES OUTSIDE THE BELEAGUERED CITY AND CAPTURED 5,000 PRISONERS FROM THE GARRISON OF 20,000.)

In addition to its activities over Bardia, the R. A. F. reported heavy raids on the Italian seaport base of Tobruk, sixty-five miles west of Bardia, and on Gazala. At Tobruk hits on military buildings were said to have started large fires and to have caused a number of explosions.

Seven Italian planes were reported destroyed to one British bomber lost. One British fighter on patrol was said to have intercepted five Italian planes, three of which it brought down.

A British communique said that the storming of the broken defenses was continuing with such speed that the mop-up may be completed within a few days.

British army spokesmen declared that during their entire desert offensive, starting with the first surprise encirclement of the Italian outposts in Egypt, the Army of the Nile did not lose a single prisoner, piece of material or document to the Italians. But they, they continued, obtained exhaustive information on the formation, tactics and equipment of Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's Army of North Africa through nearly 40,000 prisoners and from vast amounts of equipment and tons of documents captured.

Ships Blast Bardia

With the British Battle Fleet Bombarding Bardia, Jan. 4 (AP)—British warships operating off the North African Coast have trained their big guns on the besieged Italian base of Bardia today to help put the Fascist garrison under a crushing attack from land and sea.

Reports from the land forces said hard-bitten, fast-moving Australians led the attack, hurling hand grenades that blasted camouflaged Italian field guns and machine-gun nests, while British tanks crashed through anti-tank traps.

Thousands of Italians, facing the Australians' bayonet charge, were said to have thrown down their arms and surrendered.

Italian Batteries Are Silenced as Fleet Sends 600 Tons of Shells Into Town

By The Associated Press.

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 4—Bardia's defenses were reported to be falling fast today under the mighty shock of every weapon in the British arsenal—warships, dive-bombers, artillery, tanks and grenades—and British military headquarters declared that the end was near for that Libyan base.

While the British attack went on to subdue the last ounce of resistance, it was stated that nearly half of the arc of concrete, stone and steel defending the town already had been taken, along with more than one-third of the estimated 20,000 Fascist troops beleaguered there for nineteen days.

"Over 8,000 prisoners are now in our hands," said a terse general headquarters communiqué issued tonight. This meant that 3,000 more Italians had been captured since last night. The latest communiqué reported that "operations are proceeding satisfactorily." The only hope left to the remaining Italians, the British said, is to surrender now.

[Australian forces led by Major Gen. Mackay, commander of the Australian units in the British Army of the Nile, have already entered Bardia, according to a report sent to the Australian Government by its Minister of War, P. C. Spender, who is in Egypt. An Associated Press dispatch from Sydney, Australia, told of his message.]

Bardia Battle Widespread

This general assault upon Bardia, a town fifteen miles from the frontier of Egypt, from which the invading Fascisti had been driven in the earlier phases of the British desert offensive, was one of immense and ordered violence.

From the near-by Mediterranean, British warships heavily bombarded the smoking town for hours and overhead British bombers kept up intermittent attacks. The Royal Air Force reported that it had strewn tons of bombs on Bardia and Tobruk, about seventy miles to the west and the next major Italian position in Libya. The road of retreat thus was under fire.

Later the fleet, its officers apparently satisfied that the fall of Bardia had been assured and that the rest could be left to the army and air force, moved away from Bardia to resume the hunt for Italian warships and supply vessels.

All this fleet and air action was in support of the British field forces, led by Australians in armored vehicles and by tanks that smashed through the barbed-wire entanglements before the Italian positions.

By late yesterday, the British said in a communiqué, these troops had broken through the center defenses of Bardia to a depth of two miles along a nine-mile front. This action, said reports here, was made possible by two quick blows, the first from the southwest and the second from the south, which cut off strings of Italian pillboxes and broke the defending lines.

Tombs Become Fortresses

Every sort of fighting—from big-gun action to the bayonet charge and the hurling of hand grenades—was occurring in the Bardia battle. In some instances even the tombs of the African ancients were serving as shelters for the Italian defenders. The Australian attackers, it was announced officially, were fighting "with great dash."

The R. A. F. communiqué describing the raids on Bardia and on Tobruk, where there were fires and explosions, also announced the destruction of seven Italian planes and the loss of one British bomber. El Gazala also was bombed by the British.

Graziani's Losses Put By British at 75,000

CAIRO, Jan. 4 (AP).—Military observers here, already computing the consequences of the imminent fall of Bardia, believe it will mean that Marshal Rodolfo Graziani will have lost some 75,000 of the estimated 250,000 men he had at one time in Libya and Egypt.

They reckon it this way: Italians imprisoned in the December battles at Sidi Barrani, Sollum and in the western desert, upwards of 40,000; Italians who will be taken at Bardia, 20,000; Italian dead, wounded or missing, 15,000.

BOMBARDMENT HEAVIEST YET IN AFRICAN WAR

Fascist Gunners Buried When Cliff Crumbles Under Mighty Blast

Planes Pour Bombs Upon Italians During Thunderous Assault

By LARRY ALLEN
Associated Press Correspondent

With the British Mediterranean Fleet, Jan. 4—The British battle fleet, ending a thunderous, four-hour bombardment of Bardia during which Italian mechanized units disappeared as though swept from the cliffs by a great broom, steamed slowly back out to sea patrol today, apparently assured that the way was cleared for the fall of that Fascist base.

Bardia's batteries were silenced.

The gunboats Terror, Ladybird and Aphis, which had been flinging shells at Bardia intermittently for six weeks, opened the pre-dawn shelling, pounding the Italian bases fully two hours before the battle fleet itself joined in.

Italian Batteries Answer

Then battleships, cruisers and destroyers, moving close to the shore in the red light of the dawning sun, turned their big guns upon long lines of Italian tanks, armored cars and motor transport moving slowly over the desert highways.

Scores of shells exploded near the highways. The Italian batteries, which were between cliffs, spurted shells, some falling close to the British warships.

Buried Under Avalanche

But that burst of enthusiasm cost them dearly. A squadron battleship opened up all her 15-inch guns. I observed a destroyer protecting the (main) fleet during the shelling and saw huge clouds of smoke arise from the cliffs, indicating that British projectiles were falling dangerously close to the Italian batteries.

Headlong Flight Toward Tobruk

Overhead, British planes poured bombs upon the Italians, destroying whole truckloads of infantry and wiping out tanks, armored cars and troops in column.

For Britain's warships, it was the biggest bombardment yet in the Mediterranean war: Six hundred tons of high-explosive shells were flung into Bardia, and after it was over it appeared that the Italians were attempting a headlong flight toward Tobruk.

In instances, Italian defenses were smashed like eggshells, and tanks, armored cars and motor transports were shattered.

Italians Taken By Surprise

Taking the Italians at Bardia by surprise with the biggest concentration of British warships in the Mediterranean since the conflict with Italy started, the British vessels ploughed into the calm waters off the Libyan base at dawn yesterday.

From the bridge of one of the destroyers I watched the shelling. It was opened first by the fleet's trio of "Frankensteins"—as the British call them—the monitor Terror and the gunboats Ladybird and Aphis. Later the heavier bombardment developed, with battleships, cruisers and destroyers joining in.

To Stone's Throw Of Docks

The Terror, called the fleet's "Little Warspite" (after a 35,000 ton battleship), threw shells from her two 15-inch guns, aided by the 6-inchers of the Ladybird and Aphis.

Waddling like ducks from the recoil of the batteries, the three advance units pushed almost within stone's throw of the Bardia docks to deliver their breakfast-time blows.

Eyewitness Describes Shock Troops' Advance

By EDWARD KENNEDY
Associated Press Correspondent

With the British Forces Outside Bardia, Jan. 3 (Delayed)—British tanks running interference for shock troops today plunged through holes left in the Italian armor outside this Libyan seaport by a nerve-shattering land, sea and air bombardment.

They rode over Italian resistance much in the same manner as they did in the offensive that routed the Fascists from Egypt.

Thousands of shells and bombs were poured into the positions of General Bergonzoli's garrison before the tanks got the order to advance.

Desert A Rash Of Craters

Such a withering fire was laid down that the desert was a rash of gaping craters, and many of the Italians went underground in dugouts and trenches.

Italian counter-fire had diminished before the tanks moved.

Australian cleanup infantrymen were behind the tanks.

[Latest Calor dispatches said more than 8,000 Italians were taken prisoners, and that the fall of Bardia was expected soon.]

The deafening cannonading rolled for miles over the desert and the flash of explosions could be seen from afar.

Gen. Metaxas told the newspaper Niki that Greece's war aim was to "secure the independence and integrity of our country."

Troops And Planes Join Libya Battle

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 4—The 19-day-old siege of Bardia was reported tonight to have flared into a furious battle of the Italian defenders against mass attacks by British tanks, armored cars, planes and warships.

Dispatches indicated that Italian reinforcements had been rushed into the battle, which was described as the bitterest fighting thus far in connection with the 27-day-old British offensive through the western desert against Libya.

La Tribuna, a Rome newspaper, said that troops were "arriving to reinforce the lines for the final clash." Observers expected the German air corps . . . (at this point the telephone connection between Rome and Bern, relay point for this dispatch, was cut by the Italian censor.)

The attack was launched yesterday.

General Bergenzoli's beleaguered Italians in the Libyan port of Bardia are "fiercely resisting" the massed British onslaughts, "inflicting considerable losses on the enemy," the daily communique said.

"Air formations are incessantly cooperating in the action, bombing and machine-gunning enemy naval units, bases, troops and mechanized equipment," said the communique, which declared Italian resistance was being conducted with "extreme fury."

Three Italian planes failed to return to bases, the high command said.

Italian artillery action, "with visible results," was reported on the Sudanese frontier in East Africa, while attempts by British detachments to surprise Italian advance posts were "quickly smashed," the communique said.

Press Urged Not to Build Up Too Great Popular Opinion of English Tenacity

ROME, Jan. 4 (AP)—The Fascist Cabinet, meeting today under the chairmanship of Premier Mussolini, announced approval of a plan for more efficient control of Italy's foreign trade, both imports and exports. Details were withheld.

The Cabinet approved a law doubling pensions for war widows and orphans and authorized enlistment of a large number of weathermen in the air service.

Plans for a forty-five-mile canal from Milan through Cremona to the River Po, with construction to start as soon as "Fascist Italy has attained her unfailing victory," also were sanctioned. The canal would provide cheaper transportation of Istrian coal and other raw materials for the 230 miles from Venice to Milan's industrial region, the Cabinet said.

Another proposed law approved by the Cabinet provides for motor buses and trucks in Italy to be painted a dull gray, presumably as wartime camouflage. The Cabinet will meet again next Tuesday to consider the government's final budget.

Italy Summarizes Enemy Tonnage Sunk

Rome, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—Italian submarines have destroyed 138,000 tons of enemy shipping thus far in the war, the Italian High Command said today.

One undersea boat, commanded by Capt. Giuseppe Caridi, has sunk 15,000 tons of British merchant shipping in the Atlantic alone, the communique reported.

"Our aim is the free development of Greece and of her moral and material forces—not, of course, at the expense of other peoples," the Premier declared. "We will not tolerate, either, any peoples who covet our rights to develop freely. These are the aims of the war which we are fighting and which we will gain until the end—that is to say, the final victory which, I repeat, will be ours."

Just where the Greek breakthrough in the Italian lines had taken place was not announced. But in well-informed quarters the Greek Army was expected to speed up its advance toward the important Albanian seaport of Valona and latest dispatches from the front spoke of fresh losses inflicted on Italian forces which attempted to launch counter-attacks.

Gains Near Klisura.

The most important Greek gains were said to be in the coastal region and around Klisura, in the central sector. In both areas the Italians offered strong resistance before they finally withdrew, it was reported. In some instances, it was said, they were forced back behind the positions they held when their counter-attacks got under way.

It is along a road running from Klisura, westward through Tepeleni, that the Greeks have aimed one of two simultaneous drives at Valona. The other column is fighting northward along the Adriatic coast.

Further Greek gains also were reported north of Chimara, along the path of the coastal drive toward Valona.

Rom[illegible]eports Air Action.

Rome, [illegible]an. 4 (A. P.).—Italian bombing formations in Albania carried out "effective offensive action on military preparations and enemy troop concentrations," the High Command said today.

Patrol activity and artillery dueling also was reported.

THE SPOKESMAN SAID "DESPERATE" COUNTER-ATTACKS IN THE KLISURA REGION WERE REPULSED WITH HEAVY FASCIST LOSSES.

ITALIAN TANKS, HE ADDED, WERE DRIVEN INTO "HEADLONG FLIGHT." HE SAID THE FIGHTING AROUND KLISURA AND TEPELENI HAD BROUGHT THAT WHOLE ZONE UNDER CONTROL OF GREEK FIRE.

Greeks Seize Strategic Peaks On Valona Road

Submarine's Shells Blow Up Italian Armed Tanker After 2 Torpedoes Miss

By The Associated Press

ATHENS, Jan. 5 (Sunday).—Greek mountain troops, fighting off Italian counter-attacks, took more than 200 additional prisoners yesterday and pushed their lines north of strategic Klisura to heights commanding a valley leading toward Valona, a government spokesman announced here early today.

The Ministry of Marine revealed that the Greek submarine Katsonis, operating on Italian supply lanes in the upper Adriatic Sea, between Italy and Albania, destroyed an Italiantanker by gunfire after two torpedoes had missed. The attack occurred Dec. 31.

"Not a single operation undertaken by the Italians met with the slightest success," the spokesman said in telling of the battles in the Klisura-Tepelini sector, where, he said, the Fascists suffered heavy losses.

"These counter-attacks had been prepared for a long time and were supported by heavy artillery fire," the spokesman continued. "They were part of a series which began two days ago but met the same fate as the others. The enemy, in fact, was repulsed with heavy losses as he sought refuge in trenches and mountain shelters. We pushed our lines northward and occupied heights more than 5,000 feet high."

"About 8:20 a. m. on Dec. 31, the Greek submarine Katsonis, under Lieut. Comdr. Spanides, while on patrol in the Adriatic ten miles southwest of Cape Menders, distinguished two miles northeast of her position a tanker armed with two guns and flying the Italian royal ensign.

"The vessel was heading for San Giovanni di Medua. Immediately the submarine got ready to attack her and a little later fired two torpedoes which missed the target because the vessel turned westward.

"The commanding officer of the submarine, in his determination to attack, came quickly to the surface and at once started shelling the tanker from a distance of 500 meters (1,640 feet). After a few rounds the tanker was set ablaze and amid strong explosions due to the cargo of fuel and munitions which she carried was destroyed, drifting toward the Yugoslav coast before the wind."

Premier Gen. John Metaxas, in an interview given to the newspaper "Niki," predicted a Greek victory and declared Greece's purpose was to "secure the independence and integrity of our country." He added: "Our aim is the free development of Greece and of her moral and material forces—not, of course, at the expense of other peoples. We will not tolerate, either, any peoples who covet our rights to develop freely. These are the aims of the war which we are fighting"

Just where the Greek breakthrough in the Italian lines had taken place was not announced. But, in well informed circles, the Greek Army was expected to speed up its advance toward the important Albanian seaport of Valona, and latest dispatches from the front spoke of fresh losses inflicted on Italian forces attempting to counter-attack.

The most important Greek gains were said to be in the coastal region and around Klisura, in the central sector. In both areas the Italians offered strong resistance before they finally withdrew, it was reported. In some instances, it was said, they were forced back behind the positions they had held when their counter-attacks got under way.

Bullet-Riddled Parachute Lands R. A. F. Pilot Alive

Wounded Flyer's Leg Broken as He Bails Out in Albania

ATHENS, Jan. 4 (AP).—This is the story of an experience which a British warplane pilot says will be "nice to look back upon."

An Italian fighter plane got in a burst on the Royal Air Force bomber which the pilot was flying over Albania. The pilot ordere his crew to jump. The gunner's turret was in flames and he did not answer.

The observer jumped and just as the pilot got erady to follow, the Italian sent another burst into the panel board. The pilot got out all right, but part of his parachute harness, which had been nicked by a bullet, caught his leg and yanked it up behind his head, breaking the leg above the knee. He had a bullet in his elbow.

The Italian plane, he said, fired some twenty bullets through his parachute and he hit the ground hard.

Red Cross To Send Ship Load Of Relief Supplies To Greece

$1,176,000 Cargo To Include Hospital Equipment And Garments And Food For Refugees

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 4—The American Red Cross will dispatch a "mercy ship" to Greece about the middle of this month carrying $1,176,000 worth of hospital supplies for war wounded and garments and food for refugees.

Chairman Norman H. Davis, making the announcement today, said the cargo would include five complete field hospitals, each of 250 beds, and a mobile operating room. Twenty-five ambulances and ten hospital trucks also will go in the shipment.

Responds To Urgent Need

Davis said the shipment was ordered after receipt of cables from a Red Cross representative in Greece describing "urgent need" for the supplies.

The mercy ship, expected to depart from New York about January 15, will be the 7,500-ton freighter Kassandra Louloudis, provided by the Greek Government. The ship will go to Athens by sailing around Africa and through the Suez Canal, thereby keeping clear of Italian air and naval bases in the western Mediterranean.

Second Sent To Europe

The Kassandra Louloudis will be the second mercy ship sent by the American Red Cross since outbreak of the European war. The first was the American freighter McKeesport, which carried a $1,000,000 cargo of relief supplies to Marseille in July for distribution in France.

The new shipment to Athens will bring the total of Red Cross relief to Greece to about $1,400,000, some previous aid having been extended by authorizing purchases from British supplies.

Speed U. S. War Materials, General Papagos Urges

By DANIEL DE LUCE
Associated Press Correspondent

Somewhere on the Southern Albania Battlefront, Jan. 4—Gen. Alexander Papagos, commander in chief of the Greek army, voicing an appeal for speed in delivery of war materials ordered from the United States, declared tonight that "if Greece had 300 good airplanes perhaps the war would have been won before today."

In an interview, the scholarly gray-haired strategist, now 57, whose forces have thrown Italian invaders out of Greece and themselves invaded Albania, declared:

"I can say the military situation generally is very good.

Praises Troops' Morale

"Notwithstanding difficulties, of which bad weather is one of the most important, the morale of our troops never has been higher and I am sure we will go on with success as in the past two months."

"Above all," said the Greek commander, "we need quick transport of material we already have ordered.

"Airplanes are vitally important to us. We have enough pilots to fly them and are training more.

"We need those airplanes."

Not Yet Stopped

Faced with the obstacle of an Italian air force "enormously" outnumbering Greece's, General Papagos pointed out that "the forward movement of our army nevertheless has not yet been stopped."

The general and I talked in his small field office, furnished only with a desk, chairs and war maps on the walls.

Slowly and emphatically, he expressed Greek gratitude to "the American people who follow with sympathy our battle for liberty and independence against the Italians."

Hopes For Early Victory

"We deeply appreciate the help and facilities given by the President and Government of the United States in supplying materials which assist our battle," he said.

When the interview was ending, General Papagos shook hands vigorously and said, "There are so many factors that we cannot know exactly what will happen, but . . . our greatest hope is that the war will finish soon in Greek victory."

The general, who began his military career as a cavalry officer, has the sober, studious air of a professor and wears horn-rimmed glasses at his desk.

Regarded As Shrewd Leader

He is regarded by his officers as one of the shrewdest military leaders in Greek history and, with Gen John Metaxas, Premier, shares the unlimited confidence of King George II.

His wife, a pleasant middle-aged woman, now works twelve to sixteen hours a day as chief nurse in an army emergency hospital, converted from a red-brick school several hundred miles from General Papagos' headquarters. Several hundred wounded soldiers are under her care.

In Three Other Wars

He entered the Greek army as a cavalry lieutenant in 1906, became a captain during the war against the Turks in 1912, fought against the Bulgarians and Germans in the first World War and was made a general after serving against the Turks in Asia Minor in 1920.

Studied At Rome

Besides active service, he has held high army administrative positions in peacetime and has written for military publications. Yugoslavia and Sweden, as well as his own country, have decorated him.

Part of his training was provided by the nation he now is fighting. Born at Athens in 1883, he attended military schools there, studied in the Belgian Brussels Military School and Ypres Cavalry School, and spent several years at the Tor Di Quinto Cavalry School near Rome.

Bremen 'Sea Of Flames'

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 4 — R.A.F. bombers turned the industrial area of the German seaport of Bremen into a "sea of flames" last night in their third successive night raid on the city, the Air Ministry announced today.

Although Bremen is not the first German or German-held town to be raided for three nights in succession by the R. A. F., the British say it now is believed to have undergone heavier bombing and greater damage than any other.

"Eighteen Fires Observed"

A communique, reporting attacks on other targets in Nazi and Nazi-occupied territory which were understood to include the "invasion ports," said the British bombers "repeated" hits in Bremen's industrial area with explosive bombs and also dropped many incendiaries.

"Eighteen red fires were observed, four of which were large," the communique stated, "and there were so many white fires their number could not be counted. Aircraft arriving later on the scene found the target area a sea of flames."

One British plane was reported missing and a twin-engined German fighter was said to have been damaged.

The attacks on Bremen began Wednesday night when 20,000 fire bombs and many explosive ones were reported to have been dropped on targets which included submarine and shipbuilding yards.

The Thursday night raid, during which flyers reported finding large fires started the previous night, was described as lighter than the first. The weather was not as favorable as on Wednesday, the British said.

Last night's raid was the R. A. F.'s fifty-fifth on Bremen, the British said.

NAZIS RENEW RAIDS ON WEST ENGLAND

One Unnamed Town In That Sector Hardest Hit, British Report

German Planes Also Range Far And Wide In Other Parts Of Islands

BY ROBT. BUNNELLE
[By the Associated Press]

London, Sunday, Jan. 5—A west England town previously blasted by German raiders again was their major target last night and early today during widespread but spasmodic attacks over Britain.

London itself rattled with gunfire for some time when an air-raid alarm was sounded in the early morning hours, but no "incidents" were reported in the capital.

The raids over Britain followed the Royal Air Force's third successive night attack on the German seaport of Bremen, counted by the British the Reich's worst-bombed city.

Casualties Kept Low

The Germans showered with fire bombs the West England town apparently picked as the main target. Then they hurled explosives, but the desperately efficient work by air-raid precautions workers was said to have kept casualties down.

The Luftwaffe also paid visits to northwest and Midland areas, scattering fire and destruction, but reports indicated the attacks were not on the same proportions with the raiders' heaviest blows.

In the R. A. F. raids on Bremen Friday night, fire so fierce and widespread that finally nothing could be seen below but "a swirling mass of flame" was reported by the British.

Docks, Factories Blasted

Factories, dock and railroad yards, the naval base and shipbuilding yards, warehouses and railroads, they said, were blasted with high explosives and engulfed in flames kindled by thousands of incendiaries.

Again, however, it was a case of air blows traded through the night.

While British planes were swooping on the German port, Nazi planes were showering the British port of Bristol with bombs and the British acknowledged casualties and "considerable damage."

The west coast port was the Germans' main target, but the Government reported "a small number of persons killed and others injured" also by bombs "which fell at one point in the London area."

Have Good Weather

Raiders had the benefit of good weather Friday night, but yesterday was intensely cold, with heavy snow and a wind-whipped sea in the Dover Strait. The Nazis made only isolated lone-raider stabs at the south and southeast coast in daylight. Some casualties and lamage, however, were reported in a Kent coast town.

The joint Air and Home Security Ministries communique said two of the raiders were shot down into the sea in addition to one bagged last night by anti-aircraft fire. One British fighter is missing, it said.

London Without Alarm

London itself was without an alarm up until almost midnight, although raiders were believed to be on the capital's outskirts and gunfire was heard intermittently. There were no reports of bombs being dropped.

Raiders also were reported over a south Wales town and a single bomber dropped several incendiaries on one east coast town.

Other raiders dropped flares and incendiaries on a West England town starting two fires which were extinguished quickly.

Reported Over Midlands

The British Press Association also reported raiders over the West Midlands.

Other German cities besides Bremen have been bombed three nights running by the British, but the series begun on the Nazi port and manufacturing center Wednesday raised its total of bomber visits to fifty-five and, in the British estimation, it is now the heaviest and most severely bombed German city.

Three-Hour Attack

The Air Ministry news service said the raid Friday night—No. 3 of the week—was "very destructive" and quoted one bomber pilot as saying that fires "lit up Bremen and showed the shape of the whole town."

After the three-hour attack beginning at 7 P. M., it said, one of the largest factory buildings in Germany's great seaport was "ablaze from end to end."

Returning flyers distinguished between what they called innumerable newly set "white fires" and "red fires," which they described as "real infernos" where fire bombs and high explosives turned buildings' girders and bricks red hot.

Smoke Rises 9,000 Feet

One flyer said he counted "twenty very big fires" within one square mile and others said smoke rose to 9,000 feet from "fires too many to count."

Declaring that the weather was "perfect" over Bremen, the Air Ministry said it was "only when dense black smoke began rolling over the town and spreading fires began to blur the outline of factories and dockyards that our pilots had any difficulty recognizing their objective."

"Dockyards, the naval base and shipbuilding yards," it said, "once again were attacked and our bombers also hit factories, warehouses, railways and goods yards.

Freight-Yard Explosions

"As well as incendiaries, they dropped many of the larger high-explosive bombs which are so destructive in their effects even the crews of aircraft flying high could see debris flung up by the explosions."

Distinct from the bomb bursts, the Air Ministry added, there were violent explosions in a freight yard, and it said fire ran along a main rail line spreading toward the river.

In some industrial districts, it said, a "general conflagration finally obscured all detail and nothing could be seen but a swirling mass of flame."

20,000 Bombs Rained

This blow followed a rain of 20,000 fire bombs and many high explosives Wednesday night on targets including submarine and ship yards and a lighter Thursday night raid in less favorable weather.

The raid on Bristol also was prolonged, the Government said, but it was declared that casualties are not expected to be high. All the fires, set by hundreds of incendiary bombs, were reported extinguished or controlled by early Saturday morning.

With siege and counter-siege, by air and sea, reaching new intensities, the British disclosed two new weapons.

Gun Shoots To Rear

The R. A. F. was said to have been strengthened by a new Vickers machine gun which fires to the rear from the nose of a plane against attackers from below and behind. It is aimed and operated by the navigator through a mirror system.

Britain's latest answer to the U-boat menace, it was announced, is a fleet of fast new "corvettes," shallow-bottomed, gun-bristling little warships which look like streamlined United States Coast Guard cutters.

Production of the ships was said to be in full swing in Canada and Britain to fill British needs for small craft which can be built cheaply and quickly, and they are credited already with a number of successes against commerce raiders.

GERMANY ACCUSED ANEW BY IRELAND

Eire Holds Idea Of "Accidental" Series Of Raids "Hardly Conceivable"

Suspicion Rises That Nazis Want To Force British Defense Of Isle

[By the Associated Press]

Dublin, Jan. 4—Neutral Ireland laid new charges of bombing and the dropping of magnetic mines directly at the door of Germany today, and a newspaper close to the Government declared "it is hardly conceivable" that the week's series of bombings was accidental.

Tonight tin-hatted air raid wardens appeared in Dublin's streets and demolition squads were under stand-by orders. But Dubliners declined to leave the comfort of their homes for the safety of cramped air raid shelters.

Identified As Of German Origin

An official statement said two magnetic sea mines dropped at Enniskerry, Wickford county, below Dublin, Wednesday "were identified as of German origin; so, also, were bombs dropped at Oslegate, County Wexford."

Wexford is a southeast coastal county and today's announcement raised to five the number of incidents in which explosive and incendiary bombs have been identified by the Government as German.

The other "identified" bombs fell on the Curragh of Kildare, Julianstown, Duleek and Borris, all within a sixty-mile area of Dublin. In addition, a plane dropped a bomb in a Dublin residential district before dawn yesterday, causing much damage and injuring more than a dozen persons.

3 Killed, Over 20 Hurt

Three persons were killed in the bombing at Borris Wednesday night, and, in all, more than twenty have been injured in the various localities hit.

Awaiting a German reply to its note of yesterday, demanding cessation of the attacks and indemnity for casualties and damaged property, the de Valera Government limited its remarks on the diplomatic repercussions of the bombings to a denial of rumors that it intends to expel the German Minister.

[A German spokesman has charged that the bombs were "English or imaginary," and authorized Berlin sources Saturday predicted "a clear and unmistakable answer" to the Irish protests.]

People And Press More Voluble

Ireland's press and people were more voluble than the officials.

The Irish Press, considered a Government organ, suggested that if Germany really had "the will" to stop the bombings, it ought not to be hard.

It pointed out that the lights of Dublin and other cities, although cowled, still are visible from directly overhead "to indicate our neutrality." It said: "These grave happenings seem to the layman to be inexplicable."

Change In Irish Sentiment

The Irish Times said, "The possibility of a genuine mistake is remote" and demanded serious consideration of a real blackout and other air-raid precautions.

The Irish Independent demanded that the Irish Dail (Legislature) be summoned in permanent session "until the position has been clarified."

There was an obvious change in the attitude of the people. Irishmen who formerly were inclined to blame early bombings on navigational errors by belligerent planes or even on "English planes carrying German bombs" now were talking about the possibility that Germany wants Ireland in the war as Britain's ally—perhaps because of the help which Britain then would have to extend to this poorly defended state.

Bristol Given Hard Pounding By Raiders

[By the Associa

London, Jan. 4—German raiders smashed heavily at Bristol last night, doing "considerable damage" to buildings.

British authorities identified the main target of the raid after having described it earlier only as "a town in the west of England."

Later reports, a communique said, showed that "a small number of persons was killed and others injured" by bombs which fell also "at one point in the London area."

Three Raiders Downed

Night raiding cost the Germans one bomber bagged by anti-aircraft guns, it said, and two others were shot down today in sporadic lone-raider forays.

A communique said the attack on Bristol, already heavily bombed, was a "prolonged" one and unofficial sources said it lasted until several hours after midnight. Hundreds of incendiary bombs were said to have been dropped on the city.

"Number Killed And Injured"

"Considerable damage was done to buildings by high explosive bombs and by fire," a communique said. "A number of people were killed and others injured but it is not anticipated that the total will be very high."

All the fires were said to have been brought under control at an early hour this morning. Four firemen and two soldiers were reported killed while fighting the blazes.

The ground floor of a hospital was said to have been damaged badly, but no casualties resulted. Other buildings reported hit were a municipal clinic, a convent, a movie theater, another hospital, a nursing home, a hotel and three schools.

London had three alarms during the night, but only an occasional plane was heard, and there was only sporadic fire from ground batteries. Bombs were reported to have fallen at three places in the city, but with only slight damage and no casualties.

"Bombs were also dropped in other parts of the country, but the damage was slight and no casualties have been reported," the communique said.

New Irish Charge

[By the Associated Press]

Dublin, Jan. 4—Tin-hatted air-raid wardens and demolition squads stood by on Dublin streets tonight after the Irish Government had disclosed that more bombs as well as magnetic mines which have fallen on Ireland and her neutral waters have been identified as German.

Dublin residents, however, refused to desert their living rooms for the discomfort of basement or outdoor shelters.

The press ridiculed the idea that the alleged German bomb violations of Ireland (Eire) could have been a mistake.

"Of German Origin"

An official statement said two magnetic sea mines dropped off County Wicklow "were identified as of German origin."

"So, also, were bombs dropped at Oslegate (Oylgate) in County Wexford," the statement added. Oslegate had not been mentioned before in the list of areas hit during the last three days.

(Germany will have a "clear and unmistakable answer" ready if and when the Irish Charge d'Affaires at Berlin lodges a protest already ordered, authorized German sources said.)

Mine 'Chutes Nazi-Made

A number of mines such as German planes have been strewing in British harbors were parachuted from invading planes on Thursday near Enniskerry, in County Wicklow. The silk parachutes already had been identified as of German manufacture.

Announcing a protest to Berlin asking reparation and "effective steps . . . to avoid recurrence" of such happenings, the Government alleged yesterday that fragments of explosive and incendiary bombs dropped on the Curragh of Kildare, Julianstown, Duleek and Borris were "found to be of German origin."

Three Killed, 20 Injured

All these places are within a sixty-mile radius of Dublin. It was at Borris that three persons were killed Wednesday night. The most recent bombing, a one-plane, one-bomb attack which shattered two houses and damaged others on Dublin's Donore avenue early yesterday, has not been officially attributed to either Germany or Britain.

More than twenty persons have been injured in the various bombings—all executed under cover of darkness.

First Thought Accidents

The Irishman in the street at first was inclined to believe that the first bombings were merely the jettisoning of bombs by flyers who did not realize that they were over neutral territory, or were the result of "navigational errors."

Now the Irish Press, regarded as an organ of the Government, says:

"These grave happenings seem to the layman to be inexplicable stuff. . . .It is hardly conceivable that an experienced airman could mistake our soil for belligerent territory. . . . If there is a will to prevent them there should certainly be no difficulties for the German Government to find a way to stop these violations."

Blackout Suggested

The Conservative-Unionist Irish Times said "the possibility of a genuine mistake is remote," and demanded better air-raid precautions.

"The time has come when the matter of a blackout for Eire ought to be considered seriously," it said.

Dublin and other Irish cities are under a modified blackout, in which shades are used to reduce the illumination of street lamps.

Nazi Reply to Irish Ready.

Berlin, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—If and when the Irish Charge d'Affaires appears to protest against the Dublin bombing, Germany will have a clear and unmistakable answer ready, authorized spokesmen declared today. They declined to divulge the nature of the reply, but said that the facts had been carefully investigated.

A Berlin spokesman had earlier said that the bombs were either "English or they are imaginary. Our flyers are not, and have not, been sent to Ireland."

BRITISH SAY NAZIS SEEK TO PROVOKE FIGHT WITH IRISH

London Believes Invasion Would Then Put Strain on British Defenses.

London, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—British spokesmen, flatly blaming Germany for the trecen bombing of Ireland, suggested today that the Nazis were trying to force that neutral republic into the war as an ally of Great Britain in the hope of seizing Irish bases as jumping-off spots for an invasion of England.

The occupation of Ireland would also give the Germans ideal naval and air bases to continue their assaults on British sea commerece, these spokesmen said. rish bases would immeasurably increase Germany's chance for a successful invasion, it was stated, since the British would be forced to meet attacks from both the east and west.

[A German spokesman declared at Berlin, in reference to the bombing of reland, that "those bombs are English or they are imaginary. Our flyers are not and have not been sent to reland."]

Says It Would Hurt Britain.

British war resources would be further strained should Ireland enter the conflict, these spokesmen commented, because the little republic is woefully deficient in anti-aircraft guns, artillery and ammunition. Likewise she has relatively few planes which could cope with the German Luftwaffe, they said, and Britain's air force would have to send aircraft to her assistance, thereby weakening her home defenses. Several weks ago Ireland blockaded her main highways as one of numerous precautions against invasion, it was recalled, but she would have little means of fighting off an invasion.

Expressing the opinion that the Irish bombings are part of the preparations for an invasion, one former British staff officer commented unofficially: "The main German plan is to beat England. All other plans, such as the Italo-German icounter-attack in North Africa or a move through the Balkans toward the Suez Canal to relieve Italy, must be regarded as side issues unless they tend to implement the main plan."

The Irish Charge d'Affaires in Berlin has been instructed by his Government to make an energetic protest to the German Government over the series of bomb attacks.

Invasion Vanguard

London, Sunday, Jan. 5 (AP)—The British Broadcasting Corporation early today described fifteen German infantrymen who "arrived in England since the middle of October" as the "first members of the great invasion army to reach England alive."

The text of the broadcast follows:

"It can now be revealed that fifteen German infantrymen who have all arrived in England since the middle of October are among the German prisoners now in English prisoners of war camps.

"They all landed at ports on the English southeast coast and were in fact the first members of the great German invasion army to reach England alive.

The broadcast gave no indication where the men were captured or the circumstances.

NEW YORK, JAN 4-(AP)-COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM REPORTED TONIGHT THAT A GERMAN-LANGUAGE BROADCAST OF THE BRITISH RADIO TODAY SAID THERE ARE 15 GERMAN INFANTRYMEN IN BRITISH PRISON CAMPS AND THAT THE BRITISH RADIO DESCRIBED THEM FACETIOUSLY AS THE "FIRST MEMBERS OF THE GREAT GERMAN INVASION ARMY WHO REACHED ENGLAND WHILE ALIVE."

CBS SAID THE BRITISH RADIO REPORTED THESE 15 PRISONERS HAD ARRIVED IN ENGLAND SINCE OCTOBER AND THAT "THEY WERE BROUGHT ASHORE IN PORTS OF THE ENGLISH SOUTHEAST COAST.

"IT IS INTERESTING TO NOTE THAT THESE MEN COME FROM EIGHT DIFFERENT ARMY SERVICES," THE BRITISH RADIO SAID.

CBS SAID THIS BBC STORY WAS NOT BROADCAST IN ENGLISH, THAT THERE WAS NO INTIMATION OF HOW THE MEN WERE CAPTURED AND THAT THE REFERENCE TO "INVASION ARMY" WAS, IN THE GERMAN, OBVIOUSLY MADE JOKINGLY.

British 'Invading' France

By WILLIAM McGAFFIN, Associated Press

(Editor's Note: This striking exposition of British moves toward invading the continent was written—without the restrictions of censorship—by William McGaffin, who has just returned from England, where he went through the bombing raids after covering the Nazi Blitzkrieg in France.)

New York, Jan. 4 (AP)—Britain has already begun to invade the Continent—giving the Germans a quickie preview of the mass attack British generals have promised to deliver.

I learned from an extremely reliable source shortly before leaving England three weeks ago that the British up to that time had carried off at least nine daring motorcycle raids into German-occupied France.

It's one side of the invasion picture which I believe is not generally known in the United States. . . .

Trawlers Cross Channel

The little trawler pushes softly through the Channel darkness and anchors at a lonely spot on the French Coast.

There is a muffled commotion as fifty khaki-uniformed figures steal ashore with fifty machine-gun-bearing motor cycles.

All is ready now. With a roar they dash off into the treacherous unknown of a blacked-out, enemy-occupied France. Another spectacular British sortie is in progress.

Young volunteers from the British Army make up these "suicide" squads, which have three principal missions:

1. To terrorize and harass the German forces thinly strung out to a point, some experts say, of great vulnerability over a thousand-mile coastline. It's a page out of a German high command's own copybook. No effort is made to hide the identity of the men. They wear the British khaki.

The British general staff wants the Germans to know that Tommies from the regular army have been able to penetrate the lines of the vaunted Reichswehr—to thumb a small but defiant nose, as it were.

The British aim apparently is to bolster French morale and keep the Germans in an unending state of nervous apprehension—and to "remind" them of what Britain intends the future should hold for them, if such a feat is possible even now in Britain's admittedly weaker position as regards mechanized war equipment.

2. To capture prisoners and gather information from first-hand observation within the German lines.

3. Sabotage.

Sometimes the raiders go across the short stretch of Channel water in a trawler. Sometimes in a fishing smack. Sometimes the boats return. Sometimes they don't.

There's No Glory In it

There is no money in it. Although a bonus is paid, it is infinitesimal compared to the enormous risk involved. Privates get an extra six pence (about a dime) a day, officers an extra pound (about four dollars).

There is no glory in it. For reasons best known to itself, the British general staff has not let the news get about.

The British military sources with whom I talked say some of the raiding parties have reached as far inland as Amiens.

These authorities consider the raids highly significant—an indication of the way the British generals are thinking. They contend that the war will not be won till one side launches a successful major invasion against the other. They say that Britain has demonstrated it will take more than aerial bombardment to force her to her knees. By the same token they reason that Britain can never hope to knock Germany out from the air alone.

"Fustest With The Mostest"

It is a question of who invades whom first—when—and where; simply a modern adaptation o fthe old warrior's recipe that the way to win a war is to "get there fustest with the mostest men."

The big advantage the British will have over the Germans if and when Britain attempts an invasion is the British fleet. Two things are holding back the British—lack of sufficient armored ground equipment and weakness in the air.

British Air Force Growing

Well informed neutral aviation sources expect Britain to gain aerial superiority with American assistance by next July or August. At the same time they believe Britain will have manufactured enough tanks and armored cars so that she can attempt a full-dress continental invasion.

Some expect her to try to go in through the German back door—via the Brenner Pass (this on the supposition that she will have knocked out Italy by then) or via Rumania. Others say the terrain communications problem would be too difficult—especially through the Balkans. They predict a frontal assault from some such points as Dunkerque.

They say the British can't move until they have disposed of the Italians. But if and when they have, this would leave the fleet free plus a large part of the Near Eastern army. The plan would be to push in with the fleet, and a body of mechanized troops, then with planes cooperating push a swath to Germany.

The problem of man power would not arise, say these strategists. Germany has a larger army than Britain, but she would be forced to detail part of it to keep guard over the population in the various countries she has occupied, they say.

British Troops Make Frequent Raids in France

Trawlers Land Cyclists for Lightning Hit-Run Forays, Rehearsing for Invasion

The following uncensored account of Great Britain's "miniature" invasion of the French coast is by William McGaffin, formerly of Omaha, who has just returned to the United States from the London bureau of The Associated Press.

By William McGaffin

British suicide squadrons which already have staged motorcycle invasions of German-occupied France as far, it is reliably reported, as Amiens have set the military dopesters to speculating on where the British high command will make the big follow-up push, if and when the time comes.

Adolf Hitler's own ideas on the subject were reflected in reports current in British military circles, before I left London three weeks ago, that the Germans had begun to build a defensive line of fortifications along the English Channel.

Whether the line is intended eventually to approximate the strength and elaborate detail of Germany's westwall was not yet known. Military authorities explained that it would be a fairly simple operation to bolster its firing power by transferring powerful French guns from the Maginot Line. Some of the Maginot guns already have been moved up to the coast and have seen service in the sporadic cross-Channel artillery duels, these authorities said.

Just when the new German line may have been started was not known in London, but it could not be very far advanced, these authorities said, since the British raiding parties have been able to make at least nine daring thrusts into German-held French soil. In such a raid, a little trawler pushes softly through the Channel darkness and anchors at a lonely spot on the French coast. There is a muffled commotion as fifty khaki-uniformed figures steal ashore with fifty machine-gun-bearing motorcycles.

Young volunteers from the British Army make up these "suicide" squads, which have three principal missions:

First, they terrorize and harass the German forces, thinly strung out to a point, some experts say, of great vulnerability over a thousand-mile coastline. It is a page out of the German high command's own copybook. No effort is made to hide the identity of the men. They wear the British khaki. The British General Staff wants the Germans to know that soldiers of its regular army have been able to penetrate the lines of the vaunted Reichswehr.

Seek to Encourage French

Other British aims apparently are to bolster French morale, to keep the Germans in a state of nervous apprehension, and to remind them of what Britain intends the future should hold for them, if such a feat is possible even now in Britain's admittedly weaker position as regards mechanized war equipment.

Second, the British wish to capture prisoners and gather information from first-hand observation within the German lines.

The third purpose is sabotage.

Sometimes the raiders go across the short stretch of Channel water in a trawler, sometimes in a fishing smack. Sometimes the boats return; sometimes they don't.

There is no money in it. Although a bonus is paid, it is infinitesimal compared to the enormous risk involved. Privates get an extra 6 pence (about a dime) a day, officers an extra pound ($4). There is no glory in it. For reasons best known to itself, the British general staff has not let the news get about.

Where Will British Strike?

Many experts expect Britain's generals to choose France or one of the Low Countries as the scene for a major assault. Others talk of the "back door" through the Balkans or Italy if and when Benito Mussolini is knocked out of the war.

No one can say which is right, for this naturally is a closely guarded military secret—if, indeed, the high command has reached a decision yet. In all probability the final choice will depend to a great degree on conditions and circumstances at the time when Britain feels she is strong enough for the maneuver.

The big advantage the British will have over the Germans, if Britain attempts an invasion, is the British fleet. Two things are holding back the British—lack of sufficient armored ground equipment and weakness in the air.

Well-informed neutral aviation sources expect Britain to gain aerial superiority with American assistance by next July or August. At the same time, they believe Britain will have manufactured enough tanks and armored cars so that she can attempt a full-dress continental invasion.

Corvettes Fight U-boats

Britain Uses Fast Craft Which Looks Like U. S. Cutters in Convoy Work.

London, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—A fleet of fast new Corvettes, which look like streamlined supercharged United States Coast Guard cutters, is Great Britain's latest answer to the German submarine menace, it was disclosed today.

The new ships, which an informed person said are being built in large numbers in both Great Britain and Canada, already are credited with a number of successes against undersea commerce raiders.

Shallow-bottomed, speedy, britling with guns and depth charges, the corvettes were designed to meet the need for small craft which could be built quickly at low cost.

Production is in full swing, it was said, and the vessels are rapidly taking over much of the merchant convoy work which converted trawlers tried to assume at the outset of the war.

The corvettes——named for one of the fastest types of nineteenth century sailing vessels — were said to have proved themselves seaworthy, to be much speedier than the trawlers and to have demonstrated their ability to operate further from bases.

The craft take their individual names from flowers, and carry a crew of three officers and fifty to sixty men.

Because oftheir small size, life aboard the new vessels in the mid-winter Atlantic gales was described as extremely hard and uncomfortable.

"It is so uncomfortable," one source said, "that when one of them recently picked up three Icelandic fishermen, these old salts promptly became seasick and remained so until they got back to port."

British Plane Gun Fires Backward

London, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—A machine gun that fires backward from a mount beneath the nose of a plane was said today to be the newest R. A. F. weapon.

The new Vickers gun, aimed and operated by the navigator through a series of mirrors, was described as intended to beat off attackers who come up from below and behind the plane.

U. S. Urged to Buy More To Help Britain Further

Trade Board Head Says British Won't Forget American Aid

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Sunday) (AP).—Capt. Oliver Lyttelton, in the first address to America by a president of the British Board of Trade, urged the United States early today to "help us still more by buying more British goods."

"You will get value for your money," he said. "You will certainly get delivery and you will be helping us yet again to bring the whole of our national resources to bear to win the war and to win it quickly."

America, Capt. Lyttelton said, already is "helping this country to arm in a way which no one here will forget."

London Is Short of Meat

LONDON, Jan. 4 (AP).—This is a meatless week end for many Londoners. A number of butchers sold out their meager supplies and closed the doors by noon. The queques broke up and women—some had been waiting since 7:30 a. m.—went home with empty market baskets.

BRITAIN AIDING JAPAN?

Question of Arms Plant Is Raised in Commons.

London, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—A question of whether a British munitions plant is producing shells for Japan has been raised in Parliament.

Workers at an East Middlesbrough plant are reported to have threatened a strike in the belief that their output is helping to supply the Japanese.

The question was raised on Thursday by Alfred Edwards, Socialist Member of Parliament, who said that, unless assured by Prime Minister Churchill that Japan was not being served by the East Middlesbrough factory, he would demand that the question be threshed out in Commons.

It was he who told of the strike threat. He represents the East Middlesbrough constituency.

"Not a single gun or bullet should be going to our enemies or potential enemies," he declared.

Since his speech there have been no public developments.

U. S. IS HELD FACTOR IN INVASION TIMING

Nazis Expected To Adjust Pace To Congress' Speed In Aid To Britain

Berlin Observers Await Roosevelt's Message To Lawmakers Tomorrow

By PRESTON GROVER
Associated Press Correspondent

Berlin, Jan. 4—Observers in Berlin, awaiting President Roosevelt's message to Congress on Monday, saw the possibility today that the strength of Congress' determination to aid England may be a powerful factor in settling when the Germans will attempt a landing attack on England.

Should it become apparent that Congress may act very fast in opening American wealth and supplies, some observers here predict that Germany correspondingly would make a great effort to strike England to her knees before American help could come.

Predict Aid Will Come Too Late

Already, informed sources have declared that "no matter what help comes from America it will be too late." And already Germany is displaying a disposition to insure affairs at her back by putting props under Italy's war machine.

Units of the German air force have landed in Italy. From the Balkans come reports of ever-increasing troop movements in that direction.

What their plans or their numbers may be is a closely guarded secret so far as official Germany is concerned. But from Balkan sources come forecasts that at least part of the forces are intended to strike Greece in her far-stretched flank and end her embarrassing successes against the Italians in Albania.

Keeping An Eye On Russia

Similarly, it is speculated, the German military commanders would never leave a flank unprotected from any possible Russian activity no matter how friendly diplomatic relations between Germany and the Soviet might be.

In any event, it can be taken for granted that only a small fraction of the total German forces has been moved into the Balkans. Action against Greece would require at the outside only a score of Germany's well-equipped divisions.

At the time of the west front campaign it was generally accepted that Germany had 240 trained divisions under arms. Since that time there apparently has been no reduction in the number of new men drawn into service as their numbers come up.

Channel Weather Records

Repeatedly it is asserted by semi-official and authorized sources that the place where the war will be decided is England. That statement was repeated today by the well-informed commentary service Dienst Aus Deutschland.

How soon that attack will come is, of course, a military secret. A twenty-year study of English Channel records discloses that during November, December, January and February storms occur at the rate of fifteen per month, an average of one every second day on this windswept stretch of salt water which the Germans would be compelled to cross in order to put large forces on English shores.

However, in March the number of storms drops abruptly to half a dozen. In April through August only two or three storms occur monthly.

Weather As Invasion Factor

The British repeatedly have reported concentrations of flat boats along the French, Belgian and Dutch shores. These could have tough going carrying troops, guns and tanks over a stormy Channel and might be expected to meet the greatest success only if quiet waters were available for the period of days required to put a real striking force across the Channel.

Both Congress and America's industrial capacity come into this picture.

Nazi Interest In Congress

Neutral observers are interested as to whether Congress will move fast enough to throw the real weight of American help behind England before the arrival of what might conceivably be the best time for a German attack.

The extent of German interest can only be inferred by the fact that much attention is paid to the speech of those members of Congress who are demanding that the United States move slowly.

'Fires Seen 100 Miles'

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 4 — German planes bombed the big west coast port of Bristol during the night in a heavy assault which started fires visible more than one hundred miles away, informed sources reported today.

The high command said "numerous bombs" were dropped on Bristol, causing "explosions and conflagrations visible from afar."

British raiders, the high command said, made assaults on four places in north Germany during the night, dropping incendiary bombs "on exclusively residential sections, in which a number of fires occurred. Military and war economy damage was neglible."

Two British planes were reported to have been shot down and one German plane failed to return.

Good weather aided the raiders at Bristol and they dropped bombs of all sizes on the harbor and city, informed quarters reported. A heavy series of explosions was said to have followed bomb hits in the southeastern part of the port.

Lighter attacks were reported to have been made on several south coast English ports, including Southampton, Weymouth and Dungeness. German planes also mined a number of British harbor approaches, informed sources declared.

These sources said British naval units attempted to shell Stavanger, south Norwegian port, the night of January 2-3, but all of the shells missed their marks and the units were forced to turn back.

Nazis Admit Raids.

Berlin, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—British raiders made assaults on four places in north Germany last night, dropping incendiary bombs on exclusively residential sections, in which a number of fires occurred, the German High Command reported today, adding that military and war economy damage was negligible. Two British planes were reported shot down and one German plane failed to return.

Supplementing the official communique, authoritative spokesmen said that three civilians were killed.

These same spokesmen said that British naval units attempted to shell Stavanger, southern Norwegian port, on Thursday night, but that all the shells missed their marks and the units were forced to turn back.

France Is Watched

BY LOUIS P. LOCHNER
[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 4—The outcome of the present political struggle in France will determine the future relationship of the Reich to her defeated enemy, authorized German sources commented today on the latest reports of changes in the Vichy Cabinet.

"If you read French press speeches delivered in Vichy and Paris," they said, "you will observe that France is in the midst of a violent argument concerning the future of French policy.

"A Sabotage Clique"

"We don't doubt that the French people desire cooperation with Germany. But there is also no doubt that an influential clique within the French Government does not wish this and attempts sabotage. For us, a question of paramount interest is how this political struggle will end."

(Reliable sources in Vichy forecast yesterday the overhauling of Petain's Cabinet, with a triumvirate made up of Admiral Jean Darlan, Gen. Charles Huntziger and Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin assuming broad powers under the marshal. Paul Baudouin, Secretary of State for the Presidency of the Council, resigned, reportedly because of the proposed reorganization.)

When questioned about reports of German-Russian tension, these sources stated emphatically that the "German-Russian relationship continues in its stability, comradeship and friendship as laid down in formal and informal documents."

Vichy Links 2 Colonies

[By the Associated Press]

Beirut, Lebanon, Jan. 4—Gen. Henri Dentz, the new French High Commissioner for Syria, has been placed under the direct orders of Gen. Maxime Weygand by the Vichy Government, it was disclosed today, thus solidifying the two largest French Mediterranean territories—in Africa and Syria.

This was taken by observers to indicate that French Chief of State Petain was seeking to assure unified action of the French Empire in event of a change in the relationship between Vichy and Berlin.

While the appointment of the late Jean Chiappe as High Commissioner in Syria was reported to have been a sop to Hitler, General Dentz was said to have been Petain's own choice. Chiappe was killed in a plane crash while on his way to assume his duties.

Cabinet Shift

[By the Associated Press]

Vichy, France, Jan. 4—Former Senator Georges Portmann was appointed secretary of the General Corps of Information today, replacing Pierre Cathala, one-time Interior Minister, who had held the post only nominally, since he never came here from Paris to take up his duties.

Tixier Vignancourt remains executive aide.

Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin takes over the services of press, radio and cinema propaganda, formerly handled by Paul Baudouin, Secretary of State for the Presidency of the Council, who resigned yesterday.

The Department of Youth Services, also formerly under Baudouin, will be attached to the Ministry of Public Instruction.

PETAIN PLACES WEYGAND OVER DENTZ IN SYRIA

Step Apparent Move To Assure Empire Unity Of Action, Come What May

Vast French Territories On Each Side Of Suez Are Solidified

[By the Associated Press]

Beirut, Levant States, Jan. 4—The Petain Government has put the new Syrian High Commissioner, Gen. Henri Dentz, under the direct orders of Gen. Maxime Weygand, it was disclosed today, apparently as a move to assure unity of action by the French Empire, come what may.

The action solidifies the vast French territories on each side of the Suez Canal at a time when the relations of Vichy with the German conqueror are in a state of uncertainty.

Prepares For Eventualities

Marshal Philippe Petain now is believed to be preparing against the possibility that these relations might change suddenly for the worse.

[Weygand, as commander of the undefeated North African army of France and supreme political representative of Vichy in Africa, is firmly opposed to any Axis infringement on French colonial territory, such as might come in drives on the Suez Canal from either west or east.]

Dentz Visits Damascus

Making his first official visit to Damascus today, General Dentz in a statement expressed thanks for Syrian loyalty to France and declared:

"France is determined to carry alone her mission in Syria."

He listed as immediate problems the maintenance of internal and external order and security and close observation of food rationing.

Replaces Chiappe

General Dentz arrived here only a few days ago. He replaces Jean Chiappe, who was killed in a plane crash while on his way to Beirut to assume his duties as high commissioner.

Chiappe's appointment was believed to have been a sop to Hitler; Dentz is understood to be Petain's own choice.

Gives Pledge For Morocco

Vichy, Jan. 4 (AP)—It was announced that Gen. Auguste Nogues, Governor of French North African colonies, on his return to Morocco from Vichy had sent a message to Gen. Maxime Weygand conveying "the respectful wishes and loyal and complete devotion of the French Moroccan population and protectorate."

Weygand replied, asking Nogues to be his "interpreter" to the North African populations.

It also was disclosed that Robert Murphy, counselor of the United States Embassy in France, who is inspecting American consulates in North Africa, had arrived at Casablanca, Morocco, and expected to see Nogues.

SNOW DELAYS LEAHY

Roads to Vichy Blocked—Wires to Spain Down.

Vichy, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—Skiers slid past the Parc Hotel, seat of the French Government, tonight as snow continued to fall for the third night.

Trains arrived late; lines through the Rhone Valley were blocked.

The weather delayed the arrival of the new American Ambassador, Admiral William D. Leahy, who crossed into France with his party at Le Perthus this afternoon and left there for Montpellier, where they will spend the night. Ambassador Leahy was expected to reach Vichy before midnight tomorrow, coming from Lyon by special car.

Wires were down between here and Spain. Even in traditionally sunny Provence snow blocked roads.

ALSACE PRESSURE EASED

Nazis Say Mass Expulsions Were Ended on Dec. 20

BASLE, Switzerland, Jan. 4 (AP)—Mass expulsions from the lost French Province of Alsace of "elements considered injurious to the German people" ended on Dec. 20, according to a communiqué of the Nazi civil administration, published in the Alsatian press.

It said that the expulsions were necessary to assure "peaceful reconstruction of Alsace," and "clearly and definitely to establish the fact that this country is German and will remain so."

Those expelled included Jews, French-speaking Alsatians and German-speaking Alsatians of pro-French sympathies. "Old Alsatians"—those whose ancestors lived in Alsace before 1870—and Germans were allowed to remain.

Texts of Day's War Communiques

British

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 4 (AP)—British General Headquarters issued this communiqué today:

By yesterday evening our troops had penetrated the center defenses of Bardia [in Libya] at a depth of two miles on a frontage of nine miles.

The attack was carried out with great dash by Australians, whose casualties have been comparatively light.

Operations are continuing successfully.

On the Sudan frontier our artillery and patrols again have been active.

In support of the army attack on Bardia, bomber aircraft of the Royal Air Force continued constant raids throughout the night of Jan. 2-3 and yesterday. Dive attacks were made on the town, many tons of bombs being released and extensive damages caused.

Tobruk and El Gazala [in Libya] also were raided heavily. At Tobruk during last night bombs fell on military buildings, causing a large number of fires followed by a number of explosions. One Italian bomber was shot down by one of our bombers.

At Martuba, during two attacks on a landing ground, three enemy aircraft were destroyed on the ground by a direct hit.

Our fighters maintained constant patrol, and one of our aircraft intercepted five S-79s twenty miles from Rass Uenna and shot down three of them. The other enemy aircraft were damaged.

On other fronts reconnaissance flights were carried out, but there is nothing of importance to report. All our aircraft, with the exception of one bomber, returned safely.

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 4 (British Official Wireless)—A special British Army communiqué today stated:

Bardia—Operations are proceeding satisfactorily and over 8,000 prisoners are now in our hands.

LONDON, Jan. 4 (AP)—The text of an Air Ministry communiqué:

The industrial area of Bremen was attacked in good visibility last night by aircraft of the Bomber Command.

The target repeatedly was hit by bombs of large and medium caliber and many incendiaries were dropped. Eighteen red fires were observed, four of which were large, and so many white fires that their number could not be counted. Aircraft arriving later on the scene found the target area a sea of flames.

Other targets in enemy and enemy-occupied territory also were attacked.

Enemy air activity over this country today has been confined to one or two [raiding] attempts by single aircraft near the east and southeast coast. In one of these bombs were dropped on a Kent coast town, causing some damage and casualties.

Last night an enemy bomber was shot down by anti-aircraft fire. During the day two enemy aircraft have been shot down into the sea off the south coast. One of our fighters is missing.

Last night enemy aircraft made a prolonged attack on a town in the west of England. Considerable damage was done to buildings by high explosive bombs and by fire. All fires have been brought under control. A number of people were killed and others injured, but it is not anticipated that the total will be very high.

Bombs were also dropped in other parts of the country, but the damage was slight and no casualties have been reported.

Another communiqué issued by the two Ministries:

Reports received since the last communiqué was issued show that during last night's enemy attacks on this country a small number of persons were killed and others injured by bombs which fell at one point in the London area.

Greek

ATHENS, Jan. 4 (AP)—The Greek Ministry of Marine issued this communiqué today:

About 8:20 A. M. on Dec. 31 the Greek submarine Katsonis, under Lieut. Comdr. Spanides, while on patrol in the Adriatic ten miles southwest of Cape Menders, distinguished two miles northeast of her position a tanker armed with two guns and flying the Italian royal ensign.

The vessel was heading for San Giovanni di Medua. Immediately the submarine got ready to attack her, and a little later fired two torpedoes, which missed the target because the vessel turned westward.

The commanding officer of the submarine, in his determination to attack, came quickly to the surface and at once started shelling the tanker from a distance of 500 meters. After a few rounds the tanker was set ablaze and amid strong explosions, due to the cargo of fuel and munitions which she carried, was destroyed, drifting toward the Yugoslav shore before the wind.

The Greek Army Command issued this communiqué:

Successful local operations [in Albania]. Two hundred and four prisoners, including officers, were taken, and many automatic weapons and other materials have fallen into our hands.

A Ministry of Home Security communiqué:

There were no raids on Greece today.

According to supplementary reports from competent police authorities, six more Greeks were abducted by Italians during their flight from Greek territory. Their fate is unknown.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 4 (AP)—Today's Italian High Command communiqué:

On the Bardia front in the Cyrenaican [Libyan] frontier zone the enemy yesterday attacked in force by land, sea and air, and a great battle lasting since Dec. 9 was rekindled.

Our troops under the command of General Bergenzoli are resisting with extreme fury, inflicting considerable losses on the enemy.

Air formations incessantly cooperating in the action are bombing and machine-gunning enemy naval units, bases, troops and mechanized equipment.

The battle still is under way.

Three of our planes failed to return to their bases.

On the Greek front there was activity of patrols and opposing artillery.

Despite unfavorable weather conditions, our bombing formations carried out effective offensive action on military preparations and enemy troop concentrations.

In East Africa, on the Sudanese frontier, there were actions by our artillery with visible results. Attempts of enemy detachments to surprise our advance posts have been smashed quickly by violent reaction by our guns.

One of our submarines, commanded by Captain Giuseppe Caridi, has sunk 15,000 tons of English merchant shipping in the Atlantic. Up to now our submarines in operation in the ocean have destroyed 138,000 tons of enemy shipping.

VICHY, FRANCE, JAN. 4-(AP)-REPORTS CIRCULATED HERE TODAY THAT 26,000 FRENCH SOLDIERS STILL INTERNED IN SWITZERLAND WOULD SOON BE REPATRIATED THROUGH ARRANGEMENTS BEING WORKED OUT BY GERMAN, FRENCH AND SWISS AUTHORITIES.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 4 (AP)—Today's German High Command communiqué:

Despite bad weather, yesterday's reconnaissance activities of the air force brought good results. An airport in Southeast England was successfully attacked.

Strong German fighting units last night attacked the port city of Bristol. Numerous bombs of all calibers brought explosions and conflagrations visible from afar.

Moreover, bomb attacks were made on other important objectives in South England.

Enemy planes last nigh made assaults at four places in North Germany. Principally, incendiary bombs were dropped on exclusively residential sections, in which a number of fires occurred. Military and war-economy damage was negligible.

Two British planes were shot down, one by naval artillery, and one German plane is missing.

Bulgarian Army Moves As Tension Increases

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 4 (AP)—It was learned authoritatively tonight that Bulgaria has taken "certain military precautions" to prepare for her uncertain future in face of the growing German army in the Balkans and increasing German-Soviet Russian rivalry within the country itself.

Just what these precautions were, and whether they were taken for or against the Germans, could not be learned.

Odds Favor Germany

The betting was about 7 to 3 in Sofia, however, that Bulgaria eventually would jump on the German band wagon, leaving the way open for a Nazi drive against Greece and to the Turkish frontier.

Vienna reports were current here that the Bulgarian Prime Minister, Bogdan Philoff—officially in the old Austrian capital only for his health—might take a side trip to Berchtesgaden to see Hitler.

Keeps Grip On Police Post

The pro-Nazi Interior Minister, Grabovsky, who handed over the powers as Vice-Acting Premier to Foreign Minister Popoff, nonetheless has kept a firm grip on the all-important post as head of Bulgaria's police.

As usual the tall, lean King Boris is still acting as the "balancer."

There were many indications, however, that the King's known desire to spare his country from participation in the war, or from being turned into a battleground for other people's wars, may soon be put to the severest test.

Soldiers Across Border

Large numbers of fully armed and equipped German soldiers, apparently from units which still are moving through Hungary into Rumania, are showing themselves ostentatiously just across the Danube from the Bulgarian frontier.

Turkey to Hold Army Year More

ANKARA, Turkey, Jan. 4 (AP). The Government introduced a bill in the Turkish National Assembly today extending by one year compulsory military service for all men now under arms. The number affected was not disclosed, but it is known to be large.

Red Army Ordered To Save Gasoline

MOSCOW, Jan. 4 (AP)—Marshal Semeon Timoshenko today ordered strict control of the use of gasoline and oil by the Red Army to build up reserves.

"Reserves are sufficient to meet all the needs of the Red Army, both in peacetime and war," said the Army newspaper Red Star in an editorial announcing the order, but "every fighter is compelled to save fuel, remembering that this is the most valuable state property."

A reduction of 20 to 35 per cent in the use of fuel was declared possible through making engines more efficient and using them only when necessary, Red Star said.

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda, meanwhile, printed two full columns of American dispatches headed by a reported assertion by Rep. Cox (D.), of Georgia, that President Roosevelt's recent fireside chat on aid to Britain was equivalent to "a declaration of war."

Finnish Banker Forms Cabinet

HELSINKI, Finland, Jan. 4 (AP).—Jukka Rangell, an athletic banker, lawyer and business man, today formed a new Finnish Government, ending a political deadlock that had persisted since Risto Ryti became Acting President Sept. 19.

The Cabinet remained coalition in character, with only two Ministerial changes from that which had served under the late Kyosti Kallio.

SAYS BRITISH SEIZED CASH

Count Has Receipt for $23,000 Handed Over at Bermuda

LISBON, Portugal, Jan. 4 (AP)—The Count of Liechtenstein, bound for Switzerland with $23,000 in cash when the American Export liner Excalibur anchored at Bermuda, arrived here today with only a small, typewritten receipt for that amount from British contraband control officers.

Besides losing money and gifts of soap, sugar and candy they were taking to friends in Germany, a group of nine Japanese passengers en route from the United States were angriest at having been held in their cabins for five hours while the Excalibur was at Bermuda.

"British officers were quite polite about it but I doubt that we shall again see $3,000 in cash and Travelers' checks they confiscated," said Sintaro Ryu. He, too, received a receipt for payment when the war is over.

The United States State Department is cooperating with Red Cross authorities to help the Americans. Many of these citizens were employed in France. They lost their jobs when the country collapsed and did not have funds to pay for their passage home.

Marine Deadlock

[By the Associated Press]

Peiping, Jan. 4—Japanese military authorities were reported today to have flatly rejected demands for an apology for the "illegal arrest" of five United States Marines in a cabaret incident on New Year's Eve.

In a communication delivered to Col. Allen H. Turnage, United States Marine commander, the Japanese not only declined to apologize but declared the Americans were responsible for the incident and demanded that they apologize, authoritative sources declared.

Turnage Rejection

The Japanese counter demands were said to have been sharply rejected by Turnage after a conference which lasted several hours.

The marine commander was reported to have told the Japanese that his demands for an apology still stood and that they were based principally on the manner in which his men were taken into custody and on their long detention.

Turnage previously had said that the Marines involved in the cabaret incident were not at fault and that he would take the matter to 'a higher authority" if his demands were not met by the Japanese.

In addition to an apology he had demanded that those responsible be punished and that he be given assurances against future arrests of like nature.

The reply to Turnage's demands, delivered by a member of the Japanese North China general staff, said the Japanese investigation of the incident had resulted in conclusions "at variance with the American attitude."

"We found," the statement was quoted as saying, "that the incident started when a United States Marine entering the cabaret knocked a pipe from the mouth of a Japanese—hence the Americans were responsible for the affair and their apology is due the Japanese."

Japanese Balk At Apology to U. S. Marines

They Insist Americans Were to Blame for New Year's Eve Dispute in Peiping

PEPING, Jan. 4 (AP).—American and Japanese officials stood pat tonight in their wrangle over blame for a New Year's Eve cabaret incident, each holding the other's forces responsible for the clash, which ended in the arrest of five United States marines by Japanese police.

The Japanese rejected the demands by Col. Allen H. Turnage, Marine commander here, for an apology, punishment of those responsible and assurance against a repetition of such arrests. They insisted that the Americans were responsible and issued a counter-demand for apologies.

Col. Turnage refused. After a conference lasting several hours, he was said to have told the Japanese his demands still stood. Previously, he declared he would take the matter to "a higher authority" unless they met his demands.

In the American view, the five marines were insulted by armed and drunken Japanese civilians, then arrested by gendarmes and threatened with firearms. This version said four of the five marines were injured and all were held seventeen hours.

According to a Japanese statement published in the local controlled press, the efforts of two interpreters to reason with the marines after one had snatched a pipe from a plainclothes Japanese gendarme resulted only in the incident's assuming "enlarged proportions."

One marine, this statement said, "apolgized for his misconduct" and did so in writing.

"Duly appreciating the sincerity of the American," it added, "the Japanese released him. . . . American authorities, despite the Japanese good will, protested alleging that 'the Japanese detained unarmed Americans, moreover causing some of them injuries.'

"The Japanese rejected the protests and pointed out that the Americans must assume responsibility. Negotiations . . . ended in failure. The Japanese will maintain their stand . . . irrespective of the attitude the Americans adopt."

CONSCRIPTION PLOT IN HAWAII LAID TO JAPAN

Gillette Asks Inquiry Into Action Against Citizens of Nippon Ancestry.

APOLOGY TO U. S. IS REFUSED

Tokio Army Men Deny Blame for Trouble in Peiping in Which Marines Were Arrested.

Washington, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—Senator Gillette, Democrat, of Iowa, asked the State Department today to check reports which he said charged that the Japanese Government was conscripting American citizens of Japanese ancestry in Pacific Coast States and the Territory of Hawaii.

"This may be a considerable threat to our national defense plans," said the Iowan, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. "My information, from reliable sources, indicates that Japan, a Government linked with the Axis Powers, is conscripting men for military duty right under our noses."

Senator Gillette said that officials of the Sino-Korean Peoples League had written him from Los Angeles that consulates of the Japanese Government on the Pacific Coast and in Hawaii were being used for the alleged conscription.

The league said, he declared, that Japan had completed a census of 89,500 Japanese in Hawaii and now was engaged in conscripting Japanese-Americans between 21 and 36 years of age, both in Hawaii and on the West Coast.

The league stated, he added, that 50,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry, already were undergoing military training, that 3,800 had been placed in islands under Japanese mandate within striking range of Hawaii, and that 12,000 of military age were in Pacific Coast States.

Thousands of Japanese born in the Continental United States and Hawaii, he explained, were regarded as American citizens by this country and as Japanese nationals by Japan.

"There is a serious danger of Japanese-German collaboration on espionage that deserves prompt attention," he said. "It could be especially serious when we remember that Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, is the base for our Pacific fleet.

Missionary Reports Japanese Bombings

[By the Associated Press]

Shanghai, Jan. 4—Stations of the American Conveht Mission in Hupeh province "have been repeatedly bombed by Japanese flyers in the past eight months despite the display of the American flag," Hjalmar Graven, of Minneapolis, Minn., a representative of the mission, said today.

"Today our properties in various parts of the province have been destroyed for the great part and a majority of the personnel has been forced to leave," Graven declared.

The demolished properties, he added, included churches, a school and missionary residences. The mission headquarters are at Chicago.

Graven reached here after three weeks of overland travel, part of it in hand carts and part on foot, from Hanchang, 250 miles northwest of Hankow, en route to the United States. With him were Miss Mildred Nelson, of Rockford, Ill., and Miss Viola Carson, of Chicago, who were members of his mission.

The recent Japanese campaign in the area northwest of Hankow has had no appreciable results, Graven declared.

The missionary said the Chinese had criss-crossed that area with hundreds of miles of trenches, nullifying Japanese mechanized units.

Encounters Said To Have Taken Place Along Southern Part Of Border

Bangkok, Thailand, Jan. 4 (AP)—The Thai (Siamese) high command reported today French forces were beaten off in two encounters yesterday along the southern part of the Thailand-Indo-China frontier.

At the village of Chochandr Thai police and civilians were said to have forced a French patrol to retreat, while the French were said to have fled after a minor encounter in the Krungkhobok region.

In a one-hour battle near the village of Khemrath on Thursday, several Thai frontier police were said to have been injured when Indo-China troops opened fire with artillery and machine guns.

U. S. MAY LEND FREIGHTERS TO HELP BRITAIN

Release of More Overage Destroyers Is Also Being Considered.

ROOSEVELT PLAN FACES FIGHT

Some Members of Congress Are Against Granting the President Wide Authority on Arms.

Washington, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—The release of some cargo ships and more old destroyers to besieged Britain was reported under consideration by persons high in defense councils today as a means of spurring production under the navy's vast building program and President Roosevelt's new plan to construct 200 merchant vessels.

Speaking privately, defense authorities interested in this proposal argued that the early transfer of additional existing tonnage to meet the Nazi air and submarine threat to Britain's life line would impress upon the country the urgency of the need for maximum efforts in ship construction.

President Roosevelt has given no indication that he was considering such a move, however.

One of the possibilities mentioned in unofficial discussion was that some of seventy-seven American ships now laid up or temporarily inactive might be turned over to Great Britain under the lease-lend plan which the President soon will submit to the new Congress.

May Take Interned Ships

Another was that this Government might take over some of 266 foreign merchants tied up in American ports to escape the war, either making them available to Great Britain or using them to replace American tonnage lent or leased to the British. Presumably, under such a plan the United States would agree to compensate the countries whose vessels were taken, either with money or ships, after the war.

Officials made public figures showing that the United States on November 1 had an ocean-going fleet of 1,173 ships, with a tonnage of 7,218,913 — many times larger than the merchant fleet at the start of the world war.

Of the tonnage built up to November 1, it was said, seventy-seven ships were in laid-up or spot fleets. Laid-up ships would require some reconditioning for active service, but spot fleet ships, presently inactive, are in condition for immediate operation.

Forty-four of the laid-up ships, with a carrying capacity of about 9,000 tons each, are owned by the Government and are scheduled to be up for sale next Tuesday, and a British bid on them is considered a certainty. Ten other vessels are currently being reconditioned for charter to American ship services, but this disposition could be changed.

Ultimate approval of President Roosevelt's lease-lend plan for aiding the British was predicted by Democratic leaders of Congress today, but they conceded that it would have to stand the test of lengthy debate.

Providing for the lease and loan of war equipment to Britain, with repayment in kind or in raw materials such as rubber upon conclusion of hostilities, the proposal already has become the foremost issue of the new Congress and critics of administration foreign policy asserted that it would be stoutly opposed.

Among these, Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana, announced that he would devote almost his "entire time" to fighting the plan. Senators La Follette, Progressive, of Wisconsin, and Nye, Republican, of North Dakota, expressed opposition to giving the President wide authority to effect this type of assistance to Great Britain and admanistration chieftains, on the other hand, expressed confidence in eventual acceptance of the proposal by Congress.

WHEELER CALLS LEASING IDIOTIC

He Says It Is Plan to Buy Interest in War.

Washington, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—President Roosevelt's lease-lend plan for aiding Britain's war effort, already a major issue of the new Congress, was termed idiotic today by Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana.

"I'd rather give supplies to them," Senator Wheeler told an anti-war delegation at the Capitol. "When you lease or loan you're buying an interest in the war. Some people say it's our war. If it's our war, how can we justify loaning them stuff and asking them to pay us back?

"If it's our war, we ought to have the courage to go over and fight it, but it isn't our war."

The Montanan urged the seventy delegates representing the American Peace Mobilization to "have the guts to stand up and show this is a democracy."

"I've been called an appeaser, a pro-Nazi, a pro-communist and I don't know what else," the Senator said. "I'm not anything but pro-American and I'm not going to be intimidated by the war mongers, the President, the FBI nor any one else."

Ultimate approval of President Roosevelt's lease-lend plan for aiding the British was predicted by Democratic leaders of Congress today, but they conceded that it would have to stand the test of lengthy debate.

U. S. CORPORATION MAY AID BRITISH

Federal Government May Create Body To Handle Lend-Lease Plan

Roosevelt Works On Speech For Congress—May Give "Concrete" Ideas

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 4—While President Roosevelt worked today on the message he will deliver in person before a joint session of Congress Monday, reports circulated in legislative quarters that a huge new Government corporation might be created to handle the projected lease-lend program of aid to Britain.

Mr. Roosevelt was said to have completed only a rough outline of his message which some officials believe will call for placing the nation on a virtual wartime production basis.

May Be "Concrete"

One official White House caller, unwilling to be quoted by name, expressed the belief the message would "amplify" the President's fireside chat of last Sunday and "be more concrete."

In that address Mr. Roosevelt urged that America be made the "arsenal of democracy" and declared the security of the United States was "greatly dependent" on the outcome of England's war against an "unholy alliance."

It is expected to deal also with such domestic questions as liberalized social security benefits, reduced spending for relief, and labor matters.

A White House secretary announced that the message on the "state of the union" would be delivered at 2 P. M. Monday, and that the budget message would be transmitted on Wednesday. An effort will be made, he said, to keep the legislative message within 3,000 words.

May Form Corporation

Democratic leaders at the Capitol, asked about the reports that a new Federal corporation would be established, said that legislation to carry out the Administration's proposal to lend or lease approximately $3,000,000,000 worth of supplies and munitions to Great Britain was still in the formative stage.

Such a corporation, Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, the Senate majority leader, commented, would be "feasible but might not be essential."

Barkley indicated the plan would require amending the Neutrality Act prohibiting the furnishing of munitions to belligerents except on a cash basis. He also said the enabling act must be very general in its grant of powers to the Chief Executive.

Sees Few Callers

Seeing only a few callers during the day, Mr. Roosevelt spent most of his time on his legislative message and conferring with his budget director, Harold D. Smith.

With a vociferous group in Congress gathering support to oppose the British aid plan, Senator Barkley predicted that it would ultimately pass, but after a lengthy debate.

Several in the opposition camp, including Senator Wheeler (Dem., Mont.), reiterated their contention that the plan was but another step leading to actual participation in the war.

Calls Plan "Idiotic"

Addressing an "anti-war" delegation at the Capitol, Wheeler asserted that the plan was "idiotic."

"When you lease or loan you're buying an interest in the war," the Montanan declared. "Some people say it's our war. If it's our war, how can we justify loaning them stuff and asking them to pay us back?

"If it's our war, we ought to have the courage to go over and fight it—but it isn't our war."

Darden Wants Help

The group of about seventy which called at the Capitol said they represented the "American Peace Mobilization."

On the other hand, Representative Darden (Dem., Va.) called, in a statement, for assistance, "immediately and without reserve," to Great Britain.

"If we refuse or fail by indecision to make available the help so desperately needed in this ominous hour," Darden said, "we shall, I believe, have placed the ultimate security and the safety of the American people in the gravest jeopardy."

HOPKINS, HULL TALK OVER BRITISH HELP

Anglo-American Relations Are Subject Of 45-Minute Conference

No Word Yet On When Roosevelt Aide Will Leave For London Duties

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 4—Harry L. Hopkins conferred with Secretary Hull on Anglo-American relations for forty-five minutes today prior to undertaking his assignment as President Roosevelt's personal representative at London.

While no official statement on the Hull-Hopkins talk was made, State Department officials said it was safe to assume that it covered the general question of relations between the United States and Great Britain, including aid to Britain "short of war."

No Word On Leaving

Hopkins avoided reporters, and there was no word on when he would leave for London. State Department officials explained that since Hopkins was going to London as the President's close personal friend and representative, without title or diplomatic status, they had no official information concerning the date of his departure.

President Roosevelt, in announcing Hopkins' new assignment, explained that he would act in London for about two weeks—pending appointment of an ambassador—and indicated he would leave within the next few days.

U. S. Embassy Aid

So far as is known, Hopkins will not take any assistants or aides from the State Department with him, but will have the full facilities of the American Embassy and its staff at his disposal.

At the same time that he announced Hopkins' appointment the President said he would send the name of Joseph P. Kennedy's successor as Ambassador to London to the Senate next week.

Kennedy, who has been on leave in this country since submitting his resignation in early November, still technically retains the title of Ambassador.

Glass Wants Navy To Blast "The Hell Out Of Germany"

Veteran Senator, On 83d Birthday, Vigorously Supports Roosevelt's International Stand

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 4—Senator Carter Glass (Dem., Va.) celebrated his eighty-third birthday today by asserting that the United States Navy should be sent "over to blast hell out of Germany."

The Virginian, who frequently has castigated some of the New Deal moves of this Administration, made it plain in an interview that he thoroughly approves recent international activities and utterances of President Roosevelt.

"I think we should have done those things sooner," he said. "My complaint is we're not moving fast enough."

The oldest Senator "hates birthdays," but President Roosevelt refused to let the man he has dubbed the "unreconstructed rebel" ignore the occasion.

A special White House messenger carried a private letter from the President to the office of Senator Glass. More than 200 other congratulatory telegrams from nationally prominent persons and dozens of standards of flowers were delivered.

A luncheon was given for the Virginian by Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce and Federal Loan Administrator. Vice-President Garner, Senate Majority Leader Barkley (Dem. Ky.), House Speaker Rayburn (Dem. Texas) and a score of Senate companions gathered to greet the Senate veteran.

When the message from the President arrived, Glass promptly pocketed it to take to his apartment to show Mrs. Glass. He arranged a quiet birthday dinner alone with her in their hotel apartment this evening.

James A. Farley, former Postmaster General and former national chairman of the Democratic party, dropped in on the luncheon party to extend his congratulations. Edward J. Flynn, present national Democratic chairman, also attended, as did Eugene Meyer, publisher of the Washington Post.

U. S. Confiden Farms Can Fil Defense Needs

Wickard Asserts Control of Crops Will Not Stop Flow of Food-Fiber Materials

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4 (AP).—American farmers are fully prepared, Administration agricultural leaders say, to fulfill their defense responsibility of supplying the nation with those food and fiber raw materials normally produced in this country.

Unlike industry, particularly those branches which manufacture materials needed for defense, agriculture is not being pressed to expand its output or production facilities. This is in contrast to the World War period. Then farmers were urged to plow up pastureland for food crops.

In 1941 planting will be restricted under Federal crop control programs. There is a possibility those programs may be even more rigid for some crops than at any time since the Roosevelt administration took over in 1933. Only in the case of a few products, such as meat animals, dairy products, poultry and some truck crops, will limited increases be favored.

Continuation of crop control should not cause consumers or defense leaders any worry, says Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard.

"America's land resources are ample," he says. "They are being safeguarded by farmers and forest owners with the assistance of government programs. On the land there are millions of farm families as skillful in turning out crops and livestock as any farm families in the world."

30.24-6779

No "Bottleneck" Danger

These families, he adds, have produced "abundance" this year and in past years.

"This abundance from past years is stored under the ever-normal granary. There is no danger of defense being bottlenecked by lack of food and fiber."

Storehouses, elevators and warehouses are bulging with cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, lard, fruits and many other farm products for which there is no ready markets at prevailing prices. The bulk of these surpluses is stored under government loans to producers. Loss of foreign markets because of the war and increased production elsewhere have contributed to this accumulation.

Federal farm officials state that so long as these reserves exist there is no need for expanding production.

Consequently next season's planting goals, under crop control programs, will be 60,000,000 to 65,000,000 acres for wheat, compared with a normal acreage of 70,000,000; 88,000,000 to 90,000,000 acres for corn, compared with a normal of about 102,000,000; 27,000,000 acres for cotton, compared with a normal of about 37,000,000.

Correspondingly restricted planting goals have been established for tobacco rice, peanuts and several other minor crops.

As under previous programs, these acreage goals will be apportioned among farmers on the basis of a formula in the agricultural adjustment act of 1938. While farmers are not required to abide by such allotments, only those who do so are eligible for subsidies.

Administration officials have indicated they would ask Congress to appropriate at least $760,000,000 for such subsidies—the amount made available for 1940. Coupled with the planting restrictions will be marketing quotas for cotton and tobacco and possibly wheat and corn.

Producers of cotton and tobacco already have voted to authorize the government to impose quotas. Proposals for quotas on wheat and corn probably will be submitted to grower referenda if next season's production prospects equal or exceed this year's. Approval by two-thirds of those voting would be required. Under quotas, stiff penalties are assessed against farmers selling more than their alloted shares.

The problem of financing subsidies authorized by the farm act is troubling leaders both in and outside the government. Some expect Congress to be under pressure to reduce farm-aid appropriations because of the demand of the defense program upon the Treasury.

Some leaders would have Congress re-enact processing taxes on major farm commodities to finance the subsidies. There are others who urge enactment of new legislation which would authorize the government to fix farm prices at higher levels. A third group would employ commodity-loan provisions of the present farm law to peg farm prices at higher levels, thereby reducing or eliminating the subsidies.

Price-Fxing Opposed

The Administration itself has taken on public stand on these proposals, but Secretary Wickard has indicated he does not favor price-fixing or higher government loans.

The belief has been expressed in some market quarters that increased employment growing out of the defense program would result in an improved demand and higher prices for farm commodities. Federal farm officials say such may be the case for those products of which the great bulk is consumed in this country. In this category are dairy and poultry products, vegetable crops, some fruits, meats and wool.

But little improvement in the demand and price of cotton, tobacco, wheat, corn and rice is expected by the farm officials. These products, America's normal export crops, are largely dependent upon world influences for their prices. With foreign markets restricted by the war, there are no prospects, officials explain, for any material improvements in prices of these commodities.

Consequently, officials declare, the government must continue to supplement incomes of producers of these crops with subsidies, if their economic situation is not to become more difficult.

Secretary Wickard has indicated the Agriculture Department will devote more attention in 1941 to the problem of the rural unemployment.

"Agriculture," he says, "has more manpower than is needed to produce all the crops and livestock required. There are young men for the armed forces. There are young men and older men for factory work, if the nation needs them." To make use of this surplus manpower, Administration farm leaders have been urging defense agencies to locate new plants, whenever possible, in rural areas.

Some agricultural leaders are advocating inauguration of a rural works program to provide low-income and unemployed farmers with supplemental employment in soil and forestry conservation work. Others suggest a rural housing program. Secretary Wickard has put advisers to work on the problem of extending Social Security benefits to agricultural workers.

"Just as agriculture in general is entitled to equality with industry, agricultural workers are entitled the same privileges and security industrial workers," he asse

608,000 Regulars and National Guardsmen on Duty Now

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4 (AP).—The War Department estimated today that the Army regulars and National Guardsmen actually under arms on Jan. 1 numbered 608,000, representing nearly a three-fold increase in strength within a year.

The Navy and Marine Corps meanwhile are fast approaching a total of 250,000 regulars and reservists on active duty.

The land forces, under present schedules, are to be augmented by about a half million men in the next three months, some 400,000 being selective service recruits.

A year ago, when the National Guard was not mobilized, the Army numbered just 230,841 officers and men, of whom 215,000 were enlisted men, including the Philippine Scouts.

The expansion also has swelled materially the number of War Department civilian employees and officers on duty in the capital. The employees increased from 5,410 to 10,433 in the year ending Oct. 30, and officers on duty at the War Department increased in the same period from 660 to 1,398.

Use of Foreign Labor In Canal Zone Charged

Louisiana Official Denounces Policy on Defense Jobs

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 4 (AP).—P. J. Charlet, Louisiana Employment Security Administrator, charged today that foreigners were being imported for defense work in the Canal Zone to fill jobs which Southern workmen were eager to obtain.

His statement followed closely Governor Sam Jones's injunction to the Louisiana Congressional delegation to vote against any measures designed to reduce Work Projects Administration work on the theory that defense employment would take up the slack.

Mr. Charlet said he had written to Martin F. Carpenter, chief of the United States Employment Service, that he had been informed contractors in the Canal Zone were importing a majority of workers from British Jamaica. He added that while New Orleans was one of the three designated embarkation points for laborers from all parts of the country bound for the Canal Zone, only about 150 had cleared there up to mid-December.

Says Americans Are Employed

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4 (AP).—Officials of the Panama Canal Office here said today that all skilled work in connection with the re-enforcement of the Canal's defense was being done by American citizens. Officials disclaimed knowledge of importation of foreigners into the Canal Zone for defense work.

REVOKE IMMUNITY FOR NAZI SEAMEN

British Say 'Escape' of 6 of Columbus's Crew From San Francisco Was 'Trick'

TO BE SEIZED IN FUTURE

German Spokesman Says Object Was Accomplished—U. S. Immigration Official Shifted

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 4 (AP)—"Escape" of six German sailors to Tokyo represented "a realization of the object in view," a Nazi spokesman commented today as British officials asserted they would not be "tricked" again.

The six who sailed aboard the Asama Maru on Oct. 25 were among 512 men brought from the east coast after they had scuttled the German liner Columbus to thwart capture by a British warship. The entire group was to have sailed for home by way of Japan, but British seizure of other German seamen in Far Eastern waters led to a decision to keep the men at the Angel Island immigration station.

From time to time, however, small groups of "physically unfit" seamen have been permitted by the British to sail aboard Japanese and Italian vessels. About 430 remain.

Today a British official said "their game is up" and that because of "abuses" of safe conduct privileges no consideration would be given future Nazi requests for immunity from seizure.

The six who sailed on the Asama Maru were in addition to seven the British told the United States Immigration Department would not be molested on the high seas.

A British spokesman said Germany had made up a list of thirteen men for whom safe passage was sought. Seven were approved. The other six also boarded the Asama Maru, carrying the baggage of those granted immunity. The spokesman was not disposed to blame the United States Immigration Department, however, explaining that the United States "as a neutral was not obligated to inform us we were being cheated."

The German spokesman said "the leaving of those six was handled with the knowledge of competent American immigration authorities, and in view of the general object of their trip here (from the east coast), this was just a realization of that object.

"Stories in the newspapers about a year ago, when the Columbus crew arrived in San Francisco, carried news that the object of transporting the crew to San Francisco was in order to facilitate their sailing.

"They were in the status of distressed seamen, and still are, who cannot move freely in the United States, but were not prevented from seeking the opportunity to sail from this country." He added, "We have had no agreement or dealings with the British, just United States immigration."

OFF FOR VENEZUELA

Dornier to Continue Effort to Return to U. S.

Miami, Jan. 4 (A. P.).—Claudius Dornier, son of a German airplane manufacturer, left the United States today in quest of a permit to return to this country.

A German citizen, he has been in the United States since 1939 on a visitor's permit, which the State Department failed to renew.

The twenty-six-year-old Dornier departed on a Pan American clipper for Maracaibo, Venezuela. He hopes to obtain there a visa which will allow him to remain in this country, where he said he wants to live.

If he cannot return, he said he will go to Peru.

Nazis Retire Bremen's Captain For Ill-Health

Commodore Adolf Ahrens Piloted Ship Through British Blockade To Germany

New York, Jan. 4 (AP)—Commodore Adolf Ahrens, master of the Bremen, 51,731-ton North German Lloyd liner which he maneuvered through the British blockade to a German port at the start of the war, has been retired for reasons of health, the German radio announced today.

Ahrens has spent forty-seven of his sixty-six years at sea.

The Bremen left New York harbor when Germany invaded Poland and, after a layover at the Soviet Russian arctic port of Murmansk, was reported December 13, 1939, to have docked at Bremerhaven.

The British reported that one of their submarines sighted the Bremen on her way from Murmansk but refrained from torpedoing her without warning. German sources contended that escort planes forced the submarine under water before it could attack.

Ambassador Phillips Leaves For Rome Post

Returning To Italy By Clipper; Says He Has "No Special Instructions"

New York, Jan. 4 (AP)—Ambassador William Phillips departed for his post at Rome today aboard Pan American Airways' Atlantic Clipper. He said he was "going back in a routine way" and with "no special instructions."

"There is nothing to reports which were circulated recently that there is anything special or unusual in my return to Rome at this time," he said. "I am going back to resume my duties after a sick leave."

The Ambassador returned to this country last August, and soon afterward was stricken with pneumonia. He said his wife would join him in Rome in several months.

U. S. CLOSES CONSULATE

Shuts Southampton Office—Consul Moved to Canada

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4 (AP)—The State Department announced today that George K. Donald of Mobile, Ala., consul general at Southampton, England, has been assigned as consul general at Windsor, Ont., Canada, upon the closing of the office at Southampton.

Southampton, one of England's largest ports, has suffered from considerable German bombing. State Department officials said closing of the office resulted from the lack of consulate business there because of the stoppage of shipping to and from the United States. The work of consular officers there was largely dealing with Americans entering England as tourists or visitors.

She "Saw It Work"

New York, Jan. 4 (AP)—Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Minister to Norway, warned today that "the scapegoat technique of arousing hatred of one group against another is a favorite method to undermine democracy."

In a curtain talk, during a broadcast performance of "Tannhauser" from the Metropolitan Opera House, Mrs. Harriman said, "You know how it worked in France and Holland, and I saw it work in Norway. Don't let it work in America—watch out in your community for those who would seek to turn you against your neighbor."

"I AM HEARTBROKEN THAT IT IS IMPOSSIBLE FOR ME, FOR THE MOMENT, TO LEAVE OCCUPIED FRANCE," MME. LUBIN SAID IN THE LETTER RECEIVED YESTERDAY BY EDWARD JOHNSON, METROPOLITAN GENERAL MANAGER. "LET ME HOPE I WILL BE ABLE TO SING AT THE METROPOLITAN NEXT SEASON."

THE WAR TODAY

BY DEWITT MACKENZIE

THAT WAS A THOUGHT-INSPIRING BIT OF SPECULATION--THOUGH A TRIFLE SPOTTY ON THE FALLACIOUS SIDE---IN WHICH AN AUTHORIZED NAZI ECONOMIC EXPERT IN BERLIN INDULGED YESTERDAY, WHEN HE TOLD FOREIGN NEWSPAPERMEN THAT CANADA NEVER COULD FILL THE PLACE OF A DEFEATED BRITAIN AS THE CENTER OF EMPIRE.

THIS AUTHORITATIVE EXPERT ARGUED FROM THE ASSUMPTION THAT ENGLAND IS ABOUT TO BE VANQUISHED, APPARENTLY BEING UNFAMILIAR WITH THE OLD SAYING THAT THERE'S MANY A SLIP 'TWIXT THE FRENCH COAST AND THE CHALK CLIFFS OF DOVER. HE FIGURED THAT THE GOVERNMENT WOULD EMIGRATE TO CANADA, TAKING THE NAVY ALONG.

HE POINTED OUT THAT IT WOULD BE IMPOSSIBLE TO TRANSPORT THE 45,000,000 PEOPLE OF THE BRITISH ISLES, OR AN ARMY OF 3,000,000, OR THE VAST INDUSTRIES. AND HOW TRUE THAT IS!

"CANADA ISN'T AT ALL SUITED AS A BASIS FOR CONTINUING THE WAR," HE SAID. "HER POTENTIALITIES ARE EXCEEDINGLY SMALL. SHE HAS NO MUNITIONS INDUSTRIES TO SPEAK OF."

THE EXPERT DIDN'T GIVE HIS REASON FOR THIS SEEMINGLY EXTRANEOUS STATEMENT, BUT IT PRESUMABLY WAS CALCULATED TO DAMPEN THE MORALE OF THE PEOPLE OF BRITAIN. OBVIOUSLY HE HAD IN MIND PREMIER CHURCHILL'S HISTORIC SPEECH IN COMMONS ON JUNE 4, WHEN THE NAZI AVALANCHE WAS BURYING THE ALLIES.

"WE SHALL NEVER SURRENDER," CHURCHILL DECLARED, "AND EVEN IF, WHICH I DO NOT FOR A MOMENT BELIEVE, THIS ISLAND OR EVEN A PART OF IT IS SUBJUGATEB AND STARVING, THEN OUR EMPIRE ACROSS THE SEAS, ARMED BY THE BRITISH FLEET, WILL CARRY ON THE STRUGGLE UNTIL IN GOD'S GOOD TIME THE NEW WORLD AND IN ALL ITS STRENGTH AND MIGHT SETS FORTH TO THE RESCUE AND LIBERATION OF THE OLD."

IT IS AN INTERESTING COMMENTARY ON THE THOROUGHNESS OF THE GERMAN MIND THAT THE NAZIS HAVE BEEN GIVING DUE CONSIDERATION TO THIS STATEMENT. AND WELL THEY MIGHT, FOR I UNDERSTAND FROM SOURCES IN ENGLAND THAT WHILE THE GOVERNMENT DOESN'T BELIEVE THE GERMANS CAN SUCCEED IN INVASION, IT IS PREPARED TO CARRY OUT THE CHURCHILL DECLARATION TO THE LAST WORD IN CASE OF DEFEAT.

HOWEVER, THE NAZI ECONOMIST EITHER OVERLOOKED OR DELIBERATELY IGNORED THE MOST IMPORTANT POINT IN THE SITUATION. ON AUGUST 18, 1938, PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT IN A SPEECH AT KINGSTON, ONTARIO, TOLD THE CANADIANS:

"I GIVE YOU ASSURANCE THAT THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES WILL NOT STAND IDLY BY IF DOMINATION OF CANADIAN SOIL IS THREATENED BY ANY OTHER EMPIRE."

LAST AUGUST MR.ROOSEVELT AND CANADIAN PREMIER MACKENZIE KING HAD A CONFERENCE AT WHICH THEY LINKED THE DEFENSES OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA TO PRESERVE THEIR SAFETY AGAINST ANY THREATS FROM ACROSS THE SEAS.

THE MEANING OF THIS AGREEMENT IS SO CLEAR THAT IT IS GIVEN TO WONDER HOW THE GERMANS THINK THEY COULD AVOID WAR WITH THE COMBINED CANADIAN AND AMERICAN FORCES IF THE BRITISH THRONE WERE TRANSFERRED TO OTTAWA. PERHAPS THE NAZIS BELIEVE THEY COULD IGNORE THE NEW WORLD ALTOGETHER -- MAKE NO THREAT AGAINST "DOMINATION OF CANADIAN SOIL" --- AND PROCEED TO CONSOLIDATE THEIR GROUND IN EUROPE, BUT SUCH AN IDEA WOULD BE ALMOST FANTASTIC.

THERE MOST CERTAINLY WOULD BE WAR BETWEEN THE NEW WORLD AND THE OLD. IT WOULD BE A TERRIBLE STRUGGLE IN WHICH MANY NATIONS WOULD BECOME INVOLVED. BECAUSE OF THE VAST DISTANCES, AND THE DIFFICULTIES OF COMING TO CLOSE GRIPS, WOULD BE A LONG DRAWN OUT AFFAIR -- DOUBTLESS A MATTER OF MANY YEARS.

STILL, THAT IS ONE THE POSSIBILITIES IF THE GERMANS ARE VICTORIOUS IN THE BATTLE OF BRITAIN. ON THAT POINT, NEUTRAL MILITARY EXPERTS GENERALLY SEEM AGREED THAT THE ODDS ARE HEAVY AGAINST A SUCCESSFUL NAZI INVASION OF ENGLAND.

LATE MARCH OR APRIL WOULD SEEM BY ALL MILITARY LOGIC THE CORRECT TIME FOR GERMANY TO MAKE HER PROMISED GRAND SMASH AT ENGLAND. YET LONDON, BY PRIME MINISTER CHURCHILL'S SAY-SO, DOUBTS THAT HITLER WILL OR CAN WAIT THAT LONG TO LET LOOSE HIS ATTEMPTED KNOCK-OUT PUNCH.

UNFAVORABLE DEVELOPMENTS FROM THE NAZI-FASCIST VIEWPOINT ON MANY FRONTS ARE URGING HIM TO RISK A MID-WINTER ONSLAUGHT. TIME IS MARCHING AGAINST THE AXIS.

CHECK OFF THESE 1941 DEVELOPMENTS SINCE HITLER'S THUNDERING NEW YEAR FORECAST OF VICTORY THIS YEAR:

NAZI-FRENCH RELATIONS ARE UNDER INCREASINGLY HEAVY STRAIN. BERLIN DOES NOT DENY THAT. A HITLER-PETAIN BREAK IS DENIED; BUT ONLY CONTINUING BERLIN-VICHY DIPLOMATIC CONTACTS IN GERMAN-HELD PARIS ARE CITED TO SUPPORT THE DENIAL. A SWEEPING NEW PETAIN CABINET SHAKE-UP EMPHASIZES THE FRANCO-NAZI "COOPERATION" IMPASSE.

SINCE HITLER SPOKE, ITALY'S SERIOUS PLIGHT HAS BEEN OFFICIALLY ADMITTED BY ROME ACTION. ITALIAN DEFEATS AT GREEK AND BRITISH HANDS HAVE FORCED IL DUCE MUSSOLINI TO ASK HELP OF HIS AXIS MATE. GERMAN PLANES NEEDED AGAINST ENGLAND HAVE BEEN SENT INTO ITALY. ITALIAN PLANES HAVE BEEN CALLED HOME FROM THE WESTERN FRONT. ALL THIS EMPHASIZES UNMISTAKABLY THE FACT THAT ITALY IN THE TWO MONTHS SINCE SHE MARCHED AGAINST GREECE HAS BECOME A GERMAN MILITARY LIABILITY, NOT AN ASSET.

IN ALBANIA WINTER HAS CLOSED DOWN WITH SUB-ZERO FORCE ON THE NORTHERN GREEK-ITALIAN FLANK; BUT TO THE SOUTH THE GREEKS ARE STILL INCHING FORWARD. FALL OF ITALY'S TEPELENI-KLISURA DEFENSE BASTION AND VALONA MAY COME DESPITE WEATHER CONDITIONS OR BELATED NAZI AIR INTERVENTION.

ACROSS THE MEDITERRANEAN THE BRITISH COUNTER OFFENSIVE INTO ITALIAN LIBYA SURGED ON. THE BRITISH, AFTER A SEIGE OF BARDIA, BEGAN A PENETRATION OF THE DEEP DEFENSES OF THE ITALIAN STRONGHOLD, TAKING PERHAPS 8,000 PRISONERS IN THE INITIAL PHASE OF THAT ACTION, THEY SAID. EASTWARD, THERE HAVE BEEN FLICKERS OF BRITISH AIR ACTIVITY TO SUGGEST AN OFFENSIVE IN EAST AFRICA SOON.

IN THE WEST, REPEATED BOMBING OF NEUTRAL IRELAND, ATTRIBUTED BY DUBLIN TO GERMAN PLANES, IS CREATING NEW POSSIBILITIES OF BRITAIN OBTAINING AIR AND SEA BASES ON IRELAND'S WEST COAST. ON THE OTHER HAND, BRITISH SOURCES SUGGEST THAT GERMANY IS TRYING TO FORCE EIRE INTO THE WAR ON ENGLAND'S SIDE IN THE HOPE THAT A NAZI EXPEDITION CAN SEIZE IRISH BASES AS JUMPING OFF SPOTS FOR INVASION OF BRITAIN.

AND ACROSS THE ATLANTIC PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT IS MAKING READY TO IMPLEMENT TO CONGRESS HIS PROMISE OF AMERICAN WIN-THE-WAR AID TO BRITAIN.

ENGLAND'S OWN WAR INDUSTRIES, DESPITE NAZI BOMBING, ARE REPORTED REACHING NEW DELIVERY PEAKS. THE INCREASED FLOW OF MANPOWER AND MATERIALS FROM ALL BRITISH COMMONWEALTH SOURCES TO THE BATTLE FRONTS HAS BEEN PROVEN ABUNDENTLY IN EGYPT AND LIBYA.

AGAINST ALL THAT, GERMANY CLAIMS GREATLY INCREASED POWER BY LAND, AIR AND SEA FOR A FINAL SMASH AT ENGLAND. BY EVERY RULE OF REASON, EVERY DAY OF DELAY DUE TO WEATHER OR ANY OTHER CAUSE IS DANGEROUS. IT SEES THE ARMAMENT GAP BETWEEN GERMANY AND ENGLAND CLOSED BY THAT MUCH. IT MAY DRIVE HITLER TO THE DESPERATE RISKS OF A MID-WINTER INVASION ATTEMPT AGAINST ENGLAND.

American Long-range Bombers Excel Those of Other Powers

ART III — JAN 4 1940

[This is the last of a series of three articles by Devon Francis, aviation editor of the Associated Press on American warplanes.]

By DEVON FRANCIS.

In appraising American air power in terms of its warplanes the first question which must be asked is, "What are they going to be used for?"

JAN 3 1941

Our strategy at present does not encompass the use of swarms of pursuit planes for the defense of our industrial areas. American air defense is predicated on preventing the establishment of enemy bases from which bombers can operate against our vulnerable areas.

The Naval Air Service, the Naval Reserve and the Marine Corps have less than 2,500 planes, including training planes. The Army Air Corps has less than 3,000. The number of first-line combat planes in the service of the air corps is reported to be 500. That is only a 10 per cent increase since last June.

How soon our air defense will be sufficient depends on the rate of production, now at about 700 planes of all types a month, and on how many are released to the British as they come off the assembly line. The air corps received less than fifty tactical planes in November. On December 18 defense officials said none of the thousands of combat planes ordered by the War Department since last summer was expected to be delivered until well into 1941. The air corps has begun releasing to England the heavy, four-engined consolidated bombers it had ordered for itself. Manufacture of two types of new pursuit planes, the Bell interceptor and the two-engined Lockheed pursuit-interceptor, has barely begun.

The proposal to manufacture 500 fighting planes a day in automobile factories, advanced by Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, calls attention to the engine bottleneck. On December 10, Charles S. Garland, financial adviser to the industrial materials division of the defense commission, characterized as loose talk the production of hundreds of airplanes a day.

"To reach a daily production of twenty-five airplane engines of 1,200 horse power," he said, "requires a capital investment of $30,000,000, a floor area of 1,000,000 square feet and 8,500 men."

For hemisphere defense, the United States needs bombers of both the land plane and the flying boat types. For the last decade, no other nation has brought the long-range bomber to the advanced development that it has reached in the United States. To say that American bombers cannot compare with Germany's Heinkel, Junkers, Focke-Wulf and Dornier bombers is to say that a two-mile track man is no good in the sprints. Bombers, like runners, are developed for different kinds of jobs.

Lieut.-Gen. Frank M. Andrews, former chief of the General Headquarters Air Force, three years ago summarized the American air defense problem in this way:

"The first mission of our air forces usually will be to deny to the enemy, through independent air operations, any suitable bases, floating or ground, from which he might operate. It is to that end that we are designing our bombardment organization and training personnel."

Once production is achieved in American aircraft plants, the factors making for world superiority in air armaments should be in favor of the United States.

Battle of Bombers Expected in War

Some military experts believe that the swift fighter plane will play a role of decreasing importance as the world's major Powers develop larger warplanes with wider range.

Instead of pursuit combats, as in the defense of England, they foresee future air wars waged by fleets of heavily armed bombers firing at each other like the ships of the line in surface navies.

Medium-weight bombers have begun to bristle with guns. The new twin-engine American Martin "26" carries a dozen heavy caliber machine-guns. Old models of the Boeing "17," the Flying Fortress, carried only eight.

U. S. Warplane Engines Called World's Fastest and Toughest

Production Bottleneck Expected to End By Summer

JAN 3 1941

What about the engines which power our warplanes? How bad is the "bottleneck" in their production? What is involved in relieving this situation? These and other pertinent questions are answered in the following article, the second of a series by Devon Francis, aviation editor of the Associated Press.

By DEVON FRANCIS.
Associated Press Aviation Editor.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—When Roscoe Turner, the elder statesman of American air racing, won the big-money Thompson Trophy event at Cleveland in 1938 by running his 1,200-horsepower engine wide open for a solid hour, he helped peg American aircraft power plants as the world's best.

Flushed, tired and more than $20,000 richer for his hour's toil, big Roscoe taxied his silver monoplane to the line and cut the switches.

"Wide open, all the way," he announced, amazed.

Forthwith, mechanics tore down the engine to see what had happened to it. Airplane engineers were not meant to take that punishment. The interior looked almost as good as the day it came off the factory production line.

Criticism of American warplanes, in comparison with those of Germany and England, cannot be made on the counts of speed or engine dependability.

Production Rate Criticized.

Criticism can be more justly leveled at our engine production. That is both America's strength and weakness in the race for air rearmament. We have the world's best radial, air-cooled plane engines, but our current production will equip only 600 to 700 combat planes a month.

"109" fighter was developed. The fighter's top speed is about 360 miles an hour, not as fast as some new American types.

The difference is accounted for in the fighter's greater load in armament and fuel for longer range, and in the lesser degree of perfection in a "production" plane as compared with a specially-built racer.

The engine "bottleneck" will be relieved appreciably by late spring or early summer.

But what that will mean in terms of greater American air power remains for determination. Much of our production is destined for England. President Roosevelt's "rule-of-thumb" division of our warplane output equally between our armed forces and England has been revised.

The greater part of the output of some warplane factories, and all of that of some factories, is going to England as fast as it comes off the assembly line. That is in keeping with the policy of all aid short of war.

In the next five or six months two major engine factories and their branches, buttressed by a trickle of production from automobile factories now tooling up to make plane engines, are expected to be turning out 3,000,000 horsepower a month.

In terms of units that is the equivalent of 3,000 engines of 1,000 horsepower each. That would equip every month 1,500 airplanes of all types—bombers, patrol planes, pursuits and observation planes—including the "spares" which go with each order.

On American engines even more than on American planes is going to depend in good part the maintenance of British bombing power. On them will be predicated the future of American air power.

This is why:

Speed and bomb-carrying ability of warplanes are functions of design, wing loading and power loading. No nation has a copyright on design. Our latest pursuits, for example, copy many of the best features of British and German pursuits.

Wing loading means the relation between the weight of a plane and the wing area—the higher the weight the faster the plane. Power loading means the relation between the weight of the plane and the engine horsepower—the lower the weight the faster the plane.

Engine Makers Hold Key.

Design and wing loading can be changed at the pleasure of the engineer, but as the armed services make demands for bigger airplanes and higher speeds it is the engine manufacturers who hold the key to the superior performance of our aircraft.

In the radial shaped, air-cooled field no other nation has been able to approach American engines in dependability and power output.

The two leading radial engine manufacturers, the Pratt & Whitney division of the United Aircraft Corp. and the Wright Aeronautical Co. (the latter a subsidiary of the Curtiss-Wright Corp.), are turning out engines of greater horsepower than any engines in production abroad.

It is a Pratt & Whitney engine, rated at 1,850 horsepower, which carries along the new Navy Vought-Sikorsky shipboard fighter at more than 400 miles an hour at optimum altitude. That is a top, not a cruising, speed. The same engine with slight alterations is being rerated for a 2,000-horsepower output.

Weight Is Light.

Improved Wright engines, rated at 1,650 horsepower, are speeding the longer range Pan-American Airways Clippers across the Atlantic. Wright, too, has engines in the 2,000-horsepower class.

None of the new American aircraft power plants weigh much more than a pound for each horsepower they develop.

Engines of 2,000 horsepower are known to be in the experimental stage abroad, but they are of the heavier V-shaped, liquid-cooled, in-line type.

Much has been said in recent months, beginning with a statement by Secretary Morgenthau of the Treasury Department last winter, about the potential engine "bottleneck." Airlines with engines on order were, in fact, asked to release them to the Army Air Corps.

Continuance of the bottleneck will depend in part on the Air Corps' engine procurement policy, the demands of Great Britain and on how fast this country can overcome serious handicaps in liquid-cooled engine manufacture. For the last two years the Air Corps has favored equipping its pursuit planes with in-line liquid-cooled engines, arguing that they could be better streamlined than planes with air-cooled radial engines. Radials are star shaped, with larger frontal areas.

Radial Type Navy's Standard.

For years the Navy has accepted the radial as its standard power plant.

In-line engine production is still only a few hundred units a month though the General Motors Corp., parent company of the concern manufacturing Allisons, announced recently 1,000 engines a month would come off the line by November, 1941.

The reason the British are in such dire need of American engines with high horsepower output is that in two lightning campaigns the Germans destroyed existing and potential bases from which the British could bomb effectively with their standard, short-range, medium-weight planes.

When the Germans seized Norway and conquered the Low Countries and France they forced the British to base all their bombardment planes in England.

U. S. Needs Are Different.

The designs for British planes had not been drawn with that contingency in view. Today they must have American planes of great power, range and bomb-carrying capacity, such as the Consolidated "24" and the later, faster versions of the Boeing "17."

Both types, four engined, were developed specifically for the peculiar problems of American defense. Our bombers have lengthy coast lines, a vast continent and outlying possessions to protect.

Once the problem of British needs is reconciled satisfactorily with American needs in air armament, the breaking of the engine bottleneck will depend on the accelarated production of high-powered air-cooled engines and the further development and production of liquid-cooled types.

Great Britain is using liquid-cooled Rolls-Royce engines in its Hurricanes and Spitfires, which in design are at least five years old. On both British and United States Army Air Corps contracts we now propose to duplicate that engine in American factories.

New Facts Brought Out.

How advisable that is it will remain for history to judge. Some peculiar facts about airplane speeds and engine types are emerging from engineers' arguments, fostered by the demands of the Air Corps for more efficient airplanes.

The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics discovered in wind tunnel tests that the "drag" of radial engines equipped with barrel-like coverings called cowlings in many instances is only negligibly higher, and in one instance was lower, than that of liquid-cooled engines.

Our new Republic pursuit, equipped with a 1,200-horsepower radial, is reported to have a speed of more than 360 miles an hour, approximately that of the better known Curtiss "40," fitted with an in-line engine. That, too, incidentally, is the speed of the standard German fighter, the Messerschmitt "109." It is equipped with an in-line.

American Engines Feature Durability

By Devon Francis

[By the Associated Press]

ART I JAN 3 1941

New York, Jan. 2—The scene was a British air-training camp and the day was one of those typically dismal, overcast days when even a ghost of a wind over the rolling English countryside sends chills to the marrow.

"We can't believe," protested a British officer to an American engineer, "that your engines will run as long between overhauls as you say they will."

The question of engine life was a serious one. The British, accustomed to tearing down their aircraft engines for overhaul after every 150 to 200 hours of use, had to be convinced that they had something new on their hands—American engines which would take unheard of punishment.

Every Part Perfect

"Very well," said the engineer. "Tear one down after 200 hours. You'll see."

Air students are hard on engines. They don't know how to "nurse" an airplane power plant to get the most out of it, week after week. They work their throttles savagely, running full power for minutes when cruising throttle is called for.

The British officer directed that an engine be disassembled and examined. Every part was perfect.

In a training plane that is the equivalent of 125,000 miles.

The engine was still perfect. Bearings showed no wear. Ignition timing devices and valve mechanisms still worked smoothly.

Every 800 Hours

"I'd suggest," the American finally volunteered, "that you overhaul your American engines at the frequency I suggested in the first place—every 800 hours. You'll find they will stand up under the beating and keep more of your planes in the air."

The English were convinced.

Today that American engine and hundred of others like it are training young Britons to fly. They are beginning to power some of the bombing planes which the British almost nightly send on forays against the German invasion bases in France, against the industrial Ruhr and against factories in interior Germany.

Criticism of American airplanes which has cropped up in the last few weeks, linked with public announcement that the rearmament program is behind schedule, has covered their lack of "fire power" (guns), cockpit armor to protect the pilot, power turrets to ease the work of gunners and improve their accuracy, and self-sealing gasoline tanks.

Qualifying Factor

But one qualifying factor has not been taken into account:

Few late-type American warplanes have been delivered abroad. None actually has been put into service by the British.

The point on which criticism is justified is our critically low production. We have performance in our planes. But production has been behind schedule and it may continue to be behind for as much as two years to come.

Today we are talking in terms of 40,000 warplanes by mid-1942. That can be achieved only by the most spectacular expansion. As late as January, 1939, the single-shift capacity of American warplane factories was 350 airplanes and 500 engines a month.

Just a year ago we were producing 200 military planes and 500 engines a month. For comparison the current paper schedule is 1,000 planes and a minimum of 2,000 engines, rising to 3,300 planes and 8,300 engines a month in the next eighteen months. Our present actual production each thirty days is about 700 planes and 1,500 engines.

An average of slightly more than two engines is allotted to each warplane. That covers "spares" and the multi-engine types—two-engine pursuits and bombers and four-engine bombers.

Engine Bottleneck

The engine "bottleneck" mentioned by Secretary Morgenthau, of the Treasury Department, last winter contains critical aspects, because it is much easier to increase airplane production than it is to boost the production of the engines which power them.

That we are far behind in our commitments to England is shown by Department of Commerce figures on exports. In November we shipped Canada and England 204 planes, including 68 trainers useless for combat work.

It is on performance that American aircraft and aircraft engine designers refuse to concede any superiority of warplanes made abroad.

Instead of trailing foreign designers and manufacturers, in a good many respects we are actually ahead.

Better Bombers

We have better long-range bombers.

We have the highest production-type engine horsepowers.

We have the fastest experimental pursuit plane. It is experimental only in that it is not yet in quantity production.

We have experimental planes designed to meet the competition of equally experimental designs abroad.

So much criticism of American planes has developed of late that Maj. Gen. George H. Brett, acting chief of the Army Air Corps, felt called upon to state:

"The War Department has not only developed but is procuring equipment which, from all information which can be secured from our observers in Europe, is equal or superior to that now employed abroad."

Let's examine this question on air superiority in terms of equipment, keeping in mind that air power depends not on one factor alone but on many—production, trained flying personnel, the availability of raw materials and parts and, not to be forgotten, the use to which an air force is to be put.

Ten thousand interceptor-type planes in the absence of other types would not mean air power for the United States.

The crying need of the American armed services is bombers, great quantities of them, capable of flying long distances with heavy loads.

American pursuits are not l[illegible]d the international parade.

The German Messerschmitt types "109" and "110," the German Heinkel "112" pursuit and the British Spitfire "1" all have a top speed at optimum altitude of around 360 miles an hour. The American Curtiss "P-40" will do as well. The American Bell "P-39" will top 380. The American Lockheed "P-38" will top 385.

The Vought-Sikorsky "XF4U-1" will top 400, and to the best knowledge available to informed military and technical sources in this country that is the world's highest speed for a so-called "service" airplane.

Optimum altitude means the altitude at which an airplane of given engine power will operate most efficiently. That varies considerably. The German Messerschmitt "109," for instance, achieves its greatest speed at 16,000 feet. After that the engine, lightly supercharged, loses power (and speed) rapidly.

In the top speeds listed above optimum altitude runs all the way from 12,000 to 23,000 feet. It is an interesting sidelight that without exception the American engines used in combat-type planes enjoy a higher-altitude optimum performance than those abroad.

Diary Of The War

JAN 4 1941

[By the Ass[illegible] Press]

The important Italian Libyan base of Bardia, under siege for nineteen days, was reported yesterday to be breaking up under the mighty blows of the British offensive, and the British declared a final victory awaited only the conclusion of cleaning-up operations.

The British fleet steamed away after a four-hour bombardment which had pumped 600 tons of high explosives into Bardia.

An Associated Press correspondent aboard a British battleship reported the Italians in Bardia appeared to be attempting a retreat westward toward Tobruk.

The fighting about Bardia was of spectacular violence.

The British used fleet guns, artillery, dive bombers, tanks, grenades, charging infantrymen—and a singular touch was given to it all by the report that the Italians even were using the graves of ancient Africans as shelters.

From Australia, it was officially reported that Major General Mackay, commander of the Australian imperial force in Britain's army of the Nile, had actually entered Bardia and taken 8,000 prisoners.

Greek War, Land And Sea

In Albania the Greek army was reported to have broken through the ranks of counter-attacking Italians north of the Klisura-Tepeleni area to occupy dominating heights on the route toward Valona, and the Marine Ministry disclosed the Greek submarine Katsonis had destroyed an Italian tanker by gunfire December 31 in the upper Adriatic Sea.

Fascist land forces suffered heavy losses and 204 additional prisoners, including officers, and more armament fell into Greek hands, dispatches from Athens said.

War In The Air

In the aerial war on the western front the British reported that their bombers, in the third successive nightly attack upon the German seaport of Bremen, had left such vast fires that naught could be seen below save "a swirling mass of flame."

But while this attack was in progress—on Friday night—the Nazis answered in kind, heavily assaulting the British port of Bristol. The British acknowledged there had been casualties and "considerable damage."

The Diplomatic Front

The Irish, clinging to an endangered neutrality, accused Germany anew of violating Irish soil, this time identifying as of "German origin" magnetic sea mines and bombs which had been dropped in Wickford and Wexford counties. Last night tin-hatted air wardens appeared in the streets of Dublin.

Unofficial observers in Berlin reported that President Roosevelt's message to Congress, to be made Monday, was awaited with great interest, since the way in which Congress went about aiding Britain might be a great factor in helping to determine the day on which the Germans attempted to invade England.

BY GLENN BABB

(ADVANCE) NEW YORK,DEC 26-(AP)-THE EFFORTS OF FRENCHMEN TO RETAIN CONTROL OF FRENCH INDO-CHINA, AND OF JAPANESE TO SWING THIS RICH DOMAIN INTO THEIR "GREATER EAST ASIA" ARE APPROACHING A SHOWDOWN.

THE JAPANESE, ALREADY FIRMLY ESTABLISHED IN THE NORTHERN PART OF THE COLONY, ARE SHOWING INTENSE INTEREST IN THE SOUTH, WHICH CONTAINS AMONG OTHER DESIRABLE THINGS A NAVAL BASE OF GREAT NATURAL STRENGTH AT CAMRANH BAY, ON THE SOUTHEAST COAST, AND THE RICH PORT OF SAIGON.

MAJOR GENERAL RAISHIRO SUMITA, HEAD OF JAPAN'S MILITARY MISSION IN INDO-CHINA, IS VISITING THE SAIGON AREA, OSTENSIBLY TO INVESTIGATE RECENT NATIVE OUTBREAKS THERE AGAINST FRENCH RULE.

(SPECIAL NEWS SERVICE ADVANCE FOR PMS OF THURSDAY, DEC. 26)

(ADVANCE) NEW YORK--FIRST ADD JAPANESE X X X FRENCH RULE.

THE SAME DISORDERS HAVE CALLED GOVERNOR GENERAL ADMIRAL JEAN DECOUX TO THE SOUTH. THE FRENCH HAVE GIVEN EVIDENCE OF KEEN ALARM LEST THE JAPANESE SEIZE THE OPPORTUNITY TO MOVE INTO THE SOUTH WITH TROOPS, PLANES AND WARSHIPS.

JAN 3 1941

FURTHER, THE JAPANESE ARE SEEKING SWEEPING ECONOMIC CONCESSIONS WHICH BRITISH AND CHINESE REPORTS INSIST WILL IN EFFECT END FRENCH RULE IN INDO-CHINA. SOME 30 FRENCH OFFICIALS ARRIVED RECENTLY IN TOKYO FOR THE NEXT PHASE OF THESE NEGOTIATIONS, ALREADY BEGUN IN HANOI, AND THE OUTCOME MAY BECOME A MILESTONE IN FAR EASTERN HISTORY.

SELDOM HAS A LAND BEEN IN SORRIER PLIGHT TO FACE A POWER SEEKING MASTERY THAN THIS ORIENTAL OUTPOST OF FRANCE'S EMPIRE.

THE SITUATION IS SUCH AS TO INVITE JAPANESE DOMINATION--IS SUCH, INDEED, THAT THE JAPANESE WOULD BE EXERCISING ALMOST UNPRECEDENTED RESTRAINT IF THEY KEPT HANDS OFF. INDO-CHINA IS A DESIRABLE TERRITORY STILL NOMINALLY GOVERNED BY A BROKEN EMPIRE, BESET BY A VENGEFUL NEIGHBOR---THAILAND (SIAM)---RIVEN BY INTERNAL DISCORD, DIVIDED BY THE STRIFE OF FRENCHMAN AGAINST FRENCHMAN---THE VICHY-DE GAULLIST CONFLICT.

AND JAPAN, ONE OF THE GREAT EXPANDING EMPIRES OF THE AGE, HAS A MILITARY BOOT THRUST WITHIN THE DOOR.

INDO-CHINA HAS BECOME THE IMMEDIATE FIELD FOR JAPAN'S SURGE TO THE SOUTH, WHICH HISTORY MAY RECORD AS ONE OF ITS GREATEST IMPERIALIST MOVEMENTS. A LAND LARGER THAN TEXAS AND MORE POPULOUS THAN SPAIN APPARENTLY IS IN PROCESS OF CHANGING MASTERS.

THE UNITED STATES HAS DECLARED ITS INTEREST IN THIS PROCESS. LAST SEPT. 7 SECRETARY OF STATE HULL SAID THAT JAPAN'S ACQUISITION OF BASES IN FRENCH INDO-CHINA--THEN IN PROSPECT, NOW A FACT--WOULD HAVE AN

"UNFORTUNATE" EFFECT ON PUBLIC OPINION IN THE UNITED STATES.

TO THIS ADMONITION JAPAN PAID NO APPARENT HEED. HER TROOPS NOW ARE GARRISONED IN HANOI, THE CAPITAL, AND HAIPHONG, CHIEF PORT OF THE NORTH; AND SEVERAL BASES ALONG THE NORTHERN BORDER, ADJOINING CHINA, HAVE BEEN TAKEN OVER BY THE JAPANESE AIR FORCE.

JAPAN'S ARMY AND AIR FORCES IN INDO-CHINA ARE MORE NUMEROUS AND FAR BETTER ARMED THAN THOSE OF THE NOMINAL FRENCH MASTERS. WITHIN THE LAST FEW DAYS DISPATCHES FROM HANOI HAVE REPORTED THE JAPANESE RAPIDLY ENLARGING THEIR AIR BASES, BRINGING IN FORMIDABLE NEW SQUADRONS OF BOMBERS AND OTHER TYPES OF AIRCRAFT.

TRUSTWORTHY FIGURES ON THIS CONCENTRATION OF MILITARY POWER ARE LACKING, BUT IT IS REPORTED SUFFICIENT TO IMPOSE TOKYO'S WILL ON THE ENFEEBLED FRENCH ADMINISTRATION AT ANY TIME FORCE SEEMS CALLED FOR, AND IT IS BUILDING BASES FROM WHICH STILL FURTHER ADVANCES INTO THE RICH COLONIAL LANDS OF THE SOUTH MAY BE LAUNCHED.

FEW EXPERIENCED OBSERVERS IN THAT PART OF THE WORLD BELIEVE THAT JAPAN'S FOOTHOLD IN INDO-CHINA IS ANYTHING BUT A BEGINNING.

JAPAN'S EXPANSION ON THE CONTINENT OF ASIA AND IN ITS ISLAND FRINGES ALREADY WAS WELL UNDER WAY BEFORE THE EUROPEAN WAR OPENED, ITS LATEST PHASE BEGINNING WITH THE CONQUEST OF MANCHOUKUO IN 1931 AND CONTINUING WITH THE INVASION OF NEARLY ALL NORTHERN AND EASTERN CHINA FROM 1937 ON.

BUT THE CONFLICT IN EUROPE AND THE CRUSHING NAZI VICTORIES OVER THE LOW COUNTRIES AND FRANCE SET BEFORE THE JAPANESE EXPANSIONISTS ARE APPETIZING A DISH OF OPPORTUNITIES AS HISTORY HAS RECORDED. THE OWNERS OF SOME OF THE RICHEST COLONIAL PRIZES IN THE WORLD WERE CRUSHED AND THESE POSSESSIONS LEFT IN CHARGE OF FEEBLE COLONIAL REGIMES.

INDO-CHINA, WITH ITS 24,000,000 PEOPLE AND 287,000 SQUARE MILES, FOR GEOGRAPHICAL REASONS, CAME FIRST ON THE JAPANESE LIST. IT ADJOINED A PART OF CHINA ALREADY HELD BY JAPANESE ARMIES AND IN SEPTEMBER THESE MOVED SOUTHWARD INTO FRENCH TERRITORY.

BEYOND LIE THE STILL RICHER DUTCH EAST INDIES. AND IF EUROPEAN WAR ENDS--AS MOST JAPANESE BELIEVE IT WILL--WITH NAZI GERMANY TRIUMPHANT OVER BRITAIN, THE AREA OF OPPORTUNITY WILL BE IMMENSELY WIDENED TO INCLUDE ALL MALAYA, BURMA AND PERHAPS EVEN INDIA AND AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.

NOT ALL JAPANESE ARE SURE BRITAIN WILL BE DESTROYED. THERE IS ALSO THE INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES, SET FORTH BY SECRETARY HULL, TO BE REMEMBERED. THESE DOUBTS ARE DETERRENTS TO AN UNFETTERED JAPANESE POLICY OF EXPANSION, HENCE THE JAPANESE APPEAR TO MOVE DEVIOUSLY AND WITH MANY HALTS.

SAIGON AND CAMRANH, MANY OBSERVERS IN THE ORIENT BELIEVE, ARE THE NEXT JAPANESE GOALS.

SAIGON IS A TYPICAL FRENCH PROVINCIAL CITY IN A LUSH TROPICAL SETTING, WITH ITS LITTLE OPERA, HOTEL DE VILLE, CATHEDRAL, SIDEWALK CAFES AROUND OPEN SQUARES. BUT THE BOULEVARD THRONGS ARE BROWN, ITS RIVER PORT BRISTLES WITH SAMPANS AND OTHER STRANGE CRAFT OF THE EAST, THE PARKS ARE FILLED WITH STRANGE FOLIAGE AND THE PAVEMENTS SPLASHED RED WITH THE SPITTLE OF BETEL NUT ADDICTS.

CAMRANH, JAPANESE NAVAL MEN BELIEVE, COULD BECOME THE RIVAL OF SINGAPORE AND A BASE FROM WHICH THE GREAT BRITISH FORTRESS COULD BE REDUCED IF BRITAIN IS CRUSHED IN HER HOME ISLAND BY THE LUFTWAFFE OF JAPAN'S ALLY.

ALREADY THEY ARE COUNTING ON IT, ACCORDING TO TOKYO REPORTS, AS ONE CORNER OF A VAST TRIANGLE TO BE DOMINATED BY THE JAPANESE NAVY, WITH CORNERS THERE, IN THE MANDATED ISLANDS OF THE EQUATORIAL PACIFIC AND THE JAPANESE HOME ISLANDS. EACH SIDE WOULD BE MORE THAN 2,000 MILES. THE TRIANGLE WOULD INCLUDE THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND GUAM AND, JAPANESE BELIEVE, PRESENT AN INSUPERABLE OBSTACLE TO THE SENDING OF UNITED STATES NAVAL AID TO THE BRITISH WHO MAY BE BELEAGUERED IN SINGAPORE.

JAN 3 1941

ONCE CAMRANH IN JAPANESE HANDS SUPPLANTS SINGAPORE AS THE FORTRESS DOMINATING THE CROSSROADS OF THE PACIFIC OCEAN, THE INDIAN OCEAN AND THE CHINA SEAS---SO JAPANESE EXPANSIONISTS BELIEVE---ALL THE WEALTH OF THE INDIES WILL LIE WITHIN JAPAN'S GRASP.

THUS INDO-CHINA BECOMES AN ESSENTIAL STEPPING STONE IN ANY PROGRAM OF EXPANSION. ITS STRATEGIC IMPORTANCE OUTWEIGHS ITS ECONOMIC, ALTHOUGH ITS WEALTH IN RICE, ITS RUBBER PRODUCTION AND THE MARKET THAT ITS 23,000,000 CUSTOMERS WOULD AFFORD FOR JAPAN'S INDUSTRY MAKE IT DESIRABLE.

THERE WERE SERIOUS DISORDERS AROUND SAIGON LATE IN NOVEMBER. NATIVE COMMUNISTS WERE BLAMED. SOME FRENCH LEADERS WERE ASSASSINATED, FRENCH PLANES WENT OUT ALMOST DAILY TO BOMB CENTERS OF REBELLION, AND SOME 200 NATIVES WERE REPORTED EXECUTED BY FIRING SQUADS AT SAIGON AIRDROME.

THE FRENCH, APPARENTLY HOPING TO KEEP THIS FROM THE JAPANESE AND SO DEPRIVE THEM OF AN EXCUSE FOR ARMED INTERVENTION, MAINTAINED A RIGID CENSORSHIP, BUT NEWS OF THE TROUBLES WERE CARRIED OUT BY TRAVELERS, AND SUMITA OBVIOUSLY WAS WELL INFORMED. THE TOKYO ANNOUNCEMENT OF

HIS JOURNEY SOUTHWARD SAID HE WAS GOING TO VISIT THE "TROUBLED REGIONS."

INTERMITTENT WARFARE WITH HER NEIGHBOR TO THE WEST, THAILAND (SIAM), ADDS TO INDO-CHINA'S WOES. THE FRENCH TOOK CERTAIN TERRITORIES FROM SIAM NEARLY HALF A CENTURY AGO TO ROUND OUT THEIR INDO-CHINA COLONY,

(MORE)

AND THIS HAS NOT BEEN FORGOTTEN. JAN 3 1941

WHEN GERMANY CRUSHED FRANCE AND THE JAPANESE M VED SOUTHWAR, THAILAND DEMANDED THE RETURN OF WHAT S SHE CONSIDERED HER OWN, TERRITORIES IN WESTERN CAMBODIA AND LAOS. AT THAT TIME THE VICHY GOVERNMENT DECLARED THESE EMANDS WERE INSPIRED BY JAPAN. THEY LED TO BORDER CLASHES, THEN INTERMITTENT WARFARE IN WHICH EACH SIDE HAS USED WARPLANES FREELY TO BOMB THE CITIES OF THE OTHER IN "REPRISALS."

INDO-CHINA'S SITUATION IS MADE MORE TRAGIC BY THE FIFFERENCES THAT DIVIDE LL FRENCHMEN THESE DAYS OVER THE QUESTION OF LOYALTYTO THE VICHY GOVERN MENT OR TO THE "FREE FRENCH" CAUSE OF GENERAL CHARLES DE GAULLE. GOVE NOR DECOUX SUPPORTS VICHY, BUT THE FRENCH COMMUNITY IN INDO-CHINA, ESPECIALLY IN THE SOUTH, CONTAINS MANY DE GAULLISTS.

THE LIFE OF FLYING INSTRUCTORS

WHEN JERRY COMES

~~THEY~~ SCOOT

FOR HOME

TO SAVE PROSPECTIVE PILOTS--(1000)

BY GODFREY H.P.ANDERSON

ASSOCIATED PRESS CORRESPONDENT WITH THE R.A.F.

(ADVANCE) WITH THE R.A.F. TRAINING COMMAND (CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)--FLYING INSTRUCTORS AT THIS AND A SCORE OF OTHER TRAINING SCHOOLS DOTTED BEHIND THE FRONT LINE ABOUT THE ENGLISH COUNTRYSIDE MAY BASK IN SOME GLORY--BUT IT'S ONLY REFLECTED GLORY.

THEY GET NONE OF THE GLAMOR WHICH SURROUNDS THE FIGHTER AND BOMBER PILOTS. THEY NEVER SWOOP OVER BERLIN. THEY NEVER GET THE CHANCE TO SHOOT DOWN A DORNIER, A HEINKEL OR A MESSERSCHMITT. IN FACT, THEY NEVER EVEN SEE A NAZI.

"WHEN JERRY COMES, WE MAKE FOR HOME," ONE SAID. "IT'S OUR JOB TO GET OUR PUPIL SAFELY BACK AND LIVE TO FLY ANOTHER DAY."

AFTER ALL, THEY ARE DOING THEIR BIT JUST THE SAME. BRITAIN'S BOMBER FORCE IS EXPANDING RAPIDLY, HELPED BY AN INCREASING NUMBER OF MACHINES FROM THE UNITED STATES, AND THE INSTRUCTORS MUST HAVE READY THE MEN TO FLY THEM.

THE CHIEF FLYING INSTRUCTOR AT THIS STATION, A SOUTH AFRICAN SQUADRON-LEADER WHOSE FIRST PUPIL WAS A FELLOW SOUTH AFRICAN WHO RECENTLY WON HIS DISTINGUISHED FLYING CROSS, EXPLAINED HOW THE INSTRUCTORS WORK:

"FIRST OF ALL WE HAVE TO FIND OUT JUST HOW A PUPIL TICKS. WE WATCH THE SPEED OF HIS REACTIONS AND OFTEN CAN TELL ALMOST AT ONCE JUST HOW GOOD - OR BAD - A PILOT HE WILL BE. THEN WE MUST GAIN HIS CONFIDENCE. THAT IS THE MOST IMPORTANT THING OF ALL. AFTER THAT - WELL, WE JUST TRY TO PUMP INTO HIM ALL WE KNOW. AND HERE IT'S NOT ALWAYS THE BEST PILOT WHO MAKES THE BEST TEACHER."

MOST INSTRUCTORS, HE ADDED, TAKE IT ALMOST AS THEIR OWN FAILURE WHEN A PUPIL FAILS TO REACH THE REQUIRED STANDARD AND IS "GROUNDE" AS UNSUITABLE TO BE A PILOT. BUT THEY SHARE IN THE REFLECTED GLORY OF AN OLD PUPIL'S TRIUMPHS.

"IN FACT," SIGHED ONE "IT'S THE ONLY SORT OF FUN WE GET."

THERE ARE MANY PUPILS IN THIS SCHOOL WITH AN ESTABLISHMENT A GREAT DEAL LARGER TO ENSURE THEY HAVE THE BEST TRAINING THAT CAN BE DEVISED FOR THEM.

JAN 3 1941

AS ALL THE PUPILS HERE WILL GRADUATE AS BOMBER PILOTS AFTER THEIR COURSE, THE TRAINING IS CARRIED OUT ON TWIN-ENGINED AIRSPEED OXFORD MONOPLANES.

THEY COME HERE FROM THE ELEMENTARY FLYING TRAINING SCHOOL WHERE THEY HAVE LEARNED THE ROUTINE BUSINESS OF FLYING AIRCRAFT ON A LIGHTER SINGLE-ENGINED MACHINE.

IN THE DUAL-CONTROL OXFORDS THE PUPIL SITTING SIDE BY SIDE WITH HIS TEACHER, FACES FOR THE FIRST TIME THE IMPOSING MASS OF INSTRUMENTS

CARRIED BY A SERVICE AIRCRAFT, LEARNS HOW TO USE HIS TRIMMING TABS, STARS NIGHT FLYING, FORMATION WORK, CROSS-COUNTRY NAVIGATION, BLIND FLYING, SIGNALS, ELEMENTARY BOMBING.

IN THE FLIGHT ROOM WHERE HE PULLS ON HIS FLYING SUIT AND BUCKLES HIS PARACHUTE, A SIGN HEADED "YE RULES FOR FLYING SCHOOLS" WARNS IN SEMI-BIBLICAL LANGUAGE OF OFFENSES HE MUST NOT COMMIT.

SOME SAMPLES:

"BEWARE THE MAN WHO TAKETH OFF WITHOUT LOOKING BEHIND HIM, FOR THERE IS NO HEALTH IN THIS, VERILY I SAY UNTO YOU: HIS DAYS ARE NUMBERED.

"HE WHO BREAKETH AN UNDERCARRIAGE IN A FORCED LANDING IN TIME MAY BE FORGIVEN, BUT HE WHO TAXIETH INTO ANOTHER PLANE SHALL BE DESPISED FOREVER.

"AS A PLATE OF COLD SOUP, YES, EVEN AS A KISS FROM ONE'S SISTER, SO ALSO IS A FLIGHT WITHOUT PURPOSE OR OBJECTIVE, IT LACKETH KICK."

"EXTRAORDINARY THE NUMBER WHO FORGET ABOUT THEIR LANDING WHEELS AT THIS STAGE," ONE INSTRUCTOR SAID, "BUT PROPER COCKPIT INSTRUCTION ENSURES THEY DON'T FOGET WHEN THEY REALLY FLY."

WHEN ABLE TO FLY WITHOUT THE INSTRUCTOR, THE PUPIL IS GIVEN SKELETONIZED MAPS AND SENT OFF CROSS-COUNTRY TO A DISTANT OBJECTIVE JUST AS IF HE WERE REALLY ON A BOMBING RAID.

THE MAPS SHOWHIM HIS OBJECTIVE, WHICH HE MUST PHOTOGRAPH OR OTHERWISE DESCRIBE IN DETAIL,BUT IT SHOWS HIM NOTHING OF THE INTERVENING COUNTRY OVER WHICH HE MUST FLY BY HIS INSTRUMENTS ALONE. BUT HE CARRIES A SET OF SEALED MAPS "JUST IN CASE HE GETS HOPELESSLY LOST."

BOMBING IS PRACTISED BY RADIO SIGNAL OR LAMP FLASH. AS THE PLANE FLIES OVER ITS "TARGET," OFFICERS WATCHING BELOW CAN JUDGE TO WITHIN A FEW FEET THEACCURACY OF THE BOMBING BY CHECKING THE EXACT POSITION OF THE PLANE AT THE TIME THE PILOT SIGNALS HE HAS RELEASED HIS IMAGINARY BOMBS.

JAN 5 1941

"I THINK BOMBER PILOTS REQUIRE MORE COOL COURAGE THAN THE FIGHTER MEN," THE CHIEF FLYING INSTRUCTOR SAID. "THE FIGHTER PILOT GOES UP AND SHOOTS DOWN HIS OPPONENT WHILE HE'S HOT. IT'S ALL OVER IN A FEW MINUTES AND HE'S BACK ON THE AIRDROME.

"BUT THE BOMBER PILOT HAS TO GO PERHAPS A THOUSAND MILES OR MORE, OFTEN IN APPALLING WEATHER CONDITIONS AND KNOWING THAT AT BEST HE WILL MEET ANTI-AIRCRAFT AND SEARCHLIGHTS, AT WORST PERHAPS AN ENEMYPURSUIT PLANE WHICH MAY BE FASTER AND MORE DEADLY IN ARMAMENT THAN HIS BOMBER AS WELL AS HAVING THE ADVANTAGE OF OPERATING NEAR ITS HOME BASE. AND WHEN AT LAST HE HAS REACHED AND BOMBED HIS TARGET, HE HAS TO GET HOME--AND HOME IS A VERY LONG WAY AWAY. NO, I THINK BOMBER PILOTS DON'T GET ALL THE PRAISE THEY DESERVE."

"NEITHER DO WE," CHIPPED IN ANOTHER INSTRUCTOR WITH A GRIN. "OTHER BLOES GET ALL THE FUN - WE GET THE CIRCUITS AND BUMPS."

JAPAN'S NO.1 ISOLATIONIST

COL.HASHIMOTO, HEAD OF JAPANESE YOUTH ASSOCIATION

JAN 5 1941

"NO CONTACT WITH FOREIGNERS,"
HIS PERSONAL CODE (990) PIX SERVICED

HIS PERSONAL CODE AND THE PLATFORM OF HIS ORGANIZATION--WHICH IS IN THE FOREFRONT OF THE SURGE TOWARD TOTALITARIANISM--FEATURE "NO CONTACT WITH FOREIGNERS."

THE COLONEL HAS BECOME THE MOST TALKED-OF LEADER OF THE MILITARIST, SUPERPATRIOTIC ELEMENT THAT IS TRYING TO REMAKE JAPAN ON THE FASCIST MODEL. UNTIL RECENTLY HE WAS NOT TAKEN VERY SERIOUSLY OUTSIDE HIS OWN CIRCLE. BUT THEN HE WAS MADE A MEMBER OF THE 26-MAN "PREPARATORY COMMISSION" WHICH IS DRAFTING JAPAN'S NEW "NATIONAL STRUCTURE," OR CONSTITUTION. NOW EVEN THOSE WHO DERIDE HIM ADMIT HE IS A MAN TO WATCH.

THE COLONEL'S CONTACTS WITH FOREIGNERS HAVE BEEN FEW INDEED, BUT ONE WAS SPECTACULAR. ON DECEMBER 12, 1937, THE ARTILLERY REGIMENT HE WAS COMMANDING IN THE WUHU REGION, EAST-CENTRAL CHINA, FIRED ON AND DAMAGED THE BRITISH GUNBOAT LADYBIRD. THIS WAS IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE SINKING BY JAPANESE BOMBING PLANES OF THE UNITED STATES GUNBOAT PANAY, AND THE REVERBERATIONS WERE WORLDWIDE. HASHIMOTO DECLARED AT THE TIME THAT HE HAD ORDERS TO FIRE ON ALL CRAFT ON THE YANGTZE RIVER. THIS LATER WAS DENIED BY HIS SUPERIORS.

HASHIMOTO'S CONDUCT WAS SUBMITTED TO AN OFFICIAL INVESTIGATION. THE RESULTS WERE NEVER DISCLOSED, BUT SOON THEREAFTER HE WAS CALLED HOME AND LEFT ACTIVE SERVICE. IT WAS THE SECOND TIME WITHIN THREE YEARS THAT HE HAD BEEN PLACED ON THE RESERVE LIST FOLLOWING TROUBLE.

COL.HASHIMOTO BELIEVES, AND STERNLY PREACHES, THAT SOME OF THE TROUBLES WITH JAPAN DERIVE FROM THE PRESENCE OF FOREIGNERS AND THE SLOW SEEPAGE OF FOREIGN IDEAS AND INFLUENCES. THESE HE WOULD TEAR OUT, ROOT AND BRANCH.

JAN 5 1941

A GOOD MANY OTHER THOUGHTS ARE BOILING IN THE COLONEL'S SHAVEN HEAD THESE DAYS. HE TRAVELS UP AND DOWN THE COUNTRY, PROPOUNDING THEM.

HIS LISTENERS GIVE YOU RADICALLY DIFFERENT ESTIMATES OF THE REAL AND POTENTIAL IMPORTANCE OF COL.HASHIMOTO. THE SUAVE YOUNG SECRETARIES IN GOVERNMENT OFFICES IN TOKYO SMILE INDULGENTLY, AND REMIND YOU THAT THERE HAVE BEEN MANY SUPER-NATIONALISTS, LIKE THE COLONEL, AND MANY ORGANIZATIONS, LIKE HIS GREAT JAPAN YOUTH ASSOCIATION.

BUT IT IS NOT DIFFICULT TO FIND A FARMER ON AN ARTISAN, A STRUGGLING WHITE COLLAR MAN WHO REPLIES, "HE IS A STRONG MAN AND HE HAS A PROGRAM. WHO KNOWS WHAT HE MAY DO?"

THERE ARE THOSE WHO PROFESS TO SEE COL.HASHIMOTO AS A DARK FORCE, ALREADY OPERATING POWERFULLY BEHIND JAPAN'S "CURTAIN GOVERNMENT," MANIPULATING ITS POLICIES AND DIRECTING ITS ACTIONS. THIS, CERTAINLY,

IS NOT TRUE. HIS INFLUENCE IS GREAT, BUT IT IS NOT YET DOMINATING.

MANY JAPANESE BELIEVE THAT IN TIME HE MAY BECOME A DICTATOR, RIDING INTO POWER ON THE HOULDERS OF HIS YOUTH ORGANIZATION. THEY COMPARE HIS CAREER WITH THOSE OF OTHER AUTARCHS, AND FIND SIMILARITIES BETWEEN HIS GROUP AND THE NAZI OR FASCIST PARTIES.

COL.HASHIMOTO ANTEDATED THE PRESENT JAPANESE GOVERNMENT WITH HIS IDEAS BY SIX YEARS OR MORE. LONG BEFORE THE MILITARISTS, SUPER-PATRIOTS AND NATIONALISTS REACHED THEIR PRESENT COMMANDING POSITION, HE WAS ADVOCATING THE PRINCIPLES FOR WHICH THEY STAND. HE WAS LESS EFFECTIVE THEN, BECAUSE HE WAS ON ACTIVE SERVICE IN THE ARMY, UNTIL MARCH, 1936.

JAN 5 1941

IN THE PREVIOUS MONTH, JAPAN HAD REACHED A BLOODY MILESTONE OF HER HISTORY. TWO REGIMENTS OF TOKYO INFANTRY LEFT THEIR BARRACKS AT DAWN OF A SNOWY MORNING AND SET OUT TO "PURIFY" THE GOVERNMENT. WITHIN AN HOUR, THEY ASSASSINATED THE LORD KEEPER OF PRIVY SEAL, THE FINANCE MINISTER AND THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF MILITARY EDUCATION. THEY WERE AFTER THE PREMIER, AS WELL, BUT KILLED HIS BROTHER-IN-LAW BY MISTAKE.

THIS WAS THE NOTORIOUS "FEB. 26 INCIDENT." ITS SOURCES AND REASONS HAVE NEVER BEEN FULLY BROUGHT TO LIGHT, NOR WERE ALL THE LEADERS BROUGHT TO TRIAL. A NUMBER OF OFFICERS WERE EXECUTED. OTHERS WERE QUIETLY RETIRED.

PERHAPS IT IS A COINCIDENCE THAT COL. HASHIMOTO WENT ON THE RESERVE LIST, AT THIS TIME.

AT ANY RATE, THE COLONEL'S HANDS WERE FREED, THEREAFTER, FOR THE WORK HE HAS SINCE BEEN DOING, EXCEPT FOR THE PERIOD OF HIS BRIEF RETURN TO ACTIVE SERVICE IN CHINA--NAMELY, TOTALITARIANISM AND THE GREAT JAPAN YOUTH ASSOCIATION. THESE ARE SOME OF HIS PRECEPTS, WRITETEN BY HIMSELF IN A PAMPHLET CALLED "THE PLATFORM:"

"THE WORLD IS AT A STANDSTILL BECAUSE OF MATERIALISTIC LIBERALISM... WHAT WE NEED NOW TO BECOME THE MORAL LEADER OF THE WORLD IS A NEW NATIONAL STRUCTURE.

"COMMERCIALISM AND THE SYSTEM OF INDIVIDUAL PROFITS MUST BE BANISHED...UNDER CONTROL OF THE GOVERNMENT ALL RESOURCES, LABOR AND TECHNIQUE MUST BE MADE THE BASIS OF EVALUATION...FOREIGN TRADE SHOULD BE RESTRICTED TO THE BARE MAINTENANCE OF THE STATE.

"THE PERFECTION OF ARMAMENT IS ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY IN ORDER TO CRUSH ANY FOREIGN ENEMY WHICH MAY ATTEMPT TO INTERFERE WITH THE ADVANCEMENT OF THE EMPIRE...BRAVERY, HUMANITY AND JUSTICE, WHICH ARE THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE JAPANESE RACE MUST BE REGENERATED AND DEVELOPED.

"THE PRIMARY OBJECT OF DIPLOMACY IS TO RELEASE ALL RACES OF MEN FROM THE PRESSURE OF MATERIALISM AND LIBERALISM.

"IN JAPAN, ONLY ONE POLITICAL PARTY IS NEEDED, NOT TWO. THERE ARE NO POLITICAL STRUGGLES AND NO DISCORD UNDER THE SINGLE PARTY SYSTEM."

JAN 5 1941

COL.HASIMOTO'S HATRED FOR INVIDIVIDUALISM AND THE SYSTEM OF PRIVATE PROFITS HAS FOUND CONVENIENT EXAMPLES, IN RECENT YEARS, IN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN. IT HAS BEEN AN EQUALLY CONVENIENT FACT THAT JAPAN'S NEW ALLIES, GERMANY AND ITALY, ARE ON THE OPPOSITE SIDE. SO, TO THE REST OF THE PROGRAM HAS BEEN ADDED A PLANK OF FRANKLY EXPRESSED ANTAGONISM TO BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES, AND ALL THEY REPRESENT, IN THE ABSTRACT AND THE CONCRETE.

THE GREAT JAPAN YOUTH ASSOCIATION, BY ITS OWN ESTIMATE, ALREADY NUMBERS MORE THAN 1,000,000 MEMBERS, WITH OFFICES LOCATED IN ALL PARTS OF THE EMPIRE. THE COLONEL, A STOCKY, MIDDLE-SIZED MAN, TRAVELS

TIRELESSLY, HARANGUING HIS FOLLOWERS. IN HIS PERSONAL LIFE, HE SETS THE EXAMPLE. HIS HOME IS MODEST. HE HAS LITTLE MONEY. HE SHUNS LUXURY, PURSUING A STERN AND SPARTAN SIMPLICITY.

HIS SPEECHES ARE WELL ATTENDED, LARGELY BY MEMBERS OF THE LOWER CLASSES IN JAPAN, WHO HAVE BEEN SUFFERING TERRIBLY FOR THE PAST TWO YEARS BECAUSE OF WAR-INDUCED SHORTAGES, RESTRICTIONS AND UNEMPLOYMENT.

SOME $255,000,000 OF PUBLIC MONEY HAS BEEN INVESTED IN 146 NEW WAR PLANTS, EVERY MAJOR SHIPYARD IN THE COUNTRY IS BUSY, AND HER AGRICULTURE IS GEARED TO THE TASK OF FEEDING BRITAIN.

SOME 8,000,000 OF HER 12,000,000 CITIZENS HAVE BEEN REGISTERED UNDER THE NATIONAL WAR SERVICES ACT, AND STATISTICIANS ARE BUSY CLASSIFYING THEM FOR COORDINATION IN THE COUNTRY'S MILITARY AND PRODUCTIVE EFFORT.

CANADA'S NAVY, WHICH IN SEPTEMBER OF 1939 CONSISTED OF 15 VESSELS MANNED BY LESS THAN 1800 OFFICERS AND MEN, HAS GROWN TO A FLEET OF 155 SHIPS WITH MORE THAN 13,000 OFFICERS AND MEN, AND AN $80,000,000 NAVAL CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM IS IN FULL SWING WHICH WILL ADD 98 SHIPS TO THE FLEET AND IN ADDITION PROVIDE 22 FOR BRITAIN'S NAVY.

HALF THESE NEW SHIPS ALREADY HAVE BEEN LAUNCHED AND INSTALLATION OF MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT HAS BEGUN. THEY INCLUDE 70 CORVETTES FOR COAST PATROL AND 50 MINESWEEPERS.

CANADA ACQUIRED SIX UNITED STATES DESTROYERS OUT OF THOSE INVOLVED IN THE BRITISH-AMERICAN DESTROYER DEAL.

IN ADDITION, SOME 30 MERCHANT AND PASSENGER VESSELS HAVE BEEN

REMODELED IN CANADIAN YARDS TO FIT THEM FOR WAR USES. THE YARDS ALSO ARE BUILDING HUNDREDS OF SMALL BOATS, RANGING FROM SMALL LAUNCHES TO HIGH-SPEED TORPEDO-CARRYING MOSQUITO BOATS.

CANADA ALSO SOON WILL BE BUILDING 18 MERCHANT SHIPS FOR BRITAIN, TO REPLACE LOSSES INFLICTED BY ENEMY SUBMARINES. SPECIFICATIONS FOR THESE 9,300-TON SHIPS NOW ARE BEING DRAWN UP.

LAYING OUT THE FLYING FIELDS AND PUTTING UP THE HANGARS, SHOPS, BARRACKS AND OTHER BUILDINGS REQUIRED FOR THE BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AIR TRAINING PLAN WAS IN ITSELF A HUGE JOB OF CONSTRUCTION. SOME 40 SCHOOLS ALREADY HAVE BEEN COMPLETED AND ARE IN OPERATION; BY MIDSUMMER THERE WILL BE 83.

JAN 5 1941

YOUNG AIRMEN FROM AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS, ARGENTINA--WHEREVER THERE ARE BRITISH YOUNGSTERS EAGER FOR TRAINING--HAVE BEEN FLOCKING TO CANADA TO BE SCHOOLED AS PILOTS, OBSERVERS OR AIR-GUNNERS; MANY UNITED STATES CITIZENS, TOO, HAVE BEEN ACCEPTED.

IN ADDITION TO THIS AIR TRAINING PROGRAM UNDER THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE, THE ROYAL AIR FORCE NOW IS OPERATING ONE OF ITS OWN IN CANADA, HAVING TRANSFERRED MORE THAN HALF A DOZEN TRAINING SCHOOLS FROM ENGLAND TO THE QUIETER ATMOSPHERE OF CANADA. THIS MEANT CONSTRUCTION OF QUARTERS FOR AN ADDITIONAL 10,000 MEN.

GRADUATES OF THE COMMONWEALTH AIR TRAINING PLAN BEGAN MOVING OVERSEAS IN NOVEMBER (EARLIER CLASSES WERE "PLOWED BACK" INTO THE INSTRUCTION AND ADMINISTRATIVE STAFFS) AND BY THE END OF 1941 IT IS EXPECTED THAT GRADUATES WILL BE TURNED OUT AT THE RATE OF 2,000 A MONTH, ABOUT ONE-THIRD OF THESE BEING PILOTS AND THE REMAINDER OBSERVERS OR AIR-GUNNERS.

BUILDING PLANES FOR THESE YOUNGSTERS TO FLY IS ANOTHER PHASE OF CANADA'S WAR EFFORT; BUT HERE MANY DIFFICULTIES HAVE BEEN ENCOUNTERED. THE CANADIAN AIRCRAFT INDUSTRY WAS DECIDEDLY IN ITS INFANCY WHEN THE WAR BEGAN, AND THE SITUATION WAS FURTHER COMPLICATED BY THE FACT THAT ENGINES AND OTHER PARTS WERE TO BE MANUFACTURED IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

WHEN THE FALL OF FRANCE AND THE SUBSEQUENT RAIDS ON BRITAIN PRACTICALLY HALTED THIS FLOW OF EQUIPMENT FROM ENGLAND TO CANADA, PLANS HAD TO BE REVISED AND THE CANADIAN INDUSTRY GEARED TO AMERICAN STANDARDS.

SOME PLANES ALREADY ARE BEING BUILT IN CANADA AND EQUIPPED WITH ENGINES FROM THE UNITED STATES OR ENGLAND. WHETHER ENGINES, TOO, WILL BE BUILT HERE LATER DEPENDS, AS MUNITIONS MINISTER C.D.HOWE RECENTLY TOLD PARLIAMENT, ON "WHETHER THE NECESSARY MACHINE TOOLS CAN BE MADE AVAILABLE FROM UNITED STATES SOURCES."

GUN PRODUCTION ALSO IS JUST BEGINNING TO GET STARTED; THOUGH BY MARCH SOME 3,500 BREN AUTOMATIC RIFLES WILL HAVE BEEN DELIVERED, AND ARRANGEMENTS HAVE BEEN MADE FOR THE MANUFACTURE OF 11 TYPES OF GUNS AND GUN-CARRIAGES RANGING FROM THE 40 MM. BOFORS ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUN UP TO 6-INCH NAVAL PIECES.

JAN 5 1941

BECAUSE CANADA BEFORE THE WAR NEVER MANUFACTURED ANYTHING BUT RIFLES, GETTING INTO GUN PRODUCTION IN A BIG WAY HAS MEANT A TREMENDOUS EFFORT, INVOLVING MUCH FACTORY CONSTRUCTION AND THE IMPORTATION OF LARGE QUANTITIES OF SPECIAL MACHINE TOOLS. SPEED, HERE AGAIN, DEPENDS ON HOW SOON THESE TOOLS CAN BE DELIVERED BY UNITED STATES MANUFACTURERS.

BRIGHTER BY FAR IS THE MUNITIONS-OUTPUT PICTURE. EIGHT FACTORIES ACTUALLY ARE PRODUCING SHELLS, 19 ARE MAKING SHELL COMPONENTS AND 18 OTHERS ARE BEING TOOLED UP FOR PRODUCTION. TEN TYPES OF SHELLS ALREADY ARE IN PRODUCTION, AND WHEN THE TOOLING UP OF THE ADDITIONAL PLANTS IS

THE MANUFACTURE OF EXPLOSIVES AND CHEMICALS IS BEING STEPPED UP. ONE EXPLOSIVES PLANT ALREADY IS IN OPERATION AND 14 OTHER CHEMICAL OR EXPLOSIVES PROJECTS ARE EXPECTED TO BE ON A PRODUCTION BASIS BY APRIL.

SEVERELY HANDICAPPED THOUGH SHE HAS BEEN IN SOME FIELDS NEW TO HER INDUSTRIAL SET-UP, CANADA REALLY WENT TO TOWN WHEN ENGLAND ASKED FOR AUTOMOTIVE EQUIPMENT. HER EXISTING AUTOMOBILE FACTORIES JUMPED INTO THEIR STRIDE; SHIPLOAD AFTER SHIPLOAD OF CANADIAN CARS AND TRUCKS DEPARTED FOR "AN UNANNOUNCED DESTINATION." AND ONE DAY CANADIANS GOT THEIR REWARD: THE BRITISH BLITZKRIEG AGAINST MUSSOLINI'S MEN IN NORTH AFRICA, AND THE NEWS THAT THOUSANDS OF CANADIAN-BUILT CARS AND TRUCKS HAD HELPED IN THE PUSH.

JAN 5 1941

TO DATE, CANADA HAS DELIVERED MORE THAN 30,000 UNITS OF AUTOMOTIVE EQUIPMENT TO THE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES OR TO BRITAIN. PRODUCTION HAS BEEN PUSHED PAST THE 400-UNITS-DAILY MARK, AND THE INDUSTRY IS BEING TOOLED UP FOR AN ULTIMATE OUTPUT OF 600 UNITS DAILY. FACTORIES ALSO ARE BEING TOOLED UP TO PRODUCE 2,000 HEAVY-DUTY TIRES AND TUBES DAILY. THE MACHINE TOOLS ARE BEING IMPORTED FROM THE UNITED STATES. TANKS WILL BE IN PRODUCTION SOON.

IT WILL BE SEEN FROM THE FOREGOING SUMMARY THAT CANADA'S EFFORT TO EXPAND HER WAR INDUSTRIES DEPENDS TO A LARGE EXTENT ON THE RAPIDITY WITH WHICH MACHINE TOOLS CAN BE OBTAINED FROM THE UNITED STATES. THERE IS ANOTHER FACTOR WHICH ALSO LIMITS THE PACE OF EXPANSION: THE SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS.

MEN WILLING TO WORK ARE STILL PLENTIFUL; THE PINCH IS IN FIELDS OF SPECIALIZED SKILL. TO OVERCOME THIS, THOUSANDS OF YOUTHS ARE BEING TRAINED FOR WORK IN WAR FACTORIES, AND A BEGINNING HAS BEEN MADE IN THE TRAINING OF WOMEN FOR SUCH WORK. AS YET, HOWEVER, COMPARATIVELY FEW WOMEN ARE BEING TAKEN INTO THE FACTORIES OR REPLACING MEN CALLED INTO THE ARMED FORCES.

THE MOST SERIOUS DIFFICULTIES IN THE SKILLED LABOR SITUATION ARE EXPECTED TO ARISE LATER, AS THE NEW WAR PLANTS NOW BEING BUILT OR TOOLED UP ACTUALLY GO INTO PRODUCTION.

SO LONG AS BRITAIN'S URGENT NEED IS MATERIALS, RATHER THAN MEN, FROM CANADA, IT IS BELIEVED PLENTY OF MAN-POWER WILL BE AVAILABLE FOR BOTH FACTORIES AND ARMED FORCES. IF, HOWEVER, THERE ARE DRASTIC NEW DEVELOPMENTS IN THE WAR OVERSEAS--FOR INSTANCE A REALLY LARGE-SCALE BRITISH OFFENSIVE ON THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE--THE DEMAND FOR NORTH AMERICAN MAN-POWER AS WELL AS NORTH AMERICAN MACHINERY IS LIKELY TO BECOME URGENT.

JAN 5 1941

IN THAT CASE THE PROBLEM OF APPORTIONING MAN-POWER BETWEEN INDUSTRY AND ARMED FORCES MAY GROW TO CRISIS PROPORTIONS, AND THE SUBSTITUTION OF WOMEN FOR MEN IN COUNTLESS OCCUPATIONS MAY BECOME IMPERATIVE.

ALREADY, UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF THE WAR BOOM, RENTS AND PRICES ARE SHOWING A TENDENCY TO ZOOM; A TENDENCY WHICH THE WAR-TIME PRICES AND TRADE BOARD, ARMED WITH WIDE POWERS, IS BATTLING AT EVERY STEP. TO FORESTALL A SIMILAR ZOOMING TENDENCY IN THE WAGE LEVEL, THE GOVERNMENT HAS PROPOSED A SYSTEM OF WAGE BONUSES, TO BE PAID WHERE THE COST OF LIVING HAS RISEN AT LEAST 5 PER CENT, BUT NOT TO BE CONSIDERED PERMANENT INCREASES IN PAY.

SPOKESMEN FOR LABOR HAVE IN GENERAL EXPRESSED WILLINGNESS TO COOPERATE WITH ANY GOVERNMENT EFFORT TOWARD STABILIZATION OF LIVING COSTS AND THE AVOIDANCE OF STRIKES FOR HIGHER PAY. BUT SOME ARE FEARFUL LEST EMPLOYERS TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THE WAR TO RECOVER LOST GROUND.

THE CANADIAN CONGRESS JOURNAL, OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE TRADES & LABOR CONGRESS OF CANADA, COMPLAINS THAT THE DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE BY ORDER-IN-COUNCIL ARBITRARILY EXTENDED THE WORKING DAY FROM 8 TO 10 HOURS AND THE WORKING WEEK TO 60 HOURS ON CONSTRUCTION JOBS CLASSIFIED AS EMERGENCY PROJECTS.

ASSERTING THAT CANADIAN WORKERS ARE WILLING TO COOPERATE IN ANY REASONABLE PLAN, THE JOURNAL POINTS OUT THAT THEY NEVERTHELESS "DO RESENT HAVING TAKEN FROM THEM WITHOUT SO MUCH AS 'BY YOUR LEAVE' CONDITIONS THAT THEY HAVE ESTABLISHED THROUGH LONG YEARS OF EFFORT."

WHILE THE URGENT NEED OF DIVERTING SKILLED LABOR FROM NON-ESSENTIAL INDUSTRIES TO WAR PRODUCTION IS CONSTANTLY STRESSED, AND HEAVY EXCISE TAXES ON LUXURY MANUFACTURES HAVE BEEN LEVIED IN AN EFFORT TO ENCOURAGE SUCH DIVERSION, THERE IS NO TALK OF COMPULSORY ALLOCATION OF SKILLED MEN TO KEY INDUSTRIES.

IN BOTH WAR PRODUCTION AND ARMED ACTIVE SERVICE THE VOLUNTEER SYSTEM STILL OBTAINS. NO CANADIAN IS COMPELLED TO WORK IN A WAR-ESSENTIAL FACTORY, AND ONLY VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS ARE SENT OVERSEAS. THE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING OF ONE MONTH WHICH NOW IS DEMANDED OF YOUNG MEN OF MILITARY AGE IS SPECIFICALLY LIMITED TO "CANADA OR THE TERRITORIAL WATERS THEREOF."

THE MORE THAN 13,000 OFFICERS AND MEN IN CANADA'S NAVY, THE 30,000 ENROLLED IN THE ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE, THE 50,000 CANADIAN TROOPS OVERSEAS AND THE MORE THAN 100,000 IN THE ACTIVE ARMY AT HOME, ARE ALL VOLUNTEERS. WHETHER CANADA CAN LONG ADHERE TO THIS VOLUNTEER SYSTEM STILL REMAINS TO BE SEEN.

FARMERS CALLED PREPARED

TO FILL THEIR SHARE

OF DEFENSE NEEDS

--

STOREHOUSES BULGING (880)

--

BY OVID A.MARTIN

(ADVANCE) WASHINGTON, JAN. 4-(AP)-AMERICAN FARMERS ARE FULLY PREPARED, ADMINISTRATION AGRICULTURAL LEADERS SAY, TO FULFILL THEIR RESPONSIBILITY UNDER THE DEFENSE PROGRAM OF SUPPLYING THE NATION AMPLY WITH THOSE FOOD AND FIBER RAW MATERIALS NORMALLY PRODUCED IN THIS COUNTRY.

UNLIKE INDUSTRY, PARTICULARLY THOSE BRANCHES WHICH MANUFACTURE MATERIALS NEEDED FOR DEFENSE, AGRICULTURE IS NOT BEING PRESSED TO EXPAND ITS OUTPUT OR PRODUCTION FACILITIES. THIS IS IN CONTRAST TO THE WORLD WAR PERIOD. THEN, FARMERS WERE URGED TO PLOW UP PASTURELAND FOR FOOD CROPS.

IN 1941, PLANTING WILL BE RESTRICTED UNDER FEDERAL CROP CONTROL PROGRAMS. THERE IS A POSSIBILITY THOSE PROGRAMS MAY BE EVEN MORE RIGID FOR SOME CROPS THAN AT ANY TIME SINCE THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION TOOK OVER IN 1933.

ONLY IN THE CASE OF A FEW PRODUCTS, SUCH AS MEAT ANIMALS, DAIRY

30.34—6799
30.34—6799

PRODUCTS, POULTRY AND SOME TRUCK CROPS, WILL LIMITED INCREASES BE FAVORED.

CONTINUATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION CONTROL SHOULD NOT CAUSE CONSUMERS OR DEFENSE LEADERS ANY WORRY, SAYS SECRETARY WICKARD.

"AMERICA'S LAND RESOURCES ARE AMPLE," HE SAYS. "THEY ARE BEING SAFEGUARDED BY FARMERS AND FOREST OWNERS WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS. ON THE LAND THERE ARE MILLIONS OF FARM FAMILIES AS SKILLFUL IN TURNING OUT CROPS AND LIVESTOCK AS ANY FARM FAMILIES IN THE WORLD."

THESE FAMILIES, HE ADDS, HAVE PRODUCED "ABUNDANCE" THIS YEAR AND IN PAST YEARS.

"THIS ABUNDANCE FROM PAST YEARS IS STORED UNDER THE EVER-NORMAL GRANARY. THERE IS NO DANGER OF DEFENSE BEING BOTTLENECKED BY LACK OF FOOD AND FIBER."

JAN 5 1941

STOREHOUSES, ELEVATORS AND WAREHOUSES ARE BULGING WITH COTTON, WHEAT, CORN, TOBACCO, LARD, FRUITS AND MANY OTHER FARM PRODUCTS FOR WHICH THERE ARE NO READY MARKETS AT PREVAILING PRICES. THE BULK OF THESE SURPLUSES ARE STORED UNDER GOVERNMENT LOANS TO PRODUCERS. LOSS OF FOREIGN MARKETS AS A RESULT OF THE WAR AND INCREASED PRODUCTION ELSEWHERE HAVE CONTRIBUTED TO THIS ACCUMULATION.

FEDERAL FARM OFFICIALS STATE THAT SO LONG AS THESE RESERVES EXIST, THERE IS NO NEED FOR EXPANDING PRODUCTION.

CONSEQUENTLY, NEXT SEASON'S PLANTING GOALS, AS SET UP UNDER CROP CONTROL PROGRAMS, WILL BE 60,000,000 TO 65,000,000 ACRES FOR WHEAT, COMPARED WITH A NORMAL ACREAGE OF 70,000,000; 88,000,000 TO 90,000,000 ACRES FOR CORN, COMPARED WITH A NORMAL OF ABOUT 102,000,000; 27,000,000 ACRES FOR COTTON, COMPARED WITH A NORMAL OF ABOUT 37,000,000.

CORRESPONDINGLY RESTRICTED PLANTING GOALS HAVE BEEN ESTABLISHED FOR TOBACCO, RICE, PEANUTS AND SEVERAL OTHER MINOR CROPS.

AS UNDER PREVIOUS YEARS' PROGRAMS, THESE ACREAGE GOALS WILL BE APPORTIONED AMONG FARMERS ON THE BASIS OF A FORMULA IN THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938. WHILE FARMERS ARE NOT REQUIRED TO ABIDE BY SUCH ALLOTMENTS, ONLY THOSE WHO DO SO ARE ELIGIBLE FOR SUBSIDIES AUTHORIZED BY THAT ACT.

ADMINISTRATION FARM OFFICIALS HAVE INDICATED THEY WOULD ASK CONGRESS TO APPROPRIATE AT LEAST $760,000,000 FOR SUCH SUBSIDIES--WHICH WAS THE AMOUNT MADE AVAILABLE FOR 1940. COUPLED WITH THE PLANTING RESTRICTIONS WILL BE MARKETING QUOTAS FOR COTTON AND TOBACCO AND POSSIBLY WHEAT AND CORN.

JAN 5 1941

PRODUCERS OF COTTON AND TOBACCO ALREADY HAVE VOTED TO AUTHORIZE THE GOVERNMENT TO IMPOSE QUOTAS. PROPOSALS FOR QUOTAS ON WHEAT AND CORN PROBABLY WILL BE SUBMITTED TO GROWER REFERENDA, IF NEXT SEASON'S PRODUCTION PROSPECTS EQUAL OR EXCEED THIS YEAR'S OUTTURNS. APPROVAL BY TWO-THIRDS OF THOSE VOTING WOULD BE REQUIRED. UNDER QUOTAS, STIFF PENALTIES ARE ASSESSED AGAINST FARMERS SELLING MORE THAN THEIR ALLOTED SHARES.

THE PROBLEM OF FINANCING SUBSIDIES AUTHORIZED BY THE FARM ACT IS TROUBLING FARM LEADERS BOTH IN AND OUTSIDE THE GOVERNMENT.

SOME EXPECT CONGRESS TO BE UNDER PRESSURE TO REDUCE FARM-AID APPROPRIATIONS BECAUSE OF THE DEMAND OF THE DEFENSE PROGRAM UPON THE TREASURY.

SOME LEADERS WOULD HAVE CONGRESS RE-ENACT PROCESSING TAXES ON MAJOR FARM COMMODITIES TO FINANCE THE SUBSIDIES. THERE ARE OTHERS WHO URGE

ENACTMENT OF NEW LEGISLATION WHICH WOULD AUTHORIZE THE GOVERNMENT TO FIX FARM PRICES AT HIGHER LEVELS. A THIRD GROUP WOULD EMPLOY COMMODITY LOAN PROVISIONS OF THE PRESENT FARM LAW TO PEG FARM PRICES AT HIGHER LEVELS, THEREBY REDUCING OR ELIMINATING THE SUBSIDIES.

THE ADMINISTRATION ITSELF HAS TAKEN NO PUBLIC STAND ON THESE PROPOSALS, BUT SECRETARY WICKARD HAS INDICATED HE DOES NOT FAVOR PRICE-FIXING OR HIGHER GOVERNMENT LOANS.

THE BELIEF HAS BEEN EXPRESSED IN SOME MARKET QUARTERS THAT INCREASED EMPLOYMENT GROWING OUT OF THE DEFENSE PROGRAM WOULD RESULT IN AN IMPROVED DEMAND AND HIGHER PRICES FOR FARM COMMODITIES. FEDERAL FARM OFFICIALS SAY SUCH MAY BE THE CASE FOR THOSE PRODUCTS OF WHICH THE GREAT BULK IS CONSUMED IN THIS COUNTRY.

IN THIS CATEGORY ARE DAIRY AND POULTRY PRODUCTS, VEGETABLE CROPS, SOME FRUITS, MEATS AND WOOL.

JAN 5 1941

BUT LITTLE IMPROVEMENT IN THE DEMAND AND PRICE OF COTTON, TOBACCO, WHEAT, CORN AND RICE IS EXPECTED BY THE FARM OFFICIALS. THESE PRODUCTS AMERICA'S NORMAL EXPORT CROPS, ARE LARGELY DEPENDENT UPON WORLD INFLUENCES FOR THEIR PRICES. WITH FOREIGN MARKETS RESTRICTED BY THE WAR, THERE ARE NO PROSPECTS, OFFICIALS EXPLAIN, FOR ANY MATERIAL IMPROVEMENTS IN PRICES OF THESE COMMODITIES.

CONSEQUENTLY, OFFICIALS DECLARE, THE GOVERNMENT MUST CONTINUE TO SUPPLEMENT INCOMES OF PRODUCERS OF THESE CROPS WITH SUBSIDIES, IF THEIR ECONOMIC SITUATION IS NOT TO BECOME MORE DIFFICULT.

SECRETARY WICKARD HAS INDICATED THE AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT WILL DEVOTE MORE ATTENTION IN 1941 TO THE PROBLEM OF THE RURAL UNEMPLOYED.

"AGRICULTURE," HE SAYS, "HAS MORE MANPOWER THAN IS NEEDED TO PRODUCE ALL THE CROPS AND LIVESTOCK REQUIRED. THERE ARE YOUNG MEN FOR THE ARMED FORCES. THERE ARE YOUNG MEN AND OLDER MEN FOR FACTORY WORK, IF THE NATION NEEDS THEM."

TO MAKE USE OF THIS SURPLUS MANPOWER, ADMINISTRATION FARM LEADERS HAVE BEEN URGING DEFENSE AGENCIES TO LOCATE NEW PLANTS, WHENEVER POSSIBLE, IN RURAL AREAS.

SOME AGRICULTURAL LEADERS ARE ADVOCATING INAUGURATION OF A RURAL WORKS PROGRAM TO PROVIDE LOW-INCOME AND UNEMPLOYED FARMERS WITH SUPPLEMENTAL EMPLOYMENT IN SOIL AND FORESTRY CONSERVATION WORK. OTHERS SUGGEST A RURAL HOUSING PROGRAM.

WICKARD HAS PUT AIDES TO WORK ON THE PROBLEM OF EXTENDING SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS TO AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.

"JUST AS AGRICULTURE IN GENERAL IS ENTITLED TO EQUALITY WITH INDUSTRY, AGRICULTURAL WORKERS ARE ENTITLED TO THE SAME PRIVILEGES AND SECURITY AS INDUSTRIAL WORKERS," HE ASSERTS.

"THEY HAVE JUST AS MUCH MORAL CLAIM (AS INDUSTRIAL WORKERS) TO A SHIARE IN UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE, OLD AGE RETIREMENT BENEFITS AND PENSIONS, AND MINIMUM STANDARDS FOR WAGES AND MAXIMUM STANDARDS FOR HOURS."

FUEL OIL STORED THERE
SECRETLY, REPORT (600)

Dec 31

BY JOHN LEAR

(ADVANCE) MEDELLIN, COLOMBIA-(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)-THE FIRST ACTUAL WORKING TEST OF THE HAVANA AGREEMENT AMONG THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS TO CO-OPERATE IN STOPPING ANY FOREIGN PENETRATION OF THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE HAS BEEN CARRIED OUT SUCCESSFULLY BY THE UNITED STATES AND COLOMBIA.

IT CONCERNS TWO LITTLE COLOMBIAN ISLANDS WHICH LIE NEAR THE PANAMA CANAL AND WHICH ARE REPORTED TO BE USED BY GERMANS AS SECRET STORAGE POINTS FOR FUEL OIL.

IT MAY EVENTUALLY LEAD TO THE ISLANDS' USE AS AN INTER-AMERICAN DEFENSE BASE.

THE STORY, KEPT SECRET BY BOTH GOVERNMENTS TO AVOID INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL REPERCUSSIONS, CAME TO ME BY LETTER FROM THE ISLANDS--SAN ANDRES Y PROVIDENCIA--DURING PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S RECENT CARIBBEAN DEFENSE CRUISE. I HAVE SINCE CONFIRMED IT FROM AN UNQUESTIONABLE SOURCE AND CAN REPORT THE FACTS AS THESE:

1. DURING HIS CARIBBEAN CRUISE OF 1939, PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT STOPPED AT THE ISLANDS UNANNOUNCED. HE DID NOT LEAVE HIS SHIP, BUT IT CIRCLED OFFSHORE FOR SEVERAL DAYS.

2. SOMETIME AFTER THAT, TWO UNITED STATES YOUTHS IN A SAILING YACHT STOPPED BY, STAYING A LITTLE WHILE, AND WENT HOME TOWRITE ABOUT INFLUENTIAL GERMAN-BORN COLOMBIANS THEY SAID THEY HAD SEEN, AND STORAGE POINTS THEY SAID THOSE GERMAN-COLOMBIANS HAD FOR FUEL OIL SMUGGLED INTO THE ISLANDS IN SMALL BOATS.

ISLANDERS I HAVE TALKED TO HAVE CONFIRMED THAT THE GERMAN-COLOMBIANS ARE THERE, THAT THEY ARE INFLUENTIAL, AND THAT FUEL OIL IS BEING SMUGGLED

3. A FEW WEEKS BEFORE PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S 1940 CARRIBEAN CRUISE, A SHIP OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY AND A UNITED STATES WARPLANE CAME TO THE ISLANDS AND STAYED QUITE A WHILE. THEY SURVEYED THE ISLANDS FROM THE SEAAND FROM THE AIR, FINISHING UP ABOUT A WEEK BEFORE THE RECENT HURRICANE WHICH FLATTENED A NUMBER OF THE ISLANDS' HOMES.

THE SURVEYERS TOLD THE ISLANDERS THEY WERE STUDYING THE ISLANDS' VALUE AS A POSSIBLE DEFENSE BASE. ONE LETTER THAT CAME TO ME SAID THAT A SITE FOR A BASE ACTUALLY HAD BEEN CHOSEN AND THAT THE LETTER WRITER EXPECTED HE WOULD HAVE TO MOVE HIS HOME.

THE SOURCE WHICH CONFIRMED THE FACT OF THE SURVEY DID NOT DENY THAT A SITE HAD BEEN PICKED FOR A POSSIBLE BASE. BUT HE EXPRESSED DOUBT WHETHER A BASE WOULD BE STABLISHED. HE POINTED OUT THAT THE ISLANDS ARE FAR INSIDE THE PRESENT CARIBBEAN DEFENSE CIRCLE WHICH BEGINS AT CUBA AND SWINGS OVER PUERTO RICO TO TRINIDAD. HE OBSERVED FURTHER THAT THE ISLANDS ARE SO SMALL AND SO NEAR THE CANAL---218 MILES ---THAT THEY COULD BE SECONDARY DEFENSES AT BEST.

JAN 5 1941

BUT THE SURVEY HAS BEEN MADE, WITH COLOMBIA'S FULL COOPERATION, AND IF A BASE SHOULD BE NEEDED IT WOULD NOT TAKE LONG TO PUT THERE MEANWHILE, THE DATA THE TWO REPUBLICS HAVE OBTAINED ABOUT CONDITIONS ON THE ISLANDS, PLUS THE NATIVES' KNOWLEDGE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF A BASE, ARE NOT DEEMED ENCOURAGING TO WHATEVER ACTIVITIES NAZIS MAY BE CARRYING ON THERE.

THE PEOPLE OF THE ISLANDS, PREDOMINANTELY NEGRO, HAVE TWO STRONG

TIES OF FRIENDSHIP WITH THE UNITED STATES IN ADDITION TO THE BOND OF SYMPATHY WHICH NOW EXISTS BETWEEN "THE STATES" AND THE COLOMBIAN REPUBLICAN OF WHICH THE ISLANDS ARE A PART. FIRST, THEY SPEAK ENGLISH RATHER THAN SPANISH. SECOND, THEY SELL GREAT AMOUNTS OF THEIR COCONUTS AND TROPICAL FRUIT CROPS TO THE AREA AROUND THE PANAMA CANAL.

THEIR ENGLISH TONGUE IS AN HISTORIC ANOMOLOY, FOR SAN ANDRES Y PROVIDENCIA IN THE 15TH AND 16TH CENTURIES WERE SPANISH FORTRESSES GUARDING THE MINERAL WEALTH THAT FLOWED FROM PERU AND MEXICO ACROSS THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA. THE OLD TOWERS STILL STAND ON SANTA CATALINA, THE DOT OF LAND WHICH LIES 15 MILES NORTHWEST OF PROVIDENCIA.

PROVIDENCIA ITSELF IS ROUND, 9 MILES IN CIRCUMFERENCE, PROTECTED ON ALL SIDES BY REEFS. ITS MOUNTAINOUS CENTER IS SURROUNDED BY A NARROW CIRCLE OF LEVEL BEACH.

JAN 5 1941

FIFTY-ONE MILES TO THE SOUTHWEST IS SAN ANDRES, A NARROW FINGER OF LAND NINE MILES LONG, POINTING ROUGHLY NORTH AND SOUTH. ON THE WEST, ITS ROCKY COAST DROPS STRAIGHT DOWN INTO EIGHT FATHOMS OF WATER. ON THE EAST, IT IS SHIELDED BY TWO SHARP REEFS WHICH OVERLAP SO THAT BOATS CAN ENTER SAFELY ONLY IN ONE CHANNEL THREE FOURTHS OF A MILE WIDE. THE ISLAND IS SO FLAT IT CANNOT BE SEEN ON CLEAR DAYS FROM A KEY FIFTEEN MILES DISTANT. AS AN AIRFIELD, IT WOULD BE WELL-NIGH PERFECT.

Bardia Falls to British Assault; 25,000 Italians Taken Prisoner; Advance Units Cut Tobruk Road

Italians Run Down Flag After Two-Day Battle; Commander a Prisoner

Total Fascist Loss For Month 80,000

Australians and R. A. F. Share Triumph in Final Smash Through Forts

By The Associated Press

CAIRO, Jan. 5.—British troops captured the Italian stronghold of Bardia, Libya, today and seized more than 25,000 Fascists, including their commander, Gen. Annibale Bergonzoli, it was announced officially here tonight.

"All resistance at Bardia ceased at 1:30 p. m. (6:30 a. m., E. S. T.) today," the British general headquarters communique said. ANNIBALE

Another Italian corps commander and four senior generals were captured in addition to Gen. Bergonzoli. Known as "Electric Whiskers," he commanded Italian legionnaires in the Spanish civil war on the side of the Spanish Nationalists.

"All stores and equipment are now in our hands," the communique added. "It is not yet possible to make a full count, but prisoners so far captured exceed 25,000. Among other booty captured or destroyed are forty-five light and five medium tanks."

[The Italian people were prepared yesterday for the fall of Bardia by Giovanni Ansaldo, noted editor, who, in his weekly broadcast to the army, said the base might have fallen while he was speaking. The Italian high command communique said merely that "a base" at Bardia had fallen.

[The Fascist forces in Albania, although reinforced recently by troops from Italy, continued yesterday to encounter reverses there, The United Press reported. Greek troops were driving them back upon the Port of Valona and capturing strategic positions, and the Italians were said to have suffered heavy losses in dead, wounded and prisoners.]

Fascist Loss Totals 80,000

Capture of 25,000 Italians in the Bardia garrison means that Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, the Italian African commander, now desperately strengthening his defenses at Tobruk, seventy miles to the west, has lost some 80,000 of his force of 250,000 in one month's time, British military observers here said.

Dispatches from the front said the Italian flag on the government house in Bardia was lowered at sunset—the first indication to observers outside the town that this last Italian post threatening the Egyptian border fifteen miles to the east had been removed.

The next major objective at Tobruk already has been heavily bombed by British warships and the Royal Air Force. The road between Bardia and Tobruk had been cut by the Army of the Nile to bottle up all of the Bardia garrison, which had been told by Premier Benito Mussolini to hold the ring of concrete and steel forts at all costs.

Australian shock troops preceded by tanks and supported by the R. A. F. began the final assault on Bardia two days ago. The Italians had been encircled and had been under land, sea and air fire for twenty days.

Two Gaps Opened Way

British military informants said the victory was due to meticulous preparations made during the eighteen days before the final assault. Australian sappers did vital work before the final assault, launched at dawn Friday by their infantry. Night after night they had slipped through the darkness to locate anti-tank traps and mines. They had blown up the sides of tank traps in order to fill them in, and had exploded the land mines to open the way for the tank charge.

Then two great gaps made in the outer Italian defense line allowed passage for British mechanized units led by a famous Hussar regiment. Running interference for the Australian infantrymen, they rushed through the holes, wheeled around inside Italian front-line positions and put them out of action from the rear.

The British said the Italians had put up a desperate fight in this first stage and that most of the British casualties occurred on this first break-through. The British, however, said their total casualties for the two-day assault were slight.

By the end of the first day Australian brigades had penetrated the outer ring of fortresses to a depth of nearly two miles on a six-mile front, and British mechanized units went much farther the first night.

The total number of prisoners captured was about 6,000 at this stage. They included the Italian brigade commander, Nardinucchi, and an Italian intelligence officer named Maj. Baringo.

One Italian baker taken said he baked for as many as 40,000 men, but the British admitted he may have been excited. Nevertheless, the garrison defending the city exceeded the reported 20,000. As proved by the garrison's final collapse, more than 25,000 prisoners were taken. But the extent of Italian casualties was not known immediately.

Reports reaching Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell's headquarters here said the last Italians to hold out were in isolated pockets scattered over the cliff tops dominating the town.

Italians holding the northern positions were the last to be attacked. When Australian infantry charged across the narrow, dried river bed and British tanks thundered through from the west, many of them surrendered and thousands more were captured.

Mussolini Ordered Stand

Military sources here said the British required only two days to break into what Italian propagandists had called "an impregnable stronghold." Prisoners said Premier Mussolini himself had ordered the garrison to hold out and sent them a stream of encouraging messages but sent none of the reinforcements they needed.

As details of the siege began filtering through, it appeared evident that the British had been masters of the situation on all fronts, land, sea and air.

In addition to raining bombs on Bardia almost incessantly, the R. A. F. had kept up constant raids on all Italian airdromes within a 300-mile radius, effectively preventing any serious opposition from the air. Military observers said the operations at Bardia differed from those at Sidi Barrani, but that both were carried out with almost no aircraft or ground equipment losses.

Italian artillery fire grew heavy just before dawn Saturday, the British said, and Australian troops waiting for another charge were only 700 yards from the first Italian positions.

Hard fighting throughout Saturday rolled back the Italians and resulted in the capture of additional thousands, dispatches said. Again the Australians did the major part in land charges and in cleaning up machine-gun nests.

Every type of fighting occurred, hand-to-hand bayonet battles, tank collisions, and machine-gun duels. Throughout this din, the British said, the fleet offshore laid down a withering barrage on Italian positions ahead of the advancing British while the R. A. F. fought off Italian bombers overhead and dive-bombed the Fascists.

Air Escape Cut Off

The British believed the R. A. F. prevented the escape of Gen. Bergonzoli, known as "Electric Whiskers" because of his fiery beard, and other Italian officers Friday night when five Italian planes landed at Bardia Airfield. Those planes never took off again, front dispatches said, because British fighter planes swooped and riddled them with machine-gun fire.

AUSTRALIAN YELLS RING OUT IN BATTLE

Troops From Antipodes Lead Way Into Besieged Bardia —Fight Hand to Hand

ED. KENNEDY

By The Associated Press.

WITH BRITISH FORCES, at Bardia, Libya, Jan. 5—Yelling Australian shock troops who came 7,000 miles for this great desert battle against Premier Mussolini's legions triumphantly entered this gateway to Eastern Libya today after a fierce two-day final assault.

British tanks and mechanized cavalry that supported the Australians rumbled into Bardia with them. These armored British units, which had distinguished themselves in the rout of the Italians from Egypt, also played a vital part in smashing this great Italian stronghold, opening the way for a drive on Tobruk, seventy miles to the west.

The Australians, long itching for this action, fully lived up to the reputation of their shock-troop fathers in the World War, British officers said.

The first Australian units and tanks fought their way into Bardia at sunset yesterday. From a cliff outside the port town one could see the minaret of Bardia's mosque and attacking units working toward it like a procession of toy soldiers.

Guns Unable to Stem Tide

Thousands of Italians entrenched in gullies surrounding the town fired on them, and the explosions of Fascist artillery at times screened the creeping figures from view. One could see the flashes from the Italian batteries, but the British tanks and Australians kept moving. When they got near the batteries the Italians left—some in flight, some to surrender.

Those manning the Italian batteries near Bardia's rock walls scaled the walls and ran down the streets of the town. They surrendered later—"under safer circumstances," as a British officer put it.

A brilliant sunset bathed the ancient African town and thousands of prisoners in long lines marched to the rear as fast as they were rounded up by the Australians. Here were the same resigned faces and gray-green uniformed columns of men that one saw in Egypt three weeks ago. They have become a familiar sight in the desert since the British counter-offensive began less than a month ago.

There was the usual proportion of one sentry to about 500 prisoners. None tried to escape. Five hundred Italians were routed from one gulch redoubt.

Some had sought refuge in natural caves. A correspondent saw 2,000 leave one cave, ordered to march by a single Australian officer armed with a revolver and five infantrymen armed with rifles and only one Bren gun.

Garrison Put at 30,000

A larger Italian garrison defended this vital port city than had been estimated. The original estimate was 20,000, but that has been revised upward beyond 30,000 now, and most of them are prisoners.

They defended a strongly fortified perimeter that formed an arc ten miles from end to end along the seacoast and running inland about four miles at the deepest point. This system of concrete and steel cracked like an eggshell under the forty-eight-hour bombardment by artillery, the Royal Air Force and British warships operating off shore.

The inner defenses were taken in many cases by bitter hand-to-hand fighting, but casualties were not believed to be heavy on either side. The British say their casualties are light and those of the Italians "not heavy," since the Italians almost invariably surrendered rather than resist.

The first breach in the outer Italian defenses was made by Australian engineers, who cut through the barbed wire before dawn Friday. This was on the southwest arc of the ring.

Local resistance was overpowered with grenades and bayonet combat. Anti-tank traps were filled in by explosions and mines were exploded by thrown stones.

Guns and Planes Pave Way

The full cry of artillery and R. A. F. explosions had preceded this dawn attack, and then all was ready for the curtain to lift.

At dawn British tanks whirled into the breach. They fanned out along the southern rim of the Wadi Girfani fortifications, in a dried-up river bed, and raced to the seacoast. This drove a wedge between the north and south parts of the sector.

Australian infantrymen raced into the openings loaded with grenades and machine-guns. They quickly cleaned out nests of "terrified Italians," as they said later, and detached some of their forces to lead prisoners to the rear.

By nightfall the troops had occupied most of the southern half of the region, and dived into the maze of gullies in the area for overnight protection.

Tank operations consisted of constant feinting and wheeling in the rear of Italian positions. British officers said that they had expected stiffer resistance from Italian tanks, but that only a few entered the action. Of those that did on this first day, six were shattered by British guns. Italian artillery appeared to be relied upon mostly by the defenders.

All yesterday morning the Australian clean-up of the southern half of the Italian arc continued and by nightfall everything was set for the final push on the town itself.

Use Captured Munitions

As the British had done before in Egypt, they immediately used Italian munitions and guns they had captured to complement their own weapons. Australians already were carrying dispatches to the rear on Italian motorcycles, moving supplies in Italian trucks, camping in Italian dugouts, eating Italian food, and even wearing Italian clothes.

These shouting troops from "Down Under" also had time to load themselves up with Italian souvenirs—revolvers, binoculars, sabers and military decorations picked up from the battlefield.

Theirs was the enthusiasm and pent-up energy of months of waiting in desert camps for real action, and they made the most of it. They yelled and sang. Their favorite song was "We're Off to See the Wizard of Oz." You could hear them singing this song even after the Italian artillery opened up against them.

Bayonet charges played an important part in the capture, but the Australians said that not many Italians fought it out. The appearance of these gleaming blades usually resulted in surrender, they said.

Privates took as many as thirty prisoners individually by merely whirling their bayonets, they related.

These troops had an eerie appearance, with their knitted cowls protecting them against standstorms, and, as in the World War, the Australians did not consider it enough to obtain objectives set for them, but usually charged on to gain additional ground.

Some Instances of Valor

Italian resistance, the British said, mostly was lackadaisical, but there were some instances of unusual valor. One Italian officer kept shooting his revolver, they said, until it was shot from his hand. Others resisted to the end.

A correspondent came across one group of exhausted Australians sprawled on the sand and rocks of the Wadi fortress, which they had taken. They had been told to get a rest there. They grunted and grinned and asked:

"What do you think of the way we fight?"

Others chimed in with:

"Don't forget those British tanks. When you begin to doubt your own confidence, those tanks give you a lift."

Australians were not the only soldiers given to song. Correspondents watched singing Italian prisoners marching miles to truck depots, whence they were to be taken to concentration camps.

Several fires were blazing when correspondents entered Bardia. Volleys of gunfire also echoed in the gullies to the north, where other prisoners and snipers were being rounded up. There was no sniping in the town itself.

Half of the little white buildings in the town were wrecked. The Fascist headquarters was in ruins, but the Government House was only slightly damaged.

Only a small British company held the town. Most of the tanks already were rumbling out of the city to make ready for new operations.

London Regards Italy's African Army As Smashed

London, Jan. 5 (AP)—Although the fall of Bardia had not been announced here officially tonight, a British victory there generally was taken for granted and military sources said the capture of 25,000 Italians in Bardia meant that Italy's army for invading Egypt "no longer exists and has disappeared in less than a month."

The main advantages to Britain of Bardia's capture, a spokesman said, would be that another small port would be available for the British navy's use, simplifying the problem of supply for advancing British forces.

Salum, another port on the Egyptian side of the frontier, he added, thus would be freed from shelling from Bardia. The British, furthermore, expect to procure better water supplies at Bardia than at any point along the coast between there and Mersa Matruh.

What It Means To Italy

For Italians, fall of Bardia would mean loss of their forward base for attacking Egypt, the spokesman said, as the nearest troops they now have available are at Tobruk, seventy miles farther west, in Libya.

He pointed out that by a decree dated January 19, 1939, Libya was declared part of the national territory of Italy. Therefore, he said, by loss of Bardia, which would be the first township captured by the British in Libya, the Italians would suffer the loss of a town which in their eyes is part of Italy.

Libya's Easternmost Port

Bardia, being the easternmost port in Libya—only about ten miles by air from the Egyptian frontier—was, therefore, an important Italian supply base.

Its well-protected port, which was much used by German submarines before 1916 when the Italians occupied the town, can accommodate medium-sized ships. Located there are an airfield, gasoline storage depot, wireless station and machine shops.

'Free French' Marines Report Libya Victory

Said to Have Cut Road From Bardia to Tobruk

LONDON, Jan. 5 (AP)—A detachment of French Marines, part of Gen. Charles de Gaulle's "Free French" forces, was reported tonight to have cut the road from Bardia to Tobruk, Italian bases in Libya. This word of the first major action by "Free French" in the Bardia sector reached de Gaullist circles in London.

The "Free French" press service announced that the marine detachment had taken a "very active part in the British advance against the Italians." It said: "This detachment, which at the time was patrolling west of positions still held by the Italians at Bardia, has succeeded in cutting the road from Bardia to Tobruk."

In the Sudan, the announcement added, several detachments of Spahis (native cavalry with French officers) had "various encounters with enemy patrols, which were rapidly scattered and left a number of dead."

SAYS ITALIANS WON'T TRY TO MINIMIZE LOSS

Declares "Considerable" Success Must Be Conceded To British

Ansaldo Cites Garrison's Resistance As Admonition To Nation

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 5—Giovanni Ansaldo, authoritative Fascist editor, broadcast to the nation today that the fall of Bardia could be expected at any time and this will be a "sad piece of news for us."

"Four hours are enough to decide the fate of Bardia," said Ansaldo, who is editor of Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano's newspaper, Il Telegrafo, of Leghorn.

"While we are speaking to you, are (Gen. Annibale) Bergonzoli and his men still holding out against the English? It may be that they have given way before the preponderant masses of English mechanized forces, their fleet and their artillery."

Still Fighting, Army Says

Ansaldo spoke at 6 P. M., but before he gloomily suggested that the town, now under siege for twenty days, might be about to capitulate, the Italian high command had insisted the battle there was still raging, although "some strongholds fell into enemy hands."

For General Bergonzoli and his men Ansaldo voiced the highest praise. Their resistance, he said, was giving Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's other troops time to form new positions to halt further British advances into Libya.

The editor said the Italians had too much respect for themselves and their army to try to pretend that the loss of Bardia would be only a small victory for the British or try to characterize it as a strategic error.

"A Sad Piece Of News"

"The habit of minimizing every enemy success is one which we do not like," he said. "If Bardia has fallen, this will be a new British success, local if you like, but still a considerable one and a sad piece of news for us."

Ansaldo, who makes regular Sunday radio broadcasts to the army, declared that Bardia, while well defended, was never assumed by the Italians to be as strong as the Maginot Line, and added that Italian resistance there had shown the combative capacity of the Italian army was unshaken.

"Whatever the fate of Bardia, whatever may be the hour of its fall, let these troops be thanked for the example they have given us," he said.

"An Admonition To All"

The strong resistance of General Bergonzoli, Ansaldo continued, was "an admonition to us—an admonition to all who on this Sunday have not been facing thoughts of what is going on in the desert.

"Woe to all those who, 20 years old, have not felt shame at not being down by the side of their comrades at Bardia to hold with them.

"Woe to all those of 40 years finding themselves at home surrounded by children who have not felt a sense of remorse at not having been found with arms in their hands as in the times of their youth.

"They Are Not Worthy"

"Woe to all of those who, with war bulletins like those of today, felt able to amuse themselves and do not feel that today, at least while the fighting is going on in Bardia, they should have spent five minutes in silence.

"They are not Italians worthy of such a name."

Ansaldo's broadcast was the first intimation that most Italians had that Bardia might be taken.

The high command's communique said the fighting was growing more violent.

Yesterday, the communique said, Italian planes machine-gunned and bombed the British in various localities, "putting out of action and destroying armored motor vehicles," and also "repeatedly bombed enemy naval forces" and mechanized columns.

A British "Fiasco," Says Rome

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 5—The Italian radio said tonight in a broadcast picked up by CBS that the "British offensive in North Africa has failed."

The offensive was undertaken because "it was calculated that if the Italians could be given a few hard knocks . . . Italy would be tipped over the edge into revolution," the radio added. "The internal front of Italy not only has not collapsed but it has been strengthened. Consequently . . . the great British offensive has proved a fiasco."

Rumania Cut Off as Russia Calls Envoys

Moscow Reported Warning Berlin as Nazis Mass Along Danube Frontier

Mobilization Veiled By Wall of Silence

Troops Near Yugoslavia, Which Is Told It Can Be a 'Sweden' if It Behaves

By The Associated Press

BUDAPEST, Jan. 5.—Rumania was cut off completely from the outside world tonight as the Soviet Russian Ministers to Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Rumania and Hungary headed toward Moscow for a conference with Kremlin leaders on the establishment of Rumania as a vast Nazi military camp. All international telephone communications with Rumania were banned. Even fast international trains were stopped at the frontier.

Fehind this wall of silence Germany's Balkan army was consolidating its position along the Danube facing Bulgaria, along the entire Russian frontier and in cities within a few miles of Yugoslavia.

Although the new communications ban affected even diplomatic telephone calls, reports brought across the Danube to the Bulgarian town of Ruse said the German Army was contending with mounting Rumanian disorders, which began with widespread sabotage by railroad employees in the so-called Communist wing of the Rumanian Iron Guard.

Russian Warning Reported

While interest centered in the recall of the four Russian ministers to Moscow for consultation over the Nazi Balkan penetration, it was reported in Soviet circles that the Kremlin already had warned Berlin against a "step which might seriously endanger good relations between the two countries."

Before the communications edict went into effect diplomatic reports from Bucharest said strong Nazi motorized columns had arrived at Giurgiu, directly across the Danube from Ruse, with considerable bridge-building equipment and a large corps of engineers.

Rumanian railroad autnorities were ordered by the Germans to keep the line from Bucharest to Constanta, Rumania's Black Sea port, in perfect condition for possible emergency use. Bucharest diplomatic reports also said the Rumanians, under Nazi guidance, had mined the Danube at Galatz, which recently has seen several frontier clashes between the Rumanians and Russians.

Forty Troop Trains Daily

The presence of German troops at Arad and Timisoara, in southwestern Rumania near the Yugoslav frontier, caused nervousness in near-by Belgrade. However, German quarters in Belgrade were said to admit openly that Yugoslavia would be treated as "another Sweden if she behaved."

With forty troop-laden trains moving daily through Hungary toward Rumania, the summons to the Soviet ministers was the first concrete evidence of extraordinary Russian interest. The German movements have been under way on a large scale for the last week.

Soviet quarters in Belgrade declared the homegoing was linked with "new military developments in Rumania and Hungary, and German troop movements toward Dobrudja."

The call to the four envoys was said to have come soon after the Bulgarian Communist party distributed leaflets in Sofia, saying: "Soviet Russia will not allow a single German soldier to set foot on Bulgaria."

Other reports said Germany, planning to go through Bulgaria to Turkey and Greece but not sure of Russian intentions, would have the Rumanian and Hungarian armies on guard on the Russian frontier.

Diplomatic dispatches from Bucharest, the Rumanian capital, said all Rumanian towns on the Danube facing Bulgaria in the 250-mile stretch between Turnu-Severin and Giurgiu had been emptied to permit billeting of German troops.

Connection Suspected

A connection was also seen between the journeys of the envoys and the current visit to Vienna of Bulgaria's Premier, Bogdan Philoff, ostensibly to consult an eminent physician.

Philoff, who was accompanied by the German Minister to Bulgaria—ostensibly as a gesture of courtesy—was said in Bulgarian circles to have gone to Vienna upon "invitation" from Berlin.

Bulgarians feel their country has been given a choice between permitting passage of German troops to Greece and Turkey or facing a full-dress invasion by Nazi troops.

Bulgaria is reported making unspecified military preparations, but the odds are that she would permit German passage after protest.

Military Preparations

From all other Balkan capitals came reports of military preparations, including news from Ankara that Turkey expects to hold her conscripts under arms another year because of "exceptional circumstances."

Advices from Salonika said Greece was calling more men to the army.

It was reported from Yugoslavia that reserve officers there were being held beyond their scheduled demobilization time.

Other reports said the Rumanian army would have 300,000 men under arms by January 20, under orders of German army commanders.

Nazis Continue March

The massive German military transport continued across Hungary into Rumania. It was reported the Germans practically have taken over administration of Rumanian railways. In Hungary they occupy part of the railway headquarters.

Crack German bridge builders are reported quartered at strategic places along the Danube and at some place along the river Nazi troops are living in trains on railway sidings.

Diplomatic dispatches from Rumania told of Jewish schools being taken over as barracks for German soldiers.

German soldiers and officers also are billeted at private homes in Bucharest and in towns and villages throughout the country.

Occupy 8 Hotels

A German establishment called the "expeditionary force headquarters" was reported set up in Bucharest, with 350 new high-ranking officers there.

All airports, civil and military, have been taken over by the Nazis in Rumania and dispatches told of airplanes and tanks being concentrated at Roman, one of the largest towns in Moldavia and close to the Russian frontier.

Germany Fears British Attack, Turks Declare

Istanbul, Jan. 5 (AP)—A belief that Germany fears a British attack through the Balkans was expressed today in the Turkish press, which says it considers Italy as good as out of the war.

The newspaper Vakit, commenting on the visit to Vienna of Bogdan Philoff, Bulgarian Premier, said it was

LONDON, JAN. 5-(AP)-PRIME MINISTER CHURCHILL TONIGHT SENT A MESSAGE OF CONGRATULATIONS TO PRIME MINISTER R.G.MENZIES OF AUSTRALIA FOR THE "MAGNIFICENT MANNER IN WHICH THE AUSTRALIAN OFFENSIVE AGAINST BARDIA HAS OPENED."

"THE PIERCING OF THE WESTERN SECTOR AND THE CAPTURE OF AT LEAST 5,000 PRISONERS IN ITSELF CONSTITUTED A FINE FEAT OF ARMS AND IS, I TRUST AND BELIEVE, A PRELUDE TO EVEN GREATER SUCCESSES," CHURCHILL SAID.

because of the "Italian defeat" that Germany fears "attack from the Balkans." Therefore, the Balkans need not fear attack from Germany.

"It is probable that the Bulgarians will talk with the Germans about how to prevent a British attack, rather than how to carry out a German attack in the Balkans," Vakit said.

"Hitler's Only Destiny"

Yeni Sabah declared that "defeat is Hitler's only destiny—only the form and date of the defeat are unknown."

Commenting on Italian reverses, Sabah said that sending German planes to Italy is a "humiliation for Italy which always was boastful of her air force."

"Ifaly has completely lost independence of action," this newspaper asserted. "Such a nation cannot claim an empire."

The Turkish Government at Ankara prepared a bill which would make anyone circulating false news liable to court-martial. Military tribunals already have been set up and the bill is expected to pass almost automatically.

Citizens Squelch Fire Bombs

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 5—Defiant men, women and boys extinguished every incendiary bomb dropped on a London sector tonight by two waves of German raiders, apparently attempting to repeat last week's devastating fire raid, and then chanted from the safety of their doorways:

"We want some more!"

The Luftwaffe quickly obliged the fire watchers with another batch of incendiaries, but it was dealt with just as quickly.

All Bombs Snuffed

The volunters, apparently Londons' answer to official appeals for more fire watchers to prevent another terrific fire assault, fell upon the bombs as soon as they were dropped.

There seemed to be as many fire watchers as there were fire bombs, even though the Germans were dropping them in this area by basketfuls.

The Germans also were reported over Liverpool, the east Midlands and northwest and northeast England.

They launched the incendiary attack on London early in the evening.

Anti-aircraft fire sounded even before the night alarm was heard.

The all-clear sounded in the London area before midnight.

Day Alarm Brief

The night assault came after a brief midafternoon alarm in London and several hours after crowds viewed the damage in the City—London's financial district where British demolition squads were blowing up hulks of buildings damaged last Sunday.

The Air Ministry said a single "enemy" plane dropped bombs at a few points in East Anglia, damaging two places and injuring a small number of people.

German raiders concentrated their attacks Saturday night against a west England town. It was officially reported a number of people were killed there and others injured.

[Associated Press Editor's Note—The Germans identified the town as Avonmouth, "an especially important port city for Bristol."]

Nazi Destroyer Bombed

Meanwhile, two Nazi supply vessels off the southwest coast of Norway and a destroyer in the harbor of Brest, France, were hit by British bombs yesterday, the Air Ministry said today in a communique describing R. A. F. activities, which included a raid on Hamburg.

Three bombs crashed on the destroyer in the attack, which took place at dusk. In a later attack during the night a fourth bomb exploded on the ship's stern, the Air Ministry news service declared.

Fires were observed in Hamburg after the British raid there, the communique said. In the first attack on Brest a British plane was lost, while a Nazi fighter was destroyed in the air.

The Germans began raiding Britain about the time the R. A. F. set off for the Brest attack.

Warship's Guns Silent

The Air Ministry news service, describing the raid on Brest, said the destroyer used her full array of anti-aircraft guns on the raiding planes but that before the raid was over the ship was shrouded in smoke and her guns were silent.

The same source said six bombs hit one of the German supply ships off the Norwegian coast, and at least three and probably five hit the other ship. The attacks were made in the face of German shore batteries at Lister and Obrestad, and the British pilots noted heavy explosions and smoke as they flew homeward.

Ulster Council Assails Eire as Hurting Britain

Unionists Charge 'Deliberate Prejudice' in Refusal to Give Aid for War Effort

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Jan. 5 (AP).—The Ulster Unionist (Conservative) Council, which stands for continued union with the British crown, declares that Southern Ireland's (Eire's) neutrality is "deliberately prejudicing Great Britain's prospects of success in a struggle which means as much for one country as the other." The declaration came in a report to be submitted Thursday to a meeting of the Unionist party.

[Eire, which has refused to give Britain use of bases on her territory, was attacked from the air several times last week and has protested to Germany on the ground that some of the bombs, incendiary and explosive, and also magnetic mines dropped on her soil, were of German origin.]

The report added, in part:

"Our political opponents, despite the life and death struggle in which the empire is engaged, have seized every opportunity to urge expulsion of Ulster from the United Kingdom and its inclusion in Eire, in the belief that Northern Ireland would be declared neutral and unable to help Great Britain."

The report recalled an offer by the late Viscount Craigavon, Prime Minister of Northern Ireland, to enter into closest co-operation with Eire for defense, on condition that Eire take a stand on the side of Britain and not raise any constitutional issue during the war. Eire's Prime Minister, Eamon de Valera, replied that he had not the slightest intention of abandoning neutrality.

The Eire constitution envisages a union of all Ireland with the same sovereign freedom that now is Eire's. Northern Ireland with its six counties and Eire with its twenty-seven counties make up all of the island.

Britain Hears It Faces Graver Ordeals in '41

ELTHAM, Kent, England, Jan. 5 (AP).—Sir Kingsley Wood, Chancellor of the Exchequer, said in a speech today that Great Britain would face graver ordeals in 1941, but that the nation ended 1940 in better shape than she began it.

He called Prime Minister Winston Churchill "our victory" because of his "unequaled courage, drive and endurance," and said the watchwords for 1941 must be "vigilance, action and unceasing endeavor."

POPE ADDRESSES GROUP OF NOBLES

Says There Can Be No Foretelling Where March Of Events Will Lead

Declares Rich Have Duty Of Preserving Wealth And Helping Poor

[By the Associated Press]

Vatican City, Jan. 5—Pope Pius XII said today there could be no foretelling where the march of events would lead, "but our longings, our prayer, our wish is a just and durable peace and ordered tranquillity for the world."

The Pope spoke to nobles, among whom was his own Pacelli family, in an audience accorded them every Epiphany, and his address was in answer to a discourse by Roman Prince Domenico Orsini, member of one of Rome's two oldest noble families and an attendant at the papal throne.

Pope Pius congratulated them on their lineage and spiritual and material well-being.

Duties Of The Rich

"But," he added, "as every rich patrimony, this, too, bears strict duties. . . . Two especially: One, the duty of not dissipating such treasures, but of transmitting them intact, even increased, if possible, to those coming after; of resisting, therefore, the temptation of not seeing in them anything but the means of an easy life—more pleasant, more exquisite, more refined. Two, the duty of not keeping for one's self these goods, but of making use of them largely for the advantage of those less favored by Providence."

Referring briefly to the war, the Pope said that "in the present hour, in which the heavens are disturbed by guarded, suspected nights, your spirit, while nobly observing the seriousness or rather the austerity of a life which excludes all light-heartedness and every frivolous pleasure incompatible for every gentle heart with the spectacle of so much suffering, feels ever deeper the impulse toward charitable work which impels you toward increasing and multiplying by your merits the release of human miseries and poverty."

LEAHY IS GREETED BY PETAIN'S GUARD

Admiral Reaches Vichy In Heavy Storm; Will See Marshal Soon

Snowbound France Feeling Full Pinch Of Post-War Hardships

[By the Associated Press]

Vichy, France, Jan. 5—Admiral William D. Leahy, United States Ambassador, arrived on time in this capital of unoccupied France tonight despite one of the worst storms France has seen in years, and was greeted at the scene of his new post by a police guard customarily turned out only for Marshal Henri Philippe Petain, chief of state.

Expecting to see Marshal Petain when he presents his credentials Tuesday or Wednesday, Admiral Leahy went with his wife directly to a villa belonging to the wealthy American, Frank J. Gould, which has been set aside by the French Government as the embassy residence.

The villa already was prepared for him and servants were preparing a late supper when he arrived.

Ends Long Journey

Admiral Leahy ended his long journey from the United States on a special salon car which brought him from Nimes. He sailed from Norfolk, Va., December 23 on the United States cruiser Tuscaloosa.

The Ambassador, bearer of a personal note from President Roosevelt to Marshal Petain commending the admiral as an old friend of the United States Chief Executive, was met by Maurice Loze, protocol officer of the French Foreign Office, and a group of American officers and officials.

The military uniforms of the American party won interested glances from about one hundred persons gathered at the station shortly before midnight.

The French mobile guard formed a line from the train to reception room at the station.

Route Illuminated

The route Leahy took to the villa was illuminated and police were on guard at all corners.

After crossing the frontier yesterday, Admiral Leahy dined at the home of the prefect of the Herault department and spent the night at Montpellier.

He was reported impressed by the French ceremony and courtesy which greeted him at every stop of the trip in France.

Ambassador Leahy, until recently the Governor of Puerto Rico, was namel by President Roosevelt to succeed William C. Bullitt, who was American envoy to France when Paris fell and who remained in the French capital afterward. Bullitt later returned to this country and resigned after the Presidential election.

Murphy is touring United States consulates in North Africa.

Thailand Minister Fears Extension Of Warfare

State Official Hopes France Will Send Negotiators To Adjust Frontier Issue

Bangkok, Thailand, Jan. 5 (AP)—Luang Vichitar Vadekarn, Thai (Siamese) Minister of State said today that border conflicts between Thailand and French Indo-China may pass from mere skirmishes to major warfare and expressed hope that France would send negotiators to adjust the frontier issue.

"But if France still is in a state of madness and maintains her aggressive attitude hostilities are sure to come and it would be a sad period in the history of the Orient," the Minister wrote in the Bangkok Chronicle, English-language daily.

The article appeared as a brief high command communique charged the French with new bombing attacks on Thai territory yesterday and promised effective retaliatory raids.

BANGKOK, THAILAND, JAN 5-(AP)-INTENSE AERIAL WARFARE AND BORDER SKIRMISHES FLARED ANEW TODAY BETWEEN FRENCH INDO-CHINESE AND THAILAND (SIAMESE) FORCES, AND THE THAI HIGH COMMAND SAID THAI BOMBERS DURING RETALIATORY BOMBINGS AGAINST THE INDO-CHINESE DESTROYED SEVERAL GROUNDED FRENCH AIRCRAFT.

MEXICO INVESTIGATES NEW NAZI ACTIVITIES

German Secret Police Organizer Said to Have Arrived Recently

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 5 (AP)—The reported presence of a German secret police organizer and a former military governor of Berlin in Mexico, along with recent pro-Nazi, anti-Jewish manifestations, was said by responsible diplomatic sources today to have prompted a new investigation of Axis aims in Mexico.

These sources said there has been a shake-up in the leadership of Vanguardia Nacionalista, the Mexican nationalistic, anti-Semitic political party, which has taken to disseminating its ideas at street rallies.

These developments, police sources said, are being watched closely as possible symptoms of further steps that will depend on the course of the European war.

These sources said the former Berlin official was in Mexico ostensibly as a salesman of machine guns and other arms of German manufacture but that he had negotiated no contracts. The secret police organizer was said to have arrived a few days ago from the Dominican Republic after operating in Panama and Guatemala.

Every Japanese passenger vessel arriving at Mexico's Pacific ports recently was said to have brought a number of Germans. Twenty-nine were said to have landed from one ship.

The immediate objective of Nazi-Fascist propaganda in Mexico was said to be to charge that the United States was about to enter the European war, taking Mexico in against Germany, and to counteract the effect of Vice President-Elect Henry A. Wallace's visit to Mexico by saying Mexico is being bossed from the United States.

Distress Call Sent By Dutch Freighter

Being "Gunned" Off Portugal, Flash From The Almkerk Says

New York, Jan. 5 (AP)—The 6,810-ton Dutch freighter Almkerk sent a distress call today saying she had been "gunned" approximately 650 miles west of Lisbon, Portugal.

The message heard by Mackay Radio was:

"S O S, latitude 40.04 north, longitude 22.04 west, Dutch steamship Almkerk gunned at 17.53 G.M.T. (12.53 P. M., E.S.T.)."

Several other ships have been sunk in the vicinity recently by submarine and surface raiders.

Socialist Party Forbids Joining 'No-War' Group

Norman Thomas Calls Support Of Committee "Inconsistent With Party Loyalty"

New York, Jan. 5 (AP)—The Socialist party today enjoined its members from supporting the No Foreign War Committee, headed by Verne Marshall, Iowa editor.

Declaring that cooperation with the No Foreign War Committee was "inconsistent with loyalty to the Socialist party," a statement issued by Norman Thomas, Socialist party chairman, charged Marshall with pursuing "viciously anti-Socialist and anti-democratic" policies.

The statement, asserting that Marshall also had "used the familiar Nazi technique of accusing 'international Jewish bankers' of fomenting the present war," added:

"These policies are sufficient to condemn the committee at this time in the eyes of all Socialists. . . . Therefore the Socialist party condemns the No Foreign War Committee and enjoins its members from joining or supporting this organization."

EUROPE HELD ABLE TO SUPPLY STEEL

Trade Magazine Says Ample Metal Is Available For Long War

Germany Controls Sufficient Tonnage For All Needs, It Asserts

[By the Associated Press]

Cleveland, Jan. 5—The steel supply is "ample" for a long European war, Vincent Delport, European editor of the magazine Steel, said today.

Germany controls fifty-five per cent of the Continent's output, but England's sea power assures her of the necessary tonnage, his article said.

Basing figures on the estimated output for 1939, Delport said Germany now controls 42,650,000 of the 77,000,000 gross tons available to warring nations. England has 13,500,000, with 20,850,000 credited to the neutral countries—Russia, Sweden, Hungary and Spain.

Germany In Lead

His totals compiled from estimated capacity, difficult to determine due to lack of statistics on bombing losses, gave Germany 49,700,000, England 14,700,000 and the neutrals 21,550,000.

The estimated 1939 output shows only three nations above 10,000,000—Germany, 24,000,000; Russia, 18,500,000, and Great Britain, 13,500,000.

"It can be assumed," the article said, "that by the end of the summer of 1940 British, Germany and Italian steelworks were operating very near to capacity, the total output of each country being restricted in some degree by actual warfare and destruction. Obviously, neither of the opposing sides discloses its losses.

Damage Negligible

". . . It is highly probable that Germany has sufficient plants to draw upon to meet her requirements of raw steel. As regards British steelworks it is a fact that by the end of 1940 any damage done was negligible, and the restriction of output caused in interruption of air raids was not sufficient to paralyze production or even reduce it to a critical level."

"Russia's capacity of steel production is likely to increase substantially in the course of the next few years, and at a much quicker rate than appears possible in other European countries," the article continued.

"This is due to the five-year development plan. Germany's capacity, normally, would increase also with the gradual construction and putting into operation of the Hermann Goering works program at Salzgitter, Germany, and in subjected Austria.

Metal Supply to Japan Cut to 25 Tons a Month

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5—Japan, previously a buyer of large quantities of scrap metal for her war industries, got only twenty-five tons of it from the United States during November, the first full month in which exports were subject to licensing.

In announcing these figures today the Department of Commerce said that exports fell about 70 per cent during the month.

The total was 74,349 tons, valued at $1,303,814, compared with 258,926 tons, worth $4,650,299, shipped during October and 272,656 tons, worth $5,173,374, exported in November, 1939.

Canada and the United Kingdom took all but about 3,000 tons of the November total. Japan's twenty-five tons were tin-plate scrap.

War Communiques

British

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 5 (AP).—A special communique of the British general headquarters tonight:

LIBYA—All resistance at Bardia ceased at 1:30 p. m. today.

The town, with the total forces defending it and all stores and equipment, is now in our hands.

Gen. Bergonzoli, commanding the Italian forces in Bardia, another corps commander and four senior generals are prisoners of war.

It is not yet possible to make a full count, but the prisoners so far captured exceed 25,000.

Among other booty captured or destroyed are forty-five light and five medium tanks.

An earlier general headquarters communique:

Yesterday evening, Italian troops occupying the whole of the northern sector of the defenses of Bardia were forced to surrender.

Our patrols have penetrated into Bardia itself, and the enemy resistance now is confined to a restricted area in the southeast zone of the Perimeter defenses.

More than 15,000 prisoners now have been captured, and operations to mop up the remaining centers of resistance are continuing satisfactorily.

On the Sudan frontier there is no change in the situation.

In the northern frontier district of Kenya, our patrols are continuing their activities.

The Royal Air Force communique tonight:

During the night of Jan. 3-4 and throughout yesterday, bomber aircraft of the Royal Air Force continued to attack incessantly enemy airdromes in eastern Libya. One gun position received a direct hit and was silenced.

During a subsequent raid last night when several tons of bombs were dropped on military objectives, our aircraft observed violent explosions at Bardia with accompanying large fires caused by yesterday's raiding.

The jetty and harbor were the main objectives at Bomba, and bombs fell well in the target area.

Our fighters maintained their active patrols, and during two encounters with the enemy, three CR-42's were shot down in flames and one other destroyed. . . .

A reconnaissance flight over Tripoli on Jan. 1 proved that during the raid on the previous night when shipping in the harbor was attacked, one motor vessel of 10,000 tons, which was anchored in mid-harbor, was sunk.

Numerous reconnaissance flights were carried out on all fronts.

From all operations our aircraft returned safely, except one fighter in the western desert.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (AP).—An Admiralty communique today:

The following report has been received from the commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean:

The attack on Bardia on Jan. 3 was supported by our naval force, the bombardment being carried out as necessary throughout the day.

The battle fleet provided for one hour and a half a heavy concentration on enemy support, troops, tanks and motor transport, while secondary armaments of battleships and destroyers dealt with coast defenses.

No casualties or damage were sustained during these operations except for a few casualties from a near miss in one of our gunboats, H. M. S. Aphis. Next of kin are being informed.

Our naval units were attacked on several occasions by enemy aircraft but without success.

The communique of the Ministries of Air and Home Security tonight:

During daylight today, single enemy aircraft dropped bombs at a few places in East Anglia. These bombs did some damage at two places and injured a small number of people.

An earlier communique of the Ministries of Air and Home Security:

Soon after nightfall yesterday, enemy aircraft began a series of raids which lasted through the greater part of the night. Their attack was directed mainly against a town in the west of England.

Fires were started and some damage was done. A number of persons were killed and others injured.

Bombs also were dropped at places in the south of Wales, but damage caused in this area was not extensive nor were casualties numerous.

From other areas little damage and few casualties have been reported.

An Air Ministry communique:

Aircraft of the coastal command attacked the invasion port of Brest at dusk yesterday. An enemy destroyer received three direct hits. Our aircraft were attacked by enemy fighters. One of these was hit and broke up in the air. One of our aircraft is missing.

Direct hits also were scored on two enemy merchant vessels off the southwest coast of Norway.

During the night weather rapidly grew worse. This hampered aircraft of the bomber command in their operations.

Brest, however, was attacked again and bombs burst on the waterfront.

Targets in Hamburg also were attacked and fires were observed.

From these night operations none of our aircraft are missing.

Greek

ATHENS, [redacted] Greek high command communique:

Activity reduced to local fights. About 200 prisoners and much war materiel was taken.

A Ministry of Home Security communique:

No raids were made on Greece today.

A British Royal Air Force communique:

Highly successful raids on road junctions and other military objectives at Elbasani were made by bomber aircraft of the R. A. F. yesterday.

All the bombs fell on the town, and a large fire with a column of black smoke was seen to break out.

From all operations all our aircraft returned safely.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 5 (AP).—The German high command communique today:

The air force yesterday carried out only armed reconnaissance flights. Aerial photographs confirmed the success of the attack on Cardiff the night of Jan. 2.

Last night Avonmouth, which is an especially important port city for Bristol, as well as numerous other militarily important objectives on the Bristol channel were successfully attacked by strong units.

Only weak groups of enemy planes flew over Reich territory last night. They dropped a small number of bombs in a few places which did only unimportant property damage. There was no military or war industry damage.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 5 (AP).—The Italian high command communique today:

The battle on the Bardia front continued with growing violence all day yesterday and is still under way.

Formations of fighter and assault planes took part in it, machine-gunning and bombing enemy troops in various localities with shrapnel bombs, putting out of action and destroying armored motor vehicles.

Despite the heroic comportment of our land and air units, some strongholds fell into enemy hands.

Enemy air raids on our fields caused slight damage to personnel and material.

During air fights our pursuit planes up to now have shot down eight enemy planes in flames. Three of our planes failed to return.

On the Greek front we captured arms and prisoners during actions of a local character. Our formations machine-gunned and dropped shrapnel bombs on enemy troops in movement.

In East Africa, enemy planes dropped bombs and leaflets in some localities of Somaliland. At the Sudanese border there was the usual artillery action.

Roosevelt Asks Billions in Arms Loans To Defeat Axis in Gravest U. S. Hour

Asks More Arms Speed, Aid Leasing

Full text of President Roosevelt's address on Page 4

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 6—President Roosevelt today foretold a "physical attack" on the United States "if the dictator nations win this war" in a message to Congress urging a "swift and driving increase" in arms production.

The United States, he told the legislators, faces an unprecedented "foreign peril." He asked that the war supplies turned out in the swift-paced program he envisaged be made available for the fighting "democracies" abroad as well as for this country's own defense forces.

Will Ask "Greatly Increased Appropriations"

"The need of the moment," Mr. Roosevelt said in his annual message on the state of the Union, "is that our actions and our policy should be devoted primarily—almost exclusively—to meeting this foreign peril. For all our domestic problems are now a part of the great emergency."

Appearing before a joint session of House and Senate in the great House chamber, the Chief Executive said he would ask Congress for "greatly increased new appropriations" to carry on the defense program and recommended that "a greater portion of this great defense program be paid for from taxation than we are paying today."

Asks More Aid Power, Denies "Act Of War"

"I also ask this Congress," he said, "for authority and for funds sufficient to manufacture additional munitions and war supplies of many kinds, to be turned over to those nations which are now in actual war with aggressor nations."

Mr. Roosevelt did not list the nations to receive help through his lease-lend plan, but in his recent fireside talk on defense he referred specifically to Britain, China and Greece.

"Such aid is not an act of war," Mr. Roosevelt asserted, "even if a dictator should unilaterally proclaim it so to be."

"Dictators Will Not Wait For Act Of War"

In fulfillment of the purpose of extending aid, the President also declared, the nation "will not be intimidated by the threats of dictators that they will regard as a breach of international law and as an act of war our aid to the democracies which dare to resist their aggression."

"When the dictators are ready to make war upon us, they will not wait for an act of war on our part," he continued. "They did not wait for Norway or Belgium or the Netherlands to commit an act of war."

Mr. Roosevelt set forward in three points what he described as "our national policy" in this time of "serious danger" and he also proclaimed the principles of "four essential human freedoms" to which "we look forward" in "the future days."

His Statement Of "National Policy"

The "national policy" the President stated as:

"First, by an impressive expression of the public will and without regard to partisanship, we are committed to all-inclusive national defense.

"Second, by an impressive expression of the public will and without regard to partisanship, we are committed to full support of all those resolute peoples, everywhere, who are resisting aggression and are thereby keeping war away from our hemisphere. By this support we express our determination that the democratic cause shall prevail, and we strengthen the defense and security of our own nation.

"Will Not Acquiesce In Aggressors' Peace"

"Third, by an impressive expression of the public will and without regard to partisanship, we are committed to the proposition that principles of morality and considerations for our own security will never permit us to acquiesce in a peace dictated by aggressors and sponsored by appeasers. We know that enduring peace cannot be bought at the cost of other people's freedom."

The "four essential human freedoms" were described by the President as "the very antithesis of the so-called new order of tyranny which the dictators seek to create with the crash of a bomb."

He described these "freedoms" as:

"The first is freedom of speech and expression—everywhere in the world.

"Freedom To Worship, Freedom From Want And Fear"

"The second is freedom of every person to worship God in his own way—everywhere in the the world.

"The third is freedom from want—which, translated into world terms, means economic understandings which will secure to every nation a healthy peace-time life for its inhabitants—everywhere in the world.

"The fourth is freedom from fear—which, translated into world terms, means a world-wide reduction of armaments to such a point and in such a thorough fashion that no nation will be in a position to commit an act of physical aggression against any neighbor—anywhere in the world."

Text of Roosevelt Message

President Tells Congress American Security Is Threatened as Never Before.

To the Congress of the United States:

I address you, the members of the Seventy-seventh Congress, at a moment unprecedented in the history of the Union. I use the word "unprecedented" because at no previous time has American security been as seriously threatened from without as it is today.

Since the permanent formation of our Government under the Constitution, in 1789, most of the periods of crisis in our history have related to our domestic affairs. Fortunately, only one of these—the four-year war between the States—ever threatened our national unity. Today, thank God, 130,000,000 Americans, in forty-eight States, have forgotten points of the compass in our national unity.

Historic Truth Cited.

It is true that prior to 1914 the United States often had been disturbed by events in other continents. We had even engaged in two wars with European nations and in a number of undeclared wars in the West Indies, in the Mediterranean and in the Pacific for the maintenance of American rights and for the principles of peaceful commerce. In no case, however, had a serious threat been raised against our national safety or our independence.

What I seek to convey is the historic truth that the United States as a nation has at all times maintained opposition to any attempt to lock us in behind an ancient Chinese wall while the procession of civilization went past. Today, thinking of our children and their children, we oppose enforced isolation for ourselves or for any part of the Americas.

That determination of ours was proved, for example, during the quarter century of wars following the French Revolution.

While the Napoleonic struggles did threaten interests of the United States because of the French foothold in the West Indies and in Louisiana, and while we engaged in the War of 1812 to vindicate our right to peaceful trade, it is, nevertheless, clear that neither France nor Great Britain nor any other nation was aiming at domination of the whole world.

Friendly British Fleet.

In like fashion, from 1815 to 1914—ninety-nine years—no single war in Europe or in Asia constituted a real threat against our future or against the future of any other American nation.

Except in the Maximilian interlude in Mexico, no foreign Power sought to establish itself in this hemisphere and the strength of the British fleet in the Atlantic has been a friendly strength. It is still a friendly strength.

Even when the world war broke out in 1914, it seemed to contain only small threat of danger to our own American future, but, as time went on, the American people began to visualize what the downfall of democratic nations might mean to our own democracy.

We need not overemphasize imperfections in the peace of Versailles. We need not harp on failure of the democracies to deal with problems of world reconstruction. We should remember that the peace of 1919 was far less unjust than the kind of "pacification" which began even before Munich and which is being carried on under the new order of tyranny that seeks to spread over every continent today. The American people have unalterably set their faces against that tyranny.

Direct Assault.

Every realist knows that the democratic way of life is at this moment being directly assailed in every part of the world—assailed either by arms, or by secret spreading of poisonous propaganda by those who seek to destroy unity and promote discord in nations still at peace.

During sixteen months, this assault has blotted out the whole pattern of democratic life in an appalling number of independent nations, great and small. The assailants are still on the march, threatening other nations, great and small.

Therefore, as your President, performing my constitutional duty to "give to the Congress information of the State of the Union," I find it necessary to report that the future and the safety of our country and our democracy are overwhelmingly involved in events far beyond our borders.

Armed defense of democratic existence is now being gallantly waged in four continents. If that defense fails, all the population and all the resources of Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia will be dominated by the conquerors. The total of those populations and their resources greatly exceeds the sum total of the population and resources of the whole of the Western Hemisphere—many times over.

Peace Without Security.

In times like these it is immature—and incidentally untrue—for anybody to brag that an unprepared America, single-handed, and with one hand tied behind its back, can hold off the whole world.

No realistic American can expect from a dictator's peace international generosity, or return of true independence, or world disarmament, or freedom of expression, or freedom of religion—or even good business.

Such a peace would bring no security for us or for our neighbors. "Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

As a nation we may take pride in the fact that we are soft-hearted; but we cannot afford to be soft-headed. We must always be wary of those who with sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal preach the "ism" of appeasement.

Lessons of Past.

We must especially beware of that small group of selfish men who would clip the wings of the American eagle in order to feather their own nests. I have recently pointed out how quickly the tempo of modern warfare could bring into our very midst the physical attack which we must expect if the dictator nations win this war.

There is much loose talk of our immunity from immediate and direct invasion from across the seas. Obviously, as long as the British Navy retains its power, no such danger exists. Even if there were no British Navy, it is not probable that any enemy would be stupid enough to attack us by landing troops in the United States from across thousands of miles of ocean, until it had acquired strategic bases from which to operate.

But we learn much from the lessons of the past years in Europe—particularly the lesson of Norway, whose essential seaports were captured by treachery and surprise built up over a series of years.

The first phase of the invasion of this hemisphere would not be the landing of regular troops. The necessary strategic points would be occupied by secret agents and their dupes—and great numbers of them are already here and in Latin America.

Unique Message.

As long as the aggressor nations maintain the offensive, they—not we—will choose the time and the place and the method of their attack. That is why the future of all American republics is today in serious danger; that is why this annual message to the Congress is unique in our history.

That is why every member of the executive branch of the Government and every member of the Congress face great responsibility and great accountability. The need of the moment is that our actions and our policy should be devoted primarily—almost exclusively to meeting this foreign peril. For all our domestic problems are now a part of the great emergency.

Just as our national policy in internal affairs has been based upon a decent respect for the rights and dignity of all our fellowmen within our gates, so our national policy in foreign affairs has been based on a decent respect for the rights and dignity of all nations, large and small and the justice of morality must and will win in the end.

National Policy Stated.

Our national policy is this:

First, by an impressive expression of the public will and without regard to partisanship, we are committed to all-inclusive national defense.

Second, by an impressive expression of the public will and without regard to partisanship, we are committed to full support of all those resolute peoples, everywhere, who are resisting aggression and are thereby keeping war away from our hemisphere. By this support, we express our determination that the democratic cause shall prevail and we strengthen the defense and security of our own nation.

Third, by an impressive expression of the public will and without regard to partisanship, we are committed to the proposition that principles of morality and considerations for our own security will never permit us to acquiesce in a peace dictated by aggressors and sponsored by appeasers. We know that enduring peace cannot be bought at the cost of the other people's freedom.

No Pre-election Split.

In the recent national election, there was no substantial difference between the two great parties in respect to that national policy. No issue was fought out on this line before the American electorate. Today, it is abundantly evident that American citizens everywhere are demanding and supporting speedy and complete action in recognition of obvious danger.

Therefore, the immediate need is a swift and driving increase in our armament production.

Leaders of industry and labor have responded to our summons. Goals of speed have been set. In some cases, these goals are being reached ahead of time; in some cases, we are on schedule; in other cases, there are slight, but not serious delays, and in some cases—and I am sorry to say very important cases—we are all concerned by the slowness of the accomplishment of our plans.

The army and navy, however, have made substantial progress during the last year. Actual experience is improving and speeding up our methods of production with every passing day and today's best is not good enough for tomorrow.

Progress Not Satisfactory.

I am not satisfied with the progress thus far made. The men in charge of the program represent the best in training, ability and patriotism. They are not satisfied with the progress thus far made. None of us will be satisfied until the job is done.

No matter whether the original goal was set too high or too low, our objective is quicker and better results.

To give two illustrations:

We are behind schedule in turning out finished airplanes; we are working day and night to solve the innumerable problems and to catch up.

We are ahead of schedule in building warships, but we are working to get even further ahead of schedule.

From Peace to War.

To change a whole nation from a basis of peacetime production of implements of peace to a basis of wartime production of implements of war is no small task and the greatest difficulty comes at the beginning of the program, when new tools and plant facilities and new assembly lines and shipways must first be contructed before the actual material begins to flow steadily and speedily from them.

The Congress, of course, must rightly keep itself informed at all times of the progress of the program. However, there is certain information, as the Congress itself will readily recognize, which, in the interest of our own security and those of the nations we are supporting, must of needs be kept in confidence.

New circumstances are constantly begetting new needs for our safety. I shall ask this Congress for greatly increased new appropriations and authorizations to carry on what we have begun.

Authority and Funds.

I also ask this Congress for authority and for funds sufficient to manufacture additional munitions and war supplies of many kinds, to be turned over to those nations which are now in actual war with aggressor nations.

Our most useful and immediate role is to act as an arsenal for them as well as for ourselves. They do not need man power. They do need billions of dollars' worth of the weapons of defense.

The time is near when they will not be able to pay for them in ready cash. We cannot, and will not, tell them they must surrender, merely because of present inability to pay for the weapons which we know they must have.

No Loan of Dollars.

I do not recommend that we make them a loan of dollars with which to pay for these weapons—a loan to be repaid in dollars.

I recommend that we make it possible for those nations to continue to obtain war materials in the United States, fitting their orders into our own program. Nearly all of their material could, if the time ever came, be useful for our own defense.

Taking counsel of expert military and naval authorities, considering what is best for our own security, we are free to decide how much should be kept here and how much should be sent abroad to our friends, who by their determined and heroic resistance are giving us time in which to make ready our own defense.

For what we send abroad, we shall be repaid, within a reasonable time following the close of hostilities, in similar materials, or, at our option, in other goods of many kinds which they can produce and which we need.

Defense of Freedom.

Let us say to the democracies: "We Americans are vitally concerned in your defense of freedom. We are putting forth our energies, our resources and our organizing powers to give you the strength to regain and maintain a free world. We shall send you, in ever-increasing numbers, ships, planes, tanks, guns. This is our purpose and our pledge."

In fulfillment of this purpose, we will not be intimidated by the threats of dictators that they will regard as a breach of international law and as an act of war our aid to the democracies which dare to resist their aggression. Such aid is not an act of war, even if a dictator should unilaterally proclaim it so to be.

When the dictators are ready to make war upon us, they will not wait for an act of war on our part. They did not wait for Norway or Belgium or the Netherlands to commit an act of war.

Instrument of Oppression.

Their only interest is in a new one-way international law, which lacks mutuality in its observance and, therefore, becomes an instrument of oppression.

The happiness of future generations of Americans may well depend upon how effective and how immediate we can make our aid felt. No one can tell the exact character of the emergency situations that we may be called upon to meet. The nation's hands must not be tied when the nation's life is in danger.

We must all prepare to make the sacrifices that the emergency—as serious as war itself—demands. Whatever stands in the way of speed and efficiency in defense preparations must give way to the national need.

A free nation has the right to expect full co-operation from all groups. A free nation has the right to look to the leaders of business, of labor and of agriculture to take the lead in stimulating effort, not among other groups, but within their own groups.

Dealing With Slackers.

The best way of dealing with the few slackers or trouble-makers in our midst is, first, to shame them by patriotic example and, if that fails, to use the sovereignty of Government to save Government.

As men do not live by bread alone, they do not fight by armaments alone. Those who man our defenses and those behind them who build our defenses must have the stamina and courage which come from an unshakable belief in the manner of life which they are defending. The mighty action which we are calling for cannot be based on a disregard of all things worth fighting for.

The nation takes great satisfaction and much strength from the things which have been done to make its people conscious of their individual stake in the preservation of democratic life in America. Those things have toughened the fiber of our people, have renewed their faith and strengthened their devotion to the institutions we make ready to protect.

Certainly this is no time to stop thinking about the social and economic problems which are the root cause of the social revolution which is today a supreme factor in the world.

Bases of Democracy.

There is nothing mysterious about the foundations of a healthy and strong democracy. The basic things expected by our people of their political and economic systems are simple. They are:

Equality of opportunity for youth and for others.

Jobs for those who can work.

Security for those who need it.

The ending of special privilege for the few.

The preservation of civil liberties for all.

The enjoyment of the fruits of scientific progress in a wider and constantly rising standard of living.

These are the simple and basic things that must never be lost sight of in the turmoil and unbelievable complexity of our modern world. The inner and abiding strength of our economic and political systems is dependent upon the degree to which they fulfill these expectations.

Subject to Improvement.

Many subjects connected with our social economy call for immediate improvement.

As examples:

We should bring more citizens under the coverage of old-age pensions and unemployment insurance.

We should widen the opportunities for adequate medical care.

We should plan a better system by which persons deserving or needing gainful employment may obtain it.

I have called for personal sacrifice. I am assured of the willingness of almost all Americans to respond to that call.

A part of the sacrifice means the payment of more money in taxes. In my budget message I recommend that a greater portion of this great defense program be paid for from taxation than we are paying today. No person should try, or be allowed, to get rich out of this program and the principle of tax payments in accordance with ability to pay should be constantly before our eyes to guide our legislation.

Patriotism Over Pocketbooks.

If the Congress maintains these principles, the voters, putting patriotism ahead of pocketbooks, will give you their applause.

In the future days, which we seek to make secure, we look forward to a world founded upon four essential human freedoms.

The first is freedom of speech and expression—everywhere in the world.

The second is freedom of every person to worship God in his own way—everywhere in the world.

The third is freedom from want—which, translated into world terms, means economic understandings which will secure to every nation a healthy peacetime life for its inhabitants—everywhere in the world.

No Vision of Utopia.

The fourth is freedom from fear—which, translated into world terms, means a world-wide reduction of armaments to such a point and in such a thorough fashion that no nation will be in a position to commit an act of physical aggression against any neighbor—anywhere in the world.

Highlights of Roosevelt Address

I address you at a moment unprecedented in the history of the Union. I use the word unprecedented, because at no previous time has American security been so seriously threatened from without as it is today.

No realistic American can expect from a dictator's peace international generosity, or return of true independence, or world disarmament, or freedom of expression, or freedom of religion—or even good business.

JAN 7 1941

The first phase of the invasion of this hemisphere would not be the landing of regular troops. The necessary strategic points would be occupied by secret agents and their dupes—and great numbers of them are already here and in Latin America.

The immediate need is a swift and driving increase in our armament production.

I am not satisfied with the progress thus far made. . . . We are behind schedule in turning out finished airplanes; we are working day and night to solve the innumerable problems and to catch up.

I shall ask this Congress for greatly increased new appropriations and authorizations to carry on what we have begun.

I also ask this Congress for authority and for funds sufficient to manufacture additional munitions and war supplies of many kinds to be turned over to those nations which are now in actual war with aggressor nations.

Roosevelt's Quotation Attributed to Franklin

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6—President Roosevelt, declaring that "a dictator's peace" would bring "no security" to the United States, used a quotation today which is commonly attributed to Benjamin Franklin, but the authorship of which is disputed. It is as follows:

"Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

Archibald MacLeish, Librarian of Congress, said that the sentence appeared as a motto in a book of anonymous authorship published in 1759 in London and entitled "An Historical Review of the Constitution and Government of Pennsylvania."

Benjamin Franklin was in London at the time and many, both in the colonies and in England, believed that he was the author.

Some literary historians believe Franklin was the author but never acknowledged it because of the displeasure the work aroused in England. Others attribute it to Richard Jackson, an English lawyer.

WASHINGTON, JAN 6-(AP)-WOODROW WILSON, 24 YEARS AGO THIS MONTH, CALLED FOR "A PEACE WITHOUT VICTORY"; FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT DECLARED TODAY AGAINST "A PEACE DICTATED BY AGGRESSORS AND SPONSORED BY APPEASERS."

ON THAT JANUARY DAY IN 1917, WILSON WAS SPEAKING TO THE SENATE, AS ROOSEVELT WAS SPEAKING TO CONGRESS TODAY, AS HEAD OF A NATION THAT WAS OUTSIDE A GREAT EUROPEAN CONFLICT.

THEN, AS NOW, THERE WAS MUCH TALK OF A NEGOTIATED PEACE. WILSON HAD BEEN EXPLORING THE QUESTION WITH THE BELLIGERENTS. HE WAS LAYING DOWN AT THAT TIME, "NOT AFTERWARDS WHEN IT MAY BE TOO LATE," THE BROAD PRINCIPLES FOR WHICH THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT STOOD IN CREATING "THE FOUNDATIONS OF PEACE AMONG THE NATIONS."

"X X IT MUST BE A PEACE WITHOUT VICTORY," SAID WILSON. "VICTORY WOULD MEAN PEACE FORCED UPON THE LOSER, A VICTOR'S TERMS IMPOSED UPON THE VANQUISHED." "ONLY A PEACE BETWEEN EQUALS CAN LAST."

THE EQUALITY OF NATIONS, HE WENT ON, "MUST BE AN EQUALITY OF RIGHTS; THE GUARANTEES EXCHANGED MUST NEITHER RECOGNIZE NOR IMPLY A DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BIG NATIONS AND SMALL, BETWEEN THOSE THAT ARE POWERFUL AND THOSE THAT ARE WEAK. RIGHT MUST BE BASED UPON THE COMMON STRENGTH, NOT UPON THE INDIVIDUAL STRENGTH, OF THE NATIONS UPON WHOSE CONCERT PEACE WILL DEPEND".

"THE WORLD CAN BE AT PEACE," SAID WILSON, "ONLY IF ITS LIFE IS STABLE, AND THERE CAN BE NO STABILITY WHERE THE WILL IS IN REBELLION, WHERE THERE IS NOT TRANQUILITY OF SPIRIT AND A SENSE OF JUSTICE, OF FREEDOM, AND OF RIGHT."

BUT WILSON'S PEACE EFFORTS FAILED THEN; GERMANY SOON LAUNCHED UNRESTRICTED SUBMARINE WARFARE; AND THREE MONTHS LATER THE UNITED STATES WAS AT WAR. A YEAR LATER CAME WILSON'S "FOURTEEN POINTS."

IN WAS IN THE SHADOW OF A CRISIS THAT ROOSEVELT SPOKE TODAY--HE CALLED IT "A MOMENT UNPRECEDENTED IN THE HISTORY OF THE UNION" WHEN AMERICAN SECURITY WAS THREATENED FROM WITHOUT AS IT HAD NEVER BEEN BEFORE.

AS IN HIS RECENT FIRESIDE CHAT, PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT DENOUNCED THE "ISM OF APPEASEMENT"; AND SAID "WE KNOW THAT ENDURING PEACE CANNOT BE BOUGHT AT THE COST OF OTHER PEOPLE'S FREEDOM."

"X X WE ARE COMMITTED TO THE PROPOSITION," HE SAID, "THAT PRINCIPLES OF MORALITY AND CONSIDERATIONS OF OUR OWN SECURITY WILL NEVER PERMIT US TO ACQUIESCE IN A PEACE DICTATED BY AGGRESSORS AND SPONSORED BY APPEASERS."

THEN HE DESCRIBED THE KIND OF WORLD FOR WHICH THE UNITED STATES WAS STRIVING, A WORLD "FOUNDED UPON FOUR ESSENTIAL HUMAN FREEDOMS"; FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND EXPRESSION, FREEDOM OF EVERY PERSON TO WORSHIP GOT IN HIS OWN WAY; FREEDOM FROM WANT, AND FREEDOM

FROM YEAR.

ABOVE ALL, HE CALLED FOR A "MORAL ORDER" IN THE WORLD AS OPPOSED TO "THE SO-CALLED NEW ORDER OF TYRANNY WHICH THE DICTATORS SEEK TO CREATE WITH THE CRASH OF A BOMB."

BRITAIN'S AFRICAN ARMY SWEEPS ON PAST TOBRUK AND DRIVES FOR BENGASI

May Pass Up Seaport Base And Cut Across Desert To Attack Cirenaican Capital—30,000 Italians Reported Seized In Bardia

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 6—The possibility that British desert troops might sweep past the Italian seaport base at Tobruk and plunge on more than 250 miles across the Libyan sands to attack Bengasi arose tonight even as the advance guard of British motorized units threatened Tobruk's outer defenses.

Tobruk, seventy miles across the desert from Bardia, which the British captured yesterday, is the next natural objective. But it was not quite certain when the British would open a drive on Tobruk or whether they would pass it up for the time being for bigger game—the Cirenaican capital across the desert.

R. A. F. Pounds Tobruk

At any rate, the Royal Air Force pounded Tobruk in heavy raids similar to those loosed upon Bardia in the forty-eight hours preceding the final land attack which culminated in its capture yesterday. Tons of bombs were dropped on military objectives at the seaport base.

At least one motorized spearhead was reported twenty miles from Tobruk, already blockaded by the British.

Australian troops carefully mopped up the Bardia region preparatory to further operations, while British tanks moved westward, waiting for orders.

30,000 Captured In Bardia

The list of prisoners reported taken in Bardia rose to more than 30,000.

Thus Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, commander of the Italians in North Africa, has lost, British reports said, one-third of his army in captured, killed or wounded men, and his most important eastern base—Bardia—has fallen.

The British appeared faced with two alternatives if they decide to attack Bengasi next—to drive straight across the desert or to drive around the tip of the Cirenaican hump with the aid of the Royal Navy.

Invitation To Hit Bengasi

Observers with the British forces said the number of Italians surrendering at Bardia constituted an open invitation to the British to strike on against Bengasi.

The Egyptian press viewed the Bardia victory as removing all danger to Egypt from Italy and said Bardia, with its useful harbor, has become the key to a British advance into Tripoli, Italian possession just beyond Cirenaica.

Tripoli itself has been heavily bombed by the R. A. F. A communique tonight said tons of bombs were dropped during the night of January 4-5 on the target area there which included the power station, customs buildings, docks and shipping in the harbor. Large fires were started and were visible thirty miles out to sea.

Less than one month was required by British soldiers under General Sir Archibald P. Wavell to chase the Italians out of Egypt and capture their base.

Whole Position In Peril

British military sources said Italy's position in all eastern Libya was in peril because of the fall of Bardia yesterday.

Further, they said, there are indications of rapidly increasing demoralization among Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's forces.

Navy Blockades Tobruk

The Royal Navy, which played a major role in blasting Bardia's defenses before the Australian and English troops went into the town, was reported blockading Tobruk to prevent the arrival of Italian reinforcements.

Joining in the drive on Tobruk were Royal Air Force bombers. The R. A. F. command announced concentrated air attacks throughout Saturday night and all day yesterday. It said one Tobruk fire was so huge it could be seen in Bardia.

Tons of bombs were reported dropped on Tobruk's military buildings, airdromes, naval barracks and defense fortifications.

At the beginning of operations in Africa, Marshal Graziani was said to have 250,000 men, both Italian and native Libyan forces. Based on reports made thus far by the British, the Italians have lost over 80,000 of these in the brief operations which began last month.

Almost 40,000 were said to have been captured when the Italians were forced from Egyptian soil, 30,000 were captured at Bardia and the Italian casualties have been estimated at 15,000.

Besides a heavy toll in man power, the Italians were reported to have lost quantities of tanks, guns, equipment and stores of all sorts at Bardia. Australians carrying out the final mop-up of Bardia still were driving Italians from caves and other isolated spots.

The number of prisoners has raised for the British a problem of feeding and transportation, but as rapidly as possible the Fascist captives are being shipped to concentration centers. The cost of caring for them has already reached millions of dollars.

Tons of Bombs Dropped.

Tons of bombs were dropped on Tobruk's military buildings, airdromes, naval barracks and defense fortifications, the communique announced. R. A. F. planes guided to their target by the blazing fire dropped additional bombs into the center of the conflagration, considerably increasing its area, it added.

The British reported that Bardia, besieged twenty days and under final attack since dawn last Friday, fell yesterday at 1:30 P. M. The capture of their commander, Gen. Annibale Bergonzoli, and five other senior generals was reported in a communique which said: "All stores and equipment are now in our hands. Among other booty captured or destroyed are forty-five light and five medium tanks."

Military spokesmen here said that the capture of the garrison, left behind with orders to hold out while Tobruk's defenses were being re-enforced, meant that Marshal Graziani has lost in less than a month some 80,000 of his North African army of 250,000 men.

The British said their airplanes frustrated what was believed to be an eleventh-hour attempt to save Gen. Bergonzoli, known to the British as Electric Whiskers, and other high officers from capture. Five Italian planes were said to have landed in Bardia on Friday night, presumably to carry the officers away, but they were so riddled by the machine-gun fire of the Royal Air Force they were unable to take off again.

Relic of "Victory" Found

BARDIA, Libya, Jan. 6 (AP)—In the wreckage of Bardia the British found today copies of an order of the day of General Annibale Bergonzoli, the captured Fascist commander, that began:

"Standing at the summit of Hellfire Pass, I salute the victorious Italian Army, which trampled under foot the standard of the enemy that tried to impede you on your victorious march into the Nile Valley. * * *"

[Presumably this was issued about Sept. 14, when the Italians drove across the border into Egypt.]

London Silent on Tactics

LONDON, Jan. 6 (AP)—British military circles said today that mechanized patrols had established a "close blockade" of Italian forces at Tobruk, Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's next Libyan defense line west of fallen Bardia.

These sources declined to say, however, whether General Sir Archibald P. Wavell intended to extend his drive into an effort to drive the Italians entirely out of Libya. British advance patrols were said to be operating south of Tobruk to guard against any Italian attempt to counter-attack against the British wedge in Eastern Libya.

"Of course," it was said in these circles, "the more Italian forces we defeat, the better for us."

They listed these factors, however, as indicating that General Wavell might not follow up his victories with a further main drive into Libya: His principal mission is completed in driving the Italans out of Egypt; much of Marshal Graziani's "invasion" army has been captured, and the British already are operating 120 miles ahead of their principal Western Egyptian base at Matruh.

Thirty-eight Italian planes were destroyed by the British in Libya between Dec. 22 and Jan. 5—thirty in the air and eight on the ground—with a loss of only two British craft, the ir Ministry reported today.

"Italian opposition in the air steadily decreased, except for the period of Jan. 4 and 5," it said, "and even then their air force was unable to achieve any success."

Anzac Casualties Reported Low.

Melbourne, Jan. 6 (A. P.).—Reuters, the British news agency, quoted an Australian communique issued today as saying that the Australian casualties at Bardia do not exceed 500.

BRITISH PRISONERS TURN THE TABLES

9 Capture 115 Italians and Force Ship to Give Up.

With the British Mediterranean Fleet, Jan. 6 (A. P.).—Nine British soldiers, captives aboard a 100-ton Italian schooner, helped an Australian destroyer seize the craft and take it to an Egyptian port with 115 Italians imprisoned below deck, the destroyer commander reported today.

The destroyer intercepted the boat on the night of December 29 and fired a warning shot. When the warship flashed its searchlight on the Italian ship, the captain saw a British sergeant dash up a hatchway and bowl over an Italian guard. Eight other Englishmen followed and battened down all the hatches on 100 Italian soldiers and fifteen sailors.

Then the erstwhile captives compelled the Italian commander to make his vessel follow the destroyer to Salum, the first stage of a journey for the Italians to an internment camp in Egypt.

The British troops described as "apparently the only ones the Italians ever captured," were being taken in the schooner to Tobruk, "for show pieces," the Australian commander asserted.

Peril To Libyan Foe Grows, British Claim

By Edward Kennedy
Associated Press Foreign Correspondent

Bardia, Libya, Jan. 6—Italy's position in all eastern Libya is in peril as a result of the fall of Bardia, British military sources said today.

Not only have British forces taken the main stronghold of Libya's eastern defenses and destroyed another big Italian army, they said, but there are indications of swiftly growing demoralization among Italy's North African forces.

With the Italian prisoners rounded up in the Bardia region placed officially at some 30,000, Australian troops continued to drive more Fascists from caves and other isolated spots today in a final mopup.

British armored units to the west had their hands full with 1,000 Italians intercepted while in flight to Tobruk.

The capture of six generals here, including Gen. Annibale Bergonzoli, commander of fallen Bardia, brought to twelve the number of Mussolini's generals corralled by the British so far.

Difficult Problem

The Italian prisoners were so numerous — numbering nearly 170,000 — that transporting, feeding and sheltering them has posed a difficult problem for the British.

As quickly as facilities permit, they are being shipped off to distant concentration centers. The cost of caring for them, already running into the millions of dollars, is mounting daily.

The name and address of each prisoner is being telegraphed to the International Red Cross at Geneva so that his family may be informed.

The enormous number of Italian prisoners and their few casualties, the British said, reflected the Italians' lack of enthusiasm for the war.

This does not mean the campaign was any picnic for the British. They had to go forward in a desert which in itself presents innumerable difficulties to offensive action in the face heavy artillery fire. This was especially true at Bardia, where strong fortifications were two years in the building.

Southern Peasants

The British said that a large part of il Duce's North African army is made up of southern Italian peasants and workers without direct interest in the war and desiring only to get back to their little farms, their homes and their work.

Many prisoners frankly said as much.

"I don't like war," one told me. "I didn't want to come, but what could I do?"

ROME DELAYS ADMISSION OF LOSS OF BARDIA

Withholds Announcement Until After Holiday Season Is Over

Radio Asserts Italian Army In Africa Is Still Intact

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 6—The Italian high command admitted loss of "more strongholds" on the Bardia front in Libya today, but avoided any mention of the fall of Bardia itself as Italians at home exchanged gifts on a chill, gray Epiphany day.

Identification of the North African points from which Fascist troops had been routed by the British army of the Nile was expected to be given the Italian populace only after the holiday, to prevent further marring of the festivity.

The Rome radio said "the Italian army is intact," and added that the invading army in Libya, "far from its bases, faces the same situation as the British said the Italians did at Sidi Barrani," western Egyptian port which was one of the first objectives of the British.

Badly Outnumbered

In an English language broadcast, it quoted sources in Turkey and Germany to indicate that the Fascist armies in the desert were badly outnumbered, but accounted well for themselves.

One Turkish report cited said the Italians at Bardia were compelled to yield to 800 tanks and a British army of 400,000 men.

The radio quoted Adolf Hitler's newspaper, Völkischer Beobachter, as saying that "Bardia never has been looked upon as a vital point for the Italians."

Covered Retreat

The German version, as broadcast in Italy, was that Gen. Annibale Bergonzoli's troops "held on at Bardia to cover the retreat; that is, to give the main body of the Italians time to take up new positions."

The newspaper Lavoro Fascista asserted that "only temporary lightening of (Italian) pressure toward the (Suez) Canal and East" would result from the loss of Bardia.

"Whoever regards it otherwise does so blindly or in bad faith," the paper declared.

Talks About Albania

Instead of dwelling upon the Libyan situation, the Fascist newspapers told of the campaign in Albania—of cold there so intense that automatic weapons were rendered unusable and "tents shattered as though made of glass."

Il Giornale d'Italia reported that bad weather limited the Italian air force mostly to scouting flights.

Stefani asserted that Greek losses in the last two months were four times those of the Fascist forces.

"WE DROPPED A BIG LOT OF BRICKS INTO THE HEART OF A MOTOR TRANSPORT MOVING ALONG THE ROAD," SAID ONE OF THE SHIP'S OFFICERS. "WHEN THE SMOKE CLEARED THERE JUST WASN'T ANY TRANSPORT THERE."

FROM ABOUT 10 MILES OUT THE MONITOR TERROR RAINED SHELLS, WHILE THE

LADYBIRD AND APHIS MOVED IN CLOSER, HURLING THEIR SHELLS AS FAST AS THEIR EAGER GUNNERS COULD LOAD.

THE ITALIAN SHORE BATTERIES RETURNED THE FIRE VIGOROUSLY, ONE SHELL LANDING NEAR THE APHIS AND CAUSING "SLIGHT CASUALTIES."

THE TERROR'S JOB WAS TO STOP ANY ITALIAN COUNTER-ATTACK AGAINST THE BRITISH ARMY'S STEADY BARRAGE, BUT HER OFFICERS SAID THE BARRAGE DID MORE THAN THAT--IT DEMORALIZED THE FASCISTS, HASTENING THEIR SURRENDER, THEY SAID.

ONCE DURING THE BOMBARDMENT THE TERROR SIGHTED AN ITALIAN TRUCK CONVOY TRYING TO GET SUPPLIES TO BARDIA'S BELEAGUERED TROOPS. THE SHIP'S GUNS SPRAYED A 5-MILE STRETCH OF ROAD, APPARENTLY CRUMBLING THE TRUCKS AS THOUGH THEY WERE EGGSHELLS.

BRITISH NAVAL AUTHORITIES CREDITED THE BIGGER TERROR'S TWO DUCKLIKE CAMPANIONS--THE 625-TON LADYBIRD AND APHIS--WITH BLASTING THE WEDGE IN BARDIA'S DEFENSES WHICH EVENTUALLY OPENED THE WAY TO THE FALL OF THE FORT.

Italian Submarines Bombed

R. A. F. Reports Craft Damaged or Sunk in Air Raid on Bordeaux.

London, Jan. 6 (A. P.).—The Air Ministry asserted tonight that British bombers had severely damaged or sunk outright Italian submarines at the German-held base of Bordeaux, on the French coast.

Bordeaux is used by the Axis navies as a base for submarines raiding British shipping in the Atlantic.

The ministry's news service, in a round-up of what it called "damage to Italy's war machine," said also that British authorities had learned that British air raids on northern Italy in October had been "so effective that the Italian people attributed almost supernatural powers to our bomb aimers." The news service gave no dates for the attacks on Italian submarines at Bordeaux but said these had been made on several occasions. It asserted that a direct hit had exploded an ammunition dump at Alessandria, northern Italy, and caused considerable destruction.

R. A. F. Attacks Brest.

Meanwhile, a small force of British bombers was reported today to have attacked an airdrome and shipping in the docks at Brest on the German-occupied coast of France early last evening. An Air Ministry communique said that one enemy fighter was shot down and that all British aircraft returned safely.

The Air Ministry News Service added that the Brest docks were "again battered by many sticks of bombs" in the twilight raid. German fighter planes were circling over the port when the British Blenheim bombers arrived, the service said, but the Blenheims "drove them off and then did their bombing."

Germans Attack London.

German raiders, following up a new overnight fire raid on London, attacked the capital again today by daylight, bombs were reported to have fallen in three districts, and during the alarms a man and a girl were killed when two bombs fell on a business building. Other bombs demolished two houses and damaged about a dozen others and machine-gun fire—the sign of aerial battle—was heard in the sky.

In midafternoon the third alarm was sounded. This had been preceded by the sound of gunfire in some areas.

Until yesterday, when one alarm was sounded, there had not been a daylight alarm in London for many weeks.

Last night's incendiary attack came exactly one week after the previous Sunday's devastating fire raid. But this time the Londoners were ready for the test.

An army of volunteers—men, women and boys—smothered the fire bombs as fast as they fell in one sector, pounced upon them defiantly and then chanted from the safety of doorways: "We want some more." The raiders obliged but the watchers put them out just as quickly.

In this area, observers said, there seemed to be as many watchers as bombs, even though the raiders were said to dropping them by the basketful.

Several fires were started, a communique said, "but were so promptly dealt with that none of them assumed serious proportions. Many buildings were damaged, and some persons were killed and others injured." The raid ended before midnight.

Five bodies were reported recovered from wrecked houses in one district, and rescue parties strove to extricate thirteen other persons entombed in the wreckage.

Some raiders also were reported over Liverpool, the East Midlands and the north of England last night, but the Government reported no damage there and few casualties.

Meanwhile today a small reconnaissance flight penetrated to the outskirts of the capital, causing an air raid alarm during the early rush hour. The alarm was brief, but a second alert followed quickly, and this time gunfire was heard. It was the second consecutive day a daylight alarm has been heard. Yesterday's was the first in many weeks.

R. A. F. Attacks Brest.

Meanwhile, a small force of British bombers was reported today to have attacked an airdrome and shipping in the docks at Brest on the German-occupied coast of France early last evening. An Air Ministry communique said that one enemy fighter was shot down and that all British aircraft returned safely.

The Air Ministry News Service added that the Brest docks were "again battered by many sticks of bombs" in the twilight raid. German fighter planes were circling over the port when the British Blenheim bombers arrived, the service said, but the Blenheims "drove them off and then did their bombing."

The ground defenses were said to have put up an immense barrage, and one Blenheim was almost turned over by a blast from an anti-aircraft shell bursting immediately beneath it.

A destroyer in the harbor at Brest was hit by air bombs in another attack on Saturday, it was added.

In further offensive operations yesterday, the Air Ministry said, two German supply ships were hit by R. A. F. bombers off the southwest coast of Norway.

Hamburg, the frequently raided German port, was attacked again over the week end, the Ministry announced, adding that fires were later observed there.

Nazis Report Strong Attack.

Berlin, Jan. 6 (A. P.).—Strong Nazi combat formations again bombed London last night and explosions and large fires were observed in the heart of the city, German spokesmen said today. Smaller attacks were directed against factories and airports at Hull, Darlington and Lincoln, they said.

DNB, the official German news agency, reported that a factory at Chelmsford suffered numerous direct hits while near Colchester German planes effectively attacked a railway station, switching yards and freight cars. In the course of armed reconnaissance flights, the agency continued, attacks were also made on ships trying to reach the English east coast harbors under the protection of soupy weather. One vessel of from 3,000 to 4,000 tons was so severely hit, the report said, that she was left in a sinking condition. Two outpost boats and a 6,000-ton merchantman also were said to have been successfully bombed.

R. A. F. Wrecks Italians' French Submarine Nest

Sinks or Damages Craft at Bordeaux; Raids Make Rome Move Plane Plants

By The Associated Press

LONDON, Jan. 6.—British bombers have sunk or damaged seriously a number of Italian submarines at Bordeaux, France, and have bombed industrial northern Italy so effectively that some airplane plants there have decided to move the Air Ministry announced tonight in a round-up of damage reported to have been inflicted on the Italian war machine.

A series of heavy explosions and bright flashes on the French coast, heard and seen across the Strait of Dover despite a muffling snowfall, indicated tonight that the R. A. F. again was smashing at invasion ports.

The summary, touching on operations as long ago as October, followed descriptions of raids on Brest, in which docks were "again battered by many sticks of bombs" at twilight yesterday and a destroyer damaged on Saturday.

Despite an "immense barrage" and challenges from German fighter planes, the British said all aircraft returned safely from yesterday's attack. Hamburg, Germany, also was raided during the week end, the ministry said, adding that fires were observed there after the attack.

The Air Ministry news service said British bombs had "severely damaged or sunk outright" Italian submarines based at Bordeaux on "several occasions."

The attacks on Bordeaux are important counter-offensives to the Atlantic raids conducted by Axis submarines based there.

The Air Ministry bulletin said the British had learned that their air raids on Turin, Milan, Alessandria and other north Italian industrial cities during October had been "so effective that the Italian people attributed almost supernatural powers to our bomb aimers."

A direct hit that exploded an ammunition dump caused widespread damage at Alessandria and its vicinity, the bulletin said.

At Turin, the Fiat automobile and airplane works were said to have been seriously damaged, while at Milan, it was asserted, most of the Caproni aircraft factories decided to move farther south and east as a result of British raids.

Attacks on Durazzo and Valona, on the Albanian coast, the account continued, have been "extremely successful." In one raid most of the aircraft on the ground at Valona was destroyed, and at Durazzo a number of fuel tanks were blown to bits.

As a result of British raids on the Dodecanese, the bulletin said, there had been no operations from those Italian island bases in the Aegean since the outbreak of the Greek-Italian war.

The R. A. F. activity in Africa was declared to have been relatively large, with the result that Italian air forces have been "almost completely unable to make their weight felt."

Nazis Over London 3 Times in Daylight

London, Jan. 6 (AP).—Light German fighter-bombers attacked London three times today—the first time in weeks that the capital has undergone more than one daylight raid—and dropped bombs on East Anglia and southeastern points.

Several hours of darkness passed without an alarm in London tonight.

Broadcasting House, the London home of the British Broadcasting Corporation, "twice has been hit during air raids and has been very seriously damaged," the Ministry of Information announced today. Members of the B. B. C. staff have been killed at posts in London and in the country, and others have been wounded.

BERLIN REPORTS FIRE RAID

Further Attack on London and on British Rail Lines Detailed

BERLIN, Tuesday, Jan. 7 (AP)—Numerous German warplanes made individual attacks on London yesterday dropping fire bombs and explosives and damaging several quarters of the city, the German News Agency D. N. B. said today.

Further attacks were directed against important rail lines and crossings in the counties between London and industrial centers of the Midlands.

One plane dropped a number of bombs on eight freight trains north of London, D. N. B. said, and other planes effectively machine-gunned locomotives and tank cars and severely damaged tracks and buildings a an unannounced station.

A number of other objectives were fired, the agency added, among them chemical works north of London.

The Wolverhampton Airport was attacked, D. N. B. said, and ten planes in one hangar were destroyed.

No British air activity was reported anywhere in Germany.

A ship of 3,000 to 4,000 tons sailing in a convoy was so severely hit on Sunday, the agency reported, that she was left listing in a sinking condition. Two outpost boats and a 6,000-ton merchantman also were said to have been "successfully bombed."

The high command said two British planes crashed into the sea off the French coast on Sunday in an attempted raid on Nazi-occupied territory.

A submarine previously reported to have sunk 13,300 tons of shipping, the daily communique said, "was able to raise its successes to a total of 20,600 tons of enemy cargo space."

Britain Creates New War Posts For Home Front

Three Executives to Handle Production, Imports and Post-War Reconstruction

LONDON, Jan. 6 (AP).—Great Britain's insistent demand for speed and more speed on the home front in what every Briton believes will be the most decisive year of the war was met by Prime Minister Winston Churchill today with the dramatically timed creation of three new executive bodies to deal with production, imports and post-war reconstruction.

In the first major move to draft labor, Churchill put into the hands of three members of his government sweeping powers over the men and women who constitute these islands' industrial forces. They are Ernest Bevin, Labor Minister, who was placed in charge of a new production organization; Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, Minister of Supply, who is to head the all-important import group, and Arthur Greenwood, Minister Without Portfolio, who will make a study of post-war reconstruction.

While Duncan's group attends to "the vital war business of bringing food from overseas, supplying the fighting forces and keeping the life of the country going," Bevin's organization, "knowing what our output must be, much achieve it." Bevin's "Executive," as the three new bodies were defined in an official announcement from No. 10 Downing Street, will get broad authority to do what it likes with raw materials, factories and workshops of Britain.

More Co-ordination Sought

In a move to insure even further co-ordination, the newly created chairmen will sit with the heads of the existing Committees of Defense, Home Policy and Food Policy to advise the War Cabinet concerning the home front. Sir John Anderson, Lord President of the Council, will sit as chairman of all these groups.

The announcement said the changes were designed to bring the government into a "more simple and closely knit structure, leading to a reduction in the number of subsidiary committees" and "to achieve more rapid and decisive action."

Duncan's committee, it said, was intended to "animate and regulate the whole business of importation." The function of Bevin's committee was defined as including "allocation of available resources of raw materials, productive capacity and labor."

The speed which Churchill hopes the new executives will reach, the government's official statement said, "will help the War Cabinet take on an even faster tempo." It was explained that if there should develop any threat of departure from the government's policy, "the guiding hand of the Prime Minister and the War Cabinet will always be there to rectify it."

The first major reorganization of Churchill's war-time government, it was interpreted as designed to modernize activities and cut to a minimum delays resulting from overlapping functions of agencies hastily established in the first year of the war.

Replaces Production Council

Associated with Bevin in the production organization, which replaces the Production Council, are Lord Beaverbrook, Minister for Aircraft Production; Capt. Oliver Lyttelton, president of the Board of Trade, and Duncan. Duncan's Import Executive includes Beaverbrook, A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty; Lyttelton and Lord Woolton, Minister of Food. They represent Britain's chief importers.

The announcement said Greenwood had taken responsibility for a study of reconstruction and post-war problems and that, later on, when the war's end can be more freely foreseen, a ministry would be formed for this purpose.

Greenwood meanwhile will be chairman of a group of ministers, whose object will be to find practical solutions for immediate problems of transition from war to peace, and also to outline and presently to amplify policy for the years immediaely following the war, "which will command the support of the nation as a whole and enable united action to proceed in peace as in war."

Churchill himself assumed responsibility for insuring that the work of the import and production bodies would correspond with general policy.

The official statement's reference to allocation of labor was the first official intimation that the government might use powers granted last May 22 to say where and how available manpower was to be used.

Draft of Labor Expected

LONDON, Jan. 6 (AP)—The first major move to draft British labor was seen tonight in the powers granted the Production Executive. The reference in the official statement to allocation of labor was the first official intimation that the government might use the powers granted last May 22 to say where and how available man power should be used.

TEXT OF STATEMENT

Following is the text of the statement:

The Prime Minister has made the following changes in the machinery of the government for dealing with imports, production and post-war reconstruction policy:

1. The Minister Without Portfolio has undertaken responsibility for the study of reconstruction and post-war problems, and later on, when the end of the war can be more clearly foreseen, a Ministry will be formed for this purpose.

Meanwhile Mr. Arthur Greenwood will be chairman of the group of Ministers. The object will be to find practical solutions for the immediate problem of a transition from war to peace and also to outline and presently to amplify a policy for the years immediately following the war which will command the support of the nation as a whole and enable united action to proceed in peace as in war.

2. An Import Executive has been formed consisting of the five Ministers who are the chief importers, whose duties it will be to animate and regulate the whole business of importation in accordance with the policy of the War Cabinet.

The following is the composition of the Import Executive: The Minister of Supply (chairman), the Minister for Aircraft Production, the President of the Board of Trade, the Minister of Food, the First Lord of the Admiralty.

The Minister of Transportation, the Minister of Shipping, the merchant-ship building and repair branch of the Admiralty and other Ministries or departments concerned will render all necessary aid to the Import Executive in executing and implementing their decisions. The Minister of Agriculture will have ready access to the Import Executive. The President of the Board of Trade will represent the interests of the other lesser importing departments.

3. A Production Executive has also been set up, consisting of: the Minister of Labor and National Service (chairman), the Minister for Aircraft Production, The First Lord of the Admiralty, the President of the Board of Trade, the Minister of Supply.

This Executive will give effect to the general policy of the War Cabinet, and its functions will include the allocation of available resources of raw materials, production capacity and labor, together with the fixing of priorities where necessary. The Production Executive will replace the Production Council.

There has already existed for some time a committee of three Supply Ministers to regulate and concert purchases in North America. This committee, while continuing its separate work, is also through its members embodied in and related to the function of the Import and Production Executives.

4. The Prime Minister assumes responsibility for insuring that the work of both Executives corresponds with the general policy of the War Cabinet.

5. The work of the Import and Production Executives and of the three existing Committees on Civil Defense, Home Policy and Food Policy will continue to be concerted and directed by a committee on which the chairmen of these bodies sit under the chairmanship of the Lord President of the Council. This committee is now constituted as follows: The Lord President of the Council (chairman), the Lord Privy Seal, the Minister Without Portfolio, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Minister of Labor and National Service, the Home Secretary, the Minister of Supply.

The Lord President's committee will advise the War Cabinet generally on the movement of business in the Executives and committees and on special questions remitted to it. It will also deal with general issues of economic policy formerly considered by the Economic Policy Committee, and the work of that committee about exports will be transferred to the Import Executive.

It is hoped that, by the arrangements, the very complicated affairs of government in wartime will be brought into a more simple and closely knit structure leading to a reduction in the number of subsidiary committees and in the time spent in attendance upon them and that more rapid decisive action will be achieved, while reserving the Constitutional responsibilities of Ministers to the Crown and Parliament.

Amy Johnson Mollison, British Aviatrix, Drowned In Thames

Vain Rescue Effort Made By Surface Craft When Flyer Bails Out Over Estuary

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 6—Amy Johnson Mollison, Britain's greatest aviatrix, drowned in the icy waters of the Thames estuary yesterday after she was forced to bail out of the aircraft she was flying for the Air Transport Auxiliary.

Surface craft tried in vain to rescue the war-working ladybird, who had winged, during her spectacular career, from Britain to Australia and America, Japan and China and across Africa.

A seaman from a near-by balloon-barrage ship plunged into the water and grasped a body, but lost his grip in the buffeting waves. He himself was reported near death from exposure and was unable to say whether the body was that of the aviatrix or possibly that of a passenger.

Flight Papers Found

For hours, searching boats criss-crossed the scene where the 32-year-old flyer fell, but were unable to find her body.

The searchers did find her flight authorization papers and some gear bearing her name. The papers indicated she was off her course possibly lost, when her machine dived into the choppy estuary.

The accident occurred in midafternoon. Lookouts on ships in the estuary sighted the plane about 750 feet up. It started to climb, then suddenly turned and made a long glide into the water.

At about 200 feet a figure with a parachute fluttered away from the plane and plummeted into the water.

It was the end, in the narrow seas of home, for the woman who had dared the vast expanses of oceans the world around.

Not Known If Alone

Whether anyone was with her was not definitely known. As a member of the Air Transport Auxiliary she was engaged in flying from one airfield to another, picking up other women pilots who ferried planes from the factories.

Another noted British aviatrix, the Duchess of Bedford, was lost not far away in 1937, when she piloted a plane from East Anglia toward the North Sea and vanished.

But Amy Johnson Mollison was the more famous.

The laughing, happy airwoman—"Johnny" as she was known to fellow-pilots—gained world-wide attention in 1930 when she set out in a light airplane for Australia from England.

Was 22 At Time

Twenty-two at the time, she had never flown more than 140 miles—the distance from London to her Yorkshire home.

World interest mounted to enthusiasm as she was reported in Vienna, Istanbul, Aleppo and Baghdad on successive days. She reached India in six days, two days under the previous record, but damaged her plane at Rangoon and eventually arrived at Port Darwin, Australia, in twenty days.

Seven months later she tried to reach Peiping via Siberia, but was forced down near Warsaw. In six months she was off again across Russia, Siberia and China to Tokyo. In one day she covered 1,650 miles, establishing another new record.

English pride in "Johnny" knew no bounds, and she was made commander of the Order of the British Empire.

Married In 1932

In 1932 she was married to James A. Mollison, himself already a widely known flyer.

A few months after her wedding she broke her husband's record for a flight to the Cape of Good Hope by 10 hours and 18 minutes. She and her husband then planned to fly the Atlantic to New York, rest briefly, span the Atlantic from New York to Baghdad and then fly back to London.

After damaging their plane on the takeoff they tried once more and when fifty-seven miles from New York crashed in a forced landing at Stratford, Conn., July 24, 1933. Both she and her husband were injured.

The flying couple's last attempt at long-flight records was in the Melbourne air race in 1934. Amy and Jimmy started with a brilliant nonstop flight of 2,553 miles to Baghdad in just over twelve hours, but hard luck plagued them in the form of plane trouble and they withdrew from the competition.

Mollisons Divorced

Amy smashed another England-to-Cape Town record in 1936 when she made the flight in 3 days 6 hours and 26 minutes.

That same year, however, she announced that she and Jim Mollison had decided "soloing" was their best marital course and that they would go their separate ways. Two years later, in 1938, they were divorced.

Amy entered a New York-Paris race in 1937, but the United States Government banned it on the ground that it was a stunt.

Amy then turned to glider piloting, aerobatics and motor racing and became an instructor in the Civil Air Guard. When war came, she became a ferry pilot.

Bulgars Put Hope Of Checking Nazis In Russia, Turkey

Germans Report Soviet Consent to Occupation; Sofia Denies Ultimatum

Moscow Emissary Arrives in Capital

'Zero Hour' Tomorrow; Turks Massing Troops on Frontier in Thrace

By The Associated Press

SOFIA, Jan. 6. — Diplomatic sources regarded joint Russian-Turkish resistance to any German push through Bulgaria as still likely tonight, despite German reports that the Soviet Union had agreed to let the Nazis enter and take over Bulgarian territory.

The arrival here of a high official of the Soviet Commissariat of Foreign Affairs, these sources said, suggested that the reports, emanating from official German quarters, might be only wishful thinking.

Diplomatic reports also indicated that the Turks had concentrated several hundred thousand crack troops in Thrace close to the Bulgarian frontier.

Reports given currency by official German quarters at Belgrade said Russia had acquiesced in a German move in Bulgaria, on consideration that Germany not oppose Soviet policy either in Finland or in Moldavia, the Rumanian area which adjoins Bessarabia, former Rumanian soil already annexed by Russia. (There was no confirmation of the reports, however, in Russian, Bulgarian, Rumanian or Turkish sources.)

Ultimatum Unconfirmed

[Germany on Saturday delivered an ultimatum at Sofia demanding the right to Nazi military occupation of Bulgaria and setting Wednesday as the zero hour for German troops to begin marching, according to private advices received at New York by The United Press, which added that Bulgaria had consented. The Sofia government denied it. Berlin was noncommittal and London was skeptical.]

The Russian official, Alexander Mihaicovitch, came to Sofia with the official title of first counselor of the heavily staffed Soviet legation here. The Balkans, however, know him as the director of the Middle European Division of the Soviet Foreign Commissariat and as Moscow's outstanding expert on Balkan affairs.

Talk With King Reported

Word immediately went the rounds of the chancelleries that Mihaicovitch already had seen both Foreign Minister Ivan Popoff and King Boris III, but this was not confirmed. It was recalled, however, that the last visit of a high Soviet official to Sofia was followed quickly by the King's talks with Fuehrer Adolf Hitler and was popularly credited with having kept Bulgaria from joining the Axis.

Today it was the Greek Orthodox Church's Christmas Eve in Bulgaria and also the sixty-third anniversary of the freeing of Sofia from Turkish domination. Bulgars in Sofia attended ceremonies honoring the Russian dead in the battle which won Sofia, and turned them into a prayer that the Soviet Union would use its weight now to keep the Germans on the Rumanian side of the Danube.

Dispatches from Bulgarian towns on the Danube indicated that German troops on the other shore appeared to be settling down in their barracks, rather than preparing to cross the ice-filled river.

Nazis Report Red Agreement

BELGRADE, Jan. 6 (AP).—German official quarters here gave currency today to reports that Soviet Russia had agreed that the Germans should enter and take over Bulgarian territory. In exchange for the Soviet acquiescence, the Germans said, the Russians had received from Berlin an understanding that Germany would not oppose any Russian policy with respect to Finland or to Moldavia.

These sources said the Germans were not likely to move into Bulgaria, however, until either a heavy freeze or a thaw would make it easy to cross the Danube from Rumania.

(One factor entering into the Bulgarian situation, in the belief of informed observers, was the fact that King Boris's consort, Queen Ioanna (Giovanna) is the daughter of King Victor Emmanuel III of Italy. This would indicate that Germany would be unlikely to make any move with regard to Bulgaria without consultation with the Italian throne, and this may prove a deterrent to abrupt measures.)

Here is the view of German sources on what is happening and what will happen in the Balkans if their plans go well:

Bulgarian Premier Bogdan Philoff, they asserted, already has seen German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop and told him that if Russia agreed to German entry into Bulgaria there was nothing the little kingdom could do. There would be no resistance, Philoff was represented as saying.

Hope to Overawe Greeks

When a Danube crossing was feasible, said these sources, the Germans would go through Bulgaria to the Greek frontier. The Germans would enter Greece, they went on, only if the British showed continued signs of making Greece their starting point for a drive northward through the Balkans. The Germans hoped, it was said, that the Greeks would plead for peace once they saw German motorized legions drawn up on their Bulgarian frontier.

These quarters said the German plans called for practical dissolution of the Rumanian nation. Bulgaria would get northern Dobrudja, Hungary the rest of Transylvania, and what is left of Rumania would be under complete German military and civil domination. (Axis-dictated accords already have given Hungary the northwestern half of Transylvania and Bulgaria southern Dobrudja.)

Bulgaria, it was added, also would get her long-desired outlet to the Aegean Sea.

Reich Silent on Balkans

BERLIN, Jan. 6 (AP)—Everybody in Europe except the Germans seemed to be talking about the Balkans tonight.

Not a single authentic inkling of what, if anything, the German Army in the southeast intends to do came from any authoritative quarter. Spokesmen smiled at the flood of rumors some of which were termed fantastic.

"It's a splendid fog and others made it for us," said one.

This confirmed a general impression among correspondents that German authorities rather welcomed the welter of rumors as a screen behind which to perfect any plans.

One definite observation made was that the presence of German aviators in Italy, who could conceivably operate with land troops in the Balkans, does not weaken the air force which is devoting its attention to Britain.

On the contrary, it was stated officially that replacement of aviators was no problem; that German training periods had not been shortened and that Germany was not able even to use all those who had volunteered for air service.

Except to indicate that there were no worries over Bulgaria, the Wilhelmstrasse was uncommunicative about the Balkan situation.

To veteran foreign observers the official silence strikingly recalled similarly uncommunicative periods before the invasion of Poland in September, 1939; the beginning of the air battle of London last August, and the launching of the assaults on the Scandinavian and Low Countries in April and May of last year.

As to reported deals with Russia, the only statement forthcoming was that the Reich and Soviet had extended to August, 1942, existing agreements for payments for commodities exchanged.

This new agreement was described as purely technical and of no bearing on the quantities or nature of goods exchanged.

No Soviet Comment

MOSCOW, Jan. 6 (AP)—There has been no comment on or publication here of reports that Soviet Russia's Ministers to four Southeastern European countries have been recalled to Moscow for consultation.

Turks Stand by Allies

ANKARA, Turkey, Jan. 6 (AP)—With German troops massing in Southern Rumania less than 150 miles from Turkey's frontier, Premier Refik Saydam today assured the National Assembly that Turkish foreign policy aimed to secure the "safety of the nation * * * in complete reliance upon our Allies."

Britain is one of Turkey's avowed allies, and Soviet Russian relations long have been cordial. The National Assembly, after hearing this statement, recessed until March 17.

While the Assembly was meeting it became known that more than fifty prominent Turks in Istanbul had received unsigned postcards written in German stating that "Germany will invade England."

Authorities immediately began an investigation of these "New Year's cards," which apparently were mailed inside Turkey and displayed a map of England on one side.

The newspaper Tan in discussing German "negotiations" with Bulgaria, whose little territory intervenes between Turkey's northern frontier and the Nazi troops in Rumania, said "it is very possible that Germany is preparing some combination between Hungary, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria."

Other Turkish newspapers raised the queston of restoration to Turkey of the Italian-ruled Dodecanese Islands in the Eastern Mediterranean.

"The Dodecanese Islands have been Turkish for centuries," Tasvir Efkar asserted, "and if Italy, as she professes, has no unworthy aims toward us she must prove it by restoring these islands."

The official Ankara radio said it was "much too early" to comment upon reports Soviet Ministers in the Balkan States had been summoned to Moscow for consultation, but observed the recalls were "connected with the Bulgarian situation."

Red Envoys Called Home.

Budapest, Jan. 6 (A. P.).—Soviet Russia's Ministers to Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Rumania and Hungary sped home to Moscow today for consultation, it was reported here, on Germany's ever increasing military power in the Balkans. Their departure was taken here as the first definite evidence the Russians have given of their interest in the large scale German troop movements of the last week.

Forty troop trains a day have moved across Hungary into Rumania, which was wholly cut off from communication with the outside world today, and in some Soviet circles in the Balkans it was reported that Moscow has already warned Berlin against any step which may seriously endanger good relations between Russia and Germany. Soviet spokesmen in Belgrade said that the summoning home of the four Ministers was definitely linked with new military developments in Rumania and Hungary.

[There was no direct comment from Moscow. Russian troops, however, have been reported massed on the Bessarabian border, fronting on Rumania, and yesterday the period of compulsory training for men in the Russian Air Force was extended from three to four years.]

Swedish Treatment Promised.

Meanwhile today, behind the wall of secrecy in Rumania, Germany's Balkan army (estimated by some observers at as many as 600,000 men) was said to be consolidating its position along the Russian frontier, along the Danube facing Bulgaria and in cities only a few miles from the Yugoslav border. Bulgaria, where the local Communist party distributed leaflets saying that "Soviet Russia will not allow a single German soldier to set foot in Bulgaria," has often been mentioned as a possible pathway for a German drive to the Dardanelles or Greece. In Belgrade German spokesmen asserted that Yugoslavia would be treated as another Sweden if she behaves." Sweden's neutrality was not disturbed when the Germans invaded Norway last spring.

Reports of military activity in the Balkans continued to flow through diplomatic channels despite the suspension of international telephone communications in Rumania, and even the halting of fast international trains at the border.

Rumanian Disorders Reported.

Reports reaching Ruse, in Bulgaria, just across the Danube from Giurgiu, Rumania, said that the German troops had been forced to contend with disorders and widespread sabotage by railroad workers of the so-called communist wing of the Rumanian Iron Guard. Strong Nazi motorized columns were said to have reached Giurgiu with considerable quantities of bridge-building equipment and a large corps of engineers. These reports said that the Rumanian military were ordered to place heavy guard on all bridges, and that the railroad authorities were told by the Germans to keep the line from Bucharest to Constanta, Rumania's Black Sea port, in perfect condition for possible emergency use.

The Rumanians were reported to have mined the Danube at Galatz, scene of several frontier clashes between Rumanians and Russians, and under German direction were said to have begun the work of converting the old Danube outlet from Cerna-Voda to Constanta into a navigable canal. Diplomats said they regarded the latter development as direct confirmation of persistent reports that the Russians had seized the Sulina Canal, the only navigable river outlet, which is far south of the Russian frontier in Rumania.

Greeks Advance On Coast, Seize 173 Blackshirts

Fascists Driven Back Along Valona Road; Nazi Tanks Reported Near Elbasani

ATHENS, Jan. 6 (AP).—Greek soldiers pushing through the Albanian coastal sector toward the strategic seaport of Valona hurled back veteran Italian Blackshirt units today, while other Greek forces scored new gains in the Klisoura area, a government spokesman said here tonight. The Greeks were said to have captured more than 200 prisoners in the day's engagements, including 173 in the clash with the Blackshirts on the coast.

"Our troops in the coastal sector continued their offensive and drove the enemy from positions to which they had withdrawn the day before yesterday," the spokesman said.

A battle to the right of the advancing coastal troops resulted in the capture of ten men and one officer, the spokesman said, while thirty-eight prisoners were captured north of Klisoura.

The Greeks were said to have pushed their lines forward in the Klisoura sector and to have occupied positions which the Italians had "stubbornly defended." More villages and a mountain position were captured in the same sector, the spokesman added.

The Greek high command reported merely "renewed patrol and air activity."

The Italians were pictured as making a determined stand to gain time for completing a new defense line to guard Valona, vital port for escape or reinforcement in southwestern Albania. A Greek government spokesman's statement that Italian strategy was to "take advantage of weather conditions and fresh reinforcements from Italy to improve the situation or delay the Greek advance" was echoed by Italian prisoners, most of them fresh troops recently arrived from Italy.

Greek Losses Held High

ROME, Jan. 6 (AP)—The Italian High Command today reported only "local actions" took place on the Albanian front, but said "considerable losses" were inflicted on the Greeks, and arms and prisoners were taken.

Stefani, official Italian news agency, asserting the Greeks were well supplied by the British, said they were fighting with "much excellent artillery, automatic arms, most modern vehicles and good equipment."

It also reported that Greek troops on skis were appearing in white uniforms in the Albanian Mountains to camouflage them in the snow.

The agency said that Greek losses, however, were "impressive" and that Italian chaplains had "attended the burial of thousands of Greek corpses."

Greek losses of men and equipment have been four times Italy's in the two months of war, Stefani said.

As for Italian losses, Stefani said, "no war has had such a high percentage of officers killed in comparison to soldiers." Commanders of units and regiments, it said, go into the attack with foot soldiers "before the foot soldiers."

Bangkok Reveals 'Reprisal' Attacks, Asserts Planes Bombed 5 French Bases

BANGKOK, Jan. 6 (AP).—Thai (Siamese) troops crossed the French Indo-Chinese border at Aran Pradhesa on the heels of retreating French forces and occupied several villages in "reprisal" raids, the Thai command announced tonight.

The French suffered heavy casualties and lost considerable equipment, and Thai airplanes bombed five French military centers in Indo-China, officials here reported.

In this series of territorial disputes between the two countries, the Thai command said, one French plane dropped thirty bombs near Udorn early today, but there were no casualties.

Border clashes were reported from other sections. Thai police ordered all French nationals to report to them here or be liable to arrest, effective at midnight.

Denies Report of Demands

HONGKONG, Jan. 6 (AP).—Admiral Jean Decoux, Governor General of French Indo-China, in a message published here today, denied reports of Japanese designs on Saigon, chief city and port of southern Indo-China, and on Camranh Bay, naval base on the southeast coast.

[British and Chinese reports have said Japan was demanding the right to land troops at Saigon and to use Camranh Bay, which would make a base for any move against the Dutch East Indies or British Malaya.]

The Decoux message was addressed to Louis Reynaud, French Consul General here, who, in releasing it, said the implication was that France was determined not to relinquish control of the two strong points.

Decoux also denied reports that the Japanese were demanding exclusive use of the railroad from Haiphong and Hanoi to the Chinese border at Langson.

Reynaud said that the Japanese had about 100 planes in northern Indo-China but that these were being used only for raids on China (where they have been bombing the Burma Road) and not for any southward push in Indo-China.

Nanking Regime Opens Bank

SHANGHAI, Jan. 6 (AP). — The Japanese-controlled Nanking government opened its new "central reserve bank" today, thus starting a new offensive in a financial war aimed at destruction of the currency of the Chungking government. At the time when establishment of the bank was authorized last month Japanese said it would issue its own currency and "ultimately unify" the regular Chinese currency and various Japanese issues.

Inauguration of the bank likewise signalized one more step in the back-stage struggle between Japan and the United States in which Japan is supporting Nanking's financial maneuvers while Washington is backing Chungking.

As the first move to get its currency into circulation, Nanking announced that hereafter all customs duties in Central China must be paid in notes of the new bank, thus giving Nanking an important source of revenue.

Nanking officials announced they would not attempt to suppress Chungking currency at once, but foreign bankers expected the Chinese public gradually would be forced to accept Nanking currency in exchange for Chungking currency, which Nanking then could convert into foreign exchange.

TOKYO, Jan. 6 (AP)—Negotiations by which Japan expects to obtain economic concessions in French Indo-China, including valuable supplies of rubber and rice, were resumed today after a New Year recess.

The Cabinet Information Bureau announced that René Robin, head of the French delegation, and Ambassador Hajime Matsumiya, Japan's special negotiator, met for three and a half hours, "continuing the exchange of concrete information on economic problems."

Informed observers believed that the negotiations were attempting to reach fundamental principles for an economic accord.

[Japanese troops already are garrisoned in Hanoi, the capital, and Haiphong, chief port, of Indo-China, and hold bases along the northern border. Japanese leaders have indicated that they hope to bring Indo-China into their "Greater East Asia."]

JAPANESE THROWN BACK

Casualties of 3,000 Reported in 4-Day Battle in North

CHUNGKING, China, Jan. 6 (AP)—Three columns of Japanese were flung back with casualties of 3,000, the Chinese Central News Agency reported tonight, in a four-day battle on the northern front where some of the severest fighting of the Sino-Japanese war has occurred in the past two weeks.

Veteran troops of the invader began the assault on Dec. 22, the agency reported, against Chinese entrenchments in the Tai Shang mountain range abutting Shansi, Hopei and Honan Provinces.

The Japanese commander was said to have ordered a retreat to Yellow River positions after the battle.

HONG KONG, Jan. 6 (AP)—Japanese planes inflicted heavy damage on an important bridge over the Mekong River yesterday in an attack on the Burma Road, supply line to China from British Burma, a Japanese naval communiqué reported today.

SINGAPORE, Jan. 6 (AP).—Sultan Ibrahim of Johore, returning home with his latest Sultana, the former Marcella Mendl, urged Malay, Indian, Chinese and British residents of the premier state of British Malaya today to "unite as the people of Britain are united to help in prosecution of the war."

He said the German bombings are "not as bad as you have heard outside."

To "Fight Like Wildcats"

[By the Associated Press]

Tokyo, Tuesday, Jan. 7—The Japanese newspaper Kokumin editorially predicted today that Japan and the United States would "fight like wildcats" in the Pacific after the collapse of Britain, which it predicted.

"It is safe to predict that Britain will be wiped off the European map by autumn at the latest," the editorial said. "The collapse of Britain and American participation (in the war) will put an end to the import of the European war, shifting the scene to the Pacific, where the new world war will be staged.

"In that eventuality, Japan and the United States will fight like wildcats as the main forces of the belligerents. . . .

"Even granting that the United States is not entering the European war, so long as she pursues her present overt pro-British activities she actually is in it.

"Had Germany been bellicose she would have found more than enough reasons to declare war against the United States for past contemptuous utterances and illegal deeds. The same applies to Italy and Japan."

Mrs. Berlin Attacks Anne Lindbergh's Book

Washington, Jan. 6 (A. P.).—Mrs. Irving Berlin said on the radio last night that Anne Lindbergh's book "The Wave of the Future" was an example of propaganda that "confuses and weakens our will, propaganda that is, often innocently, part of the German strategy of terror."

VICHY IS SILENT AS LEAHY ARRIVES

U. S. Envoy Stirs Popular Interest in France.

Vichy, Jan. 6 (A. P.).—Admiral William D. Leahy, the new American Ambassador to France, began work at his desk in the Chancellory today after having arrived last night in one of the worst snowstorms in years in the south of France.

This afternoon he called on the Foreign Minister, Pierre-Etienne Flandin, to present his credentials and request an appointment with the Chief of State, Philippe Petain.

Admiral Leahy was greeted on his arrival here last night by a police guard which usually turns out only for Marshal Petain. The man in the street expressed interest and pleasure today in the new Ambassador's arrival, but the newspapers published only brief, factual stories in secondary news positions, while the Government maintained a cautious silence. Official spokesmen made it clear that the most important objective just now is the resumption of Franco-German negotiations.

Admiral and Mrs. Leahy went from the station last night directly to a villa belonging to Frank J. Gould. This had been set aside by the French Government as the embassy residence.

Germans Get Abstract

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Tuesday, Jan. 7—Germany's first news of President Roosevelt's message to the United States Congress was a 200-word summary carried by

DNB, which called it a new year's communication in connection with the opening of Congress.

Authorized commentators kept silent, however, indicating the German reaction would be given only after most careful study of the message in the highest quarters.

DNB said the message conformed to Mr. Roosevelt's "well-known attitude in international affairs."

The agency emphasized Mr. Roosevelt's recommendation that war materials be made available to the democracies without the immediate thought of payments. It also emphasized his contention that such a policy would not be an act of war.

A number of other objectives were fired, the agency added, among them chemical works north of London.

The Wolverhampton airport was attacked, DNB said, and ten planes in one hangar were destroyed.

Spain Found Aiding Axis In Americas

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 6—Spanish Falangist activities in the American republics are under close watch by the State Department, it was learned authoritatively today, because officials believe there is increasing evidence that Spain's collaboration with the Axis may be extended to foster the spread of German and Italian propaganda in the Western Hemisphere.

The Spanish Government, informed sources said, has opened a propaganda campaign designed to revive dreams of Spain's one-time ascendency in Latin-American affairs. This campaign, they said, is to be advanced by Falangist propagandists in Spanish embassies, legations and consulates in South and Central American countries and in the Philippines.

Aims Of Axis Activities

Copies of official Spanish Government documents received here, these sources reported, provide increasing indications that Falangist w rkers, operating through Spanish Government offices, may also become clearing agents for Axis propaganda.

At present, according to official information here, German and Italian activities in Latin America are being directed toward inculcating Nazi and Fascist doctrines, encouraging potential "fifth columns," and fomenting opposition to inter-American policies or plans for unified hemisphere defense.

Serrano Suner Named

"To date the Spanish Falangist propagandists appear to have accomplished very little," an informed source said, "but the are increasing and expanding the activities."

The director of the propaganda drive, this authority asserted, is Ramon Serrano Suner, Spain's Foreign Minister, who is head of the dominant Falangist party and a leading advocate of closer Spanish collabo ation with the Axis. When he became Foreign Minister after visits to Berlin and Rome, it was pointed out, he issued a statement declaring that "the Falange abroad from now on will be an element to consider in the diplomatic life of Spain."

Serrano Suner, informed sources said, is placing outstanding Flangists in important diplomatic and consular posts in South and Central America. Coordinating the campaign, General Franco, chief of the Spanish state, issued a decree on November 2 creating the Hispanic Council.

This decree anounced that Spain "asserts her role as spiritual axis of the Hispanic world," and declared that "new life must be given to the dust-covered Hispano-American policy" so that Spain would again become "the head of the world for Hispanic peoples . . . the father of just laws . . . orderer of peoples . . creator of culture."

At the same time, informed sources reported, the Spanish press, led by Arriba, the official Falange organ, began a series of attacks on the United States and hemisphere defense activities. Anti-American posters and cartoons also were circulated in Spanish cities.

SENATE GROUP TO HEAR DAVIS, WHEELER SAYS

Washington, D. C., Jan. 6 (AP).—William Rhodes Davis, international oil operator, obtained today a pledge of a Senatorial hearing on what he termed "false" charges that he had been working for peace on "Hitler's terms."

Senator Wheeler (D-Mont.), to whom Davis appealed, said he would be invited to appear before a Senate subcommittee headed by Wheeler.

To Help Business Men.

"When the resolution was passed setting up this committee, I stated that we not only wanted to investigate companies supposed to be doing business with foreign companies which might be injurious to the United States, but also wanted to protect American business men from being unduly harassed and held up to ridicule in times of stress."

Davis, in his letter to Wheeler, noted that Senator Lee (D.-Okla.) had issued a statement in which Davis was described as having a "great financial stake" in a complete Nazi victory and "as attempting to promote a phony peace through the White House to pull Germany's chestnuts out of the fire." Davis termed these statements false.

Followed Marshall Rap.

Lee had issued his statement after Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee, had asserted that Davis had encountered official indifference in Washington when he brought an "agenda" for an "honorable and just" peace in 1939.

Today Lee said he would ask a special Senate investigating committee to inquire into activities of what he called "pressure groups such as the No Foreign Wars Committee."

New York, Jan. 6 (AP)—Harry L. Hopkins left for London today, silent about his mission as President Roosevelt's personal envoy but confident "it won't be too long" before he returns.

He was definite on only one thing—that he would not succeed Joseph P. Kennedy as United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

Hopkins, who was last in England in 1934, said he knew Prime Minister Winston Churchill and "most of the other fellows in the British Cabinet."

He refused to say whether he might go to Eire or France, but did say when asked if his itinerary was subject to change:

"Obviously, I don't know where I'll be every morning."

'ELBOW TO ELBOW' URGED FOR BRITAIN

America Would Fight, Senator Austin Says, Asserting It Knows Price of Liberty

LUXURY CURB IS PROPOSED

Longer Working Week, Extra Pay for Labor Is Suggested in Radio Forum Address

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6 (AP)—Senator Austin asserted tonight that the American people had enlisted on the side of "freedom" in the present world conflict and—"touching elbows with the British"—were prepared to fight if that becomes necessary.

"Let no dictator get the impression that Americans will not fight," the acting Republican leader of the Senate said in a radio address. "Of course, they will not fight unless and until they have to. But they know the cost of freedom and they are preparing to pay that cost if they have to."

Mr. Austin made his remarks in an address prepared for delivery on The Washington Star's National Radio Forum.

Declaring that the debate over the country's policy and the war should be considered closed, he said the re-election of President Roosevelt was an expression of the people's "determination that the present attitude of their government in the world revolution should be maintained."

The real question now, he continued, is how to speed up the production of the national "workshop" to meet the needs of the British and their allies as well as to supply American defense requirements.

As steps to that end, he suggested a longer working week, with extra pay for labor, and urged that all citizens curtail the use of luxuries and semi-luxuries to make room for greater military production.

The government, he said, ought to "modify existing clogs in the operation of private industry" as well as to amend existing contracts "so that both labor and capital may have the reasonable compensation which is absolutely necessary to a vigorous and effective economy."

By speeding up defense production, he said, the United States could give effective aid to Britain, Greece and China "without a single American soldier engaging in combat."

"The swift preparation already started in the United States," he added, assured these "victims of aggression that the requirement for their support morally and materially will be fully met so far as this country is able to meet them."

In saying the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt should end debate over foreign policy, Mr. Austin commented that Wendell Willkie had expressed much the same views as the President.

"His supporters endorsed his stand," the Senator continued. "Thus, public opinion was unified. But probably no good intentions could have prevailed over the known performance."

De Valera Misquoted On Speech, CBS Finds

Irish Prime Minister Did Not Mention Britain In Christmas Broadcast, It Is Agreed

New York, Jan. 6 (AP)—In reporting a Christmas Day broadcast by Prime Minister Eamon de Valera of Ireland (Eire), Columbia Broadcasting System quoted the Irish leader as saying that "the overshadowing anxiety at the moment seems to be today's possibility of incitement which would force our people once more to battle against Britain and the British."

Dublin authorities later said that de Valera made no mention of either Britain or Germany.

CBS said today, "It develops after considerable investigation by the Columbia Broadcasting System and Irish diplomatic officials in this country that Mr. de Valera's quotation warned that the Irish might be forced again to 'battle desperately for their liberties.' Neither Britain nor any other belligerent in Europe at war was mentioned by the Prime Minister."

Germans Deny Raids By British In France

Motorcycle Suicide Squads Were Reported To Have Been Landed From Trawlers

New York, Jan. 6 (AP)—The German wireless, in a broadcast heard today by CBS, denied that British suicide squads have staged raids in occupied France.

William McGaffin, Associated Press staff writer recently returned from London, wrote Saturday that "extremely reliable sources" had informed him that British motorcycle squads had carried out at least nine raids after landing trawlers on the French Channel coast.

The German announcer, in the broadcast heard by CBS, said:

"It is reported that in this connection, on hearing this, Field Marshal von Reichenau, who is in command of the German army in France, commented as follows:

"'It reminds me that Prince Bismarck answered a British threat to land troops in Schleswig-Holstein by saying that he would simply have the invaders arrested by the constabulary.'"

Boston Prelate Tells Holy Name Men Congress Has Duty Of Safeguarding Nation

Asserting the duty of members of Congress was to "safeguard the welfare of America," the 81-year-old cardinal told a Holy Name union service yesterday:

"They are not responsible for the order of the universe nor of the world; they are responsible for the peace and prosperity and order of America."

He asserted he was not a "pacifist nor an appeaser," and declared "if I were young enough, I'd go in an instant to the defense of my country."

Bardia's Fall Severe Blow to Hopes Of Axis in Mediterranean

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

The brilliant British and allied victory over the Fascists at Bardia in the Libyan desert reduces the Berlin-Rome Axis hopes of winning the battle of the Mediterranean to little more than a heap of smoking ashes. The Italian loss of this vital base has removed about the last danger of further invasion of Egypt at present. And that invasion, which had as its objective the Suez Canal, was the grand slam of the Axis strategy.

Fascist Marshal Graziani's army of a quarter million has sustained another shattering blow. The British capture of a further 30,000 prisoners swells to 85,000 the Italian losses since the offensive began, besides great quantities of equipment and supplies. That is the broad aspect of the swing in fortunes in the Mediterranean conflict—a change likely to have a great effect on the outcome of the European war as a whole.

Crowding it in importance, however, is the further damage done to Italy's already gravely weakened position. The surrender of Bardia opens the way for a British assault on the port of Tobruk, seventy miles farther west—and if Tobruk falls, Mussolini will indeed be in a bad way, for it will mean:

1. The strong possibility of the loss of Libya to the British, should they see fit to pursue their offensive.

2. About the last weak note of Italy's swan-song of naval power in the eastern Mediterranean.

Control of Tobruk Vital.

A glance at the maps will show how Britain's main arterial road of empire passes not far north of this Italian naval and air base of Tobruk—much too close for comport for peaceful merchant shipping. Then up among the Dodecanese Islands to the northeast the Fascists have another powerful naval and air base on the island of Leros. The point of this situation is that when both these bases were active they had the British neatly flanked in the eastern Mediterranean.

However, when Mussolini's invasion of Greece presented the Allies with the naval base of Crete, the Italian base at Leros was nullified. Now if Tobruk falls, the other half goes. Moreover, if the British capture Tobruk it may mean the ultimate surrender of all Libya. That is so because this big colony depends for all its supplies on Italy's ability to maintain sea communications between the mother country and this African possession. Those communications already have been virtually severed and with the loss of Tobruk the position of Libya would indeed be desperate.

Best Natural Harbor.

Tobruk is the best natural harbor on the whole north coast of Africa. Actually it's the only port of any consequence in that region except Benghazi, 500 miles farther west. Tobruk means so much that Graziani may be expected to defend it with all he has. He undoubtedly is suffering from lack of supplies, owing to severed communications, but probably his greatest danger lies in the fact that Tobruk has no drinking water and every teaspoonful has to be imported in tankers.

It was fitting that the Australians should have the honor of cracking Bardia open, since they had so great a hand in the defense of the Suez in the world war and in the other historic campaigns of the Near East. It is recorded that they attacked Bardia yelling and singing "We're off to see the Wizard, the wonderful Wizard of Oz."

BERLIN, JAN 6-(AP)-DNB, GERMAN OFFICIAL NEWS AGENCY, REPORTED TODAY IN A DISPATCH UNDER A PARIS DATELINE THAT FRENCH-GERMAN COLLABORATION UNDER THE PRE-CONDITION OF A "FREE AND HONEST WILL OF UNDERSTANDING" WAS ADVOCATED IN A PASTORAL LETTER BY BISHOP HENRI DUTOIT OF ARRAS, FRANCE, WHICH WAS READ FROM PULPITS.

"COLLABORATION IS NO SLAVERY BECAUSE IT DOES NOT BANISH ONE'S OWN INITIATIVE IN WORD OR DEED" DNB QUOTED THE LETTER AS SAYING. "HE WHO COLLABORATES SHOULD NOT BE DENIED PLACING HIS OWN GENIUS AND HIS OWN RESOURCES AT THE DISPOSAL OF THE JOINT EFFORT TO ENHANCE THE VALUE OF THIS COLLABORATION."

THE LETTER, DNB SAID, CONCLUDED BY STATING THAT IT WAS NOT SURPRISING THAT ENGLAND, AS FRANCE'S ALLY OF YESTERDAY, HARDLY UNDERSTOOD OR ACCEPTED SUCH A VIEWPOINT.

WASHINGTON,JAN.6-(AP)-WIDESPREAD RAIDS ON PARIS LIBRARIES AND BOOKSTORES BY THE GERMAN GESTAPO, HIGHLY-PLACED EDUCATIONAL QUARTERS DISCLOSED TODAY, HAVE SWEPT THEIR SHELVES CLEAN OF ANTI-NAZI WRITINGS AND MUCH PHILOSOPHICAL AND HISTORICAL LITERATURE.

THE RAIDS BEGAN, AUTHORITATIVE SOURCES REPORTED, WHEN THE GERMAN SECRET POLICE VISITED BOOKSHOPS, STALLS AND NEWSSTANDS ALONG THE SEINE LATE LAST SUMMER AND ORDERED THE PROPRIETORS TO HAND OVER WITHIN A HALF HOUR ALL COPIES OF 143 BOOKS ON A LIST WHICH WAS PRESENTED.

THE AMERICAN LIBRARY IN PARIS WAS DESCRIBED AS AMONG THE INSTITUTIONS SERVED WITH SUCH AN ORDER, BUT INFORMATION RECEIVED HERE SAID THAT THE GESTAPO REMOVED NO BOOKS, ACCEPTING A PROMISE THAT ALL THOSE OBJECTIONABLE FROM THE NAZI VIEWPOINT WOULD BE WITHDRAWN FROM CIRCULATION.

SINCE THOSE FIRST RAIDS, SUPPLEMENTAL LISTS OF BANNED BOOKS --

COPIES OF WHICH HAVE REACHED WASHINGTONIANS -- HAVE BEEN PASSED OUT TO PARISIAN LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS. IN GENERAL, THE ORDER IS THAT NOTHING OF AN "ANTI-GERMAN CHARACTER" MAY BE SOLD.

MOST OF THE VOLUMES ON THE FIRST LIST WERE BY FRENCH AUTHORS, AND INCLUDED NOT ONLY BOOKS ON THE NAZI REGIME AND TOTALITARIAN GOVERNMENTS, BUT ALSO SEVERAL ABOUT THE RUSSO-FINNISH WAR.

THESE ACCOUNTS OF LARGE SCALE CONFISCATION OF BOOKS IN THE FRENCH CAPITAL MATCHED PREVIOUS REPORTS OF EUROPEAN ORIGIN THAT SIMILAR ACTION HAD BEEN TAKEN ELSEWHERE IN GERMAN-OCCUPIED TERRITORY.

A FOUR-DAY "PURGE" OF PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES STARTED IN ALSACE DEC. 15, WITH THE BOOKS DESTINATED FOR A CEREMONIOUS BONFIRE. "PURGES" LIKEWISE HAVE BEEN REPORTED IN THE PROVINCE OF LORRAINE AND IN THE NETHERLANDS, EXTENDING TO SCHOOLBOOK TEXTS.

THE LATEST ADVICES FROM AUTHENTIC NEUTRAL SOURCES SAID THAT THE GESTAPO HAD SEIZED THE LIBRARIES OF ALL MASONIC ORGANIZATIONS IN FRANCE THE BIBLIOTHEQUE NATIONALE (THE FRENCH NATIONAL LIBRARY) THEREUPON PUT IN A CLAIM FOR THESE BOOKS, BUT THE LATEST WORD WAS THAT THE GERMANS DECLINED TO HAND THEM OVER, SAYING THAT THE MATERIAL WOULD BE SENT TO GERMANY "FOR PURPOSES OF STUDY."

THE LIBRARY OF THE ALLIANCE ISRAELITE IN PARIS, WORTH SEVERAL MILLION FRANCS, ALSO WAS SAID TO HAVE BEEN SEIZED AND SENT TO GERMANY.

FROM THE BIBLIOTHEQUE NATIONALE -- ONE OF THE WORLD'S LEADING LIBRARIES -- THE GERMANS WERE REPORTED TO HAVE RECEIVED AN INVENTORY OF MANUSCRIPTS, RARE BOOKS, ETC., WHICH HAD BEEN STORED ELSEWHERE IN FRANCE FOR SECURITY DURING THE WAR.

GERMAN OFFICIALS, ACCORDING TO THE INFORMATION RECEIVED HERE, HAVE BEEN EXERCISING CLOSE SUPERVISION OVER THE FRENCH PUBLISHING INDUSTRY. THEY ALSO HAVE TAKEN OVER THE MAISON DU LIVRE FRANCAIS, MOST IMPORTANT FRENCH BOOK EXPORTING AGENCY.

CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS
TURNING BACK PROFITS

REFUSING GAINS
ON WAR ORDERS (390)

BY WADE WERNER

(ADVANCE)-OTTAWA--(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)--NOBODY SEEMS TO REMEMBER WHO STARTED THE CRY THAT THIS MUST BE A PROFITEERLESS WAR, BUT A LOT OF CANADIANS ARE TAKING IT SERIOUSLY.

IT WAS ASSUMED FROM THE FIRST THAT THE GOVERNMENT WOULD TAKE STEPS TO TAX EXCESS PROFITS HEAVILY, AND THAT THIS WAR WOULD NOT PRODUCE A NEW CROP OF "WAR MILLIONAIRES." THE GOVERNMENT DID TAKE SUCH STEPS; BUT THE MOVEMENT GOES MUCH FURTHER THAN THAT.

MANY CITIZENS NOT ONLY ARE REFUSING TO BECOME WAR MILLIONAIRES, THEY ARE REFUSING TO TAKE ANY PROFIT FROM THE WAR AT ALL -- EVEN A SMALL ONE.

CANADA IS PUTTING MONEY INTO THE CONFLICT AT THE RATE OF ABOUT

30.24—6829

$1,000,000,000 A YEAR, AND MOST OF THIS IS BEING SPENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY. BUT, BELIEVE IT OR NOT, SOME OF THIS MONEY IS COMING RIGHT BACK. IT IS COMING IN FROM MANUFACTURERS WHO HAVE FINISHED A WAR CONTRACT, FOUND THAT THEY MADE A PROFIT ON IT AND DECIDED THEY DID NOT WANT TO KEEP IT.

"WE DO NOT DESIRE TO RECEIVE ANY BENEFIT OR GAIN FROM THIS WAR CONTRACT," SAID ONE LETTER FROM A FIRM WHICH HAD JUST COMPLETED AN ORDER FOR BATTLE-DRESS BLOUSES, AND EXPLAINED THAT THE CHECK ENCLOSED REPRESENTED THE PROFIT ON THE CONTRACT PLUS THE MANAGEMENT SALARIES OF TWO FIRM MEMBERS.

ANOTHER COMPANY FOUND ITS PROFIT ON WAR ORDERS, PLUS PRODUCTION ECONOMIES MADE POSSIBLE BY INCREASED VOLUME OF BUSINESS, AMOUNTED TO $42,000, SO PROMPTLY SENT BACK A CHECK FOR THAT AMOUNT.

THIS ANTI-PROFIT TREND AMONG THE RECIPIENTS OF WAR CONTRACTS IS JUST BEGINNING; BUT MEANWHILE ANOTHER MOVEMENT IS GAINING HEADWAY. IT AFFECTS PEOPLE WHO ARE WILLING TO LEND THE GOVERNMENT MONEY FOR PROSECUTION OF THE WAR, BUT PREFER NOT TO RECEIVE ANY INTEREST.

TO ACCOMMODATE THIS GROUP OF LENDERS, DOMINION OF CANADA NON-INTEREST-BEARING CERTIFICATES HAVE BEEN ISSUED AND ABOUT $4,000,000 WORTH OF THEM SOLD SO FAR TO INDIVIDUALS, CORPORATIONS, LABOR UNIONS, SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, IN AMOUNTS RANGING FROM $1 UP TO $500,000.

ANOTHER -- APPARENTLY QUITE SPONTANEOUS -- MOVEMENT HAS STARTED AMONG PEOPLE WHO THINK THEY SHOULD NOT KEEP ALL THE EXTRA DIMES WHICH SEEM TO BE JINGLING IN POCKETS THESE WAR BOOM DAYS. SOMEONE SUGGESTED THERE OUGHT TO BE A "MARCH OF DIMES" INTO THE GOVERNMENT'S WAR CHEST, AND BEFORE HE COULD TURN AROUND, FINANCE MINISTER J.L.ILSLEY FOUND HIS MAIL FILLED WITH LETTERS CONTAINING DIMES.

INASMUCH AS THIS QUITE UNSOLICITED FLURRY OF MAIL BROUGHT IN ABOUT $1500 IN SMALL CHANGE, THE GOVERNMENT IS CONSIDERING ORGANIZATION OF THE "MARCH OF DIMES" IN A BIG WAY, SO THAT EVERYONE IN THE COUNTRY WILL HEAR ABOUT IT AND KEEP ON HEARING ABOUT IT.

DEVON FRANCIS
ASSOCIATED PRESS AVIATION EDITOR

(ADVANCE) NEW YORK, JAN. 5--T.P.WRIGHT, ONE OF THE COUNTRY'S LEADING AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION ENGINEERS, ESTIMATES THAT BY THE SPRING OF 1942 ENGLAND, WITH 49,000 WARPLANES, WILL ACHIEVE PARITY IN THE AIR WITH THE WARRING AXIS POWERS.

MOREOVER, HE WRITES IN THE AERONAUTICAL PUBLICATION "AVIATION," THE UNITED STATES WILL HAVE PARITY WITH THE AXIS IN AIR STRENGTH BY THE CLOSE OF 1942 EVEN THOUGH IT CONTINUES TO SUPPLY THE BRITISH WITH PLANES.

IT WAS WRIGHT, CONSULTANT TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ADVISORY COMMISSION AND VICE PRESIDENT OF THE CURTISS-WRIGHT CORP., WHO LAST JUNE WARNED THAT BOOSTING AMERICAN WARPLANE PRODUCTION TO 50,000 A YEAR WAS A 5-YEAR JOB.

HE FIXES THE RATE OF INCREASE OF AMERICAN AIRPLANE PRODUCTION STARTING WITH JANUARY, 1941, AS GREATER "THAN AT ANY PERIOD FOR EITHER ENGLAND OR GERMANY."

HE WARNS, AT THE SAME TIME, AGAINST "RASH STATEMENTS ON '1,000-PER-DAY' AIRPLANE PRODUCTION RATES, AS THESE ARE

UNATTAINABLE BY GREAT MOTOR CAR PRODUCERS OR ANY ONE ELSE."

THESE ARE THE FIGURES WRIGHT BELIEVES WILL PROVE OUT IN THE NEXT 24 MONTHS:

AXIS WARPLANES AVAILABLE, JANUARY, 1941--41,000; ENGLAND--25,000; UNITED STATES--6,000.

RELATIVE STRENGTHS MID-1941; AXIS 46,000; ENGLAND 32,000; UNITED STATES 10,000.

RELATIVE STRENGTHS JANUARY, 1942; AXIS 49,000; ENGLAND 45,000; UNITED STATES 16,000.

RELATIVE STRENGTHS MID-1942; AXIS 49,000; ENGLAND 55,000; UNITED STATES 28,000.

RELATIVE STRENGTHS AT THE CLOSE OF 1942: AXIS 48,000; ENGLAND 58,000; UNITED STATES 48,000.

HE EMPHASIZES THAT GERMANY'S PLANE LOSSES IN THE WAR WERE THREE TIMES THOSE OF ENGLAND IN SEPTEMBER, 1940, AND ALTHOUGH THEY ARE BEING REDUCED, WOULD REMAIN TWICE THOSE OF ENGLAND IN JULY, 1942.

WRIGHT ESTIMATES AMERICAN WARPLANE PRODUCTION IN 1941 AT 19,500 DIVIDED AS FOLLOWS: 30 PER CENT TRAINERS, 30 PER CENT FIRST-LINE COMBAT MACHINES, 15 PER CENT COOPERATION PLANES (RECONNAISSANCE, CARGO, OBSERVATION, UTILITY) AND 25 PER CENT RESERVE (ALL TACTICAL TYPES).

THE UNITED STATES IS BEHIND ITS SCHEDULED WARPLANE OUTPUT, HE SAYS, POINTING OUT:

"INSTEAD OF COMPLETING THE CONSTRUCTION OF APPROXIMATELY 40,000 PLANES (15,000 FOR THE BRITISH) BY THE SPRING OF 1942, THE DATE WILL BE IN THE SUMMER OF THAT YEAR, AND INSTEAD OF ATTAINING AN INDUSTRIAL CAPACITY BY THAT TIME OF 40,000 PLANES A YEAR, IT WILL BE ABOUT 30,000."

HE ESTIMATES THAT THE SCHEDULED PRODUCTION OF 50,000 PLANES A YEAR WILL REQUIRE A SUPERVISORY AND SHOP PERSONNEL FORCE OF 800,000 PERSONS. TKAT IS TWICE THE PAYROLL OF THE AMERICAN OIL INDUSTRY AND ALMOST TWICE THE PAYROLL OF THE AUTOMOBILE, AUTOMOBILE BODY AND PARTS FACTORIES.

TO SPEED AMERICAN WARPLANE PRODUCTION WRIGHT ADVOCATES REDUCING THE 50 PRESENT MODELS OF MILITARY PLANES BEING MADE FOR THE ARMY, THE NAVY AND THE BRITISH TO FEWER THAN 40.

HE ALSO ADVOCATES THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A SECRETARIAT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE AND AN AIR FORCE UNDER A SEPARATE ADMINISTRATIVE HEAD INSTEAD OF UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

HE SAYS HE SEES NO BASIC SHORTAGE IN ALUMINUM, USED TO FABRICATE ALL-METAL PLANES, BUT THAT "BOTTLENECKS IN FORGINGS AND CASTINGS PARTICULARLY MAGNESIUM IN THE LATTER CASE, ARE APPEARING AND NEED ATTENTION."

"AS ONLY AIRMEN NOW APPRECIATE," WRIGHT ASSERTS, "BUT AS OTHERS ARE DIMLY PERCEIVING, THE AIR FORCE WILL SOON BE THE FIRST LINE OF DEFENSE AND AS WELL THE STRIKING POWER OF THE FUTURE. WE MUST BUILD IT MORE RAPIDLY."

British Let U.S. Food Go to France, Spain

American Red Cross To Send Milk To Unoccupied Area

Shipment Of Wheat To Spain, Aid For Finland Also Considered

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 7—British authorities have agreed to relax the blockade, reliable sources said tonight, to permit the American Red Cross to send some condensed milk to unoccupied France and wheat to Spain.

The amount of supplies to be sent was not disclosed, but the Red Cross was reported to have planned to send a shipload of wheat to Spain.

The shipment to unoccupied France, it was understood, would include condensed milk and vitamin products intended to relieve suffering among French children.

Negotiating Some Time

The American Government has been negotiating with British officials on the project for some time, but the British previously had withheld permission for such shipments to pass through the blockade.

Finland also may receive some food shipments later, it was reported.

The British decision against permitting any food supplies to German-occupied countries was said to be unaffected by the agreement in the case of unoccupied France, Spain and possibly Finland.

Help For Spain

Gaston Henri-Haye, French Ambassador, has been seeking American relief, especially for children, for several months. Negotiations between the American and Spanish Governments on some form of relief in that country also have been in progress for some time.

The agreement between the British and American governments was said to have settled in principle the broad question of sending the supplies, but several details of the arrangement remain to be worked out.

This was believed to involve chiefly the methods of distribution and handling to insure that none of the supplies are diverted to German use.

Political Factors Involved

While political factors were involved in consideration of relief for unoccupied France and Spain, the American Government was said to have pressed the matter with the British Government for humanitarian reasons.

Surveys in both countries were said to have convinced officials that there would be extreme suffering in the next few months unless food supplies were sent from here.

In unoccupied France, it was reported that 2,000,000 children faced severe malnutrition.

Condition Serious

In Spain, still suffering the effects of the long civil war, the shortage of food, especially of flour, was said to be as serious as in any country in Europe.

Spain's close association with the Axis powers was a major obstacle in connection with plans for relief there. After long negotiations with the Spanish Government, however, American and British officials were said to have decided conditions were satisfactory for undertaking the relief project.

The shipments presumably would be made in American vessels chartered by the Red Cross. Special neutrality legislation exempts Red Cross ships from the prohibition against entering combat zones.

The last Red Cross ship sent to Europe was the McKeesport, which took a cargo to Marseille last summer.

Grain From Argentina

Madrid, Jan. 7 (AP)—Much-needed wheat and corn from Argentina have begun to arrive in Spain, it was learned today, with 7,500 tons of the grains being unloaded in the last few days.

The wheat shortage in Spain became so acute that a stringent bread-rationing plan was announced in December. Reductions of planting during the civil war, unfavorable weather and curtailment of ordinary imports were blamed. Spanish officials last month disclosed "successful" negotiations for bringing food supplies through the British blockade from American countries.

ROOSEVELT SETS UP FOUR-MAN BOARD TO SPEED DEFENSE

Full Authority to Form and Execute Policies Is Created.

Washington, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—A supreme directorate for the defense program was established by President Roosevelt today to expedite the output of arms. The President following lines of a previous announcement, set up an office of production management for defense, which will be only nominally under his own control.

William S. Knudsen, production member of the present Defense Commission, was named director-general with Sidney Hillman, also of the Defense Commission, as associate director-general. The other two members are Secretaries Stimson and Knox.

This four-man group received full authority to formulate and execute policies for turning out instruments of warfare, the President told reporters at a press conference. The new office was set up by an executive order accompanied by various orders making the necessary legal changes.

The President also released to reporters a statement from the new defense high command, signed by all four members, in which they said that the task confronting them was "not only of critical importance, but also one of surpassing urgency."

They said that they promised "all that we have" to the fulfillment of an order from their commander-in-chief to create in the United States an "arsenal of democracy" and establish and maintain production which will insure its efficiency and adequacy.

They called, moreover, for the "active, aggressive and enthusiastic co-operation" of every person in the United States in order to make this arsenal adequate to the "successful defense of democracy and freedom."

Three Divisions Created.

The new office of production management will have three divisions. A division of production will be in the charge of John D. Biggers, who has been associated with Mr. Knudsen on the Defense Commission. Donald Nelson of the present Defense Commission staff will head a purchasing division, carrying out much the same duties he has been performing with the Defense Commission.

Edward R. Stettinius, who has handled raw material problems for the defense agency, will direct a priorities division. In addition to the priorities division, a new priorities advisory board was created.

Mr. Stettinius also will head that. Mr. Nelson will serve on it, along with Leon Henderson, price control member of the Defense Commission, and Messrs. Knudsen and Hillman will be members ex-officio.

One More Member.

President Roosevelt said that there would be one more member. The new setup is all ready to go, Mr. Roosevelt told reporters, though he said that he still had to sign the necessary commissions for the officers, but he described that as merely a routine.

The powers conferred on the new agency for the control of production are as broad as possible, the President told reporters, and the members will have full authority to make decisions and put them into operation.

The President's executive order assigned ten specific functions to the office of production management, including the exercise of authorities vested in the President to take over what he termed rambunctious industries which fail to provide the expected degree of co-operation in the defense effort.

President's Orders Revamping Defense Set-Up

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7—Following is the text of President Roosevelt's Executive Order establishing the Office of Production Management and defining its duties:

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes, and in order to define further the functions and duties of the Office for Emergency Management with respect to the national emergency as declared by the President to exist on Sept. 8, 1939, and to increase production for the national defense through mobilization of material resources and the industrial facilities of the nation, it is hereby ordered:

1. There shall be in the Office for Emergency Management of the Executive office of the President an Office of Production Management which shall consist of (1) a Director General and (2) an Associate Director General, each to be appointed by the President; (3) the Secretary of War, and (4) the Secretary of the Navy. The members shall serve as such without compensation, but shall be entitled to actual and necessary transportation, subsistence and other expenses incidental to the performance of their duties.

Duties of the Office

2. With such advice and assistance as it may require from other departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and subject to such regulations or directions as the President may from time to time prescribe, and subject further to the general policy that the Departments of War and Navy and other departments and agencies of the government will be utilized to the maximum extent compatible with efficiency, the Office of Production Management shall:

a. Formulate and execute in the public interest all measures needful and appropriate in order (1) to increase, accelerate and regulate the production and supply of materials, articles and equipment and the provision of emergency plant facilities and services required for the national defense, and (2) to insure effective coordination of those activities of the several departments, corporations, and other agencies of the government which are directly concerned therewith.

B. Survey, analyze, and summarize for purposes of coordination the stated requirements of the War and Navy and other departments and agencies of the government, and of foreign governments for materials, articles and equipment needed for defense.

C. Advise with respect to the plans and schedules of the various departments and agencies for the purchase of materials, articles and equipment required for defense, to coordinate the placement of major defense orders and contracts and to keep informed of the progress of the various programs of production and supply.

D. Plan and take all lawful steps necessary to assure the provision of an adequate supply of raw materials essential to the production of finished products needed for defense.

Industrial Mobilization

E. Formulate plans for the mobilization for defense of the production facilities of the nation and to take all lawful action necessary to carry out such plans.

F. Determine the adequacy of existing production facilities and to assure their maximum use; and, when necessary, to stimulate and plan the creation of such additional facilities and sources of production and supply as may be essential to increase and expedite defense production.

G. Determine when, to what extent, and in what manner priorities shall be accorded to deliveries of material as provided in Section 2 (A) of the act entitled "An Act to Expedite National Defense and for Other Purposes," approved June 28, 1940. Deliveries of material shall take priority, as provided in said act, in accordance with such determinations and the orders issued in pursuance thereof by the Office of Production Management.

H. Perform the functions and exercise the authorities vested in the President by Section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940.

I. Seerve as the liaison and channel of communication between the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense and the Departments of War and Navy with respect to the duties imposed upon the commission by the following named acts, and with respect to all other matters pertaining to defense purchasing and production: Public Nos. 667, 781, 800 and 801, and Public Resolution No. 95, Seventy-sixth Congress.

President Can Add Duties

J. Perform such other functions as the President may from time to time assign or delegate to it.

3. The Director General, in association with the Associate Director General, and serving under the direction and supervision of the President, shall discharge and perform the administrative responsibilities and duties required to carry out the functions specified in Paragraph 2, subject to and in conformity with the policies and regulations (not inconsistent with such regulations as may be issued by the President) prescribed by the Office of Production Management.

4. There shall be within the Office of Production Management the following and such other operating divisions as the President may from time to time determine:

A. A Division of Production.
B. A Division of Purchases.
C. A Division of Priorities.

Each division of the Office of Production Management shall be in charge of a director appointed by the Office of Production Management with the approval of the President.

Six-Man Priorities Board

5. There shall be within the Office of Production Management a Priorities Board composed of six members. A chairman and three other members shall be appointed or designated by the President; the Director General and Associate Director General shall be members, ex officio. The Priorities Board shall serve as an advisory body and, from time to time as may be required by the Office of Production Management, shall make findings and submit recommendations with respect to the establishment of priorities, the placing of mandatory orders, the assignment of preference ratings, the allocation of deliveries and other related matters. In making its findings and recommendations, the Priorities Board shall take into account general social and economic considerations and the effect the proposed actions would have upon the civilian population.

6. Within the limits of such funds as may be allocated to it by the President on the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, the Office of Production Management may employ necessary personnel and make provision for the necessary supplies, facilities and services. However, the Office of Production Management shall use in so far as practicable such statistical, informational, fiscal, personnel and other general business services and facilities as may be made available through the Office for Emergency Management or other agencies of the government.

7. Executive Order No. 8572 of Oct. 21, 1940, as amended by Executive Order No. 8612 of Dec. 15, 1940, is revoked.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.
The White House, Jan. 7, 1941.

Emergency Management

The President issued also this administrative order further defining the status and functions of the Office for Emergency Management:

Whereas Executive Order No. 8,248, dated Sept. 8, 1939, provides, in part, as follows:

"There shall be within the Executive Office of the President the following principal divisions, namely: (1) The White House Office; (2) the Bureau of the Budget; (3) the National Resources Planning Board; (4) the Liaison Office for Personnel Management, (5) the Office of Government Reports, and (6) in the event of a national emergency, or threat of a national emergency, such office for emergency management as the President shall determine";

And whereas the Office for Emergency Management was formally established by administrative order of May 25, 1940, and it is deemed advisable to modify the said order and further define the duties and functions of the said office;

Appeal by Members of New Agency

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7—This statement was issued today by the four members of the new Office of Production Management, William S. Knudsen, director general; Sidney Hillman, associate director general, and Secretaries Stimson and Knox:

The task which confronts the Office of Production Management is one, not only of critical importance but also one of surpassing urgency.

The President has said that the United States must become the arsenal of democracy. To create such an arsenal and to establish and maintain production that will insure its efficiency and adequacy require far more than we, who are charged with its management, can provide. We promise all that we have to the fulfillment of this order from our Commander-in-Chief, but all that we have will be far from sufficient.

We shall have need of the active, aggressive and enthusiastic cooperation of every man, woman and child in the United States if we are to make this arsenal in America adequate to the successful defense of democracy and freedom. This can only mean that in the immediate future everything in our national life must be subordinated to the necessity for defense.

Industry must subordinate its concern over the possible future effects of tremendous immediate expansion. It must be satisfied with a normal return for new capital required. If there is in industry and management anywhere a subconscious, unexpressed hope for wartime profits, that must be sternly repressed. If there are those who think they can employ this emergency for any selfish advantages, they must dismiss such thoughts. Democracy is fighting for its very life in its struggle to retain the principles of a free economic system.

In any successful defense program the active, intelligent and patriotic cooperation of the men who man the machines is vital. Laws now in effect make secure the principle of collective bargaining and throw about the interests of the workingman adequate protection. Labor must know that under the administration of the Office of Production Management no sacrifices will be asked of it that will not be matched by a corresponding sacrifice on the part of capital, but just as it is intolerable for capital to seek a selfish advantage by reason of the present emergency, so must labor avoid any attempt to make improper use of its position in the present world-wide emergency. The whole principle of collective bargaining and the rights of labor under our system of government and economy is being challenged.

If the totalitarian forces of the world are victorious, all the hard-won rights of labor will be destroyed and both capital and labor will become the involuntary vassals of an all-powerful State. Labor has as great a stake in this crisis as capital, and both must work together harmoniously if the United States is to make its contribution to a democratic victory in the world.

To achieve the results which the country expects from the office of production management, we expect and must have the kind of cooperation from everybody that counts no sacrifice too great to make if it will contribute to a more successful and a more efficient defense. It is this spirit which we seek to invoke, and it is in a similar spirit that we undertake this great task which the Commander-in-Chief has committed to our hands.

Roosevelt Names Minton as Aid To Be His Legs, Eyes and Ears

Denies Former Democratic Whip of Senate Will Be Capitol Hill Liaison Man

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—President Roosevelt announced today that he would appoint former Senator Sherman Minton, of Indiana, to be one of his administrative assistants.

JAN 8 1941

Mr. Minton, Democratic whip of the Senate through the last session, was defeated for re-election in November. He was one of the President's staunchest supporters in Congress.

As an administrative aid, Mr. Roosevelt told reporters, Mr. Minton would not be a liaison man between the White House and Capitol Hill. Rather, he asserted, the former Senator would serve, with a passion for anonymity, as the President's legs, eyes and ears.

Defeated in Willkie Sweep

Former Senator Minton, who was elected to the Senate on Nov. 6, 1934, for the term ended last Friday, was defeated for re-election by Raymond E. Willis, Angola publisher, in the Republican sweep of Indiana by Wendell L. Willkie last November. Born in Georgetown, Ind., on Oct. 20, 1890, Mr. Minton is a graduate of Indiana and Yale Universities and served as Public Counselor of Indiana before his election to the Senate. He served overseas during the World War.

In the Senate, he introduced unsuccessfully a bill to make it a crime to "publish as a fact anything known to be false," and has been accused repeatedly of aiming at suppression of the free press.

CONGRESS SENTIMENT BACKS AID TO BRITAIN

Reaction to Roosevelt Appeal, While Generally Favorable, Brings Fear of War From Some.

Washington, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—A surge of congressional sentiment for extensive British aid today answered President Roosevelt's call for a swift and driving increase in armament production, despite some criticism that the program would mean war.

The reaction generally bespoke readiness to take up at the earliest possible moment a detailed plan under which billions of dollars worth of the weapons of defense could be lent or leased to England and other democracies, as Mr. Roosevelt recommended in his message yesterday.

Administration leaders already were at work on the complicated problem of procedure and legislation. The President was said to have advised leaders that Congress and the Executive Department should collaborate in the task, with the assurance that there would be no quibbling over details.

Submission of the 1941-42 Federal budget tomorrow was awaited, meanwhile, for the first indication of proportions of the overall program. Congress will learn then how much money Mr. Roosevelt wants immediately for the manufacture of war supplies.

There was general support among legislators for vast funds to arm America itself, but some division in party ranks over the President's proposal to make the United States an arsenal for countries "now in actual war with aggressor nations."

Concerned About Time.

Nevertheless, some leaders appeared more concerned about the length of time that might be required to obtain final approval of the British aid legislation than they did with the opposition expected against it

One plan reported under consideration involved the use of a Federal corporation to assist the British in liquidating their security holdings in this country, and perhaps to act as the clearing house for the whole lease-lend program.

Mr. Roosevelt, delivering his annual message in person to the Senators and Representatives in the packed and attentive House chamber, sought to remove any partisan character from the question by pointing out that both major political parties were in virtual agreement on British aid when they went to the people in the election last November.

Austin Hails Message.

Senator Austin of Vermont, acting Republican leader in the Senate commended the address and later in a radio broadcast last night declared that the American people were enlisted on the side of Great Britain and were "preparing to pay the cost of freedom if they have to."

On the other hand, Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana, told reporters that Mr. Roosevelt's message was intended to frighten the American people to a point that they would surrender their liberties and establish a wartime dictatorship in this country.

Senator Capper, Republican, of Kansas, described the speech as another war speech. Representative Tinkham, Republican, of Massachusetts, asserted that the President had "declared war on the whole world," and Representative Short, Republican, of Missouri, called the message "a left-handed declaration of war."

Knudsen Is Pleased.

William S. Knudsen, a defense commissioner, commented that it hit the nail on the head. Senator Barkley, Democrat, of Kentucky, termed it magnificent, and the veteran Senator Glass, Democrat, of Virginia, called it fine." Representative Treadway, Republican, of Massachusetts, a long-time member, expressed the opinion that "it probably represents the feeling of the vast majority of citizens."

On the other hand, Senator Vandenberg, Republican, of Michigan, said "It was a strong plea for peace through war-by-proxy," while Senator Taft, Republican, of Ohio, commented:

"The President is asking for unlimited personal authority to lend abroad as much as he sees fit, without coming to Congress for appropriations or further authority, and confusing inextricably our already confused defense program with that of England."

BULLITT LINKS U. S. AT WAR, AXIS RUIN

Says We Know Surest Way To Defeat Nazis Is For Us To Enter Conflict

JAN 8 1941

Asserts Nation Prefers Peace

"At This Moment"—Urges "Buying Time To Prepare"

[By the Associated Press]

Chapel Hill, N. C., Jan. 7—William C. Bullitt, former American Ambassador to France, declared tonight "we know that the surest way to defeat the Axis powers is for us to go to war in support of Great Britain, Greece and China," but that the American people "at this moment" prefer to take the risk of a totalitarian victory "rather than go to war."

To diminish that risk, Bullitt told the International Relations Club of the University of North Carolina, the United States must give those nations "what they need—not what we think we can comfortably spare."

"We Hate War"

He listed merchant ships, war vessels, airplanes, guns, munitions, steel, wheat—all that we give will be used in defense of our own security."

In his first speech since he resigned from Government service, Bullitt declared:

"We hate war and because of that hatred the question of entering this war as a national policy does not even arise.

"We know that the surest way to defeat the Axis powers is for us to go to war in support of Great Britain, Greece and China, but we hate war so much that we prefer to take a chance on the ability of the British, the Greeks and the Chinese to defeat the distator powers without direct military assistance from us.

"Know Consequences"

"We know what the consequences of totalitarian victory would be for us, and we are taking this risk with our eyes open.

"Unquestionably, the people of the United States at this moment prefer to take this risk rather than go to war."

Bullitt, who more than two months ago advocated that arms production be put on a "wartime basis," said that aiding Britain, Greece and China involved slight danger of war.

"Dictators Will Fume"

"It is so greatly to the advantage of the totalitarian states to have us stay out of war while they are attempting to conquer Great Britain, Greece and China," he said, "that they will almost certainly not make war on us so long as Great Britain stands—no matter how much material aid we furnish and no matter what form that aid may take."

"The dictators will fume and fulminate, but they will not risk declaring war on us unless they first have conquered Great Britain," he asserted.

Declaring 'we must buy time in which to prepare," Bullitt described the method of production during the past six mouths as "the comfortable and lazy one of superimposing production for defense on the normal business of the country."

"Was Allied Method"

"That was the method employed by France and Great Britain before they were drawn into war," he asserted.

He said the problem of increased production could not be solved by any administrative organization or any smal lgroup of men but "only by the whole American people working together as a unit."

"We call upon our Congressmen to support with necessary legislation the President's proposals. We urge all good citizens to make it clear to their Congressmen that this nation will stand as a world champion of free men.

"We demand a national policy which will give the United States leadership in this dark hour when liberty is challenged all around the world. Our national wealth, our vast industrial organization, our unshaken belief in democracy, all should move on one assembly line, conveying to free men everywhere, captive nations and those who are fighting the international slave driver, every ounce of strength, every pledge of understanding, every pound of energy that will enable them to rise in victory, taking their places in a world where reason, rather than force, shall animate the lives of men and dominate the capitals of nations."

White Backs Roosevelt Stand

JAN 8 1941

Calls on Congress to Carry Out President's Program for Aiding British.

Chicago, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—William Allen White, honorary chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, and representatives of sixteen Mid-Western chapters of the organization urged Congress today to enact legislation to carry out the proposals outlined by President Roosevelt yesterday in his address to the Senate and House. A statement, signed by Mr. White and adopted unanimously by the participants in the committee's Mid-Western regional conference, set forth:

"The President of the United States, speaking officially to the American Congress yesterday, proclaimed to the world the fact that this country believes that the only basis of peace is justice and that justice is founded upon broad principles of freedom which dignify man's self respect both in the relations of men and nations. In this proclamation may be found the Magna Carta of world freedom. We summon all good citizens to rally around the principles set forth in this clear-visioned document.

Kennedy Will Discuss Keeping Out Of War

Will Address Harvard Students Within Next Month—Dr. Beard Urges Isolation

Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 7 (AP)—Joseph P. Kennedy, Ambassador to Great Britain, has agreed to address Harvard University students within the next month on "Keeping the United States Out of War," the Harvard Committee Against Military Intervention announced today.

William Tudor Gardiner, Jr., chairman of the committee, said Kennedy informed him that because of pressure of business he could not set a definite date, but that he would speak sometime within the next two or three weeks.

Gardiner said the committee also received a letter from Dr. Charles A. Beard, noted historian and author, suggesting that the United States turn its attention from further assistance to Great Britain to a policy of national mobilization for the defense of our own waters and lands.

Gayda Scores Roosevelt Talk

Fascist Editor Attempts to Show President Has Unconfessed Reasons for War Policy.

Rome, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Virginio Gayda, often the editorial mirror of high Fascist opinion, said today that President Roosevelt's message to Congress renewed "the outworn, unproved theme" of an Axis menace to America, while assuring Americans of "the material impossibility" of an Axis attack.

"So it will rest as coming from the mouth of Roosevelt the warrior himself," Gayda said, "that Americans are naturally preserved from the war coming from Europe and, therefore, the war policy of the President is explained by other unconfessed reasons."

The Fascist editor said the President's "fifth column fears" were "out of proportion" to his "warlike agitation" and declared the United States faced the dilemma of whether Great Britain will win and not pay, or lose and not be able to pay.

Italian political circles descril Mr. Roosevelt's message as "a decla will to an ideological war in the fi of internal politics and a patent re cence on the aims of the fight maintenance of plutocratic and self imperialisms."

"There is a firm, bellicose affirm tion" in the message, foreign c respondents were told in a stateme "The United States never will agr to peace under the ægis of advoca of pacification."

Six Points Stressed

Although "authorized impressions" were not available, the "impression in political circles" was described under six points:

First—"Once more it is noted that President Roosevelt has not substantially brought a new element to his intention, already well known, to give all United States aid possible to Great Britain.

Second—"It may be pointed out that Roosevelt based his argumentation on the threat of invasion by the Axis powers, which is supposed to weigh on the American continent, but with undeniable contradiction he affirms, on the other hand, 'even if the British Navy did not exist, it is improbable the enemy would be so stupid as to attack the United States by landing troops across thousands of miles of ocean."

Fifth Column Problem

Third—"In fact, the President once more has, as usual, developed a theme designed to strike the imagination of American crowds, namely, that of the so-called fifth column, thus raising this problem of iternal policy to the rank of a decisive question of international policy."

Fourth—"The President spoke of the peace of 1919, stating it was somewhat less unjust than that of the 'pacification' type which was begun before Munich.

"Italian political circles do not want to enter into controversies on this question, but certainly the American people, in its realism, cannot help wondering what is not functioning in the present political organization of Europe as England wished it at Versailles if, only twenty years after that date, the United States finds itself for a second time faced with a request to aid the British Empire.

Nazi Reaction Late.

Berlin, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Atmospherics interfered with radio reception of President Roosevelt's message to Congress by the Wilhelmstrasse yesterday, and for that reason no authorized German reaction was obtainable today.

Officials whose duty it is to inform the foreign press intimated that another twelve hours might elapse before indication of the official attitude might be given. It was explained that some of the most important sections of the President's mesage were lost through radio fading.

As on previous occasions it is understood that Adolf Hitler wants to take plenty of time to study the message carefully and weigh all its implications and formulate the consequences in his own mind before giving a tipoff to the press.

DNB, the official German news agency, distributed a brief summary of the message.

Impressions Are Varied.

Listening among Germans who especially observe political events, the first impression is that some of these quarters regard the President's message as "no different in general line of thought and attitude from his recent fireside talk." Another impression is that some quarters took especial offense at Mr. Roosevelt's insistence that humanity demands aid for England. Against this, these quarters cited an American reserved attitude toward shipments of food to occupied areas, branding this as inhumane.

The most temperamental utterance heard unofficially was that the President's message, in its final effect, was virtually tantamount to a theoretical declaration of war. It did not appear, however, as though official Germany would take it as such. So far as could be learned at present, it seemed that German reaction would be communicated first in the form of intimations to the foreign press and instructions to the German press. The possibility was envisaged, however, of other action besides press arguments.

Sees Prolonged War.

Madrid, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—The weekly review Semana said today that President Roosevelt's attitude toward the belligerents would "undoubtedly contribute to prolonging the war." The President's program offered to the United States, the publication said, is "ingenious," but, it contended, based on an error of presupposing a British victory.

ABC, the only morning paper in Madrid to comment on Mr. Roosevelt's message to Congress, said it merely indicated continuation of an already-expressed policy for the United States.

JAN 8 1941

Japan Times Scores Speech.

Tokio, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—The Japan Times said today President Roosevelt's counsel against a "dictator's peace" can be interpreted as "refusal to recognize any agreements between other Powers which do not conform to American policy." The Times referred to Mr. Roosevelt's message to Congress yesterday.

"This is a form of political interference without historical sanction," the newspaper said.

The Japanese-language press carried the speech without editorial comment.

Vichy Omits Part of Talk.

Vichy, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Portions of President Roosevelt's congressional address mentioning aid to England were omitted today from the summarized versions released to French newspapers. It was the same treatment as was given his first fireside talk of December 29. Officials made no comment on the speech and in informed quarters the impression was gained that the talk was considered here to mean a continuation of policies already enunciated.

JAN 8 1941

Hitler Studying Message

BERLIN, Jan. 7 (AP).—Some of the most important passages of President Roosevelt's message to Congress yesterday were blotted out by atmospheric conditions which interfered with the broadcast heard by the Foreign Office here, and for that reason authorized German reaction was not forthcoming today.

It was understood that Hitler, following his previous policy, wished to take plenty of time to study the President's speech carefully, weigh all its implications and formulate the consequences in his own mind before giving the nod to the Nazi press. The first version of the address was given to the public in a brief summary distributed by DNB, the official news agency.

The impression gained from listening to Germans who especially observe political events was that some of these quarters regarded Mr. Roosevelt's words as "no different in general line of thought and attitude from his recent fireside talk."

Another impression was that some of these quarters took especial offense at his insistence that humanity demanded aid for England. Against this these quarters cited an American attitude of reserve toward shipment of food to occupied areas.

The most temperamental unofficial utterance heard was that the message in is final effect was virtually tantamount to a declaration of war. It did not appear, however, that official Germany would take it as such.

Britain Gets Inspiration

LONDON, Jan. 7 (AP).—Official British quarters said today that President Roosevelt's message to Congress yesterday was "an inspiration to the people and leaders of this country to pursue their struggle fully confident that no shortage of war material will delay or hamper efforts to secure victory."

The text of the official statement:

"In official quarters in London, President Roosevelt's address to Congress is regarded as an inspiration to the people and leaders of this country to pursue their struggle fully confident that no shortage of war materials will delay or hamper their efforts to secure victory.

"Once again it is noted that the President has reiterated his complete rejection of the possibility of acquiescence in peace dictated by aggressors and has reaffirmed his determination to carry out his policies of rearmament and of assistance to other defenders of democracy, whatever may be the threats made by the Axis powers.

"The President's exposition of the vital concern of the American people in the defense by Great Britain and her allies of the cause of freedom and, above all, his realistic appreciation of their urgent needs brings fresh encouragement at a time when there is good cause to believe that the tide of war is turning in their favor."

Roosevelt Virtually Declared War, Japanese Press Charges

"Frantic, Unreasonable Foreign Policy Of Irresponsible" U. S. Statesmen Assailed In Tokyo

JAN 8 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Tokyo, Wednesday, Jan. 8—Most Japanese newspapers, in front-page editorials today, were sharply critical of President Roosevelt's message to Congress, and Nichi Nichi said the President, "by declaring America should be the arsenal for the democratic powers, might as well have declared a de facto war against the Axis powers."

"America will be forced to enter the war irrespective of American public opinion to remain neutral, merely because of the frantic, unreasonable foreign policy of its irresponsible statesmen," the paper added.

Situation "Misread"

Nichi Nichi, in quoting official circles, said the Government would not make a statement, and that these circles believed the speech was based wholly on a "misreading" of the current world situation.

As for the Chinese regime at Chungking, it will have ceased functioning long before effective American aid can be given it, these quarters said, according to Nichi Nichi.

Yomiuri said the Presidential message "drastically accelerated" the United States' course toward actual participation in the war. "The American people have only themselves to thank for being dragged into war because of the unreasonable foreign policy of their irresponsible leaders."

Sees British Surrender

The Ashi said: "The President manifested the will not to accede to any peace terms dictated by totalitarian states or an appeasement policy. No doubt he has in mind a long-term resistance. He should bear in mind the British will be forced to surrender before overwhelming German offensives.

"Concerning the means of helping the British, the English will not be satisfied because of the lack of a concrete explanation of the ways of aid."

"We Go Forward"

The newspaper Hochi asserted: "Roosevelt's fireside chat cursed the tripartite alliance and clarified the policy of aiding Britain, thus declaring war in a certain sense of the word. The present message clearly manifested the true character of rivalry against the Axis.

"Inclination of the United States toward participation in the war is rendered more acute. The new order, in historic tradition, is inevitable for the progress of human beings. We go forward regardless of the views and fancies of the United States."

Brazil Calls Situation Grave

RIO DE JANEIRO, Jan. 7 (AP).—The pro-government newspaper "Diario Carioca" today compared President Roosevelt's message to Woodrow Wilson's war message of 1917 and added that "the present situation is graver than twenty-three years ago."

The message, the newspaper said, showed that the Axis powers would not win the war unless Britain was conquered within a few weeks, and added that President Roosevelt was certain this was impossible.

"Diario de Noticias," opposition paper, said Britain, Greece and China "can count on virtually the whole North American production at any given moment" so long as North American experts felt that the United States was not weakening itself.

President of Panama Backs Roosevelt Stand

Panama City, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—President Arnulfo Arias, in a message congratulating President Roosevelt on his address to Congress yesterday, declared that Panama would co-operate fully "to insure the political integrity of our continent."

"The Government and people of Panama affirm the wise good neighbor policy developed by your Excellency," the message said.

"A POLITICAL SITUATION WHICH HAS NEED FOR SOMEONE TO RUN TO AID IT FROM SHIPWRECK EVERY 20 YEARS IS OBVIOUSLY A SITUATION NOT ONLY UNSTABLE, BUT CERTAINLY UNJUST.

"THE TRUTH IS NO WORD HAS BEEN SAID ON THE SUBJECT, OF WHICH NO ONE CAN BE IGNORANT, OF THE INJUSTICE OF THE VERSAILLES PEACE WHICH STILL MORE THAN IN 1914 LEFT COUNTRIES PLETHORICALLY RICH AND COUNTRIES DESPERATELY POOR.

"WHY HAS NO WORD BEEN PRONOUNCED ON THAT WHICH NOW IS UNDER WAY AS THE FIGHT OF POOR COUNTRIES AGAINST RICH COUNTRIES AND OF YOUNG PROLETARIAN NATIONS AGAINST PLUTOCRATIC AND EGOISTIC STATES?"

FIFTH--"PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT DEVELOPED A PATHETIC PERORATION IN DEFENSE OF SO-CALLED DEMOCRACIES AND STATES GOVERNED ON DEMOCRATIC SYSTEM. BUT IF THIS PRINCIPLE OF DEMOCRATIC RULE IS SO DEAR AND SACRED TO THAT WHICH THE PRESIDENT CALLS POLITICAL MORALITY WHICH HE WISHES TO FOLLOW, WHY HAS THIS DEFENSE OF DEMOCRACY NOT BEEN EXTENDED TO DEMOCRATIC NEIGHBORLINESS BETWEEN RICH NATIONS AND POOR NATIONS?

"IN OTHER WORDS, WHY IS THE DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLE DEFENDED AND SUSTAINED AS MORAL ONLY IN SO FAR AS IT IS AN INTERNAL SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT (AND WE KNOW WITH HOW MUCH REAL EXTERIOR JUSTICE AND WITH HOW MUCH EFFECTIVE HYPOCRISY) AND NOT AS A PRINCIPLE OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE?"

SIXTH--"WE ARE THEREFORE IN THE PRESENCE OF A DECLARED DESIRE FOR IDEOLOGICAL WAR IN THE FIELD OF INTERNAL POLITICS AND OF PATENT RETICENCE ON THE AIMS IN A FIGHT FOR MAINTENANCE OF PLUTOCRATIC AND EGOISTIC IMPERIALISMS.

"ON THIS BASIS, THERE IS A FIRM BELLIGOSE AFFIRMATION WHICH IS THAT THE UNITED STATES WILL NEVER AGREE TO PEACE UNDER THE AEGIS OF ADVOCATES OF PACIFICATION. IT IS CLEAR FROM WHAT HAS BEEN SAID HOW SUCH A DECLARATION WOULD LEND ITSELF TO TIMELY SARCASM, CONSIDERING THE UNITED STATES SITUATION AND ITS PROCLAIMED DESIRE FOR NEUTRALITY.

"BUT EVEN ACCEPTING THIS DECLARATION AT ITS REAL VALUE, IT ONLY EMPHASIZES THE GREAT HISTORIC RESPONSIBILITY WHICH THE UNITED STATES HAS ASSUMED, BEING ABSENT FROM, IF NOT IN OPPOSITION TO, EVERY SERIOUS ATTEMPT AT EUROPEAN AGREEMENT FROM VERSAILLES ON, INCLUDING SUCH MOST RECENT EXAMPLES AS THE FOUR-POWER PACT AND THE MUNICH PEACE."

THE NEWSPAPER IL POPOLO DI ROMA ACCUSED PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT OF TRYING TO INVOLVE THE UNITED STATES IN WAR.

COMMENTING ON HIS MESSAGE TO CONGRESS YESTERDAY, THE NEWSPAPER ASSERTED MR.ROOSEVELT, "WITH THE PROPAGANDA PRETEXT OF DEMOCRATIC SOLIDARITY, IS LEADING HIS COUNTRY WELL BEYOND NON-BELLIGERENCY."

HIS MESSAGE FITTED IN EXACTLY WITH HIS PREVIOUS SPEECHES, IT SAID, AND CONTAINED "A THEORETICAL HOSTILITY TOWARD THE TOTALITARIAN STATES AND PROPOSALS TO LEND ENGLAND ALL MATERIAL AID TO PROLONG RESISTANCE."

IL POPOLO THEN SAID "ONE MAY WONDER WHAT IS KEEPING PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT FROM DECLARING WAR ON THE AXIS POWERS."

JAN 8 1941

"IT IS EASY TO REPLY," IT WENT ON, ACCUSING MR.ROOSEVELT OF "AMBIGUOUS HYPOCRATICAL TACTICS AIMED AT PLACING THE AMERICAN PEOPLE--VISIBLY ADVERSE TO INTERVENTION--UNDER COMPROMISING CONDITIONS."

"WHATEVER AMERICAN SHIPS CROSSING THE OCEAN IN THE SERVICE OF ENGLAND INCURRED THE LEGITIMATE SANCTIONS FROM AXIS ARMS," IT SAID, "MR.ROOSEVELT WOULD SUCCEED IN PRESENTING SUCH MISFORTUNE TO HIS CREDULOUS PEOPLE AS UNPROVOKED AGGRESSION. SUBLIME HYPOTHESIS!"

JH431AES

BERLIN, JAN. 7-(AP)-DNB (OFFICIAL GERMAN NEWS AGENCY) DISTRIBUTED TODAY A BRIEF SUMMARY OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S MESSAGE TO THE U.S. CONGRESS YESTERDAY--THE FIRST VERSION OF THE ADDRESS TO REACH THE GERMAN PUBLIC.

AUTHORIZED SOURCES REFRAINED FROM COMMENT, INDICATING THE OFFICIAL GERMAN REACTION WOULD BE FORTHCOMING ONLY AFTER THE MESSAGE HAD BEEN GIVEN CAREFUL STUDY.

THE DNB SUMMARY, UNDER YESTERDAY'S DATE, SAID:

"IN HIS NEW YEAR'S MESSAGE, PERSONALLY READ TODAY ON THE OCCASION OF THE OPENING OF THE NEW CONGRESS IN WASHINGTON AND WHICH WAS IN LINE WITH ROOSEVELT'S WELL-KNOWN FOREIGN POLITICAL ATTITUDE, THE U.S.A. PRESIDENT ASSERTED THAT THE UNITED STATES NEVER WAS SO SERIOUSLY MENACED AS TODAY.

"THE UNITED STATES THEREFORE NOW SHOULD PRIMARILY IF NOT EXCLUSIVELY CONCERN ITSELF WITH FOREIGN DANGER AND ARM AS NEVER BEFORE. THE NATIONAL POLICY IS TOTAL ARMAMENT AND COMPLETE SUPPORT FOR THE PEOPLE WHOSE FIGHT KEEPS WAR FROM AMERICA.

"THE FUNDAMENTALS OF MORALITY AS WELL AS CONSIDERATION FOR THE SECURITY OF THE U.S.A. MAKE IT IMPOSSIBLE TO PUT UP WITH PEACE DICTATED BY AGGRESSORS AND PROMOTED BY COMPROMISERS. THEREFORE AMERICA MUST ARM IMMEDIATELY.

JAN 8 1941

"HE (ROOSEVELT) IS NOT CONTENTED WITH PRESENT ARMAMENTS RESULTS. EVERY MAN MUST LEND A HAND.

"CONCERNING AID TO DEMOCRACIES, IT WILL BE MADE AVAILABLE, EVEN IF THE BUYERS ARE UNABLE TO PAY. LATER THEY COULD RETURN WAR MATERIAL OR DELIVER IN LIEU OTHER MATERIALS WHICH AMERICA NEEDS. THIS CONTENTION, ROOSEVELT ASSERTED, IS NO ACT OF WAR."

Italy Reaffirms Ties to Axis

Admits Loss of Bardia, but Will Fight On Despite U. S. Aid to Britain.

JAN 8 1941

Rome, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—The Italian Government conceded today the loss of Bardia, but declared its determination, with Germany and Japan as its allies, to fight the war to a finish in virtual defiance of President Roosevelt's plan for more American aid to Great Britain.

Virginio Gayda, Fascist editor, asserted that Italy had "all the men and means neded to continue the war with undiminished energy on all fronts."

"However gigantic the British Empire's resources appear on paper and the promises which the United States brings alongside them," he declared, "the Axis means are more immediately and more powerfully efficient. Victory must belong to the Axis."

Solidarity Is Affirmed.

In view of a Cabinet declaration today of solidarity with Germany and Japan, observers expected further co-operation between the Axis Powers, with the Germans planning some new move perhaps in southeast Europe. Informed sources said that more and more German troops were moving through Hungary into Rumania. However, reports abroad of German troop movements into Italy, other than units of the German Air Corps, again were denied.

It also was denied that any conference between the German and Italian comands would take place in Rome soon, although it was asserted that staff conferences "always are possible under close Axis co-operation."

Meanwhile, Premier Mussolini's Government, with a budget deficit of approximately $1,402,000,000 for the last fiscal year, announced a $2,000,000,000 budget for the next, exclusive of probable war costs.

Preparations for the present war and expenses incured in Italy's other wars in the last few years accounted for most of the deficit, Finance Minister Paolo Thaon Di Revel Jr., told a meeting of the Cabinet at where Il Duce presided.

Confidence Is Expressed.

The Cabinet, by acclamation, adopted this resolution:

"The Council of Ministers at the end of work in its January session of the year nineteen (of the Fascist regime) sends greetings full of admiration to commanders of the troops of the army, navy, air force and militia (Black Shirts), who are fighting heroically on many fronts against the forces of British imperialism and its satellites and in the face of puerile maneuvers and absurd threats of enemy propaganda on this and the other side of the ocean.

"It solemnly reaffirms Italy's unshakeable fidelity to the Axis and tripartite pacts and its no less unshakeable decision to continue the fight until victory, which must give Italy its just place in the new Europe and liberate the world from hypocritical and exploiting oppression of British plutocracy.

"The Council of Ministers expressed absolute conviction that the deep masses of 'Fascist' Italy are and will be in every circumstance equal to events."

Scion Of Italian Family Dies In Albanian Action

Don Camillo Caetani Was Son Of American Woman And Prince Who Wrote Operas

Rome, Jan. 7 (AP)—Don Camillo Caetani, 25, scion of one of the most important families in Italy, whose mother was the former Marguerite Chapin, of Springfield, Mass., and New York, was killed in action in Albania last month, it was learned tonight.

JAN 8 1941

The youth, who had studied law at Harvard University, was a lieutenant of engineers in the Italian army. It was understood he suffered a bullet wound in the head December 11.

He was the only son of Prince Rofredo Caetani, a writer of operas, and would have become Prince Bassiano and Duke of Sermonetto. His parents live in Rome.

The family included the thirteenth century Pope Boniface VIII. Don Camillo's uncle, Gelassio Caetani, was Italian Ambassador to the United States.

2 Billion Budget Set by Italy

By the Associated Press.

ROME, Jan. 7.—The Italian government, with a budget deficit of approximately $1,402,000,000 from the past fiscal year, announced today a $2,000,000,000 budget for the coming year exclusive of probable war costs.

The budget deficit for the last fiscal year amounted to 28,038,383,634 lire, Finance Minister Paolo Thaon Di Revel, Jr., reported to a meeting of the Fascist Cabinet held under chairmanship of Premier Mussolini.

(The lira has a nominal value of $.050414.)

Preparations for the present war and expenses incurred in Italy's other wars in the last few years accounted for most of the deficit —21,890,523,500 lire.

A SEMI-OFFICIAL STATEMENT, CITING BARDIA'S DEFENSE AS "A GLORIOUS PAGE IN ITALIAN ARMS," SAID THE ITALIANS WERE OPPOSED BY 250,000 TROOPS, SUPPORTED BY "GREAT ARMORED UNITS, NOT LESS THAN 1,000 PLANES, AND THE ENTIRE ALEXANDRIA FLEET."

40 DAMAGED PLANES CAPTURED BY BRITISH

Wavell's Patrols Are Testing Defenses of Strategic Port Next to Bardia—50,000 of Enemy Massed There.

Cairo, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—A Royal Air Force communique announced today that British troops, thrusting deep into Libya, had reached El Adem, the airport for Tobruk, and there had captured forty Italian planes which had been damaged by previous British bomb attacks. The Italians had abandoned the airport, which is only fifteen miles south of Tobruk.

[The forces which reached El Adem presumably were mechanized units reported in London to be now in contact with the outer defenses of Tobruk. Pointing out that the coastal road all the way across Libya to Tripoli is vulnerable to sea attack, official sources there said that Italy's remaining Libyan air bases were being forced constantly to shift westward.]

Tobruk, seventy miles west of captured Bardia, is the next major Italian stronghold in the path of the British advance, and armed patrols were reported already testing its defenses as Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell sought to keep Italy's North African army on the defensive.

Tobruk itself was bombed again yesterday as well as Martuba and the port of Derna, still farther west, said the R. A. F. communique.

Bombs fell along Tobruk's water front and on military targets within the town, it reported, "but full details of the damage could not be observed."

50,000 Italians at Base.

Military circles here estimated that approximately 50,000 Italian troops were concentrated at Tobruk. Approaches to its harbor, one of the best on the Libyan coast, were said to be already barred by the British fleet.

The Tobruk defenses, hastily strengthened while the Italian garrison at Bardia fought to delay the British drive to the west, were said to consist of two lines of fortifications, with the outer ring approximately twenty-five miles in circumference.

British quarters expressed confidence that these fortifications could not withstand battering from land, sea and air such as Sir Archibald is prepared to give them. These sources also saw small possibility that Marshal Rodolfo Graziani could re-enforce Tobruk.

Claim Mastery of Air.

In the first place, they declared, the Royal Air Force now is master of the air in North Africa, while practically every yard of the coastal road from Tobruk to Tripoli—a matter of more than 700 miles—is vulnerable to the guns of the British Mediterranean fleet.

In the second place, the Italians—through their reverses at Sidi Barrani and Bardia—have lost at least half the guns, supplies, munitions and motor transport facilities with which their North African army was equipped.

Moreover, the British suggested, Marshal Graziani may hesitate to move troops from western Libya to defend Tobruk because of the possibility of attack from the French territory of Tunisia on the west.

Gen. Maxime Weygand, the French commander in North Africa, is known to have a sizable well-armed force at his disposal and the possibility frequently has been suggested that, should German demands upon the French Government at Vichy become too exacting, he might re-enter the war and strike a blow at the Axis in Libya.

Some sources here suggested that, while Tobruk is the next logical British objective, Sir Archibald might attempt a 250-mile dash across the desert sands south of Tobruk to strike at the big Italian base at Bengasi while holding Tobruk in a state of siege.

JAN 8 1941

Report on African Drive.

London, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Official quarters estimated today that the British Army of the Nile has rendered 94,000 Italian troops "ineffective" in fighting in North Africa since December 9. These figures include, it was said, at least 70,000 prisoners, plus wounded and dead.

In addition, the British forces were said to have captured huge quantities of war materials.

British mechanized units, the same informants said, "are now in contact with the outer defenses of Tobruk," Italian Libyan stronghold some eighty miles from the Egyptian border.

Among the Italian formations they listed as smashed were the Sixty-second, Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth metropolitan divisions of Mussolini's regular army; the First and Second Black Shirt divisions and the Maletti mechanized group.

There are 13,000 men and officers in a regular Italian division, 12,000 in a Blackshirt division and 7,000 in a Libyan division, it was said, and the mechanized personnel totaled probably 7,500 men.

10,000 More in Supply Corps.

To this total of 84,500, these informants said, must be added 10,000 corps and supply troops, making a rough total of 94,000 to 94,500 men whose formations have been entirely broken and who were captured, killed, wounded, or missing in the desert.

From the crushing of these units, the amount of war material seized by the British can be judged from the equipment of one infantry division. Besides small arms, such equipment includes: 216 light automatic weapons, 48 heavy machine-guns, 111 light mortars, 24 heavy mortars, 36 field guns, 24 anti-tank guns and 8 anti-aircraft guns.

Italian armored divisions consist of one infantry regiment transported in trucks, one tank regiment composed of two battalions of assault tanks (11-ton Ansaldos), one battalion of light tanks (five-ton Fiats), one artillery regiment, one motorcycle company, one anti-aircraft company, one anti-tank company, one engineer company and various service troops.

Expected To Obtain First-Hand Account Of British Campaign

English Capture Tobruk Airport, 70 Miles West Of Bardia

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 7 — Col. William J. Donovan, on an undisclosed mission from the United States, arrived tonight in Cairo by plane from London.

It was understood he will furnish the American Government with a first-hand account of the situation and of operations in the middle eastern war theater. He is staying at the British Embassy.

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 7—Advanced forces of the British army were declared officially today to have thrust almost seventy miles west of fallen Bardia to occupy the military airport serving Tobruk, the main Italian base in Libya, and seized forty Fascist planes grounded there by R. A. F. action.

JAN 8 1941

Some of the fast motorized units used thus far so successfully in this desert offensive were reported almost at Tobruk's gates, darting in here and there to test the port's outer defenses.

"Preceeding Satisfactorily"

The British command itself put the situation in a sentence:

"Operations toward Tobruk are proceeding satisfactorily."

Tonight British general headquarters asserted that three Black Shirt (political militia) commanders deserted their troops during the unsuccessful Italian defense of Bardia, thus leaving "the regular (army) commanders to fight on."

Nothing was said officially here about the total number of Italian troops now put out of action, but official quarters in London estimated that 94,000 had been rendered "ineffective" — 70,000 prisoners plus the dead, wounded and missing.

Claim Control Of Air Along Coast

In announcing that the Tobruk airport—at El Adem, fifteen miles to the south of the town itself—had been abandoned and fell without a struggle, the British thus indirectly laid claim to an effective command of the air at least along the entire seventy miles of coastal area from Bardia.

The approaches to Tobruk's harbor were declared cut off by British warships; the coastal road in both directions—toward Bardia and westward 700 miles toward Tripoli—lay under the shadow of British fleet guns.

Thus, while the main forces of the British Imperial Army were gathered for the grand assault, British informants suggested that the estimated 50,000 Italians defending Tobruk must elect to stand or give in without effective reinforcements.

Guns And Supplies Lost

The Fascists, driven from Egypt with heavy losses at Sidi Barrani, Bardia and elsewhere, were said also to have lost no less than half of the presumably irreplaceable guns, supplies, munitions and motor transport which they had brought up at the start of their disastrous invasion.

The day's news, aside from the announcement that El Adem had fallen to ground troops, dealt principally with the continuing offensive of the Royal Air Force.

In the latest foray to be reported, Tobruk was declared to have been bombed, explosives falling on the water front and on other "military objectives," and, still farther to the west, the coastal town of Derna was raided.

BRITISH LAUD AFRICAN WORK OF U. S. PLANES

Report Martin Bombers Are Well Adapted To Desert Warfare

Cairo Officials Are Well Satisfied With Performance Of R. A. F.

By EDWARD KENNEDY
Associated Press Correspondent

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 7—American planes made their first appearance with the British Near Eastern forces in the present offensive in Libya and have done "exceptionally good work," a Royal Air Force official disclosed tonight.

The first to go into service here were Martin bombers. While only small numbers are being used so far, observers said they seem adapted to the desert air warfare, which offers many special problems, such as navigating in sandstorms and screening sand out of the mechanism.

The current arrivals of American aircraft in Egypt were described as a trickle, which air officials said they hoped would grow steadily.

30.24—6839

30.24—6839

Satisfied With R. A. F.

Air chiefs here are highly satisfied with the R. A. F.'s performance, both in the desert war and in Greece. They said they regarded "future prospects" with "more than reasonable confidence."

They realize, however, some officers said, that there still is a long air struggle ahead in this area.

Despite the overwhelming superiority of the British in the air here, the Italian air force remains a power to contend with, and there is always a greater danger of the entry of German aviation in this theater of combat.

500 Enemy Planes Downed

Italian planes shot down from the air or by anti-aircraft guns since the war began in the Mediterranean area have passed the 500 mark while British losses here are about eighty, air chiefs said.

Officers added that terrific damage and demoralization have been inflicted on the Italians in 1,827 bombing raids carried out under the air command here.

Perhaps the R. A. F.'s greatest achievement here was the terrific air campaign which preceded the land advance in the western desert and the Bardia region.

This was directed largely against Italian North African air fields where much damage was inflicted on their planes with a view to keeping them on the ground as much as possible.

New Tactics Used

New tactics were employed successfully in the offensive, it was disclosed.

One was the wide use of Hurricane fighters for gun attacks from low altitudes on convoys and air fields.

This compelled the Italians to use more of their fighters in an attempt to prevent such attacks and reduced the number available for escorting bombers.

"And since their bombers are reluctant to go out without large escorts, this reduced their bombing," high R. A. F. officers said.

The advance of British front lines from Matruh to well beyond Bardia—200 miles—has given the R. A. F. new problems.

Air Bases Advanced

Air bases have been advanced apace with the land march, but this has required a vast amount of organization.

British airmen have found Italy's East African air force superior to squadrons operating from Libya and Italy, though even here R. A. F. flyers operating from the Sudan, Kenya Colony and Aden have inflicted heavy losses in Ethiopia, it was said.

Red Sea traffic has been virtually free from air attacks. It was admitted however, that the British have not been entirely successful in preventing arrival of supplies to Italian East Africa.

These supplies are transferred from ships on the sea to dhows—small Arab boats with mutton-chop sails—which slip into port.

Can't Control All

"Dhow traffic along the coast is so extensive it is impossible to control it all," one officer said, "but efforts are being made to keep this traffic to a minimum."

Supplies arriving in East Africa are in no way equal to the exhaustion of material there and the Italian position there is inevitably weakening with the passage of time, it was said.

R. A. F. operations in Greece are somewhat reduced due to the weather, but they are expected to be increased greatly in the spring as ever increasing reinforcements of men and planes make greater activity possible.

English, Surprised At Seizing So Many, Find Accommodations Insufficient

Few Fascists Disappointed, But Want To Let Their Families Know

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 7—Headquarters of Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell grappled tonight with the problem of accommodating upward of 70,000 prisoners taken by the British thus far in their campaign against Italian North Africa.

By sea and by rail, those captured in the victory at Bardia are pouring into the Nile valley from the desert at the rate of 2,000 to 3,000 daily—great herds of defeated soldiers who will have to be fed, clothed and housed until the war ends.

The British say they never expected to capture so many. What to do with them after the Sidi Barrani victory last month, when about 40,000 were seized, was an acute problem.

More Experience

Since then the army has had more experience in handling prisoners, so preparations for the assault on Bardia included wiring off large inclosures on the deserts for captives. Even then the British staff was surprised at the great numbers taken.

In any event, it was impossible to prepare huge stores of food and water for them, and the first job was to get them out of the desert.

Most are being shipped to Alexandria aboard any vessel available. Others are sent by truck to the rail head in the western desert. Trains that go up the line laden with British supplies in the morning return jammed with prisoners at night.

Camps Prepared

Large camps in the Nile delta were prepared hurriedly for the men captured in the first British drive, but now are being emptied to make room for new arrivals. The chief camp has been established in the Suez Canal zone.

Wounded Italians are sent to British hospitals and Libyans to Egyptian hospitals. The Egyptians are full of pity for the Libyans, who are fellow-Moslems. Women of the Red Crescent (Moslem version of the Red Cross) distribute candies and cigarettes among them.

The prison camps are similar to the large British army camps in Egypt, composed of rows of tents and a few scattered wooden structures.

Organize Selves

Prisoners are permitted largely to organize themselves for necessary duties. A captured non-commissioned officer is placed in charge of thirty or forty fellow-prisoners. Basket ball is the most popular prisoner recreation.

Few prisoners show much disappointment at being captured. Chiefly they want merely to let the folks back home know they are alive. This is handled by the International Red Cross through Geneva. If any prisoner has relatives among the large Italian colony in Egypt, they are informed immediately but are not permitted to visit him.

The prisoners have no clothes save those in which they stand, and often these are rags.

The British have placed large orders for uniforms, blankets, towels, toothbrushes, soap and shoes and sandals, these for the Libyans.

Better Food Than In Army

As for food, the British assert the prisoners are getting better rations than they ever got in the Italian army. The menu includes bread, macaroni and potatoes, and when possible fruit and vegetables. The Libyans have the diet they are used to: rice, lentils and similar foods. They will get an extra meat ration tomorrow because it is Courban Bairam, one of the big Moslem feast days.

All prisoners get regular issues of cigarettes or tobacco.

By international convention, officer prisoners continue to draw in captivity the pay their rank entitled them to when in service. The British have fixed the exchange rate at 72 lire to the pound sterling—the pre-war figure.

All together, keeping so many prisoners is naturally an expensive business. It is impossible yet to compute even the approximate cost. The only British satisfaction on this score is that with a final Italian defeat they can present the bills to her.

Egypt Let Suez Canal Pay in Piasters

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—The Egyptian Government waived the obligation of the Suez Canal Company today to pay interest on its bonds and shares on the basis of the gold franc and authorized payments on the basis of a franc worth 3.8575 Egyptian piasters. (The piaster has a nominal value of 4.16 cents.)

A military proclamation said the action was taken because the company "is unable in present circumstances to fulfill its financial obligations without exposing itself and being unable to carry out the work expected of it".

The Suez Canal is operated by a French company whose directors include twenty-one Frenchmen, ten Britons and one Netherlander. Its control automatically will revert to Egypt in 1968, at the expiration of a ninety-nine-year lease.

London Suffers Heaviest Raid By Daylight in Many Weeks

Residents Slain and Street Car Is Blown Off Tracks—Town in Midlands Hit—Night Bombers Fail to Appear.

London, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Bombs falling in a London street during the most prolonged and destructive daytime attack on London in weeks killed a number of persons today, injured eight others and blew a street car off its track.

London was under the alert for three hours, but the early night hours in the capital passed without the usual night alarm.

Other German raiders were reported to have killed or wounded several persons in a Midlands town in the heaviest of a series of daylight raids against that industrial area, London and the southeast coast.

Trinity House Inspected.

Despite the London alarm, Prime Minister Churchill and First Lord of the Admiralty A. V. Alexander visited Trinity House, damaged in the "fire raid" of December 29, and inspected devastation in the Tower Hill district.

The Midlands casualties were reported in the suburb of a town where several houses were demolished. This raid was carried out as London was kept under alert for more than three hours and the anti-aircraft defenses roared repeatedly.

Two explosions were heard in London soon after the sirens sounded. In the late afternoon machine-gun fire was heard from a plane over the capital's outskirts.

Londoners went about their business without fluster despite the long alert and the anti-aircraft fire, unusually persistent for the daytime. Even when the shrill whistles of London bobbies warned that the raiders were overhead shoppers and businessmen merely looked up and kept going. Taxis, buses and trucks kept moving.

Clouds Hide Raiders.

The raiders could be heard flying low but could not be seen because of the clouds.

A town in the home counties—the area around London—also was attacked.

Other raiders also were reported in an East Anglian town and the rumble of several high explosive bombs were heard in the distance.

Planes also were reported near Liverpool and over a Midlands town. A German bomber believed to have been a Dornier dived four times to attack two trawlers in plain view of watchers on the southeast coast. The plane twice dived and machine-gunned the vessels, then released two bombs near one ship, returned and repeated the machine-gunning. It was held off by the trawlers' machine guns, however, and fled to sea at the appearance of a Spitfire.

Snow and bad weather conditions over the Continent kept Great Britain's bombers away from Germany during the night and Britain also experienced a respite from the almost nightly assault of the Nazi air force. The Royal Air Force was said to have limited its activities to a few short armed reconnaissance flights across the channel to German invasion ports early last evening.

B. B. C. Building Damaged.

The public was informed today that Broadcasting House, the British Broadcasting Corporation's home in London, had been "very seriously damaged" in two recent air raids, and that several staff members were killed. The Ministry of Information said in one night raid a heavy bomb hit the building while news announcements were being read in English and German. The reading went on without interruption, although several women staff members were killed, the announcement said. Another night, "at the peak hour of evening broadcasts," bomb explosions were said to have killed a policeman and wounded a number of staff members. Seven staff members were killed and others injured in the first raid.

The announcer, who continued his news announcements, was Bruce Belfrage, former actor who had appeared in the United States and Canada. The bomb damaged the fifth floor of the building.

Church House, Westminster, new administrative headquarters of the Church of England, was seriously damaged and six persons were killed in a recent air raid, it was disclosed also.

Nazis Report Factory Hit.

Berlin, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—German spokesmen said tonight that several bombs exploded in filtering apparatus and the boiler room of a factory southwest of London when a German plane attacked it this afternoon. They said five hits were scored. A railway station and tracks in the Midlands were bombed from a low altitude, it was stated, and two hangars and a number of planes were hit at an airport north of London.

One British Spitfier was reported shot down while trying to fight off German planes which were about to attack a steamship.

260-Year-Old Carvings In Church Ruined in Raid

Grinling Gibbons' Work Among Treasures Destroyed by Nazis

LONDON, Jan. 7 (AP).—The 260-year-old carvings of Grinling Gibbons in the church of St. Lawrence Jewry were among the ecclesiastical are treasures destroyed by the Nazi fire-bomb raid on London's City district on Dec. 29, it was disclosed tonight.

The vestry of the church, built in 1671 by Sir Christopher Wren, was ruined. The square-built tower across rrom the fire-wrecked Guildhall, however, remained.

The Spagnoletto picture of the martyrdom of St. Lawrence and church records which also went through the Great Fire of 1666 were safe in a strongroom of the tower.

Church House, Westminster, new administrative headquarters of the Church of England, was seriously damaged and six persons were killed in a recent Nazi air raid, it was disclosed.

NAZIS BOMB LONDON IN HEAVY DAY RAIDS

Many Killed And Wounded As City Gets Worst Daytime Attack In Weeks

Industrial Town In Midlands, East Anglia And Southeast Coast Battered

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 7—Waves of fast German fighter-bombers gave London its longest and most destructive daytime attack in weeks today and killed and wounded a number of persons in the capital.

Bombers caused several casualties in a heavy assault on an industrial Midlands town, and other raiders, taking advantage of better flying conditions after being balked last night by snow and dirty weather, struck hard at East Anglia and the southeast coast.

But despite the severity of the London raid residents of the capital continued their shopping and routine tasks and Prime Minister Churchill and A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty, calmly surveyed damage caused at Trinity House and in the London Tower district in the fire raid of December 29.

Number Killed And Hurt

A number of persons were killed and wounded in London when a line of bombs fell across a street. A streetcar was blown off its tracks injuring eight persons. The spire and main part of a Baptist church crashed. A motor showroom and a bank were demolished, trapping a number of persons in the wreckage.

In another London section, four soldiers were injured when a gas main caught fire.

The raiders attacking the Midlands town demolished several houses in a suburb and killed or wounded several persons, it was reported.

The Luftwaffe used machine guns in many attacks. One report said an East Anglian town was machine-gunned four times, with pedestrians and school children scurrying for shelter in the residential area.

British Battle Raiders

At many points, machine-gun fire aloft indicated the British fighters were attacking the German raiders.

On the offensive, the British themselves were kept from reaching Germany last night by the same weather which balked the Germans, but the Air Ministry said British bombers yesterday damaged an enemy merchantman off Norway and hit an enemy tanker off the Netherlands.

Censorship was lifted to disclose that Broadcasting House, the home of the British Broadcasting Corporation in London, was "very seriously damaged" in two recent air raids and that 260-year-old carvings by Grinling Gibbons were wiped out at the Church of St. Lawrence Jewry in the fire raid which devastated the financial center of London December 29.

7 Killed At Posts

Seven staff members were killed at their posts and others injured in the first raid on Broadcasting House, but the announcer, Bruce Belfarge, former actor who has appeared in the United States and Canada, continued reading the news report without interruption.

The second bombing "at the peak of the evening broadcasts" resulted in the death of a policeman and the wounding of several staff members.

Church House, Westminster, new administrative headquarters of the Church of England, was seriously damaged and six persons were killed in a recent raid, it was disclosed.

The vestry of the Church of St. Lawrence Jewry, one of the most beautiful small rooms in the world, was ruined, but the square-built Wren tower remained standing. The church was built by Sir Christopher Wren in 1671-80 on the site of an earlier building destroyed by the great fire of 1666.

Trawler Attacked

The German air force was active at sea, a bomber diving four times to attack a trawler off the southeast coast. Coast watchers said the bomber was held off by the trawler's machine guns and finally fled when a Spitfire appeared.

The Admiralty said seven merchant ships totaling 37,556 tons were sunk by enemy action in the week ended December 30.

This included three British ships and four Allied vessels. The Admiralty said the total was approximately half the weekly average since the war began.

Prices Pegged

Lord Woolton, Food Minister, said the British were short on meat, but he believed it would be only temporary. He pegged prices for coffee, cocoa, fish, poultry and a variety of foods at figures not higher than the prices of December 2.

The chief medical officer of the Health Ministry, Sir Wilson Jameson, reported a marked wartime increase of meningitis, but said Britain's fear of that cerebro-spinal fever has gone because the mortality rate has fallen to "a fraction of what it once was."

On the whole, he said, Britain's health is "standing up well to the strain of war."

Celluloid Factory Hit By Bombs, Germans Report

Berlin, Jan. 7 (AP)—Informed German sources said tonight that several bombs exploded in filtering apparatus and the boiler room of a celluloid factory southwest of London when a German plane attacked it this afternoon. They said five hits were scored.

A railway station and tracks in the Midlands were bombed from a low altitude, it was stated, and two hangars and a number of planes were hit at an airport north of London.

One British Spitfire was reported shot down while trying to fight off German planes which were about to attack a steamer.

U. S. Announcer Injured

New York, Jan. 7 (AP)—NBC reported tonight that Fred Bate, NBC representative in London, was injured four weeks ago in a bombing of Broadcasting House in London, where the NBC studios are located. Bate, it was said, has now recovered and is back at work.

Reporter's Trip on Grim British Destroyer Shows Britannia Still Rules Channel Waves

By DREW MIDDLETON.

Aboard a British Destroyer off the French Coast, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Despite shells, bombs, mines and torpedoes, despite wrecks which dot the frigid waters, Britannia still appears to rule these waves.

From the destroyers's bridge I can see many merchantmen. Convoys bound north and south are stringing out, their barrage balloons nodding in gray skies. Destroyers marshal our convoy at the mouth of a harbor. Each of the merchantmen carries the capacity of three or four freight trains. They are all safe. Why? Well, here's a log of our voyage:

Afternoon—the quick, rhythmic fire of distant anti-aircraft guns pulses through the sharp cold air as we leave the harbor. No planes are in sight. A seaman says quietly, "Jerry's 'aving a go somewhere."

The officers have changed from smart shore "blues" to a variety of garments. The captain wears a heavy wool-lined canvas coat over layers of sweaters, fleece-lined boots, fur-lined mittens and then gloves. His head is covered by a knitted wool helmet—he doesn't look much like the officer who a few days ago received from his King the Distinguished Service Cross.

A Dinner of Sandwiches.

Guarded by the destroyers and fast motor boats, built during the world war to halt German submarine raids, the convoy moves out to sea. Above it are the balloon ships, a protection against dive bombers.

A cheer ripples down the line of ships as two formations of Blenheims fly by. . . . A day later you learn they bombed Brest.

Evening—Our dinner is sandwiches, soup and tea gulped on rolling decks. Between gulps, a navigator calls the course. The captain eyes the convoy and mutters that some of the vessels are falling behind.

He reckons the convoy will pass Hellfire Corner, rounding into the Strait of Dover, during darkness.

You stand gazing into the icy blackness for a while and then stretch out for a try at sleep.

Early morning—it's still very dark. The blacked-out destroyer gives you the feeling of a ghost ship moving through leagues of blackness. Suddenly there is the sound of a plane. The lookout calls out, "Aircraft approaching."

Blackness Turns to Gray.

An officer shouts, "Hold fire." He mutters to himself and then adds: "We fire and he gets our location, and then a little while later we catch hell from the bombers."

We steam on and the drone of the airplane's motors dies in the dark.

An hour later the blackness turns to gray. Dawn breaks dirty. The Dover cliffs, topped with snow, rise out of the wind-swept sea. Off on the other side a thin line of black separates the sea and the sky—the French coast.

From his chair where he has huddled in sleep during the night the captain speaks.

"We'll probably get some shelling soon. Don't worry. They're not very accurate."

Suddenly an orange flame stabs the gray French coast. You look around at the lookouts. They gaze indifferently at the sea. An officer starts counting. When he reaches sixty there's another sound.

"Whack, whack, whack!"—a shell in the air. And then the explosion. Behind us a column of water leaps 150 feet skyward.

For five minutes this goes on.

Argument Over Jerry's Bricks.

"It's over a thousand," says an officer.

"Don't be a fool," answers another, "it's only about 988."

The Captain grins.

"They're arguing," he says, "how many bricks Jerry has chucked at us in the last six months."

Every time a shell bursts there's a "whee," and a shower of shell fragments. The ship's doctor shows you one casually—a jagged piece of metal two and a half inches long.

"They make an ugly wound," he says.

We are out of the shelling area—only aircraft to worry about now. We don't have long to wait. Off to the east we see a plane with the familiar twin tails of the Messerschmitt 110. Guns swing to meet it, but the plane vanishes before the guns can open fire.

A moment later the guns of a destroyer astern begin crackling. Then ours go off, and when the four-inchers start slamming away that's noise.

Deck Jumps as Guns Roar.

You hang onto the rail. The deck jumps as the guns bang away. You try to fix your binoculars on the planes. There are more than one now. The concussion bumps the eyepieces against your nose. There's that familiar "whish" of a falling bomb. A column of water bigger than the others zooms into the air a half mile from our ship.

That's all, just one.

"We scared him off," says the captain calmly.

Afternoon—for the last hour we've been passing floating mines. We steer between two of them and flash a signal to the convoy. The merchantmen reply with whistle toots, and move around the sinister explosives like elderly chorus girls.

"I got knocked off the bridge when we hit one of them blinkin' things," says a yoeman signaler as we look down on the big barrel-like mines.

Late Afternoon—It's bitterly cold. Snow squalls hide the English shore and snow is crusting on deck and around the guns. The crew of one of the four-inchers is playing follow-the-leader to keep warm.

The convoy moves steadily onward to port. Mine-sweepers churn out to pick up any stray mines.

Evening—We nose in, the captain directing the ticklish job of tying up at a buoy in the face of a shrieking wind. He turns.

"Here's another one in," he says, "what about a drink?"

Yes. It's still the English Channel.

8 Italian Units Listed As Smashed in Libya

London Says 3 Regular Divisions Were Among Victims

LONDON, Jan. 7 (AP).—Among the Italian formations listed in military quarters here as smashed in the British offensive in Libya were the 62d, 63d and 64th Metropolitan divisions of Premier Benito Mussolini's regular army; the 1st and 2d Blackshirt divisions, the 1st and 2d Libyan divisions and the Maletti mechanized group.

There are 13,000 men and officers in a regular Italian division, 12,000 in a Blackshirt division and 7,000 in a Libyan division, these quarters said. They added that the mechanized personnel totaled probably 7,500 men.

To this total of 84,500, these informants said, must be added 10,000 corps and supply troops, making a rough total of 94,000 to 94,500 men whose formations have been entirely broken and who were captured, killed, wounded, or missing in the desert.

From the crushing of these units, the amount of war material seized by the British can be judged from the equipment of one infantry division. Besides small arms, such equipment includes 216 light automatic weapons, forty-eight heavy machine guns, 111 light mortars, twenty-four heavy mortars, thirty-six field guns, twenty-four anti-tank guns and eight anti-aircraft guns.

Italian armored divisions consist of one infantry regiment transported in trucks, one tank regiment composed of two battalions of assault tanks (eleven-ton Ansaldos), one battalion of light tanks (five-ton Fiats), one artillery regiment, one motorcycle company, one anti-aircraft company, one anti-tank company, one engineer company and various service troops.

PRESS CRITICIZES CHURCHILL MOVE

Says Production Group Fails to Insure Speedup.

London, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—The press today criticized Prime Minister Churchill's appointment of three new executive bodies whose heads form a committee to regulate and speed the industrial war effort.

30.24—6841

The Daily Herald, Laborite newspaper, commented:

"It does not provide—as members of Pardliament will trenchantly point out when Parliament examines the Premier's move—all the powerful, full-time Government machine for the application of a ruthless, co-ordinated output plan."

The Times predicted disappointment "because powers given the Government last May to require people to 'place themselves, their services and their property at the disposal of his Majesty' . . . were not being used." The Times added that the Government was "still fumbling without any comprehensive policy."

The Daily Mirror said the new committe did not "dispose of the malady of slowness."

Meningitis In Britain

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 7—Sir Wilson Jameson, chief medical officer of the Health Ministry, disclosed today that Britain was experiencing a marked wartime increase in cerebro-spinal fever (meningitis).

He said that cases reported to him increased from 1,500 in 1939 to about 12,500 in 1940. The 1938 figure was 1,268.

Dread Of Fever Gone

Jameson added that, although "we are still very much afraid of cerebro-spinal fever, our great dread of it has gone," because the mortality rate had fallen to "a fraction of what it once was."

An increase in reported pneumonia cases from 42,000 in 1939 to "nearly 46,000" in 1940 also was reported.

Enteric fever cases, he said, mounted from 1,500 in 1939 to 2,800 last year.

Dysentery cases, after dropping from 4,170 in 1938 to 963 in 1939, rose to 2,500, he said.

Against these figures, covering England and Wales, Jameson cited drops in the prevalence of diphtheria and scarlet fever and asserted that Britain's health "is standing up well to the strain of war."

Food-Price Limit Set

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 7—Food Minister Lord Woolton announced today the pegging of prices of a variety of foods at not more than the figures of last December 2.

JAN 8 1941

He listed coffee, cocoa, chocolate, canned and boiled vegetables, canned pork and beans, honey, fish and poultry pastes, poultry, tapioca, biscuits, canned goods, processed cheese, custard powders, jellies and nuts.

His order forbids wholesalers, retailers or manufacturers to sell at prices higher than each sold these foods for last December 2.

Lord Woolton earlier acknowledged Britain is suffering from a meat shortage, but said he believed it is only temporary.

If the shortage continues, however, the meat ration will be reduced, he said.

"The position of meat supplies," he said, "is immediately difficult, with every sign of improvement."

A drastic anti-profiteering order, Woolton said, would "burn the fingers" of "new people coming into the food trade as a profitable field for speculation.

"They have been taking their rake-off of profit and have rendered no service at all to the country," he said.

Winter Cuts Ship Losses

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 7—The Admiralty announced today that seven merchant ships totaling 37,556 tons had been lost "by enemy action" in the week ended December 30.

The total included three British ships aggregating 18,208 tons and four Allied vessels totaling 18,348 tons.

This week's losses totaled only approximately half the average weekly loss since the war started, the Admiralty said.

The announcement said the Germans had claimed to have sunk during the week in question "a total of 130,163 tons, or nearly four times the actual figure."

63,000 Tons Weekly

For the sixty-nine weeks of the war to the end of December, mercantile shipping losses exclusive of that lost at Dunkirk, averaged approximately 63,000 tons weekly, a naval spokesman said.

"Since the beginning of the war the Germans have lost by capture, sinking and scuttling a total of 1,257,000 gross tons of shipping and the Italians 454,000 tons," he said.

"In addition 46,000 gross tons of neutral shipping under enemy control or useful to the enemy has been sunk.

"Thus the total enemy losses amount to more than 1,750,000 gross tons."

Some reduction in the recent shipping losses was attributed to the fact that Nazi long-range bombers, which often attacked shipping in the Atlantic, had been less active recently because of bad weather conditions, which, likewise, were believed to have hampered submarine activity.

British Say 2 Others Met Death With Amy Mollison

Seaman Died in Vain Attempt to Save Plane Passenger

LONDON, Jan. 7 (AP).—The Admiralty disclosed tonight that the crash of the plane which resulted Sunday in the death of Amy Johnson Mollinson, famous British woman flyer, also cost the lives of two men, one of them Miss Johnson's passenger.

The second man was Lieut. Cmdr. W. E. Fletcher, captain of the trawler Hastlemere, who made a vain attempt to rescue the passenger when Miss Johnson's plane dived into the choppy waters of the Thames Estuary a moment after she had bailed out in a parachute.

The trawler was forming part of a convoy, the Admiralty's statement said, when Fletcher and the others saw the parachute descending through low clouds followed by the plane. While a boat was being launched from the trawler, those on board saw the man in the plane. Miss Johnson sank before rescue could be attempted, the Admiralty said.

Fletcher thereupon dived overboard to save the life of the passenger, who was not identified. Fletcher reached the passenger's side and supported him in the water. The lifeboat failed to reach the two men in time, but a naval motor launch picked up Fletcher, who was unconscious. He died soon after being taken to a hospital.

Boats searched the waters for hours seeking the pilot's body. The Admiralty did not say that it had been recovered.

New English Bomber Ready

London, Jan. 7 (AP)—The Air Ministry announced today that its Botha twin-engined torpedo bomber was "off the full secret list of British warplanes."

That means that the plane can now be mentioned, but that no details of its production or action against the Germans and Italians are yet permitted.

The Ministry's description of the craft stated that it is powered by two Perseus engines, has a span of 59 feet, a length of 50 feet 11½ inches and a height of 18 feet 3 inches.

BRITONS ASK PAY RISE

A Million Arms Workers Submit Plea

London, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—A million British arms workers placed before an arbitration tribunal today their plea for a wage increase of three-pence (5 cents) an hour to meet rising living costs.

Representatives of the Amalgamated Engineering Union, with 500,000 members, were the first to be heard. The General Engineering Trades Union, representing another 500,000 worers, will be heard tomorrow.

The cases presented by the unions cover a score of trades in which wages average approximately five pounds sterling ($20) a week. Employers have argued that increased pay is unwarranted in the country's interest unless needs of the workers for more money are proved imperative.

Similar wage increase claims will be submitted by shipbuilding workers on January 16.

Judge Sir Gavin Simonds is presiding officer of the three-man arbitration tribunal. The other members are Prof. Sir Hector Hetherington and Sir John Forester, a lawyer.

Nazi School Ruse Feared

SYDNEY, New South Wales, Jan. 7 (AP).—The Department of Education announced today that it was discouraging school children from corresponding with children of other lands. The department felt such pen friendships might be used by the enemy to obtain valuable information and to spread Nazi propaganda.

GREEK SHIPS SHELL VALONA AT LEISURE

Destroyers Bombard Port Without Even Sighting Italian Warcraft

Army Reports Threatening Fascist Lines Between Tepelini And Coast

[By the Associated Press]

Athens, Jan. 7—A squadron of Greek destroyers has churned into the Adriatic, penetrated by night into the Albanian Gulf of Valona and shelled the Italian-held city with sixty rounds without even so much as sighting Italian warcraft, the Greek Marine Ministry announced tonight.

[Greek destroyers have been built both in Italy and Britain.]

Then, said the communique, the squadron loafed back to its bases "at reduced speed."

JAN 8 1941

Action Sunday Night

The action was reported to have taken place Sunday night, and coincided with another R. A. F. bombardment of Valona, in which fires were declared left burning in warehouses and elsewhere on the water front.

Now, Greek military reports say the Greek forces are menacing Italian land communications between Tepelini and Valona, major southwestern Albanian seaport.

Tonight the Greek military spokesman said the Italians had evacuated 25,000 sick and wounded from Valona alone and that since the outbreak of hostilities October 28 the Fascist losses could be counted "in the tens of thousands."

[In Belgrade, it was reported that the wreckage from the Italian steamer Geneva including 500 barrels of naphtha, had been found on the Yugoslav coast near Bar. This presumably is one of two Italian supply ships sunk off Bar, January 3, by British or Greek warships].

Italians Endangered

Dispatch from the central Albanian front claimed Italian defenders of Klisura, east of Tepeleni, had been endangered by Greek capture of a 5,500-foot peak north of the town and to the rear of the Fascist positions.

Day-to-day reports continued to bring slow increases—usually of a hundred or more—in Greek claims of prisoners taken, with reports of the booty of Italian war materials mounting just as steadily.

A Greek spokesman asserted that five officers were among 222 captives taken yesterday.

The Greeks were reported to have come upon many wounded Italian soldiers who were left behind in precipitate withdrawals of their comrades.

Greeks who captured one mountain asserted that all Italians opposing them were killed, wounded or captured.

Brief Communique

Despite all these reports, tonight's communique of the Greek high command was two brief sentences:

"There were reduced patrol activities. A number of prisoners were taken."

The Greek Ministry of Home Security declared coincidentally that more than one hundred civilian casualties were caused in Koritza, Albania, by an Italian air raid; that forty houses had collapsed and that a cathedral was seriously damaged.

Italians Claim Success

Rome, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Renewed air activity along the Albanian front and the capture of an important position from Greek troops were reported today by the Italian High Command. A successful raid was said to have driven the Greeks from the position where the Italians said quantities of automatic weapons and munitions were abandoned.

The Italian war bulletin said several prisoners were taken by the Fascist forces in patrol clashes.

U. S. Reporter Watches Greeks Shell Italians Off Canyon Wall

Says Troops, Determined To Capture Valona, Wait Impatiently For The Order To Advance

By DANIEL DELUCE
Associated Press Correspondent

Somewhere in the Greek First Line on the Albanian Coast, Jan. 5 (Delayed)—From the half circles of rock which hide Greek machine-gun crews I watched Italian infantry platoons scale a canyon wall a mile away.

They were dark little figures etched with the sparse green bushes against the gray limestone. As they climbed slowly, each man choosing a different trail, they must have known they were as visible to Greek artillerymen as flies crawling on a window pane.

"Look what happens now," a Greek gunner beside me said.

The Italians were no more than twenty yards from the crest of the canyon when I heard a Greek shell whine overhead.

It exploded with a flash on the line of the Italians' march.

Two more shells shook the canyon walls, and when the smoke arose the gunner beside me said:

"Good hits. If there are any Italians left alive they'll finish the climb on their bellies."

This occurred a quarter of an hour ago and I am writing this is the captain's shelter under a ledge thirty yards from his advance machine gun post and only 330 yards from the Italian outposts.

At our back lies the picturesque seaside village of Chimara, the Greek's latest acquisition. No other correspondents, foreign or Greek, have come this far with the army.

A comparatively long and difficult stretch of coast stands between the Greek lines and the Italian seaside base of Valona, but the Greeks are determined to reach that objective, as they have been determined on earlier objectives.

Troops Carry Supplies

Mile after mile up precipitous slopes soldiers carry food, water and shells for the front-line troops for it's too steep even for donkeys to pack supplies here.

Below the ridge, unshaven and unwashed infantrymen await impatiently for the order:

"Empros" (advance)!

"Waiting is the hardest thing we are asked to do," the Greeks say.

It's a bad day for aviation. The sea breeze sent clouds scudding over the peaks and only one enemy reconnaissance plane appeared. It was driven back by anti-aircraft batteries.

Contempt For Bombers

Italian bombers have been active in this secor the past few days, but the Greeks voice contempt for efforts which they say fritted away superior air strength with aimless attacks that touch neither troops nor supply lines.

In the forty hours it took me to travel 150 miles by truck, motorcycle and horse cart to this spot, nowhere along the way was I delayed by bomb damaged roads or bridges.

A half-dozen bridges which I was told were attacked by Italian airmen still were in use.

Greeks Respect Shells

Italian shells which arch over the ridges to explode in a spray of shrapnel command far more respect from the Greek troops than an Italian strafing plane.

During the day, the Greeks hug the underside of ledges, and by night they stretch canvas from rocks to keep dry despite almost continual rain.

Tonight, New Year's gifts of brandy, cookies and chocolates are being consumed. It's almost like a party, with shellfire for the music.

AMERICAN CITIZEN HELD IN NAZI CAMP

Charles D. Morgan, Husband Of Baltimorean, Captured In Flanders Battle

Attorney-Soldier Married Louise Warfield, Cousin Of Duchess Of Windsor

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 7—Charles Davis Morgan, an American citizen who was a Harvard University chum of President Roosevelt, is in a German prison camp with little chance of release. He was captured last June while fighting with the British in the Battle of Flanders.

His plight was disclosed today by the United States Embassy.

The 56-year-old attorney-soldier is the husband of the former Louise Warfield, of Baltimore, a cousin of the Duchess of Windsor.

Case Carried To White House

Embassy sources said friends had carried his case to the White House, but under international law he is considered a British soldier because he took part in combat as such. His predicament thus is distinguished from that of American ambulance drivers—noncombatants—who already have been released.

The Germans were said to have indicated a willingness to release Morgan, except that it might set a precedent for similar treatment to American pilots they expect may be downed while piloting British planes.

Worked With Roosevelt

Morgan, a native of Plymouth, Mass., was a fellow-editor of President Roosevelt in college days on the Harvard Crimson.

He fought with the British in the World War and was badly wounded. The British Government awarded him several medals.

After the World War he built up a lucrative law practice in Paris. He joined the British army again in January, 1940, was given a captain's commission and made liaison officer between the British and French in Flanders.

Clung To U. S. Citizenship

Embassy representatives who visited him at the German prison camp near Salzburg, in Bavaria, said that he told them he refrained from swearing allegiance to the King when he joined up because he did not want to lose his American citizenship, but that he got his commission anyway.

For a time he concealed his nationality by describing himself as Canadian-born, but subsequently revealed that he was an American, a fact confirmed by his passport left in Paris.

The short, mustached Morgan explained that he hid his American citizenship because he feared he would be taken from his buddies in the British officers' camp and interned with British civilians.

Morgan Is Son-In-Law Of Late Gov. Warfield

Capt. Charles Davis Morgan married Louise Warfield, of Baltimore, a daughter of the late Gov. Edwin Warfield, in Paris in 1924. Mrs. Morgan is a sister of Edwin Warfield, Jr., chairman of the State Conservation Commission.

Mrs. Morgan, a cousin of the Duchess of Windsor, previously had been married to Count Vladimir Ledochowski, of Poznan, Poland. She was divorced from Count Ledochowski in 1921.

Two daughters by Mr. Morgan's first marriage made their debuts here and now are married to French and Dutch army officers. Mrs. Morgan and her young son, Richard, are living at their chateau in Touraine in occupied France, about thirty miles southwest of Chartres.

NAZIS DISCLAIM DUBLIN BOMBING

But Say Planes May Have Visited Eire January 1.

Berlin, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Germany disclaimed today any responsibility for bombs dropped near Dublin on the night of January 2-3, but said it was possible that German planes might have flown over neutral Ireland (Eire) the night of January 1-2, authorized persons said.

The German Government promised the Irish Charge d'Affaires in Berlin that it would continue negotiations concerning the flights and reported bombing, and would offer regrets and reparations for possible damage, if investigations showed German flyers were to blame.

Of bomb fragments allegedly shown to be of German origin, a communique said:

"British lie agitation is at work to have this assertion appear as a planful German challenge to Ireland. "This has a specially vicious effect if one remembers how the British airforce itself time and again systematically violated foreign territory as over Marseilles, Geneva, Zurich, Basle, &c., causing damage there. . . ."

Of the second night's bombing, it added, "as in the case of the Athenia, suspicion arises that they were English bombs dropped with provocatory intentions after Churchill methods."

The Germans have contended that the liner Athenia, sunk on the night of Britain's entry into the war, September 3, 1939, was sent down deliberately by the British to point suspicion at Germany. Winston Churchill, Britain's Prime Minister, had become First Lord of the Admiralty that day.

Death for Paris Bandits

Summary Execution in 24 Hours Is Decreed for Armed Criminals

BERLIN, Jan. 7 (AP).—D. N. B., the official German news agency, said in a dispatch from Paris today that drastic penalties to combat crime, including execution within twenty-four hours after arrest, had been announced by authorities there.

Police in the German-occupied French capital were concerned particularly, the agency reported, over an increase in crimes committed during blackouts. It said a summary court had been established and immediate execution threatened for persons using weapons in carrying out any criminal acts.

Nazis Allow Norwegians One Suit and Shirt a Year

Clothing Restrictions Are More Severe There Than in Reich

BERLIN, Jan. 7 (AP).—Norway's new clothing rations permit a man to buy only one new suit and shirt a year or their equivalent in other garments, a digest received here disclosed today.

The digest, appearing in the "Deutsche Zeitung," said a clothing ration card contained 300 points for one year. A man's suit takes 240 points and a shirt 60. A warm coat for a woman costs 200 points, while a cotton summer coat requires 150. a wool dress 120 and a pair of stockings 15.

The digest indicated that the Norwegian clothing restrictions were more severe than those in Germany.

British Bombs Damage U. S. Monument at Brest

Berlin, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Informed persons said today that an American monument in Brest, France, erected in commemoration of the landing of the first United States troops there in 1917, was destroyed by British bombs the night of January 4. No other details of the raid on the German-occupied French port were given.

BULGARS MASS SOLDIERS NEAR TURKS' BORDER

Nazis Stationed on Northern Line and Turkish Troops on Southern.

PHILOV RETURNS TO SOFIA

But a Spokesman for Premier Denies Any Knowledge of Impending Crisis.

Sofia, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Bulgaria, hemmed between a big German army across the Danube in Rumania and reportedly growing Turkish concentrations across her southern frontier, was reported today to have massed almost all her troops to the south—facing Turkey.

Across the southern border, in Thrace, 400,000 Turkish troops were reported ready for any eventuality. Turkish informants asserted that if the Nazis crossed the Danube the Turks would march into Bulgaria to meet them. Germans, however, expressed doubt the Turks would cross the frontier and predicted, instead, they would remain in their Thracian forts, on the defensive.

Bulgars waited and hoped their country would not be made a battlefield, but some of them commented, "What we hope doesn't count." The odds in Sofia still were about four to one that the Germans would move in—perhaps in a few days, perhaps not until spring.

Soldiers on Leave.

The Bulgarian High Command figuratively shrugged its shoulders, granting leaves to many officers and men for the Greek Orthodox Christmas.

Although Bulgaria's war strength has been estimated at about 500,000 men, only about 100,000 are under arms. A few of these are along the Greek and the Yugoslav frontiers. Fewer still are across the Danube from the Germans in Rumania. Most of the rest face Turkey.

Authoritative persons in Sofia have said for weeks that Bulgaria's only hope of keeping the Germans on the Rumania side of the Danube is that Soviet Russia might oppose a German move across Bulgaria toward the Greek frontier or the Dardanelles.

Premier Bogdan Philov returned today from a visit to Vienna made, according to official explanation, for consultation on a stomach ailment. There have been reports, however, that he saw the German Foreign Minister, Joachim von Ribbentrop, during his absence.

A Foreign Office official who traveled with Philov said that the Premier first heard rumors of an impending Bulgarian crisis when he saw German troop concentrations in Rumania as his train reached the frontier.

"We have no knowledge of any basis for the rumors," said a spokesman, indicating that there was no connection between them and the Premier's return.

Philov himself made no comment.

Sofia Looks To Russia For Advice About Nazis

Sofia, Jan. 7 (AP)—Bulgaria looked to Russia again tonight for an answer to whether German troops massed along the northern frontier mean war or peace.

Premier Bogdan Philoff's return from a "health trip" to Vienna shed no official light on the situation. He hurried from the station to his office without commenting on the threatened Nazi march across his country toward Greece and the Dardanelles.

Informed quarters, however, believed reluctance of both Russia and Germany to antagonize each other at the expense of their "mutual tolerance" would bring about a stalemate in the situation, as it did last fall when Bulgaria was able to resist Berlin demands for adherence to the Axis Balkan bloc.

A "Trial Balloon"

Thus reports from German sources in Belgrade that Russia had consented to a passage of Nazi troops across Bulgaria in exchange for a free hand in Finland and Moldavia were regarded as a "trial balloon."

"If there were ten per cent. of truth in all the rumors abroad about Bulgaria, there would be none of the tranquillity you see all around," a high government source remarked.

Nevertheless, Germans continued to mass forces in Rumania along the Danube frontier with Bulgaria. Rumanians were said to have been instructed to establish gasoline depots throughout the country by February 1, an order characteristic of German thoroughness.

Trainloads of collapsible barracks, along with great quantities of pontoon bridge materials, have arrived in Rumania from Germany.

Watching developments closely, the Turkish Assembly extended military service to all classes now mobilized another year. Turkey is reported to have 400,000 men along Bulgaria's southern frontier ready to march in to meet any German thrust.

Furloughs Granted

Still unperturbed, the Bulgarian high command granted many officers and soldiers leaves to observe the Greek Orthodox Christmas. Bulgaria is credited with having only 100,000 of its army of 500,000 under arms.

Reports from the frontier said ice conditions on the Danube made impossible any mass movement of troops across the river. The floe-choked stream ruled out passage of barges or ferries, while the ice is not solid enough to support the weight of trucks or other mobile war equipment.

BRITISH SHIP FEARED SUNK

Vessel Is Reported Sent To Bottom By Submarine

Lisbon, Wednesday, Jan. 8 (AP)—Reports reached here early today that the 5,029-ton British steamer Shakespear had been sunk by a submarine near Sal Island in the Cape Verdes.

The crew, including some wounded, was reported to have reached the island. The Portuguese sloop Goncalves Zarco left Sao Vicente, Cape Verde Islands, to rescue them.

Italian Ship's Wreckage Found

BELGRADE, Jan. 7 (AP).—Wreckage from the Italian steamship Genova, including 500 barrels of naphtha, were found today off the Yugoslav port of Bar, and the bodies of an Italian soldier and two seamen were washed ashore at Dubrovnik. Two Italian transports were reported sunk en route from Italy to Albania on Jan. 3 by British or Greek warships, it was recalled.

BORDER FIGHTS, TOKYO MOVES STIR INDO-CHINA

Hanoi Seen As Determined To Oppose Aggression By Thailand

Japanese - French Incidents Frequent — Roosevelt Talk Held Encouraging

[By the Associated Press]

Hanoi, French Indo-China, Jan. 7—Representatives of kingdoms and provinces which compose this French colony are meeting currently at the Government Palace to consider a situation made precarious by border fighting with Thailand and increasing Japanese pressure in the north.

Many of the delegates heard President Roosevelt's message to the United States Congress, which was regarded as encouraging.

Among tofficials and populace, however, apprehension for the future was increasing visibly.

Occupation Believed Permanent

Frequent Japanese-French incidents are occurring at Hanoi and Haiphong. The Japanese no longer are concealing their intention to make their occupation permanent, despite the fact that hey forced heir way ino the colony on the pretext of using it as a temporary base for military operations against China.

Road markers in Japanese have been posted on the Haiphong-Hanoi hihgway; special Japanese telephone lines link the Japanese-held airports of the two cities, and the Japanese have bought much building material for barracks.

Numerous Japanese civilians are arriving every week at Haiphong and Saigon, where Japanese band concerts are held periodically.

The Yokohama Specie Bank has begun operations at Haiphong.

Authorities expressed concern over such disturbances as that of Sunday, when they said Japanese soldiers attempted to pass the guardhouse at Fort Hanoi and clashed with French guards, wounding one.

Although the French appeared powerless to check the Japanese penetration, they were pictured as determined to oppose Thai aggression. Two new Thai raids on border cities and the killing of a French captain were reported here today. There were unconfirmed reports that 200 pilots and some planes were en route aboard French ships to bolster Indo-China's defenses.

Singapore Push Possible

Military observers in Shanghai expressed the belief that general hostilities between Indo-China and Thailand might offer an excuse for Japanese intervention, possibly opening the way for a Japanese push toward Singapore and the Netherlands East Indies.

Indo-China Invasion By Siamese Reported

[By the Associated Press]

Shanghai, Jan. 7 — Reports from Bangkok that Thai (Siames forces had grossed the Mekong river to invade French Indo-China today seemingly brought that border war to a more critical stage. Military observers here expressed belief that the possibility of Japanese intervention was becoming stronger.

Private advices from Hanoi, Indo-China's capital, said that the bulk of the Indo-Chinese army, estimated at 9,000 French troops and 70,000 natives, was mobilized along the Thai border, supported by 150 aircraft.

Authorities of Indo-China were apparently devoting their attention to Japanese forces, now firmly established in northern points of the French colony. There was widespread feeling that general hostilities in the border conflict might offer an excuse for a Japanese invasion of Indo-China which might possibly open the way for a southward thrust toward Singapore and the Dutch East Indies.

Present Japanese forces in the neighborhood of Hanoi were estimated at 6,000, with approximately 150 aircraft. The Japanese are rapidly expanding airfields in the Hanoi and Haiphong area.

CLASH IN INDO-CHINA

French Soldier Is Killed in Fight With Japanese.

Hanoi, Indo-China, Jan. 7 (A. P.). — French authorities expressed concern today over a clash between Japanese and French troops at the entrance to Fort Hanoi Sunday, in which one of the latter was said to have been severely wounded.

The skirmish, which brought to a climax a week of disturbances, occurred when twenty Japanese soldiers attempted to pass the guardhouse and were opposed by six French soldiers, officials said. They charged the Japanese apparently were making no attempt to curb their troops to avoid incidents.

It was disclosed the Japanese Vice-Minister of War would arrive in Hanoi this afternoon by plane, but the purpose of the visit was not announced.

Italy Is Represented at Naval Review, Not U. S. or Britain

SHANGHAI, Jan. 7 (AP).—American naval and marine officers received invitations too late to attend the annual Japanese naval review held today in Hongkew, Japanese-controlled section of the International Settlement. The invitations arrived after the ceremonies were completed.

British officers also were absent, apparently for the same reason, but Italian and French attaches witnessed the display of force, which included a parade of 3,000 Japanese marines and mechanized units.

Searching Of Japanese At Bermuda Protested

[By the Associated Press]

Tokyo, Jan. 7—Japan has made a strong protest to Britain against the detention and searching of Japanese transatlantic travelers at Bermuda, the Government announced today.

The protest was delivered by Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka to the British Ambassador, Sir Robert Leslie Craigie. An official statement said it declared that action taken by British authorities at Bermuda was clearly an abuse of belligerent rights, infringing the legitimate rights of free movement of the subjects of Japan, a neutral country.

(Nine Japanese passengers aboard the United States liner Excalibur reported upon landing at Lisbon, Portugal, Saturday that they were held five hours in their cabins by British contraband control officers who, they said, confiscated cash and travelers checks.)

Asks Prompt Action

In an hour interview, Matsuoka demanded that the British Government "promptly take satisfactory steps for settlement of the case," the official statement said.

Authoritative quarters said Sir Robert originally requested the interview to protest himself against the alleged flying of Japanese colors by German raiders in the South Pacific. (Survivors of seven sunken vessels reaching Australia last week said their ships were attacked by a German raider flying the Japanese flag and bearing a Japanese name.)

Matsuoka listened to the Ambassador's protest, then presented his own. Replying orally to Matsuoka, Sir Robert was said to have cited cases in China in which the British claim their rights have been infringed.

Navicerts' Use Criticized

(A Domei, Japanese news agency, broadcast from Tokyo quoted reliable informants to the effect that Japan also had decided on "effective retaliation" against Britain's "unreasonable" use of navicerts—a system whereby certificates of navigation are issued by the British and the holders are given clear sailing by the British navy.

(Without stipulating just what retaliatory steps Japan might take, Domei said the Government's decision was based on the contention that the use of navicerts constitutes a violation of international law. The news agency said protests would be lodged every time the British apply them to Japanese ships.)

NAVY EXPECTS 4000 PLANES IN '41 OUTPUT

Admiral Towers Lays Some Figures on Delivery Before House Group.

ADMITS HE'S NOT SATISFIED

But Says All That Is Possible Is Being Done—Puts Blame on Shortage of Tools.

Washington, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Rear Admiral John H. Towers told Congress today that despite delays and bottlenecks the navy expected to add about 4,000 airplanes to its fleet this year.

The chief of naval aviation, testifying at the opening of an investigation of the navy's shipbuilding and aircraft programs by the House Naval Committee, disclosed that the number the navy expected to receive this month was about 334—about double that of December.

In response to questions by Representative Vinson, Democrat, of Georgia, the committee chairman, Admiral Towers said that while he was "of course not satisfied" with the present output, he felt that everything possible was being done to remedy the situation.

2,500 on Hand January 1.

Discussing delivery schedules which he said had not been maintained, the Admiral told the committee that among the reasons were shortage of machine tools and, toolmakers and failure of some sub-contractors to fulfill their obligations to prime contractors.

The Admiral said that on January 1, the navy had 2,590 planes on hand and expected to add about 4,000 during the next twelve months. About 300 would have to be deducted, he said, to compensate for anticipated losses due to crashes and other causes.

Comparing the future schedule with deliveries of the last three months, Admiral Towers said the navy received an even 100 planes last October, 119 in November and 171 in December.

The estimated monthly deliveries for this year follow:

January 334; February 263; March 299; April 334; May 393; June 372; July 352; August 365; September 365; October 329; November 275; December 299.

Representative Maas, Republican, of Minnesota, asked Admiral Towers whether labor unrest or strikes had been a serious factor in delaying production.

The Admiral replied that strikes had not seriously affected the program, but continued:

"I do think that in many factories small groups of workers are restless."

No Delay Due to Fifth Column.

Representative Mott, Republican, of Oregon inquired as to whether "Fifth Column" activities were responsible for any of the delays and towers, after a pause, replied "No."

"There have been cases which, at first glance, looked like sabotage," he said, "but which proved not to be on careful investigation."

He said "carelessness," which was to be expected because supervisory forces in the factories were abnormally spread out, was responsible for most such cases.

Asked by Mr. Maas how many naval planes were modern in every sense, including self-sealing gas tanks, Admiral Towers replied: "Very few. Only the latest fighters are complete."

Some planes have been sent back to the factories for modernization, he said, adding that such work did not leave them "completely modern."

Toward the close of the session, the Admiral told the committee the navy would recommend a change in the Walsh-Healey act which, he said in response to questions, had impelled some manufacturers to refuse to bid on navy contracts. The act sets up certain labor standards for plants getting Government contracts.

Some Contracts Awarded.

Contracts totaling $2,094,678 for expansion of plant facilities for the manufacture of aircraft engine parts were announced by the Navy Department today. The largest contract, $1,669,678, went to the Ex-Cell-O Corporation of Detroit.

The Navy Department also announced today that a contract for $1,216,000 had been signed with the Bonn Aluminum & Brass Corporation for expansion of facilities for manufacturing parts for airplane engines in Detroit.

The navy did not disclise the date for starting the plant expansion.

SEES NAZIS IN HAITI

Senator O'Mahoney Says Fifth Column Is There.

Washington, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Senator O'Mahoney, Democrat, of Wyoming, said today that he had been convinced on a recent visit to Haiti that German agents were using that West Indies country as a base for infiltration into the United States and Latin America.

"There is no question that there are fifth column activities in Haiti," Senator O'Mahoney told reporters. "German agents are sitting around there scheming to get into this country."

Responsible persons in Haiti, Senator O'Mahoney said, had told him such activities had shown marked increase recently. They cited cases, he related, of German visitors with large bank accounts and no apparent means of livelihood.

U. S. Punishes Aid Committee

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 7—The State Department disclosed today that it had revoked the license of the United American-Spanish Aid Committee to collect funds in the United States for [illegible] belligerent countries.

The revocation, effective December 15, did not apply, officials said, to those activities of the committee relating to refugee and resettlement work over which the State Department has no supervision.

A project of the committee apparently unaffected by the license revocation was the American Rescue Ship Mission, in connection with which Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and some other prominent persons were reported by New York newspapers to have resigned as sponsors.

The announced object of the Rescue Ship Mission was to raise $300,000 with which to charter a ship and transfer Spanish Republican refugees from France to Mexico.

The State Department said the committee's license was revoked for "failure to comply with rules and regulations."

2 German Technicians Cancel Passages Home

Were Booked To Sail Via Japan Today—Number Giving Up Bookings Brought To 7

San Francisco, Jan. 7 (AP)—Reservations of two more German technicians, booked to sail for home via Japan tomorrow on the Japanese liner Tatuta Maru, were canceled today, bringing to seven the number giving up passage.

Spokesmen for the Nippon Yusen Kaisha Steamship Line, operators of the vessel, said orders to cancel the passage came from the Japanese consulate general.

No specific reason for the order could be learned. British authorities recently announced they would waive no rights to take off such passengers on the high seas as war prisoners. Among twenty-five other Germans who have accommodations on the liner is 18-year-old Karl Scheuring, University of Denver student, who has been ordered out of the country by the Justice Department.

War Speeds Copper Exports To Russia

Washington, Jan. 7 (AP)—Refined copper exports to Russia jumped from nothing just before the European war began in September, 1939, to the third largest amount sold abroad last year from the United States.

This was reported today by the Bureau of Mines, which said copper exports to Russia totaled 108,955,900 pounds in 1940 and were topped only by 225,065,811 pounds sold to Japan and 137,937,735 sent to the United Kingdom.

Exports of refined copper to Germany and to countries under her dominion have ceased.

$98,000,000 Health Plan Being Prepared

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 7—A comprehensive proposal for an expanded national health program in line with President Roosevelt's call for widened "opportunities for adequate medical care," was being prepared today for introduction in Congress.

Senator Robert F. Wagner (Dem., N. Y.) said the plan which he and others would sponsor provided for Federal and State cooperation in the broad program calculated to cost $98,000,000 in the first year.

Similar legislation was approved last session by the Senate Education and Labor Committee, but never reached a vote in the Senate.

"Already Getting Hospitals"

Mr. Roosevelt said in his message to Congress yesterday that the widening of opportunities for medical care was one of the many subjects connected with our social economy that called for "immediate improvement."

Wagner, who conferred with the President yesterday before the message was delivered, said it was likely that an expansion of health facilities could be worked out in connection with the defense program.

"We already are getting a lot of the hospitals that we were aiming at in the original bill," he pointed out. "They are being built now by the Government to take care of the boys who are in training camps, so at least a part of the program has become effective."

The Tentative Program

As tentatively outlined, the general health program would call for cooperation between the Federal and State governments in construction of hospitals, payment of compensation for disability wage losses, and expansion of maternal, infant, child health and welfare service, general public health services and general medical care.

The bill would contemplate a Federal contribution of $35,000,000 in the first year toward the operation of approved State plans for medical care.

Eight Devil's Island Fugitives Are Deported From Florida

Protest That They Will Be Shot If Taken To Martinique—Want To Aid De Gaulle

[By the Associated Press]

Miami, Fla., Jan. 7—Protesting that they probably would be shot, eight escapees from the Devil's Island penal colony were placed aboard a coast guard cutter today for deportation to Vichy-controlled Martinique.

One man, Luis Jeay, 34, was carried aboard after being given a sedative to quiet his nerves.

W. B. Thomas, immigration inspector, said Jeay had been on a hunger strike.

Would Fight For Allies

The men had hoped to the last minute that they would be allowed to join Gen. Charles de Galle's Free French forces to fight on the Allied side. Thomas said Jacques de Sieyes, of New York, de Gaulle's United States representative, told him yesterday the Attorney General's office had consented for the prisoners to be placed in his custody.

Receiving no official confirmation today, Thomas followed his instructions to deport the men on the cutter Unalga, which will stop at Puerto Rico and take aboard other escapees on the way to Martinique.

Arrived In August

The eight men arrived here in a small boat last August 24 after making their way from the French penal colony off the northeast coast of South America.

"We will escape again, if we don't get shot," one of them said before boarding the Unalga, "and go to London itself if necessary."

ANTI-JEWISH BUND CHARGES UPHELD

Indictments Lay Race Hate Promotion To Kunze And Eight Associates

Sentence Is Set For January 31 Before New Jersey Rural Judge

[By the Associated Press]

Newton, N. J., Jan. 7—Wilhelm Kunze, national German-American Bund leader, and eight associates today were ordered to appear for sentence before Judge John C. Losey, of the Sussex County Court, who upheld indictments charging them with "promoting race hatred against people of the Jewish religion."

John Winans, attorney for the nine, immediately announced he would carry on the fight. He was expected to appeal after the rural jurist passes sentence, set for January 31, under statutes permitting prison terms of three years and fines of $5,000 each.

Facts Admitted

In demurrers filed by Winans, the defendants had admitted the facts set forth in the indictments, but had contended they were insufficient to justify prosecution and that the laws under which they were brought, New Jersey's 1935 "race hatred" statutes, were unconstitutional.

Judge Losey rejected both arguments.

The indictments were returned last October as the result of a rally at the Bund's Camp Nordland, in Andover township.

"The right of free speech is not an absolute license to publish, print or speak anything one pleases," Judge Losey said.

Other Defendants

Besides Kunze, who lives in New York, the men are August Klapprott, of Andover, the Bund's Eastern leader; Matthias Kohler, of Irvington, State Bund treasurer; Leonard D. Clark, of New York, writer for the Bund magazine, Free America; the Rev. John C. Fitting, of Union City, State Bund secretary; Richard Schiele and Paul Schaerschmidt, of Paterson; Carl Schipphorst, of Glen Rock, and George Neuppert, of Cliffside Park, trustees of Camp Nordland.

Klapprott, Kohler and Clark were charged with making anti-Jewish speeches; the others, with permitting them.

Wheat and Corn Arriving in Spain

Madrid, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—Much needed wheat and corn from Argentina have begun to arrive in Spain, it was learned today, with 7,500 tons of the grains being unloaded in the last few days.

The wheat shortage in Spain became so acute that a stringent bread rationing plan was announced in December. Reductions of planting during the civil war, unfavorable weather and curtailment of ordinary imports were blamed.

Russia's Oil Yield Is Under Quota

Moscow, Jan. 7 (A. P.).—The Government organ Izvestia announced today that Russian oil production in 1940 fell short of the year's plan, although it exceeded the 1939 output. Figures were not given.

The newspaper cited the Kazakhstan, Bashkir and Maikop oil trusts as among those failing to fulfill their quotas. Urging that 1941 plans be realized, Izvestia declared: "The need for oil is growing constantly, along with the progress of our country. We need much oil to satisfy current needs of industry, agriculture, the army and the fleet."

Mr. Smetanin was one of the first of the Alexez Stakhanoff workers (marked for special efficiency) and had risen quickly to high government office.

The council also relieved A. M. Redkin of his post as first Vice Commissar for Shipbuilding and made him a member of the Council of Defe[illegible] Industries.

'Viva Hitler' Shouts Interrupt Chile Debut Of Chaplin Film

Tear-Gas Bombs Thrown Into Theater Showing "The Great Dictator"—Hecklers Expelled

[By the Associated Press]

Santiago, Chile, Jan. 7 — The Chilean premiere of Charlie Chaplin's "The Great Dictator" was interrupted today by a group who threw tear-gas bombs into the Santa Lucia Theater and chorused "Viva Hitler!" as they were dispersed by armed police.

When calm was restored, the audience sang the Chilean national anthem and the showing was resumed.

Two persons were injured slightly inside the theater, which is but a block from the Italian Embassy.

The theater was surrounded by demonstrators after the counselor of the German embassy had made unsuccessful representations to the Foreign Office against the showing of the film.

When ambulances pulled up before the theater the demonstrators still were shouting:

"Viva Mussolini! Viva Hitler! Death to the Jews!"

Canceled In Mexico

Mexico City, Jan. 7 (AP)—Producers and distributors of the Italian propaganda movie "Scipio Africanus" agreed today to cancel scheduled showings throughout Mexico.

A strike called by the Motion Picture Operators' Union against the management of a local theater where "Scipio Africanus" was to have been shown was settled today by an agreement on wage-and-hour demands.

The union had asserted that calling of the walkout the day the Italian film had been scheduled to open was a coincidence.

U. S. Is In War 'InFact,' Mexican Paper Says

Organ Warns Native Political Leaders Not To Be Yesmen To Washington

Mexico City, Jan. 7 (AP)—The newspaper Ultimas Noticias, in an editorial saying the United States "in fact" had already entered the European war, today urged Mexican political leaders not to assume a "yes-man" attitude in their relations with Washington.

The paper said the United States had gone into the war by the modern custom of not declaring it.

"Compared with the military strength of our friend in Washington, ours is next to nothing," the paper said. "However, with the moral support of 20,000 Mexicans, if governed by intelligent and self-respecting statesmen, we can enact our own laws, regardless of neighboring arsenals."

Vitamin Pills

Hamilton, Bermuda, Jan. 7 (AP). The Colonial Secretary's office acknowledged tonight that a tin containing vitamin units was confiscated yesterday from Mme. Elsa Schiaparelli, fashion designer, who is en route to France.

The Colonial Secretary said that the articles seized were "contraband."

Texts of Day's War Communiques

British

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 7 (AP)—British headquarters issued this communiqué today:

Libya: Operations toward Tobruk are proceeding satisfactorily.

Sudan: East of Gallabat our patrols again inflicted casualties on the enemy.

Kenya: No change.

The Royal Air Force communiqué at Cairo said today:

Further raids were carried out at Tobruk yesterday by aircraft of the R. A. F. Bombs fell on the foreshore and on military objectives in the town, but full details of the damage could not be observed.

Derna and Martuba also were raided with success.

In the Tobruk region a CR-42 was shot down and another enemy fighter probably destroyed. Other enemy aircraft were damaged.

The enemy airdrome for Tobruk (El Adem) had been evacuated by the Italians and forty aircraft in unserviceable condition owing to R. A. F. bombing have been captured by our troops.

A later communiqué on bombings said:

Tripoli was again raided heavily by bomber aircraft of the Royal Air Force on the night of Jan. 6-7. Several tons of bombs were dropped among motor vessels in the center of the harbor, causing a series of explosions and clouds of smoke.

One direct hit was registered amidships on a large motor vessel and was followed by explosions. Several cargo ships were probably hit.

Fires were caused among the customs buildings and wharves. The power station was bombarded and much damage caused. All our aircraft returned safely.

A further raid was carried out on Tobruk by our heavy bombers. Widespread fires were caused which were visible from thirty miles away among barracks, stores, sheds and motor transport concentrations. Our aircraft returned without loss to their bases.

CAIRO, Jan. 7 (UP)—A special communiqué of British Middle East general headquarters said today:

During the operations at Bardia three Blackshirt commanders deserted their troops, leaving regular commanders to fight on.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 7 (AP)—The Italian High Command today issued the following communiqué:

The last strongholds that were still resisting at Bardia fell toward evening on Jan. 5.

Our troops for twenty-five days wrote sublime pages of courage and inflicted heavy losses on the enemy. Heavy also were our losses in material and men—fallen, wounded and missing.

During an enemy raid on Tobruk two enemy planes were shot down in flames by our naval anti-aircraft artillery.

On the Greek front, with a successful raid of ours we gained possession of an important position. Automatic guns and munitions abandoned by the enemy fell into our hands.

We captured several prisoners in a favorable clash of patrols.

Enemy planes attacked one of our bases. A Blenheim was shot down by our anti-aircraft defenses.

A formation of fighter planes during a cruise clashed with enemy planes, shooting down three. Another formation of our planes, despite unfavorable weather, bombed an important enemy objective. All our planes returned.

In East Africa, in the Tessenei zone on the Sudanese border, enemy mechanized forces were put to flight by our artillery fire.

On the remainder of the front there were patrol and artillery actions.

ATHENS, Jan. 7 (AP)—A Royal Air Force communiqué said today:

Valona again was attacked by R. A. F. bomber formations. The raid was carried out in bad weather conditions, rain and low clouds being met near the targets.

Bombs were seen to burst on buildings and warehouses, also in the vicinity of harbor jetties. Several fires were burning fiercely as the formation turned away.

Anti-aircraft fire was intense and enemy fighters were active. A CR-42 plane broke off an engagement with smoke coming from the engine and a monoplane fighter dived toward the sea without guns having been fired. One of our aircraft has failed to return to its base.

LONDON, Jan. 7 (AP)—The Air Ministry issued the following communiqué today:

During yesterday, Blenheim aircraft of the coastal command attacked three enemy merchant vessels off the coast of Norway and badly damaged one of them.

Blenheims of the bomber command also attacked enemy tankers off the Dutch coast, and one of our aircraft scored a direct hit on the bow of an enemy tanker of about 5,000 tons.

A joint British Air and Home Security Ministries communiqué said today:

Bombs have been dropped at a number of places today.

An enemy seaplane today machine-gunned a small fishing boat near an island in the Aegean sea. One fisherman was killed.

According to supplementary reports from competent police authorities, one more Greek has been taken as a hostage from Philiates [in Greece, near the Albanian border] by the Italians.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 7 (AP)—The German High Command today issued this communiqué:

In the course of armed reconnaissance flights, despite unfavorable weather, vital war objectives in Central and Southern England were attacked, some of them from low altitudes. At one airport we succeeded in severely damaging a number of bombers on the ground.

Combat planes bombarded and machine-gunned rail facilities from low altitudes and scored several well-aimed hits in a chemical factory and ball-bearing factory. Individual planes bombed London in several flights. In the course of this action seven barrage balloons were shot down blazing.

The army's long-range batteries yesterday evening put an enemy vessel approaching the French coast under effective fire.

The enemy last night failed to enter Reich territory. One plane failed to return from a flight against the enemy.

Naval Requirements May Lead Britain to Seek Active War Support

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

Should there be any crisis which would impel Britain to appeal to the United States to join in the war, it is likely to come within the next few months, so it seems to me, and will be based on the need of naval assistance.

I have in mind specifically Hitler's projected invasion of England. That must remain the gravest threat to Britain, and therefore the number one military operation of the war, until the question of its feasibility has been settled once and for all under the chalk cliffs of Dover, or the attempt has been abandoned.

If the assault is made it will call for a great fleet to repel it. That engagement, fought over and on and under a seething English Channel, and up against the beaches of both shores, bids fair to be the most colossal thing of its kind in history.

The British will need every man of war, and every second cousin to a man of war, on which they can lay their hands. They believe they can defeat the attempt, and so do most neutral experts, for Hitler will be making a long-shot.

Diversion May Be Forced.

Still, circumstances might be such as to necessitate the use of an unusual number of warships elsewhere to meet an emergency. It is possible, for instance, that Hitler might use the army he has massed in the Balkans in an effort to force the Dardanelles and thereby create a diversion which would demand British seapower, and plenty of it.

Such a situation might result in an appeal to America for naval help.

However, it is equally possible that the allied successes in the Mediterranean will prove so profitable as to release both naval and air forces for the defense of the British Isles. In any event, if Britain can handle that crisis—and it might come at any time—she likely will be able to weather the rest of the war storm, with the material aid from our arsenal of democracy. As President Roosevelt pointed out in his message to Congress, she doesn't need manpower.

In saying this we mustn't, of course, overlook the danger which the Nazi submarine campaign has created for Britain. Much of her trouble is due to lack of sufficient warships for convoys.

Pacific Threat Stressed.

Still, one would expect her to solve that difficulty without asking any one actually to enter the war to help her out. The Admiralty announced today that in the week ended December 30 only 37,556 tons of shipping was lost—about half the average weekly loss since the war started.

Fear that the United States might use its navy to aid Britain has had the Axis on tenterhooks for months. Italy in particular has been issuing warnings to Washington to keep hands off, and has been holding up the bugbear of trouble for us with Japan.

Typical of these threats was one by Mario Appelius, authoritative Fascist commentator. Writing in Mussolini's newspaper Il Popolo d' Italia he declared that Japan was preparing to attack Singapore in event the United States entered the war. He warned America that she would face the combined forces of the German, Italian and Japanese empires—20,000,000 soldiers, 2,000,000 tons of warships and from 25,000 to 30,000 warplanes.

The object of such tub-thumping is, of course, to create the idea of a threat to us in the Pacific and thereby prevent us from making any commitment which would call for the use of the fleet in the Atlantic.

Grand Jury Calls Davis

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 7—William Rhodes Davis, international oil operator reported to have presented to the State Department in 1939 an "agenda" for peace in the European war, was summoned today to appear on Thursday before a special District grand jury investigating contributions and expenditures in the fall election campaigns.

The summons was announced by Maurice M. Milligan, special assistant to the Attorney General, and William S. Tarver, Assistant United States Attorney. Neither would say why Davis was called or what aspect of campaign financing he would be asked about.

Senate Inquiry

Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Dem., Mont.) announced yesterday that Davis would be permitted to appear soon before a Senate subcommittee, headed by Wheeler, to testify about charges by Senator Josh Lee (Dem., Okla.) that the reported peace "agenda" really was an effort by Davis to obtain a "phony" peace to "pull Nazi Germany's chestnuts out of the fire."

Lee issued a statement on Davis last week after Verne Marshall, head of the No Foreign War Committee, reported that Davis had brought the "agenda" here but declined to say in what European capital it originated.

Davis requested the hearing of Wheeler, saying charges that he had been working for peace on "Hitler's terms" are "false."

NEW YORK, JAN. 7-(AP)-VERNE MARSHALL, CHAIRMAN OF THE NO FOREIGN WAR COMMITTEE, ASSERTED TODAY THAT IF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WAS SEEKING TO "EMBARRASS" W.R.DAVIS BY CALLING HIM BEFORE A GRAND JURY IN WASHINGTON, "THEN DEMOCRACY IS IN A MORE SERIOUS DANGER THAN EVEN PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT REALIZES."

HE SUGGESTED THAT DAVIS BE QUESTIONED CONCERNING HIS CONTACTS WITH PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT PRIOR TO THE 1932 DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION WHEN MR.ROOSEVELT WAS GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK AND ALSO REGARDING THE SUPPORT HE SAID DAVIS GAVE MR.ROOSEVELT IN THE 1936 CAMPAIGN.

1942 DEFENSE BUDGET $17,485,528,049; FUNDS FOR BRITISH TO BE SOUGHT LATER; U. S. SETTING UP THREE NAVAL FLEETS

Budget Lists No Provisions For Allied Aid

The full text of President Roosevelt's budget message to the Congress will be found on Page 13.

BY IRVING PERLMETER

WASHINGTON—(AP)—President Roosevelt asked Congress today for $17,485,528,049 in an unprecented peace-time budget reflecting "a world at war" and the huge cost of preparing "for total defense."

Mr. Roosevelt alloted $10,811,314,600 of his 1942 budget exclusively to national defense, estimated the deficit for the year beginning July 1 at $9,210,093,049 and foretold a public debt pushed by that deficit to a record $58,367,065,056 by June 30, 1942.

The budget made no provisions for the cost of aid to Britain, Greece and China—an extensive program to be covered in subsequent appropriations request. Congressional leaders said that the overall cost of this alone might eventually total $10,000,000,000, but were uncertain on how great the actual cash outlay would have to be for the first year.

Like World War Budgets

Irrespective of these future aid requests, nothing in Treasury history compared with the huge figures presented to the Senate and House since the last year of the World war when spending reached $18,522,890,000 and the deficit $13,370,638,000.

"A wry turn of fate places this burden of defense on the backs of a peace-loving people," the President said of the budget which was read by clerks.

But, Mr. Roosevelt continued, even these big sums—62 percent of them earmarked for defense—were only a "forecast of things to come. x x x No one can predict the ultimate cost of a program that is still in development."

The sole guiding "marker" down the road, he added, was " a command to defend our democratic way of life."

In line with the assertion of his annual message that the nation put "patriotism ahead of pocketbooks" in helping defray defense costs, the Chief Executive called for increased taxation, but made no specific recommendations.

Counting today's recommendations, the President estimated that since June, 1940, defense appropriations, authorizations and requests aggregated $28,480,000,000.

Production Limited

The only reason today's requests were not higher, he told reporters, was industry's apparent inability to produce any more weapons than had been budgeted.

In this connection, however, Mr. Roosevelt projected a $3,000,000,000 program of factory construction to increase industrial defense capacity —mostly privately financed—and said the budget still might be boosted if some of these new factories could get in production quickly enough.

Tax revenues, he said, would reach the highest point in American history at $8,275,435,000 in the 1942 fiscal period, but Congress should enact more—deciding itself the types and amounts of the new levies.

National income, the President predicted, also would rise to a new record of about $87,000,000,000 in the fiscal year—exceeding 1929 by $7,000,000,000—and thereby would produce the greater tax yields.

Turning to non-defense costs, which he cut $600,000,000 from the 1941 totals, the Chief Executive explained the absence of deeper reductions in these words:

"Democracy as a way of life is equally at stake.x x xonly by maintaining these activities (relief, social security, regular government activities, etc.,) can we claim the effective use of resources which our democratic system is expected to yield, and thus justify the expenditures required for its defense."

Summarizes Program

Summarizing the $28,480,000 defense program, undertaken since last June, the President said it included $13,704,000,000 to multiply the Army nearly six times (from 250,000 to 1,400,000) and equip it with the "most modern devices of motorized and mechanical warfare"; $11, 587,000,000 to double the Navy; $1,902,000,000 (of federal money plus other private billions) to help expand factories to produce airplanes at an eventual 50,000 a year pace and to make other weapons; and $1,287,000,000 for such other defense activities as power projects and FBI surveillance or saboteurs.

Of the $10,811,314,600 allotted by the President for defense in the next fiscal year, $3,447,394,000 went to the Navy, $5,956,600,600 to the Army, $407,320,000 to scattered agencies including the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and $1,000,000,000 was left blank for future allotment.

Mr. Roosevelt visualized a program necessitating the sale of government securities on a scale possibly rivaling the World war days when "Four Minute Speakers" interrupted theater programs to sell Liberty bonds.

Failure of financially able persons to buy bonds, he told reporters, might, in fact, be considered unpatriotic.

In A Nutshell

SPENDING—$17,485,528,049 in fiscal year beginning July 1; $13,202,370,970 in current fiscal year.

DEFENSE—$10,811,314,600 next year; $6,463,923,900 this.

AID TO BRITAIN AND OTHER DEMOCRACIES—All extra, amount undetermined.

REVENUES—$8,275,435,000 next year; $7,012,930,000 this.

PUBLIC DEBT—Now $45,000,000,000; on June 30, 1941, $49,156,972,007; on June 30, 1942, $58,367,065,056.

DEFENSE SUMMARY—Appropriations, authorizations and recommendations since June, 1940, and including today's requests, $28,480,000,000, including $13,704,000,000 for army, $11,587,000,000 for navy, $1,902,000,000 for expansion of industrial plants, and $1,287,000,000 for anti-sabotage and other defense activities.

NON-DEFENSE COSTS—$6,674,000,000 next fiscal year, reduced from $7,078,000,000 this year. Increases for debt interest, social security and National Youth Administration; decreases for relief, agricultural aid, public works.

TAXES—President asked more taxes, but left types and amounts to Congress. Said rise in national income to highest levels in history, expected next fiscal year, also would produce more revenue from existing taxes.

U. S. Fleet Reorganized, 42,000 Men to Be Added

Secretary Knox Names New Commander In Chief and Creates Three Main Divisions

JAN 10

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Reorganization of the United States Navy into three main fleets — the Atlantic, Pacific and Asiatic fleets — was ordered today by Secretary Knox who announced at the same time that President Roosevelt had authorized an increase of 42,000 in naval manpower.

The reorganization, which Knox said "really fits the facts," will become effective Feb. 1 and a new set of commanders, headed by Rear Admiral Husband E. Kimmel as commander-in-chief of all fleets, will assume authority on that day.

Kimmel, present commander of battleforce cruisers, also becomes chief of the Pacific fleet, succeeding Admiral James O. Richardson, who will go on undisclosed duty.

The changes will raise the status of the present Atlantic patrol force and the Asiatic squadron to that of fleets. Knox described the future Atlantic fleet as consisting of the approximately 125 ships now in the patrol force, the Asiatic fleet as the squadron now based in Asiatic waters, and the Pacific fleet as the fleet now based at Hawaii.

More Men Needed

The President's authorization of an increase in the Navy's enlisted personnel, Knox said, was designed "to take care of the expanding fleet" so that new ships may be given crews at 100 percent of war strength as fast as the ships are commissioned.

Knox disclosed the presidential action and his own orders at a press conference at which he also was asked about the possibility of making additional United States destroyers available to the British.

"I don't think any more destroyers can be detached from our fleet without seriously impairing its efficiency," he declared.

He added, however, that the final decision was not up to him.

Knox disclosed that the Navy planned to ask Congress shortly for authority to build 280 auxiliary vessels, such as submarine chasers, mine sweepers, and patrol boats.

The new commander-in-chief of the fleets is a native of Henderson, Ky. At present he commands the cruisers of the United States battleforce.

Rear Admiral Ernest J. King will continue as commander of the forces in the Atlantic and Admiral Thomas C. Hart wil continue to command the Asiatic forces.

Asked whether the Navy intended to increase the strength of the Asiatic fleet, Knox replied: "Not at the present time." He also said no change was being made at this time in the size of the Atlantic force.

In response to another question, the Secretary said it was planned to hold fleet maneuvers in the Pacific this spring but that this plan was subject to change without notice.

Plan Discarded

In connection with announcement of the plan to man new ships at full war strength, Knox said a previous plan to bring crew strength on existing ships to 115 percent of war strength in order to train men for vessels commissioned later had been discarded.

The 42,000-man increase authorized by the President will raise the Navy's manpower to 232,000, including regulars and reserves on active duty.

On the question of aiding the British, Knox declined to express any personal opinion as to what might be done. There was some speculation that the proposed construction of naval auxiliaries might enable the Navy to release some of its present vessels.

Knox was asked whether this government had reached an agreement with authorities at Britain's Caribbean island of Trinidad concerning the location of United States defenses there. He said the situation looked "promising" but he could not announce a settlement.

Actual construction had not yet been started on all of the base sites being acquired from the British, he reported.

Other changes in assignments of flag officers announced by Knox to become effective about Feb. 1 included:

Rear Admiral Wilson Brown, superintendent of the Naval academy at Annapolis, will become commander of the scouting force of the Pacific fleet in place of Vice Admiral Adolphus Andrews who will become commandant of the Third Naval district and navy yard, New York.

Rear Admiral Walter S. Anderson, director of naval intelligence, will become commander of battleships, battle force and Battleship Division 4, in place of Vice Admiral William S. Pye, who has been assigned to duty with the General board of the Navy department.

Rear Admiral Isaac C. Kidd, at present chief of staff and aide, commander, battleships battle force, will become commander of Battleship Division 1, succeeding Rear Admiral Russell Wilson, who will become superintendent of the Naval academy.

Food Ship Sails This Month to Spain, France

Red Cross to Send Cargo of Milk, Flour, Clothing Following British Assent

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8 (AP).—Plans for limited food relief in unoccupied France and Spain were announced by the American Red Cross today after the British government agreed to permit the supplies to pass through the blockade.

The first relief ship will sail late this month, the Red Cross said, with canned milk, children's clothing and vitamin concentrates for unoccupied France and a consignment of flour and milk for Spain.

In addition, at the suggestion of President Roosevelt, the Red Cross has offered a cargo of wheat or flour to Generalissimo Francisco Franco of Spain to "meet the most immediate needs of the civilian population."

The announcement followed long negotiations with Britain, France and Spain and presaged a long-range program of limited relief, especially for women and children, in unoccupied France and Spain, subject to co-operation of those countries and their future relations with the Axis powers.

Spain Must Stay Neutral

Spain's continued non-belligerency was understood to be one of the chief requirements in connection with the relief plans for that country.

The main political question involved in the case of unoccupied France was said to be the extent of the Vichy government's future collaboration with Germany.

A primary consideration of both the American and British governments was said to be the matter of safeguards against any direct or indirect benefits to the Axis powers from the proposed relief.

The British government, it was stated in London, agreed to a personal request from President Roosevelt to allow certain foods and clothing to pass through the blockade for children in unoccupied France.

British authorities, vitally concerned with Spain's continued non-belligerency, were said reliably to have been ready for some time to allow limited American food supplies to go to that country, but American officials insisted on clearance at the same time for some supplies for French children.

In agreeing, the British prescribed certain conditions, one of which was that the distribution be under the direct supervision of the American Red Cross.

Distribution by Red Cross

Chairman Norman Davis, in announcing the Red Cross plans worked out with President Roosevelt and State Department officials, said the relief shipments to France would be confined to medical supplies, dried or canned milk, children's clothing and certain vitamin concentrates. Distribution, he said, will be handled by the Red Cross direct from its own warehouses, or under strict supervision, to children's hospitals and clinics.

The extent of the program, he said, will depend on "developments and the fulfillment of the general conditions of the agreement."

Chairman Davis said that the situation with reference to children in Spain was "particularly critical". "Indeed, wheat, rye and other cereals are so short as to present not only a menace to the health of the whole population, but in some sections actual famine," Mr. Davis said.

President Roosevelt last year was granted $50,000,000 by Congress for use in foreign civilian relief, and the foodstuffs to be sent will be purchased out of those funds.

Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, emphasized at his press conference that the United States, as a general policy, was interested in assisting in the relief of hungry people in any and all parts of the world from China to Finland and that the State Department's interest in Spain and unoccupied France was to assist in alleviating suffering.

In reply to a question as to whether any specific action had been taken with regard to food for Finland, Secretary Hull said State Department officials were maintaining contact with Finnish officials on that subject.

In answer to questions—based on a report from Lisbon — Mr. Hull again flatly denied that the State Department had at any time ever considered granting Spain a loan of $100,000,000.

Hoover Tells Of Need For Food In France

New York, Jan. 8 (AP)—Former President Herbert Hoover said tonight that a cable received today from a representative of his in France declared that "imports of 30,000,000 bushels of bread grain and 160,000,000 pounds of meats and fats and foods for children would be required to sustain the French population with a modicum of health until the coming harvest."

Hoover, head of the Belgian Relief Commission during the World War, is now serving as honorary chairman of the national committee on food for the five small democracies.

To Survey Belgium

He said in a statement that he had dispatched two relief experts from duties in Poland to conduct an "exhaustive investigation of the food crisis" in Belgium "to make certain that the American public receives a completely accurate report on Belgian conditions and impending needs."

He expressed hope that food relief for Europe would be extended to Norway, Holland, Belgium and Poland, "where supplies will be exhausted before next harvest."

U. S. to Send Food to France

Britain Accedes to Roosevelt Plea to Let Nourishment for Children Pass.

London, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—The British Government has agreed to a personal request from President Roosevelt to allow clothing and foodstuffs for children in unoccupied France to pass through the British blockade, it was disclosed today.

The consent was given with the understanding that the distribution would be under the direct supervision of the American Red Cross.

The decision was declared at the Ministry of Economic Warfare to have in no way altered the British policy of blockading unoccupied France.

More Food for Paris.

Vichy, France, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—The French Government ordered an immediate increase in rations and acceleration of food transport to Paris today to relieve a serious food shortage in the Nazi occupied capital.

An authorized source told the press than France's difficulties were due to the British blockade.

Butchers will be permitted to send unlimited amounts of meat to Paris, it was announced. An immediate increase was ordered for January rations of bread, sugar, dried vegetables, rice, noodles and preserves in Paris.

French Ship to Sail.

Buenos Aires, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Postal authorities announced that the French merchant ship Mendoza, loaded with meat, wool and other products, would sail late today in an attempt to reach France.

British spokesmen insisted that the 8,1999-ton freighter would not be permitted to pass through the British blockade. They noted that two British auxiliary cruisers—the Asturius at Montevideo and the Queen of Bermuda near Rio de Janeiro—might be available to intercept it.

It was learned that the French Government is purchasing 4,000 tons of frozen beef from the Uruguayan Government packing plant, after Argentina firms showed disinclination to sell additional meat in the face of British disapproval.

Two other French merchantmen in port here, the Campana, 10,816 tons and the Formose, 9,975 tons, are being painted in preparation for loading to follow the Mendoza to their German-conquered homeland.

England Warned to Eat British

Learns Only a Minimum of Food Can Be Imported—Ship Off Ireland Blown Up.

London, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Lord Woolton, the Food Minister, warned the British people today that he could "no longer bring the world to our door" and urged them to "eat British." He said that Britons must live primarily on food produced at home, and that imports must be kept to a bare minimum.

Lord Woolton explained that last week's meat shortage, the first experienced in the war, was due to excellent reasons, which include the diversion of some shipments to Libya, scene of the British offensive in North Africa. Speaking to a luncheon audience, he asked: "Would you rather have a little more meat for a week or two, or would you rather have Bardia?"

Farmers Holding Back Meat.

After a virtually meatless week end, Lord Woolton and most Britons felt certain that the condition was only temporary. Contributing to the shortage were transportation difficulties and the fact that less stock is being marketed by the farmers, who have been encouraged officially to keep reserves of meat on the hoof during the winter.

Lord Woolton predicted that a "fortnight of flexibility" would be needed. He conferred with representatives of all branches of the catering trade on how to meet the situation.

Althogh the weekly meat ration has been successively cut from the equivalent of 47 cents worth per person to 39 and finally 32 cents worth, all since December 16, London is now able to supply only about 25 cents worth per person per week. Many families last week end had to dip into canned goods and one Associated Press employee said his family—used to having its Sunday joint—had Sunday dinner out of a can, while last night's entire supply of meat for the seven members was three small sausages.

Raids Continue.

Meanwhile two persons were killed and several were injured, and a number of houses were damaged in an East Anglian town today by a German raider who returned to the assault on England after cold, snowy weather had balked both British and Nazi night operations for the second successive night.

It was the fifth lone-wolf stab at this particular town within twenty-four hours. Two sticks of dynamite were dropped on the working class district when British fighters gave chase to the German.

Additional raiders were reported near Liverpool this afternoon.

One Raider Shot Down.

Angmering-on-Sea, England, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—British fighter planes shot down a German bomber off the Sussex coast in a mid-afternoon battle today.

Channel Fighting Indicated.

A South Coast Town, England, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Persons along the Kent coast heard sounds early today which they judged came from a lively fight between German boats and a British patrol. There was a heavy burst of tracer bullets and machine-gun fire which sounded, shore observers declared, as if German boats attempted some reconnaissance or even tried to slip through the patrol, but were intercepted.

Conditions on the Strait of Dover were ideal for sea reconnaissance. The water was smooth and there was a slight haze.

During the forenoon residents on the coast reported a heavy continuing rumbling from across the channel in the direction of the German invasion ports, giving an impression that naval guns were in action.

BRITISH MEAT RATION IS CUT STILL LOWER

Reduced To Equivalent Of 23 Cents' Worth Per Person Per Week

Food Minister Says Choice Must Be Made Between Victory And Steaks

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 8—The British meat ration, cut only yesterday to the equivalent of 32 cents' worth per person per week, was sharply reduced again tonight—this time to the equivalent of 23 cents' worth—after a virtually meatless week end.

The people were told frankly they must choose between steaks and victories.

Because of the diversion of shipments for war purposes, the Food Ministry said, it will be necessary to vary the ration at short notice in the next few months within the range of about 21 to 32 cents.

It also was learned that an order may soon be issued making it illegal to obtain any two of the following dishes at one meal—fish, meat, poultry, cheese and eggs in the shell. Previously fish and meat at the same meal were taboo.

Report "Luxury" Meals

All this followed an outcry in the press against unrationed "luxury" meals in restaurants.

Special writers, terming the food situation a national scandal, described how they had eaten tremendous meals in swank spots without ration cards and declared "you can have as much food as you want—if you have the money."

Lord Woolton, the Food Minister, warned today that he could "no longer bring the world to our door," and appealed to the public to "eat British."

Speaking before a luncheon audience, the Minister declared that imports must be held to a bare minimum.

Meat At Bardia

Referring to last week's meat shortage—the first of the war—Lord Woolton said it was all caused by "excellent reasons," including the diversion of some supplies to Libya, where British troops still go forward.

"Would you rather have a little more meat for a week or two," he demanded, "or would you rather have Bardia?"—the Italian Libyan base captured by the British last Sunday.

Contributing to the shortage, it was understood, were transportation difficulties and the fact that farmers are officially encouraged to keep reserves of meat on the hoof during the winter. The necessity of feeding tens of thousands of Italian prisoners in Africa also was cited as a factor.

Many Dip Into Cans

Many families in the last week end had to go into stocks of tinned food.

The position was summed up officially as being immediately difficult but—in Lord Woolton's words—showing every sign of improving after "a fortnight of flexibility."

The weekly meat ration has been cut successively since mid-December from the equivalent of 47 cents worth a person.

The typical English family of four can still live this side of poor street on the new meat rationing, food experts said.

Four Suggestions

The Food Ministry offers four suggestions for the most advantageous weekly buying under which, it is stated, four ration cards can be stretched to approximate an American dollar's worth of meat:

1. One and a half pounds of breast of mutton at 14 cents a pound, three pounds brisket of beef at 18 cents a pound, one and one-quarter pounds of ox cheek at 14 cents a pound.
2. Three pounds of silverside beef at 25 cents a pound, three pounds of scrag mutton at 9 cents a pound.
3. Three pounds of neck mutton at 11 cents a pound, four sheep hearts at 11 cents each, and one pound of sweetbreads at 25 cents.
4. A four-pound roast of beef at 25 cents a pound.

Offal, which now is included in the rationing, make the housewife's problem more difficult. Ox tongue is 15 cents a pound, calf's liver about 35 cents a pound, calf tongue 25 cents, calf brains 10 cents and pigs kidney 7 cents—all of which must be included now in rationing where before they could be bought in addition to other meats.

Plan To Send Vitamin Tablets To England

New York, Jan. 8 (AP)—A plan to send vitamin candy tablets, each about the size of a thick nickel, to British children was launched today by the British American Ambulance Corps.

The tablets are cinnamon-flavored. Each contains all of the following viamins: A, the general protective vitamin, particularly useful in preventing night blindness; B-1, a nerve and growth vitamin; B-2, which prevents some skin troubles and helps in growth; C, the anti-scurvy vitamin, and D, the calcium and bone-building vitamin, E, specially needed by children.

Doctors and scientists who collaborated in making the new candy vitamin were given by the sponsors as Dr. Norman Joliffe, New York; Dr. Henry Borosook, California Institute of Technology; Dr. James S. McLester, former president American Medical Association; Dr. Virgil Preston Sydenstricker, University of Georgia; Dr. Tom D. Spies, Cincinnati General Hospital and Birmingham, Ala., and Dr. Russell M. Wilder, University of Minnesota.

Approved By Ministry

Dr. Joliffe said it had been proven "that an adequate supply of vitamins will prevent such symptoms as moodiness, sluggishness, fear, mental and physical fatigue, as well as the ordinary deficiency diseases such as rickets, scurvy, beri-beri, pellagra, cheilosis or sores around the mouth and black-out-blindness."

He said the British Ministry of Health had approved and welcomed the formula for vitamin sweets.

The committee said it hoped to ship 12,000,000 or more tablets a year, to be distributed in bomb shelters, communal feeding centers, factories and to evacuated children.

GERMAN PRESS IN NEW ATTACK ON ROOSEVELT

Says Message to Congress Is Unique in Its Untruthfulness.

DECLARES BRITAIN DOOMED

President's Statement Is Called Unscrupulous, Hypocritical Twisting of History.

BERLIN, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—The German afternoon press, with an apparently preconceived unanimity declared today that President Roosevelt's message to Congress on Monday was historically inaccurate and would have practically no bearing on the outcome of the war. Britain's doom is sealed, they said, and American aid will come too late.

The Berliner Boersen Zeitung said editorially that the President's message was "unique in American history for its untruthfulness, for its unscrupulousness, unique for its twisting of history and for the hypocritical manner in which it attempts to picture totalitarian States as aggressors and the arch-enemies of all the Americas."

The editorial was written by Karl Maegerle, interpreter of the viewpoint of the German Foreign Office who holds a position in Berlin similar to that of Virginio

30.24—6853

30.24—6853

Gayda, editor of Il Giornale d'Italia in Rome.

Sees Quest for Bases.

The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung said that "Roosevelt imperialism seeks not only supremacy over the Western Hemisphere republics of South and Central America, by bases and pincers of capitalistic economy, but also seeks to lay the groundwork for a heritage from the British empire." The newspaper added that President Roosevelt's proposal for aid to Britain was designed "to affirm legitimation for that heritage."

As for any Axis threat to the Western Hemisphere and the Roosevelt statement regarding its historical freedom from such threats, the Berliner Boersen Zeitung said: "One need not be an expert on the history of Anglo-American relations to recall the bombardment of Washington by the British, Britain's role in the American civil war and British basic policies in the Western Hemisphere."

The Lokal Anzeiger professed to see in Mr. Roosevelt's plan to lend arms to Britain an American adoption of German barter methods.

Rough Language Later.

No comprehensive summary of the Roosevelt message has yet appeared in the German press. There have been only brief quotations, accompanied by sarcastic editorials. While this afternoon's newspapers insisted that most of the message was a repetition of the recent fireside chat, informed spokesmen intimated that the press attacks would be continued with "some rough language coming up in the morning papers."

Hours before the afternoon papers appeared, the editorial tack they followed had been foretold by authoritative spokesmen, who said that the papers would call Mr. Roosevelt's message "arrogant beyond description and, as compared with his fireside talk, even less dignified, more abnormally nervous and more fraught with historical inaccuracies."

Message Printed in Russia.

Moscow, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—The Soviet press gave prominence today to dispatches reporting President Roosevelt's message to Congress, including his pledges of aid to Britain.

Pravda, organ of the Communist party, published a 700-word abstract of the address under a two-column headline at the top of its foreign news page. There was no editorial comment.

TAKES PLACE OF 'OFFICIAL' NAZI COMMENT

Karl Maegerle, Often Foreign Office Interpreter, Leads Chorus

MondayMessageExceeded In "Mendacity" Previous Talk, Is Charge

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 8—President Roosevelt's Monday message to Congress was assailed for "unscrupulousness and untruthfulness" in a concerted German press outpouring tonight.

Leading the chorus was the well-informed Boersen Zeitung. Its editorial was by Karl Maegerle, often an interpreter of what is in the mind of the German Foreign Office staff.

It said the United States President's report on the state of the Union, with its proposals for increased aid to Great Britain, was "unique in American history for its untruthfulness, for its unscrupulousness, unique for its twisting of history and for the hypocritical manner in which it attempted to picture the totalitarian states as aggressors and arch-enemies of all the Americas."

No "Official" Reaction

The rest of the press fell into the same pattern (and the German radio quoted the Deutsche Diplomatisch Politische Korrespondenz, close to the Foreign Office, as saying Mr. Roosevelt delivered a "violent tirade" which "created a condition for producing and stimulating by all means the enmity of the Axis powers which, until today, did not exist").

There was and will be no "official" reaction to the speech, but anyone who understands the German press system knows the reply by the press comes in accordance with precise instructions and reflects the views of the highest German quarters. Authoritative quarters, in fact, outlined the trend of this press reply just before it began to appear.

Assaulted "Common Sense"

The Boersen Zeitung went on to charge that the Monday message exceeded in "mendacity" the fireside chat which preceded it, "with which the present master of the White House assaulted the healthy common sense of Americans."

It said Mr. Roosevelt's contention that Germany's idea of international law is one-sided, "is unbecoming in a man who has shown by word and deed that he and the men behind him attach no importance to a peace of honor and justice."

The Lokalanzeiger added that Mr. Roosevelt had mixed in the internal affairs of Europe in a manner which "sacrifices all American principles and aims of the Monroe Doctrine."

"But he may talk as he will," the paper went on. "In war, only actions count."

Say Britain Is Doomed

The Hamburger Fremdenblatt called the message "an astounding document," airing Mr. Roosevelt's "pet theme—his total rejection of the totalitarian states. . . . There is no constructive will for peace and honest sympathy."

Many of the newspapers reiterated that Britain is doomed and that American help will come too late. The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung in a headline labeled the message: "Eccentric Arguments For A Lost Cause."

No comprehensive summary of the message itself has yet appeared in the German press.

German Cartoon On Bardia Backfires

Berlin, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Foreigners in Berlin chuckled today over a cartoon appearing in the SS organ Schwarzekorps.

Entitled "Fata Morgana," the drawing, which presumably went to press several days ago, portrays Rome in a mirage above an African desert fort.

In the foreground, Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, commander of the British Middle East Armies sweeping across Italian Libya, was portrayed telling his Tommies, "well boys, we'll soon be in Rome" and a buck-toothed British trooper replying, "yes, only Bardia lies between."

Charges Britain's Fifth Column On Job In U. S.

Hitler's Newspaper Quotes Alleged Article In London Telegraph On Representatives In Washington

Berlin, Jan. 8 (AP)—A banner headline in Adolf Hitler's newspaper Voelkischer Beobachter tonight read: "Thousands of British agents in Washington and New York—England's fifth column on the job in the U. S. A."

The newspaper quoted an alleged quotation from the London Daily Telegraph dispatch saying there were 500 officially credited representatives of the British Government in Washington and estimating British inspectors and technical experts in the United States at thousands.

It quoted the Telegraph as saying there were more British in Washington now than in 1814 when the British army captured the city. It was a well-chosen comparison, the newspaper said, because "it rightly characterizes the activity with which England openly takes the field in America today."

BRITISH REPORT TOBRUK CUT OFF FROM ANY HELP

Cairo Says Commander of Italians at Bardia Deserted Troops.

GEN. BERGONZOLI STILL FREE

English Assert Fascists Must Yield Tobruk in Order to Protect Bengasi.

Cairo, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—The British Army of the Nile massed men and guns in the Tobruk area today preparatory to laying siege to that major Libyan port, reported already cut off except for the movement of small Italian patrols.

"The concentration of our forces in the Tobruk area is continuing," the British command said tersely in telling of the speedy sweep of its forces across the desert sands.

Tobruk, seventy miles beyond captured Bardia, was reported already blocked from the west by British troops firmly holding the Italian-built road which threads through the desert. Small Fascist patrols may be able to get through, the British reported, but asserted their forces were in a position to nip the movement of any re-inforcements for Tobruk.

In the capture of Bardia with its 30,000 Italian prisoners, a British communique reported, British and Australian casualties numbered less than 600.

The speed and power of the British mechanized cavalry constitute such a threat that the Italians must withdraw from Tobruk at once if they hope to make a stand at Bengasi, 200 miles further west, British military spokesmen said today.

Once the Army of the Nile, supported by the British fleet and the Royal Air Force, lays siege to Tobruk, whose outer fortifications have already been tested by British armored patrols, its defenders will never reach Bengasi, and if defeated at Tobruk, the Italians will have little chance of holding Bengasi, and will then face the prospect of making a hazardous 500-mile dash to Tripoli, harassed from sea and air, they added.

Say Destroyer Was Hit.

Rome, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—The Italian High Command reported today that Italian planes torpedoed a British destroyer off the North African coast, near Salum.

The result of the attack was not known, however.

In the desert front in Libya, the communique said, there was patrol activity and artillery fire between Bardia and Tobruk. Italian planes machine-gunned and bombed British mechanized forces, it continued, and numerous raids were made by the British air force at various points in eastern Libya, and on the city of Tripoli, where it was stated, four persons were killed and about ten were injured.

Donovan Is Silent On Cairo Mission

Cairo, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Col. William J. Donovan, who recently has been in London on an undisclosed mission from the United States, arrived in Cairo by plane last night. He is staying in the British embassy. He declined to discuss the purpose of his visit, but it was understood he would report to the United States Government on conditions in the African battle zone.

STAGE IS SET FOR LAND, SEA AND AIR ATTACK

Operations Aimed At Repetition Of Knockout Blow Dealt Bardia

Large Italian Reinforcements Declared Cut Off By Army Of Nile

[By the Associated Press]

Boston, Jan. 8—Passengers arriving from African ports today on the motor ship City of New York, American South African Line, reported that when they sailed 100,000 British troops were waiting at the Kenya-Ethiopian border for the rainy season to end before sweeping into that Italian possession.

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 8—Britain's mechanized desert cavalry—"hell on wheels," they call it—rolled guns into place before Tobruk and other troops took up positions today for a siege of that virtually surrounded Italian base.

The stage was all but set for the pounding to commence by land, sea and by air. Tobruk's outer defenses have been felt out by armored patrols and the British declared other units have flanked it from the west.

Tobruk's airport at El Adem, fifteen miles to the south, already is in British hands.

Concentration Continuing

"The concentration of our forces in the Tobruk area is continuing," is the way the British command summed up the operations, aimed at a knockout blow similar to that administered Sunday to Bardia, seventy miles to the east.

Any attempt by the Italians to make a determined fight of it at Tobruk may result in a major disaster for Premier Benito Mussolini's men, British military authorities asserted.

Once the siege begins, they said, Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's forces would never reach Bengasi, next major base 200 miles to the west. A rout at Tobruk, they added, would leave the Italians with little chance of holding Bengasi and even less chance of making the hazardous 500-mile dash to Tripoli.

Area Difficult To Invade

The British said that there remained the possibility of "a squad or two" getting through to Tobruk, but the Army of the Nile can prevent the arrival of any larger reinforcements.

The possibility that the Italians might be able to make some stand west of Tobruk is enhanced, however, by the topography of that region. There lie the rugged Jebel Adkar mountains, rising to heights of 3,000 feet.

This area, difficult to invade, has a white civilian population. Twenty thousand Italian peasants were settled there a few years ago in land which had been made arable by irrigation. At the time of settlement this number represented only 1,800 families, as those with as many as eleven and twelve children were favored in the colonization scheme.

The able-bodied men of the settlement now are doing military service in Libya, it is presumed.

British Losses "Less Than 600"

Taking stock of losses at Bardia, the British high command reported the casualties among its British and Australian troops numbered "less than 600," compared with 30,000 Italians captured, killed or wounded there.

[Virginio Gayda, Fascist editor, declared in Rome that the British casualties were "in the thousands."]

The British, who say 94,000 Italians have been captured, killed or wounded since their offensive began December 9, declare they stand a chance of adding another 30,000 at Tobruk. This figure on the number of its defenders was a scale-down from the previous estimate of 50,000.

Farther down in Africa, today's British communique reported continued patrol activity along the border between the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and Kenya.

General Electric Whiskers' Escape From Bardia Disclosed

British Accuse Bergonzoli And Two Divisional Commanders Of Deserting Their Troops

By EDWARD KENNEDY
Associated Press Correspondent

With the British Forces in Libya, Jan. 8—More and more Italians were rounded up by the British north and west of Bardia today, but the prize fugitive of them all, Gen. Annibale (Electric Whiskers) Bergonzoli, commander of Bardia, was still among the missing.

The general, famous alike for his appetite, his military exploits and his whiskers, slipped out of Bardia the night before that strong Italian base in eastern Libya surrendered.

Divisional Commander Caught

Among the Italians captured today were a Black Shirt divisional commander and his staff, who fled last Saturday night when Bergonzoli got away. They were found hiding on the coast, where, apparently, they had waited in vain for a ship to pick them up.

The British at first had announced that Bergonzoli was among the prisoners taken Sunday, but today disclosed that an error had been made, due to the difficulty of counting and separating the thousands of prisoners.

Deserted Their Men, British Say

"It transpires that on the night before Bardia fell, the Black Shirt Corps commander (General Bergonzoli) and his two Black Shirt (divisional) commanders deserted their troops, leaving the regular commanders to fight on," said the special communique.

"It is possible," said the communique of Bergonzoli and the others who are still missing, "that they decamped by motor boat specially reserved for the purpose."

British military men said today it was possible that Bergonzoli had reached Tobruk, western Libyan base, and in Cairo military authorities said Bergonzoli had perhaps reached even Italy by boat.

Veteran Of Three Wars

General Bergonzoli, who was dubbed "General Electric Whiskers" because of his lush hirsute trimmings and his volatile temper, is a veteran of the World War, the Ethiopian campaign and the Spanish civil war.

He is short, wiry, energetic, and in age close to 60 although his vitality gives him a more youthful look. He has been wounded many times, for he has usually been in the middle of the fighting. Once in an Ethiopian battle when others were taking shelter "General Electric Whiskers" swept on, shouting, blowing a whistle and eating gum drops.

Wears No Decorations

He has appeared in battle with a machine-gun slung over his shoulder, exhorting his men to move forward. He has received Italy's highest military decorations, but he doesn't wear even a ribbon on his tunic.

He was first wounded in the World War when, as a captain on the Piave river, he attacked a house filled with Austrians. He blasted the door open with a hand grenade just as a burst of machine-gun fire hit him in the midriff. Badly wounded, Bergonzoli jumped into the river and swam to the opposite shore. He nearly died from those wounds.

Wounded Many Times

Once during the Ethiopian campaign he vanished into the woods on the Galla Sidamo front with a small column. He came back alone days later with his stomach torn up by a bullet. At other times he was hit in the arm and the shoulder.

For a time he commanded a sector in Dolo, East Africa. Then he commanded Graziani's "Hell on Wheels"—the column which took Neghelli. In those days he slept in his tunic in an open car. At dawn he would be ready to go after dousing his face and whiskers—they always gathered a lot of dust—with water from his canteen.

Caters To His Appetite

Other generals had a machine-gun nest built in the back of their speedy armored cars. "General Electric Whiskers" had his removed and fitted out with a cabinet for marmalade, canned goods, bottled water and, of course, a little wine.

He went to Spain and was commander of the troops at Guadalajara, where the International Brigade of poorly equipped troops broke through his lines. It was a rout, although Italian accounts say Bergonzoli's men at length stopped their foes with artillery, machine guns and finally bayonets.

Derided By Madrid Radio

After the battle the Madrid radio derided the general and his men, whereupon "Electric Whiskers" called out the band and made it play the Fascist anthem and army songs.

He was credited with the recapture of Teruel for Gen. Francisco Franco's Nationalists on January 1, 1938. A machine-gun bullet passed through both his thighs before El Corisa on the Aragon front two months later.

Eulogized In Rome As One Who Died On Battlefield

Rome, Jan. 8 (AP)—Gen. Annibale Bergonzoli, who the British said today had escaped from the Libyan base at Bardia before it was captured, was eulogized in the Italian press as a hero—as one who had died on the field of battle.

But what happened to him was a mystery so far as the public was concerned.

Italians fervently hoped he was safe, for he was regarded as a model soldier. In the last few days many persons in Rome heard a rumor that Marshal Rodolfo Graziani had sent a plane to take Bergonzoli to safety. Bergonzoli, according to this story, replied he would die with his troops, if necessary.

'Destroyer Torpedoed'

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 8—The Italian high command reported today Italian planes had torpedoed a British destroyer off the North African coast near Salum.

The result of the attack was not known immediately.

In the desert front in Libya, the high command said, there was patrol activity and artillery fire between Bardia and Tobruk.

The high command also reported in its regular communique that "numerous raids" had been made by Britain's Royal Air Force on various localities in eastern Libya and the city of Tripoli, where, it said, four persons were killed and some ten injured.

Italian planes were said to have machine-gunned and bombed British mechanized forces in the desert.

In East Africa, the communique said, Italian fighter planes broke up a British attempt to bomb an objective in Eritrea.

Fascist Editor Virginio Gayda declared in the newspaper Il Giornale d'Italia that the British army's "dead and wounded" in the battle of Bardia "numbered in the thousands."

Greeks Capture 300 Italians in Local Fighting

Seize Materials and Assert Foe Is Repulsed in Northeast Sector of Albania

ATHENS, Jan. 8 (AP)—More than 300 Italian prisoners of war were taken in restricted local fighting on the Albanian front, the Greek high command announced today.

Much war material of all sorts, including a mortar battery, was said to have been seized, and Greek aviation was said to have successfully bombed and machine-gunned various battlefield areas.

Earlier minor gains by Greek patrols, specifically in the Klisura sector, and bombing by British planes of Elbasani, the central Albanian base of the Italians, had been reported. In addition, a government spokesman said, some prisoners were taken in a skirmish much farther north of the Kalisura sector.

Referring to today's Italian communique claiming successes against the Greeks, the spokesman said: "In fact, there have been some operations of local importance in the Pogradetz (northeastern Albanian sector) region, where the Italians attempted to capture some of our advance units. The enemy was decimated, being even unable to remove its dead (about twenty)."

The main hospital at Salonica, which the spokesman said was full of Italian wounded, was reported to have been bombed this afternoon without damage or casualties.

In the Elbasani attack, a Royal Air Force communique said, despite poor visibility, there were hits on several buildings and resultant fires.

Meanwhile today it was reported here that the Italians have moved many civilians out of Valona in preparation for a final defense of that port as the Greeks continued their advance along the coast and farther east. Also today there was exceptionally heavy artillery action over the whole front.

Red Cross figures show that the Greeks have taken more than 14,000 prisoners since the beginning of the war; and in addition to these, the Italians are said to have shipped home 35,000 sick and wounded from the port of Valona alone.

A Greek spokesman declared that in addition to these, the Fascist losses in dead and captured since October 28 could be counted in the tens of thousands. Day-to-day reports continue to swell the list of prisoners, and the spokesman declared that five officers were among 222 Italians captured yesterday, many of them left behind by their retreating comrades after they had been wounded.

A new Italian bombing raid on the Greek-occupied town of Koritza, Albania, was reported by a Greek communique, which said that more than 100 civilian casualties were caused; that a cathedral was damaged badly, and that forty houses had collapsed.

Greek Positions Shelled By Fleet, Italians Say

Rome, Jan. 8 (AP)—A warship bombardment of Greek coastal positions on the Albanian battle front and a torpedo plane attack upon a British destroyer in the Libyan war theater were reported today by the Italian high command.

The fleet's action was declared to have brought "visible effect"; the result of the assault upon the destroyer—off Salum, Egypt—was not stated.

British mechanized forces in Libya, the communique said, were sprayed with machine-gun fire and shrapnel bombs by Fascist pilots.

Raid On Tripoli Acknowledged

"Numerous" British air raids in Libya were acknowledged—particularly in Tripoli, where it was asserted that four persons were killed and ten injured.

Still discussing the fall of the Italian base of Bardia to the British Sunday, Virginio Gayda, the authoritative Fascist editor, wrote that Britain's dead and wounded in the battle for that position "numbered in the thousands."

[The British Middle East command said British and Australian casualties were "less than 600."]

During the day, Italian youths born in 1922 were summoned to register for the regular conscript army service which their class will begin next year. Registration is normal and not ahead of schedule.

THE POSSIBILITY THAT THE ITALIANS MIGHT BE ABLE TO MAKE SOME STAND WEST OF TOBRUK IS ENHANCED, HOWEVER, BY THE TOPOGRAPHY OF THAT REGION. THERE LIE THE RUGGED JEBEL AKDAR MOUNTAINS, RISING TO HEIGHTS OF 3,000 FEET. THIS AREA, DIFFICULT TO INVADE, HAS A WHITE CIVILIAN POPULATION. TWENTY THOUSAND ITALIAN PEASANTS WERE SETTLED THERE A FEW YEARS AGO IN LAND WHICH HAD BEEN MADE ARABLE BY IRRIGATION. AT THE TIME OF SETTLEMENT THIS NUMBER REPRESENTED ONLY 1,800 FAMILIES, AS THOSE WITH AS MANY AS 11 AND 12 CHILDREN WERE FAVORED IN THE COLONIZATION SCHEME. THE ABLE BODIED MEN OF THE SETTLEMENT NOW ARE DOING MILITARY SERVICE IN LIBYA, IT IS PRESUMED.

The Queen's life of "austere simplicity" was cited by Italian newspapers as an example for her people in wartime.

GERMANY CLAIMS TWO MORE SHIPS

Reports Success in Attacks by Sea and Air Upon English Vessels.

Berlin, Jan. 8.—(AP)—New attacks by sea and air on British vessels were reported today by German sources to have resulted in the sinking of two merchant ships totaling 10,500 tons and the probable destruction of a third, a 500-ton unit of a minesweeping flotilla.

The latest success was achieved about 300 miles west of Ireland this morning, informed quarters said, when a single combat plane bombed an 8000-ton merchantman to pieces. Three dives and three hits were reported.

The mid-day high command communique, covering yesterday's actions, told of the other two attacks.

"During a thrust against the English coast, one speedboat attacked an enemy convoy, strongly protected by destroyers, off the Thames mouth, sinking one 2500-ton merchant ship," the high command announced.

In the middle of the North Sea, the high command said, a combat plane on armed reconnaissance attacked a minesweeper flotilla, "scoring several direct hits on one vessel. The ship was left in a burning, sinking condition."

Despite unfavorable weather, the high command reported, German airmen continued attacks on London yesterday, "small combat units" hitting the British capital with incendiary and explosive bombs. Others were said to have attacked airports, railways and industries in southern and central England.

"In these actions," the communique said, "numerous airplanes parked on several airports were machine-gunned from low altitudes. One chemical factory was badly hit."

The official German news agency DNB reported tonight that a German warplane had dodged through a balloon barrage and heavy artillery fire to bomb a motor plant near Coventry. Two direct hits were claimed.

A member of the plane's crew was wounded and the plane was hit, the agency said, but it returned to its home port.

British Report Victory in Clash Of Submarines

Shell From the Tuna Hits U-Boat Conning Tower in Battle in 'Enemy Waters'

LONDON, Jan. 8 (AP).—British victory in a spirited clash of submarines in "enemy" waters was reported today by the Admiralty in a communique which said that the 1,095-ton submarine Tuna scored a direct hit on the conning tower of a German U-boat in a surface engagement.

A later Admiralty communique, announced the loss in another action of the submarine Regulus, which had a normal complement of fifty men. There were no details. The Regulus was in the Rainbow class, which ranges from 1,475 to 2,030 tons.

Before her fight with the U-boat, the Tuna had sunk an enemy armed tugboat, the Admiralty reported, and in neither operation did she suffer either casualties or damage.

"On encountering H. M. S. Tuna," the account continued, "the U-boat made off at high speed, firing her after-gun. H. M. S. Tuna gave chase and opened fire with her 4-inch gun. The U-boat was certainly hit by one shell on the conning tower, but, unfortunately, this cannot be considered vital damage.

"H. M. S. Tuna chased the enemy for nearly an hour and only broke off the engagement when forced to dive by the appearance of enemy escort vessels, which came to the rescue of the damaged U-boat."

Cardiff Buries Raid Victims

CARDIFF, Wales, Jan. 8 (AP).—Weeping relatives lined the sides of a communal grave today as men, women and children, victims of last week's Nazi air raid, were buried at a mass funeral by the city. Many of the dead were unidentified. The mourners in some cases were sole survivors of their families.

American Blood Saving Lives in British Raids

London, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Blood donated by 2,000 Americans already has helped save lives of some air raid casualties, Dr. A. N. Drury, chairman of the Blood Transfusion Research Committee, said today.

The blood—98 quarts thus far—has been coming from the United States by Clipper planes and ships since November 1, 1940.

Along with that from the 160,000 donors in the London area alone, the blood has been given to injured civilians and fighters, including German and Italian aviators shot down over Britain.

Benes Says Czechs Build Passive Resistence Drive

Tells British Nazis in Nation Lack Confidence in Chiefs

LONDON, Jan. 8 (AP).—Dr. Edouard Benes, President of the Czecho-Slovak government in exile, told a national defense luncheon today that Germans in Czecho-Slovakia were anxious for the future because of a "lack of confidence in their leaders."

Benes said a large system of passive resistance was being built up throughout the country, which was "maintaining a united front against the Germans."

"Hitler's empire," he said, "is held together only by force, and it is gradually approaching internal collapse. The year 1941 should demonstrate this to the world."

Jan Masaryk, Czecho-Slovak Foreign Minister, warned Great Britain against complacency, adding: "You people sometimes return to cricket too quickly, and there is no cricket about this game."

AMERICAN KILLED IN R. A. F. CRASH

Eagle Squadron Member Buried With Honors.

London, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Philip Howard Leckrone, 28 years old, of Salem, Ill., a member of the American Eagle Squadron of the Royal Air Force, was killed in a flying accident on Sunday, the Air Ministry announced today.

Details of the accident were not disclosed.

Leckrone, a pilot officer, was buried today with military honors in a village churchyard near his station in England. The United States Embassy sent an American flag which was draped on the coffin with the Union Jack.

Leckrone was one of many United States citizens who came to England soon after the outbreak of the war to join the R. A. F.

When Air Minister Sir Archibald Sinclair announced formation of the Eagle Squadron on October 8, Leckrone was listed among the original members. He had been a member of a Spitfire squadron of the auxiliary air force.

He took part in fighting last fall and shot down one German plane over the sea, returning with his gasoline tanks virtually dry.

LEAHY'S NEW ROLE HELD SIGNIFICANT

Admiral's Arrival in Vichy Called Important Event.

Vichy, France, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—The arrival of Admiral William D. Leahy, United States Ambassador to France, who presented his credentials today to Chief of State Marshal Petain, was described tonight by close observers of French politics as one of the most important recent events. (Here three words were censored.)

These observers pointed out that French policy since the armistice has been based on the belief that Germany would win the war and that France must make peace with the new Europe. But Pierre Laval, an outstanding proponent of this theory, has now departed from the Petain regime.

President Roosevelt's fireside speech on December 29 and his concrete proposal to Congress on Monday for more aid to Great Britain has been carefully studied here and the conclusion reached by many observers that the future of England is far less black than when the French policy of collaboration in the new order in Europe was evolved.

It was considered by some that the mere arrival of Admiral Leahy on the Vichy scene had its moral effect (here four words were censored).

Along with his credentials the new Ambassador presented a personal letter from President Roosevelt to Marshal Petain.

Admiral Leahy had said he did not know the contents of the letter, but regarded it as a purely personal message which would not be made public unless Marshal Petain chose to release it.

Yugoslavia Hears Bulgaria Now Looks to Russia for Assistance.

CABINET IN SPECIAL MEETING

President Inonu of Turkey Said to Be Visiting Troops Massed on Northern Border.

Belgrade, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Yugoslav and foreign quarters heard reports today that Bulgaria had rejected a request for passage of German troops and was relying on Russia to bolster her resistance.

Bogdan Philov, Bulgarian Premier, who returned home last night from a trip to Vienna, was said to have declined to negotiate on the basis of Nazi proposals for movement of their troops from Rumania.

The Premier's stand was linked with reports that Russia frowns on further German military penetration into the Balkans and that Bulgaria desires to keep on good terms with Moscow.

There were rumors also of a possible change in the Sofia government.

Bulgarian Cabinet Meets.

Sofia, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Virtually the entire Bulgarian Cabinet gathered today at Cham-Kouria, mountain resort fifty miles from Sofia, leading to reports that the Ministers had joined King Boris III there to hear a report from the Premier, Bogdan Philov, who returned last night from Vienna.

The King was absent from Sofia. Official spokesmen declined to comment on rumors that he and his Cabinet had gone to Cham-Kouria to discuss with Dr. Philov the current tension arising from the presence of German troop concentrations on the Bulgarian border in Rumania.

Although Dr. Philov's trip was said officially to have been for the purpose of seeing a physician, diplomats here expressed the belief that he went there to learn the meaning of the Nazi concentrations on Bulgaria's doorstep and what part Bulgaria would be expected to play in any Axis intentions. He went on to Cham-Kouria after a brief stop in Sofia. Other Cabinet members known to be there include the War Minister, Gen. Theodossy Daskaloff, and the Foreign Minister, Ivan Popov.

Bulgars Hope It's a Feint.

Sofia, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—The hubbub caused by the flood of German troops into Rumania and on toward the Bulgarian frontier was regarded by some Balkan observers here today as possibly only a Nazi smoke screen to cover up preparations elsewhere for a blow at Great Britain or Gibraltar.

Pointing to the unconcealed massing of perhaps 600,000 troops across the Danube in Rumania, these spokesmen said it had not been the practice of the Germans to publicize their blitzkriegs in advance, and that the Balkans had been used before to divert attention—last May, for example, when German troops appeared along the Yugoslav and Hungarian frontiers just prior to the Nazi drive on the Low Countries.

German spokesmen in the Balkans have encouraged the talk today, causing a terrific exthat the Germans may strike to the south toward Greece or Turkey, who is reported to have 400,000 troops massed in Thrace. Apart from this talk, however, most Germans here say that the war will be decided not here or in Africa, but on the British Isles, and that Britain must be knocked out before aid from the United States can reach its peak.

Some Bulgars, hopeful that the threat along their frontiers may be just a sideshow, have expressed the belief that events here indicate the Germans are not ready to cross the Danube. They pointed out that the pro-Nazi Minister of the Interior, Peter Grabovsky, made no bid to seize the premiership in the absence of the Conservative Premier, Bogdan Philov, who returned yesterday after a trip to Vienna. Some had suggested that such an attempt to change the government might be made.

It was reported that the Soviet Minister to Bulgaria, earlier stated to be headed for Moscow, had put off his trip. There was speculation that he may be remaining here to learn what Dr. Philov had found out during his stay in Vienna, often the scene of German conferences with foreign officials who visit there.

Inonu Visits Troops.

Istanbul, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—President Ismet Inonu was reported unofficially today to be conducting an "incognito" visit to troops stationed in European Turkey, principally those marshaled close to the Bulgarian border. Turkish sources insisted that such visits were "usual."

Train service between Turkey and Bulgaria was suspended, presumably because of floods on the Bulgarian side of the frontier. All telephone communication between Turkey and Europe likewise was cut off.

The Ankara radio, praising President Roosevelt's utterances on war aid to Great Britain, said they showed that the destinies of the United States and Britain had been joined.

Unofficial estimates placed at 300,000 the number of men affected by Turkey's new compulsory military service law.

BULGAR CHIEF REPORTED ON VISIT TO KING

Calls On Boris And Ministers After Trip To Vienna "For Health"

Premier Expected To Be Able To Tell What Reich Wants Of Sofia

[By the Associated Press]

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 8 - Premier Bogdan Philoff, just back from a visit to Vienna "for his health," was reliably reported tonight to have called on King Boris III after a meeting with Cabinet Ministers at the winter resort of Cham-Kouria, fifty miles from Sofia.

Officials, who refused even to confirm that the Cabinet meeting had taken place, discounted reports heard in Belgrade that Philoff had rejected a German request for passage of troops through Bulgaria and was relying on Soviet Russia to bolster Bulgarian resistance.

Presumably Philoff told other Ministers and the King of his trip to Vienna, from which he returned yesterday. It was assumed he was prepared to say just what role Germany wanted Bulgaria to play.

Visit Not Unusual

The Informant who told of the Boris-Philoff meeting said that the visit was not unusual. Boris has a palace near Cham-Kouria, a name that means pine forest.

Speculation in other Balkan capitals that German forces now concentrated and concentrating in Rumania may enter Bulgaria was generally discounted here. It was said that neither the weather nor Soviet Russia seemed favorable.

Philoff's Vienna trip, ostensibly to consult an eminent physician, had given diplomatic observers to believe that he actually went there to learn the meaning of great German troop movements as well as what Germany expected of Bulgaria.

Shakeup Forecast

Rumors in other capitals of a Bulgarian Cabinet change lacked confirmation here. It was believed, however, that a shakeup might follow the February meeting of Parliament, with Philoff possibly using his illness as grounds for retiring.

The present Minister of Agriculture, Ivan Bagrianoff, who recently visited Rome and Berlin, is mentioned as a likely successor.

Despite the flurry of rumors, Bulgaria was outwardly unworried. As one Bulgarian put it, she counted on her long friendship with Russia, extensive economic relations with Germany and continuance of the Russian-German non-aggression agreement.

No Emergency Moves

Crowds of civilians of military age on Sofia's streets indicated that the nation had taken no strong emergency defense measures.

Some Sofia observers held that Germany's Balkan troop movements—unconcealed massing of perhaps 600,000 troops in Rumania—might be only a smokescreen to mask preparations for a smash at Britain or Gibraltar.

The Turkish press declared today, before suspending publication for two days because of the Moslem religious holiday, Bayram, that President Roosevelt's recent message to Congress and the recent British victory at Bardia marked a turning point of the war.

Inonu Visits Troops

President Ismet Inonu of Turkey was reported unofficially today to be on an incognito visit to troops in European Turkey, facing Bulgaria and Greece, but Turkish sources insisted such visits were usual.

Train service and all telephone communication between Turkey and Europe were suspended today, presumably because of floods on the Bulgarian side of the frontier.

In connection with Nazi troop and war material movements into Rumania, the explosion of a German munitions train was reported today. Moving over one of the three main lines from Hungary to Rumania, it crashed with another train, damaged a large part of the town of Berettyo Ujfalu and so wrecked the tracks that repairs probably will take weeks.

Passenger Service Cut

Hungarian censorship clamped down on details before the number of casualties could be learned.

Drastic reduction in passenger train service in Yugoslavia was announced, effective January 15, "for the duration of the winter."

The railways explained the cancellation of eighty-one trains on the grounds of a shortage of oil and coal but observers pointed out that the curtailment would leave big reserves of rolling stock for military use if needed.

The Hungarian Government, reflecting concern over Budapest's position, hitherto as a relay point for Balkan news, threatened correspondents with prosecution by military tribunals for sending to foreign countries "military news of any kind, either by telegram, telephone, letter or any other means."

This threat was contained in an urgent letter from the Foreign Office Press Bureau to foreign correspondents.

New Group Seen As 'Spanish World Axis'

[By the Associated Press]

Madrid, Jan. 8—Spain's Council of Hispanicism—described in the press as a sort of "Spanish world axis"—came into being today with publication of a decree naming more than three-score initial members. The list included Spanish Ambassadors to Cuba, Chile, Mexico, Argentina, Brazil and Peru, the Consul General in Manila, several Catholic bishops and priests, writers, newspapermen and leaders of the Falange (Fascist) party.

The decree said the mission of the council is "to study and resolve the common spiritual and material necessities of our race" and is intended to include as members most of the outstanding personages of the Hispano-American people so the council can become "a supernational" organization.

Ramon Serrano Suner, Foreign Minister (and on occasion Spain's representative in special talks at Berlin and Rome), will be president of the council, with power to make new appointments at will.

The headquarters will continue to be Madrid, it was said, but later an Hispano-American branch will choose a place of residence somewhere in Latin America.

The Falangist organ, Arriba, gave the council a send-off, saying that it corresponded to the ideal of "a Spanish world axis."

Formerly "Mere Theory"

The concept of Hispanicism, the newspaper went on, had been lost in "the rubbish of romantic vagaries." Before the Spanish falange came into being, Arriba said, Hispano-Americanism as a national concept was "a mere theory, cultivated by a nucleus of anti-liberal intellectuals."

Three years of war had to ravage Spain, Arriba added, before it could be put in "orderly and efficient form."

Reaffirm British-Portuguese Tie

LISBON, Jan. 8 (AP).—The traditional friendship of Great Britain and Portugal was reaffirmed today when Sir Ronald Hugh Campbell presented his credentials as ambassador to President Oscar de Fragoso Carmona. Both the new envoy and the venerable Portuguese leader asserted their nations remained "always faithful" to their unity.

Hungary Warns Writers Of Ban on Military News

By The Associated Press.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Jan. 8—The Hungarian Government tonight threatened foreign correspondents with trial by military tribunal if they sent "military news of any kind" out of Hungary.

An urgent letter from the Foreign Office press bureau said:

"I advise the addressee that it is most strictly forbidden to inform foreign countries of military news of any kind, either by telegram, telephone, letter or any other means. Offenders against this will be prosecuted by military tribunal."

Nazi Powder Train Blast Wrecks Hungarian Town

Explosion Follows Collision; Censor Hides Casualties

BUDAPEST, Jan. 8 (AP).—The explosion of a German munitions train, which crashed into another train on one of the three main lines from Hungary to Rumania, damaged a large part of the town of Berettyo Ujfalu today and wrecked the tracks. Repairs probably will take weeks.

The town is in Hungary, near what used to be the Hungarian-Rumanian frontier before Rumania ceded Transylvania to Hungary, and is about midway between Pospokladany and Nagyvarad. (This route has been used by the Germans to move heavy troop reinforcements, reported as high as 600,000 men, through Hungary into Rumania.)

The number of casualties was not learned immediately. Hungarian censorship clamped down on further details of the accident.

The officer lifted up the stiff body and discovered that a dead pig had been dressed up like a woman in the hope of getting it into Warsaw.

Jews Are Barred From Dutch Movies

Amsterdam (Via Berlin).—Jan. 8 (A. P.).—Jews were barred from all motion picture houses in the Netherlands, beginning today, after anti-German demonstrations by some moviegoers, especially during the showing of newsreels.

24 THAI PROVINCES GET MARTIAL LAW

Bangkok Radio Says Accounts With French Indo-China Must Now Be Settled

BANGKOK, Thailand, Jan. 8 (AP)—Martial law was proclaimed today in the twenty-four Thai [Siamese] provinces bordering French Indo-China.

Military officials were appointed for the forty-six other provinces so they could start functioning promptly in case martial law should be extended.

The action came as the Bangkok radio warned the people to "keep away from French quarters," saying, "we must now settle accounts with the French."

It was reported without confirmation that Thai forces had penetrated Indo-China as far as Sisophon, about twenty miles from the border, and that French forces had withdrawn from Thakek in the north Mekong region.

HANOI, French Indo-China, Jan. 8 (AP)—Fighting on the Thailand-French Indo-China border is rapidly taking on the aspects of an undeclared war, with Thai troops penetrating several miles into Cambodia at three places, it was reported here tonight.

Thai bombers were reported today to have made heavy new bombing and machine-gunning attacks yesterday against six Indo-China communities, three of them principal border cities.

The French described the attacks as lasting many hours, and said they were the "strongest action" in the last fortnight along the troubled frontier.

The French said they made reprisals at once, but did not disclose their nature or results.

Governor General Admiral Jean Decoux conferred with the Japanese Vice Minister of War, Lieut. Gen. Korechika Anami, who arrived here today, but no details of the meeting were made public.

JAPANESE-DUTCH SHOWDOWN SEEN

Observers Think Japan May Try to Get Political Hold Over East Indies.

Batavia, Netherlands East Indies, Jan. 8.—(AP)—With Japan expected to demand enlargement of her present petroleum imports from these rich islands and the Dutch Colonia

Administration expected to refuse, informed quarters expressed belief today an outright showdown may develop after new negotiations start this week.

These quarters, holding that Japan's real intentions entail establishment of some political control in the East Indies, said that the extent of Dutch resistance would depend on the attitude of the United States.

They consider it significant that Japan has chosen Kenkichi Yoshizawa, one-time foreign minister, to succeed Ichizo Kobayashi as head of the Japanese delegation.

With Yoshizawa as the new chairman of the mission, Japan is expected to present two major objections to Kobayashi's October deal for an increase in oil shipments to 1,800,000 tons a year.

1. That the total amount of oil purchasable is far beneath Japan's demands, and

2. That as the agreement now stands payment must be made for the oil in American dollars when the tankers are loaded.

Now the Dutch are reported to have demanded that the Japanese guarantee that all shipments should be delivered only to Japan and that they not be relayed to Germany.

Japanese Transfer Property

Honolulu, Jan. 8 (AP)—Uneasiness over the international situation was reflected here during 1940 in the increased number of real estate transfers from Japanese aliens to relatives and friends holding American citizenship. A check showed that 443 more real estate transfers were made than in 1939.

It was stated the commission would hold extended conferences with German military leaders and study matters arising from the treaty, to which Italy is the third party.

Yamashita and his colleagues came by way of Siberia.

Japan Seeking Barter Pacts In Latin America

Commission Studying Conditions For Such Agreements To Provide War Materials

Mexico City, Jan. 8 (AP)—An official Japanese trade mission has arrived in this hemisphere to explore the possibilities in every Latin American republic of negotiating barter agreements, it was learned tonight.

Headed by Ryoichi Mizutani, of Tokyo's Department of Foreign Commerce, the six members of the mission were reported principally interested in essential war metals and oil.

While here they advised local businessmen and Government officials they were prepared to barter $1,200,000 worth of rayon, among other products, for such war items.

However, no contracts were signed. Japanese Minister Yoshiaki Miura said the commission was authorized merely to anaylze economic and trade conditions, not to enter into agreements.

HE ASSERTED THE MISSION WOULD OUTLINE ITS RECOMMENDATIONS FOR MEXICO-CITY-JAN-8
BARTER ARRANGEMENTS WITH VARIOUS CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRIES AFTER RETURNING TO TOKYO EARLY IN APRIL.

BESIDES THE JAPANESE GOVERNMENT, THE MISSION REPRESENTED

INFORMED GOVERNMENT SOURCES HERE SAID THEY HAD NO INFORMATION
ON THE MISSION'S WORK IN MEXICO, BUT EXPRESSED DOUBT IT HAD RECEIVED MUCH ENCOURAGEMENT EVEN THOUGH MEXICO NEEDS RAYON.

Kaiser's Grandson Sent To Help Britain Clean Up Raid Debris

Hohenzollern Prince Is Among 300 Interned Aliens Shipped Back From Canada To Aid Reconstruction

[By the Associated Press]

An Eastern Canadian Port, Jan. 8—Prince Friedrich Georg Hohenzollern, 29, fourth son of the former Crown Prince of Germany, was reported tonight to have been one of 250 to 300 interned aliens who sailed from this port to help clean up air-raid debris in Britain.

An official who talked to him identified him only as a grandson of the former Kaiser and said he was tall, blond and extremely well mannered.

This description fits Prince Friedrich, who was reported last September to have been interned in a camp near Ottawa. High officials declined to deny the report at that time.

Before the war the Kaiser's grandson was a social lion in London, where he was employed in a bank.

In 1938 he denied rumors linking his name with that of the American heiress Barbara Hutton, the Countess Haugwitz-von Reventlow.

Reports from Berlin in November, 939, said he had been interned in Scotland at the start of the war, and his internment was confirmed by British authorities last August. His transfer to Canada was surrounded with secrecy.

The official who talked to him here said he scrubbed decks and cleaned officers' quarters during the four days the labor force waited for the ship to sail. He was one of forty-five permitted to do such work; the others were detained in immigration barracks until sailing time.

The group of enemy civilians, selected for the labor duty by an emissary of the British Government, came here with the utmost secrecy. Few persons knew they were aboard the big steamer when she sailed for Britain.

Officials said all seemed bent on behaving in such a manner that they would not be sent back to interment camps. Among them was a soccer star, formerly employed at England's Woolwich arsenal. He was not identified further.

MYSTERY OFF COAST

25 Persons Rescued From Netherlands Ship.

An East Coast Canadian Port, Jan. 8 (A. P.).—A rescue steamship was reported battling severe gales today in an effort to reach port with twenty-five survivors from a Netherlands ship whose fate had not been learned. The Canadian Press said it was suggested "she might have been the victim of enemy action."

The rescue ship was reported to have aboard the body of a dead seaman and several survivors were reported wounded.

A brief message from the rescuers gave scant details and agents for the Dutch ship, which sailed recently from a Canadian port, refused any information.

Duke Of Windsor Tries In Vain To Hook Elusive Blue Marlin

Pays Surprise Visit, With Duchess, To Cat Cay, Bahamas—To Dedicate Golf Course Today

[By the Associated Press]

Cat Cay, Bahamas, Jan. 8—Dressed much like many another angler in sky-blue sweater, white shorts and brown shoes, the Duke of Windsor sought in vain for a blue marlin only a few hours after he and the Duchess arrived at the exclusive island resort today.

However, he boated six baracuda and a three-foot fish of the yellowtail variety and declared himself determined to try again tomorrow for one of the elusive marlin.

The Windsors arrived at this tiny island—one of the Bahamas less than fifty miles from the Florida coast—without advance public notice this morning. They came on Alfred P. Sloan's yacht Renee and were greeted by Louis R. Wasey, New York advertising executive, who developed Cat Cay as a private resort not open to the public.

To Stay At Cottage

While here, the Windsors are staying at the Cottage Tasmon, built by Mr. and Mrs. Howard Perkins, of Wilmington, Del. They will eat in the resort's main dining room, but brought their own tea-making equipment for use at breakfast.

Tomorrow the Duke will dedicate the island's first golf course, to be named Windsor Downs, and he and the Duchess will make a trip about the island.

Accompanying the Windsors were aides Major Gray Phillips and George Wood, Mrs. Phillips, Mrs. Wood and Mrs. Vyvyan Drury, wife of another aide.

Also in the party were Charles Yates, Atlanta golf star; Miss Betty Dunne, of Atlanta, and Mrs. William H. Danforth and her daughter, Helen, of Miami Beach.

Mingle With Guests

The Duke and Duchess insisted on mingling informally with the other guests in the dining room and at various functions arranged for them.

Several boats containing members of the Duke's party followed the one from which he and Wasey fished. In one of the other boats passengers included William Dodge, president of the Texas Oil Company, and Max McGraw, of Elgin, Ill., president of the McGraw Electric Company.

MARSHALL LEAVES PAPER

Drops Duties as Editor to Push No Foreign War Drive

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Jan. 8 (AP)—John L. Miller, president and general manager of The Cedar Rapids Gazette Company, announced today that Verne Marshall, at his own request, had been relieved of his duties as editor of the newspaper.

Mr. Marshall made the request, Mr. Miller said, because of the "heavy demands on his time and energies" by the program of the No Foreign War Committee, of which he is chairman. Clare Marshall has taken over the work of his brother on the paper.

Archduchess Charlotte Reported Recovering

Sister Of Otto Undergoes Operation For Appendicitis In Canadian City

Quebec, Jan. 8 (AP)—The condition of the Archduchess Charlotte of Hapsburg, young sister of the Archduke Otto, pretender to the Austrian throne, was reported good today following an appendicitis operation yesterday.

It was erroneously reported last night that the Grand Duchess Charlotte of Luxembourg, who also has come to Canada with her Government, had undergone the operation.

The Archduchess Charlotte of Hapsburg is a student at Laval University here.

German Is Held By U. S.

New York, Jan. 8 (AP)—Carl Junghans, German motion picture director, was ordered held at Ellis Island by immigration authorities after his arrival today from Lisbon on the Portuguese liner Carvalho Araujo.

Immigration officials said Junghans, who claimed to have fled Germany because he incurred the displeasure of Propaganda Minister Goebbels, was traveling on a "temporary" French passport apparently issued by French officials at Morocco.

Ernst, a metal worker, both of New York City.

As the departing whistle blew, Krauss broke into tears and said he was being "crucified," that he thought this was "a nation of free people."

"This thing happened because of things I have in my heart," he sobbed.

The third person to whom objections were raised was H. W. Ritter, described by steamship officials as "a New York loan banker." He was permitted to sail after the line said British objections had not been substantiated.

War-Risk Insurance Rates Reduced Again

Cut Made On Shipments From Red Sea To U. S. Laid To Fall Of Bardia

New York, Jan. 8 (AP)—American marine insurance underwriters today reduced the rate of war-risk insurance on shipments of goods from the Red Sea to the United States to five per cent. from seven and a half per cent.

"This reduction," said one insurance official, "reflects the fall of Bardia to the British army."

The reduction is the third in three weeks on war-risk rates on shipping in the eastern Mediterranean area. Each cut in rates has followed British successes against the Italians.

TWO GERMANS TAKEN FROM JAPANESE SHIP

Liner Sails From San Francisco Without New York Men

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 8 (AP)—Two German nationals, one crying he was being "crucified," were removed from the Japanese liner Tatuta Maru today, evidently the result of British refusal to guarantee safe passage.

Sailing of the ship was delayed an hour and a quarter while officials of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha Line conferred regarding British objections to three men already aboard. One was permitted to remain.

About thirty-five Germans were on the passenger list, among them Karl Scheuring, University of Denver student whom the Department of Justice last month ordered to leave the country.

So far as could be learned, none of the 430 German sailors interned at Angel Island was aboard. Neither was the Princess Stephanie Hohenlohe of Hungary, whose expulsion also was ordered in December.

Those taken off were Mikolas Krauss, a machinist, and Hans

SAYS U. S. SUMS PAY FOR ANTI-U. S. WORK

Nelson Rockefeller Declares Firms Are Duped In South And Central America

Profits From Trade Used To Finance Enemy Propaganda Campaign, He Reports

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 8—Profits derived from American trade were said today to be financing an anti-American propaganda campaign throughout South and Central America.

A report made public by Nelson Rockefeller, coordinator of commercial and cultural relations between the American republics, charged that American firms were being duped by representatives of "anti-American powers" to finance the campaign.

Based On 4-Month Survey

The report was based on a four-month survey in eighteen of the twenty American republics by an American mission cooperating with United States Government officials.

Some of the funds, including advertising appropriations for American goods, are being utilized, the report said, to force newspapers in Latin America and in some instances radio stations to "adopt anti-American editorial policies."

Axis Trio Suggested

Rockefeller said in answer to questions that it was "fair to assume" that Germany, Italy and Japan were playing the leading roles in the propaganda drive.

"Only a small percentage of the 1,100 American firms doing business in South and Central America are involved," Rockefeller said. He added, however, that they included some "important firms."

Rockefeller's statement asserted that conditions were of a character "to make this a serious concern from a defense point of view.

Firms Take Steps

Many American firms have taken steps to remedy the situation, he said, adding that he believed all firms concerned would cooperate by appointing agents who are "friendly to the inter-American solidarity."

A country-by-country survey, the Rockefeller report said, showed the following general situation in South and Central American countries:

United States firms are frequently represented by firms and individuals "known to support objectives contrary to the best interests of the American republics." (Rockefeller emphasized that none were citizens of the United States).

Officers and employes of a number of firms, representing United States companies, are "officials of anti-American powers."

Many employes of United States companies are "known members of local anti-American organizations."

Get Confidential Data

Many anti-American firms, cut off from European products by the war, obtained agencies for United States companies, the report said.

These enabled them to maintain their trade contacts, obtain confidential trade information which is made available to anti-American powers, and derive profits which are being used to finance propaganda agencies.

Many of the firms representing United States companies are serving as "centers for the distribution of anti-American literature and propaganda," it was reported.

Rockefeller said the information had been turned over to interested governmental agencies and that contact would be sought with firms doing business in South and Central America in an effort to remedy the situation.

SAYS ITALIANS NOW CALL BENITO FINITO

Artist Returning From Italy Asserts People Refer To Duce As "Finished"

Former French Ambassador Reports Definite Shortage Of Food In France

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 8—Thomas J. Smith, a Philadelphia artist, reported on his return from Rome today that there was great unrest in Italy and that the common joke among Italians was to refer to Benito Mussolini as "Finito" Mussolini.

Finito is the Italian word for "finished."

Smith and 148 other passengers were aboard the Portuguese liner Carvalho Araujo, which left Lisbon December 27. He had been studying in Italy for seven years.

"Most of the people in Italy are resigned to the fact that the army won't win," he said. "They're also wondering what's happened to their navy."

Food Shortage In France

Rene de Saint-Quentin, former French Ambassador to the United States and recently appointed to a similar post at Brazil, said that there was a definite shortage of food in France—milk, meat and wheat—but that there was no "starvation."

"The food situation is becoming more serious," he said, "and it will be more acute in a month."

Reports had circulated in New York that former King Carol of Rumania might be a passenger on the Portuguese ship, but he was not aboard, and St. Quentin said he understood the ex-monarch was still at Seville, Spain.

Pleased With Leahy Appointment

He said he was pleased with the appointment of Admiral William D. Leahy as United States Ambassador to France—"He's a very good sailor and a trustworthy man."

Ida Treat, a Cleveland (Ohio) author, who had been living in Paris, said the British had bombed the Paris air fields, but not the city.

"In occupied France eighty or ninety per cent. of the people are pro-British and backing de Gaulle," she said. "In the city there is almost no meat—the Germans are taking all of it. The coal shortage is more serious, though, than the food shortage."

SAYS BRITISH HOPE NOW LIES WITH U. S.

Sir Louis Beale Asserts Engineering Genius Will Turn Back Nazis

American General Appeals To Auto Engineers For Stress On "Quality"

[By the Associated Press]

Detroit, Jan. 8—Sir Louis Beale, member of the British Purchasing Commission, said in an address here tonight that Britain's hope "for complete victory, for freedom," lies in the engineering industry of the United States.

Speaking to the Society of Automotive Engineers, he said there was no doubt that "the combined economic and industrial strength of the United States and the British Empire can certainly surpass and outlast that of Germany and the countries under her control."

"Time Is All-Important"

He added, however, that "time is the all-important factor," and continued:

"If the tide of Naziism is to be rolled back, we must act with speed. Compared with the first World War, the pace today is very much faster and Britain needs all the production from her own and your factories without delay. To secure victory the whole of the machine production of democracy must be thrown against the totalitarian onslaught; thrown with all our might—now."

"Despite the bombings, Industrial production for all war purposes proceeds apace throughout Britain," Sir Louis went on. "Should the much heralded invasion of Britain be attempted, we are ready.

3,000,000 Stand Ready

"In Britain 3,000,000 grim, alert and fully armed men stand ready to repel any invader; the whole country is mobilized behind these armed forces; fire fighters, bomb removal squads, hospitals and nurses, transport and food distribution are actively ready."

Maj. Gen. George H. Brett, chief of the United States Air Corps, urged the nation's automotive engineers to strive for the "highest quality in the greatest abundance," in developing the national defense program.

In an address read before the engineers in his absence by Brig. Gen. O. P. Eccles, General Brett said he urged this "to the end that our way of life may prevail and our nation maintain its position of leadership in the upward march of civilization."

Puts Stress On Quality

General Brett said he would not reduce by "one iota" the demand for speed and quantity of production, but wanted to add his plea for quality as well. "Quality" he defined as including "those attributes and characteristics which make for maximum utility."

Earlier in today's session, Maj. Gen. Charles L. Scott, acting chief of the armored forces, reported these forces had expanded about 350 per cent. since they were set up as a separate unit last July 10.

He said that working independently, and in no way copying the Germans, the line of thought of the American Army for development and employment in battle of armored forces has been strikingly similar to that of the Germans.

Questions Some Proposals

General Brett said that "a large group of self-appointed military and political experts propose to sacrifice quality in aircraft in order to obtain larger quantities sooner."

"These gentlemen who have no direct responsibility for national defense," he went on, "would have the people believe that air victories are to be won by the simple expedient of overwhelming a resourceful enemy by sheer numbers, by erecting an impenetrable wall in the sky with run-of-the-mine fighters and by blasting the enemy ranks with swarms of cheap off-the-shelf bombers."

Sir Robert Garran Reports His Country Also Is Training 30,000 War Pilots

Cleveland, Jan. 8 (AP)—Australian troops engaged in the drive against Italian Libya are part of 80,000 sent or being sent to aid Great Britain, Sir Robert Garran, who helped draft Australia's Constitution more than forty years ago, said tonight.

Sir Robert, representing the British Embassy at an Empire Day ceremony at the Cleveland International Exposition, declared his nation also is training 30,000 aviators and plans to prepare another 10,000 for the struggle with Germany and Italy.

U. S. And Britain Dividing American Plane Output

Washington, Jan. 8 (AP)—America's military plane production of about 700 a month is being divided almost equally between the United States Government, on the one hand, and Britain and her Allies on the other, persons close to the industry said today.

Approximately half of the total production is made up of combat planes and half of trainers, it was added.

The British are obtaining far more than half of the combat planes produced in this country, while the United States is taking the lion's share of training ships. Estimates of the percentage of bomber and fighter plane production going to the British and allied countries run beyond seventy per cent.

During November 291 planes were exported, of which the United Kingdom got 190; Canada, 48; Netherlands Indies, 15; Union of South Africa, 6; British India, 4, and Australia, 2. Nine went to Mexico, 5 to Iran, 4 to Uruguay and 1 each to the Philippines, Hongkong, China, Brazil, Argentina, Panama Canal Zone, Guatemala and Costa Rica.

FORD TO CO-OPERATE IN MAKING BOMBERS

Ready to Join With Consolidated Aircraft in Defense Effort

San Diego, Cal., Jan. 8—(AP)—The Ford Motor Co. and Consolidated Aircraft Corp. will co-operate in production of huge bombing planes for national defense.

This was made public today by Edsel Ford and Major Reuben H. Fleet, heads of the respective concerns, after an inspection of Consolidated's San Diego plant and a consultation that lasted several hours.

Ford said he was willing to place all facilities of his River Rouge plant near Detroit into production, "either in whole or in part," on the B-24, four-engined bombers now being built by Consolidated.

Plans, still in the formative stage, call for construction by Ford of bomber parts and their assembly by Consolidated at a plant to be erected at Fort Worth, Texas.

Immediate expansion of the River Rouge plant and a change-over from auto production to plane parts, is contemplated in the plan.

The Douglas Company also will have a place in the picture, assembling parts turned out by the Ford plant in a factory to be built in Tulsa.

Asserting the program has not yet been finally decided on, Ford said with emphasis that "we will do it if we can—and it looks as if we can."

OVERNIGHT HOP TO BRAZIL SEEN POSSIBLE FOR ARMY

Air Pioneer Says U. S. Can Spirit 100,000 Fully-Armed Men to South American Country Within 15-Hour Period

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (AP)—Grover Loening, pioneer aircraft producer, said tonight that more than 100,000 armed American troops could be flown overnight, non-stop, from the United States to Brazil by a fleet of 1,000 of the new giant planes ordered for the army.

Chairman of the board of the Platt-Lepage Aircraft Co., Philadelphia, he talked to the New York Electrical Society, stressing the risks he foresaw in failure to develop aviation for carrying freight, soldiers, ammunition, and guns.

"The giant new plane ordered by the army, the B-19," he said, "can carry up to 125 armed troops with complete equipment 3,000 miles nonstop.

"With planes of this type it would be possible to concentrate 10 army divisions in Florida and transfer them to points on the Brazilian coast 3,000 miles away with a fleet of 1,000 in about 15 hours. Thus, well over 100,000 troops could be spirited from this country for the protection of a neighbor overnight."

Continuing, with what can be done by smaller planes, he said:

Officials of the Bell Aircraft Corporation declined to claim a "record of any kind" for the dive, which surpassed the record of 575 miles an hour plus established just two years ago by H. Lloyd Child, Curtiss-Wright chief test pilot, diving a now obsolete Curtiss Hawk 75 for the French Army.

A double set of instruments confirmed the 620-mile speed notched

In the War Zone

Lesson of Bardia Seen in Power Of Three Co-ordinated Services.

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

If you want a gauge by which to measure the military potentialities of the chief belligerents in the European war—and maybe pick the winner—you can take it from the conquest of Bardia in the Libyan desert.

Bardia fell in a simultaneous triple assault—from land, from the air and from the sea. Here we have the perfect example of the efficiency of a combination of the three fighting services working in unison.

Such a co-ordination of the forces of a first class power is calculated to be invincible unless countered in kind.

If you can name the belligerent which has the three services best developed, or has the facilities for developing them well and rapidly, then you may have found the potential winner of the war. The country lacking any one of these three fighting arms is laboring under a terrible handicap.

The Italians at Bardia had two of the services—a strong mechanized land force and an air fleet. They also were protected by stout fortifications and big guns. But because they lacked the seapower they couldn't withstand the British triple assault. Other factors contributed to the defeat, but the want of the naval arm was fundamental.

Triple Arm in Greece.

The Greco-British victory over the Italians in Greece and Albania was at least partly due to the fact that the Allies could call on the British fleet, thereby being able to counter the Fascists in all three services—and with greater skill.

France was plowed under by the Germans partly because she was woefully weak in the air, partly because of other circumstances, including Nazi fifth column activities.

These and other operations of the war have taught us another basic truth. Most experts now agree that, if we are dealing with major Powers, there isn't likely to be complete victory without invasion by land. Sea power and air power, either separately or together, might almost achieve defeat of the enemy, but the mopping up operation must be performed by the hobnailed infantry.

That's why Germany is straining every nerve to try to find an opening to invade England. Hitler has used everything he had in an effort to knock John Bull out, and now recognizes that he must set troops ashore to do the job.

The Nazi chief probably could have achieved this long ago had he not lacked one of the great fighting arms—a navy. He has a numerically superior air force and the most perfect army the world has seen. However, he's been trying to make his air force serve not only for its very capable self, but for a navy as well.

Must Invade Reich to Win.

Britain recognizes that she probably will have to supplement the strangling effect of her naval blockade by invasion of Germany if she is to win the war. A. V. Alexander, first Lord of the Admiralty, has said:

"We must carry the fight into the enemy's fields. We must not find ourselves up against a position of stalemate."

There's the rub—a possible stalemate. That would suit Hitler down to the ground, for it would permit him to retain all his continental conquests.

Britain is gaining in strength rapidly, and is the only one of the three major combatants who has virtually unlimited potential resources. She has done so well that Premier Churchill, in his recent appeal to France to stand by the Allied standard, felt able to declare:

"In 1941 we shall have command of the air. Remember what that means."

If he is right, it means that Britain hopes to invade Germany this year. Her problem is to avoid being smashed before she has time to complete arming herself and thus bring all three services to top efficiency.

War Communiques

British

CAIRO, Jan. 8 (AP).—Today's British general headquarters communique:

Concentration of our forces in the Tobruk (Libya) area is continuing.

The total British and Australian casualties incurred in the capture of Bardia were less than 600.

Active patrolling continues on the frontier of Sudan and Kenya.

Another general headquarters communique:

It transpires that on the night before Bardia fell, the Black-shirt corps commander and his two Blackshirt (divisional) commanders deserted their troops, leaving the regular commanders to fight on. One of the Blackshirt commanders has since been picked up with the bulk of his staff wandering north of Bardia.

Gen. Bergonzoli (the corps commander) and the others are still missing. It is possible that they decamped by motor boat especially reserved for the purpose.

The search is still continuing."

LONDON, Jan. 8 (AP).—An Admiralty communique tonight:

One of our submarines, H. M. S. Tuna (Lieut. Cmdr. M. K. Cavanagh-Mainwaring, D. S. O., R. N.), has reported having a spirited engagement by night on the surface with a U-boat in enemy waters.

Immediately on encountering H. M. S. Tuna, the U-boat made off at high speed, firing her after gun. H. M. S. Tuna gave chase and opened fire with her four-inch gun. The U-boat was certainly hit by one shell on the conning tower, but unfortunately this cannot be considered vital damage.

H. M. S. Tuna chased the enemy for nearly an hour and only broke off the engagement when forced to dive by the appearance of enemy escort vessels, which came to the rescue of the damaged U-boat.

H. M. S. Tuna had previously sunk an enemy armed tug by gunfire. In neither of these encounters did H. M. S. Tuna sustain any damage or casualties.

An Air Ministry communique:

There were no R. A. F. activities last night.

A communique of the Ministries of Air and Home Security:

There is nothing to report.

A later Air and Home Security Ministries communique:

There has been little enemy air activity over this country today.

This morning a single enemy aircraft dropped bombs on a town in East Anglia. Houses were damaged, but the number of casualties was very small.

This afternoon bombs dropped in a Midland town did some damage, but caused no casualties.

Greek

ATHENS, Jan. 8 (AP).—The Greek high command communique tonight:

Restricted local fighting, which turned to our advantage. Over 300 prisoners were taken and much material of all descriptions, including many automatic weapons and a whole company of mortars, have fallen into our hands.

Our aviation has been active and successfully bombed and machine-gunned the battlefield areas. In an air fight, three enemy aircraft were shot down.

All our planes returned to their bases safely.

The Ministry of Home Security communique:

Enemy aviation bombed Salonica, but no casualties and slight damage resulted. Bombs were dropped by enemy aircraft also on villages in the vicinity of Alta, but no casualties or damage resulted.

A British Royal Air Force communique:

A successful raid on military stores buildings at Elbasani was carried out today by bomber aircraft of the R. A. F.

Snow, sleet and rain falling in the target area made observation of results of the raid difficult, but high explosives and incendiary bombs were seen to hit several buildings, causing a number of fires.

Heavy anti-aircraft fire was experienced, but all our aircraft returned safely.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 8 (AP).—The high command communique today:

During a thrust against the English east coast, one speedboat attacked an enemy convoy, strongly protected by destroyers, off the Thames mouth, sinking one 2,500-ton merchant ship.

The air force, despite unfavorable weather, continued its attacks on London yesterday. Small combat units during the course of the entire day effectively dropped incendiary bombs and explosives on the British capital.

Scattered airplanes, furthermore, successfully attacked airports, rail facilities and war-vital industrial plants in southern and central England. In these actions, numerous airplanes parked on several airports were machine-gunned from low altitudes. One chemical factory was badly hit.

One combat plane on armed reconnaissance in the center of the North Sea off Greater Yarmouth attacked a British minesweeper flotilla, scoring several direct hits on one vessel. The ship was left in a burning, sinking condition.

One enemy plane was downed in an air fight near Dover.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 8 (AP).—Today's high command communique:

In Cirenaica (Libya), patrol and artillery actions were reported between Bardia and Tobruk.

Our planes torpedoed an enemy destroyer near Sollum (Egypt).

Patrols, fighters and assault planes machine-gunned and bombed enemy mechanized forces with shrapnel bombs.

Numerous raids were carried out by the enemy air force on various localities in Cirenaica and the residential section of Tripoli, where four persons were killed and some ten injured. One enemy plane was shot down in combat by one of our fighters.

On the Greek front, local actions took place, during which we inflicted heavy losses on the enemy, and he repeatedly bombed our medical formations without causing casualties. Three enemy planes were shot down in flames.

Our warships bombarded localities and roads on the enemy coast with visible effect.

In East Africa, an attempted enemy bombardment of one of our localities in Eritrea was quickly broken off by intervention of our fighter planes.

LISBON--(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE AP)-WAR HAS FORCED PORTUGAL'S AFRICAN COLONIES TO LOOK AROUND FOR NEW MARKETS.

BECAUSE BRITISH MARITIME AUTHORITIES ARE TIGHT-FISTED WITH NAVICERTS, ANGOLA'S AND MOZAMBIQUE'S WAREHOUSES ARE JAMMED WITH HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF TONS OF MERCHANDISE AWAITING SHIPMENT.

AT LISBON DOCKS, THERE ARE PERHAPS 150,000 TONS OF GOODS DESTINED FOR THE COLONIES -- THAT CAN NOT BE MOVED UNTIL THE BRITISH GIVE THE WORD.

IN THEIR SEARCH FOR NEW OUTLETS, THE PORTUGUESE COLONIES HAVE TURNED FIRST TO THEIR NEIGHBOR, THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

JOSE DE ALMADA, COLONIAL ADVISER OF THE FOREIGN OFFICE, IS ON HIS WAY TO SOUTH AFRICA TO TRY TO NEGOTIATE A TRADE AGREEMENT FOR EXCHANGE OF COFFEE, OIL-BEARING SEEDS, HARDWOODS, FOODSTUFFS AND OTHER COLONIAL PRODUCTS FOR THE UNION'S INDUSTRIAL GOODS. SUCH AN ARRANGEMENT WORKED WELL DURING THE FIRST WORLD WAR. AFTER THE ARMISTICE, HOWEVER, THE UNION DENOUNCED THE PACT, ADHERING TO THE BRITISH EMPIRE'S POST-WAR POLICY OF FOSTERING IMPERIAL TRADE THROUGH ADVANTAGES TO THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMONWEALTH. PORTUGAL'S COLONIES HAVE ALWAYS DONE MOST OF THEIR BUSINESS WITH THE MOTHERLAND, SHIPPING THEIR RAW MATERIALS HERE AND GETTING BACK MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS.

IN 1939, CONTINENTAL PORTUGAL'S IMPORTS FROM THE COLONIES WERE VALUED AT 252,948,942 ESCUDOS (THE ESCUDO IS CURRENTLY QUOTED AT 25 TO THE DOLLAR), 12.13 PER CENT OF ALL IMPORTS. EXPORTS TO THEM WERE WORTH 172,639,027 ESCUDOS, 12.89 PER CENT OF ALL EXPORTS.

RICH ANGOLA, IN WEST AFRICA, FURNISHED THE BULK OF THE GOODS SHIPPED TO THE CONTINENT, 140,802,786 ESCUDOS WORTH, WHILE MOZAMBIQUE WAS SECOND WITH SHIPMENTS VALUED AT 74,205,377 ESCUDOS.

HOWEVER, MOZAMBIQUE WAS A BETTER MARKET FOR PORTUGUESE PRODUCTS, BUYING 79,011,844 ESCUDOS WORTH AGAINST ANGOLA'S 73,091,613.

SPAIN HAS OPENED NEGOTIATIONS FOR THE IMPORTATION OF WOOD FROM THE PORTUGUESE COLONIES BUT HERE AGAIN IT IS UP TO THE BRITISH.

A POSSIBILITY EXISTS ALSO THAT THE UNITED STATES MAY ULTIMATELY ABSORB LARGER AMOUNTS OF COLONIAL PRODUCE. HOWEVER, THE FRUITS, SEEDS, COCONUTS AND WOODS OF THE AFRICAN POSSESSIONS ARE LARGELY COMPETITIVE WITH CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICAN PRODUCTS, AND WASHINGTON'S POLICY OF ENCOURAGING TRADE AMONG THE AMERICAS HURTS THE PORTUGUESE COLONIES' CHANCES.

BRITISH CYCLISTS SAID TO RAID NAZIS

'Suicide Squads' Landed Nine Times at Night to Harass Germans in France

HELD SAMPLE OF INVASION MOVED- JAN. 4)

Volunteers in Groups of Fifty Each Carry Out Sabotage and Gather Information

ART. I

This exposition of British moves toward invading the Continent was written by an Associated Press staff man who has just arrived from England, where he went through the British bombing raids after covering the Nazi Britzkrieg in France. SUN-TIMES-

By WILLIAM McGAFFIN
of The Associated Press. JAN. 5

Great Britain has already begun to invade the Continent—giving the Germans a preview of the mass attack British generals have promised to deliver.

I learned from an extremely reliable source shortly before leaving England three weeks ago that the British up to that time had carried off at least nine daring motorcycle raids into German-occupied France. It is one side of the invasion picture which I believe is not generally known in the United States.

A little trawler pushes softly through the Channel darkness and anchors at a lonely spot on the French coast. There is a muffled commotion as fifty khaki-uniformed figures steal ashore with fifty machine-gun-bearing motorcycles.

All is ready now. With a roar they dash off into the treacherous unknown of a blacked-out, enemy-occupied France. Another spectacular British sortie is in progress.

Young volunteers from the British Army make up these "suicide" squads, which have three principal missions:

1. To terrorize and harass the German forces thinly strung out to a point, some experts say, of great vulnerability over 1,000 miles of coastline. It is a page out of the German High Command's own copybook. No effort is made to hide the identity of the men. They wear the British khaki. The British General Staff wants the Germans to know that Tommies from the regular army have been able to penetrate the lines of the vaunted Reich divisions, to thumb a small but defiant nose, as it were. The British aim apparently is to bolster French morale and keep the Germans in an unending state of nervous apprehension—and to "remind" them of what Britain intends the future should hold for them, if such a feat is possible even now in Britain's admittedly weaker position as regards mechanized war equipment.

2. To capture prisoners and gather information from first-hand observation within the German lines.

3. Sabotage.

Sometimes the raiders go across the short stretch of Channel in a trawler, sometimes in a fishing smack. Sometimes the boats return, sometimes they do not.

There is no money in it. Although a bonus is paid, it is infinitesimal compared to the enormous risk involved. Privates get an extra sixpence, officers an extra pound. There is no glory in it. For reasons best known to itself, the British General Staff has not let the news get about.

The British military sources with whom I talked say some of the raiding parties have reached as far inland as Amiens.

These authorities consider the raids highly significant. They contend that the war will not be won till one side launches a successful major invasion against the other. They say that Britain has demonstrated it will take more than aerial bombardment to force her to her knees. By the same token, they reason that Britain can never hope to knock Germany out from the air alone.

Military experts say the greatest stumbling block in German plans has been the lack of a first-class fighting fleet.

Even without this, they believe, Reichsfuehrer Hitler might have succeeded in an invasion if he had attacked immediately after the collapse of France, instead of giving Britain valuable months to expand her defenses and pep up civilian morale.

The big advantage the British will have over the Germans if and when Britain attempts an invasion is the British fleet. Two things are holding back the British—lack of sufficent armored ground equipment and weakness in the air.

Well-informed neutral aviation sources expect Britain to gain aerial superiority with United States assistance by next July or August. At the same time, they believe, Britain will have manufactured enough tanks and armored cars so that she can attempt a full-dress Continental invasion.

Some expect her to try to go in through the German back door—via the Brenner Pass (this on the supposition that she will have knocked out Italy by then) or via Rumania. Others say the terrain and communications problem would be too difficult—especially through the Balkans. They predict a frontal assault from some such point as Dunkerque.

They say the British cannot move until they have disposed of the Italians. But if and when they have, this would leave the fleet free plus a large part of the Near Eastern army. The plan would be to push in with the fleet, land a body of mechanized troops, then with planes cooperating push a swath to Germany.

British Morale Stands Up Where That of French Broke

(ADV. PMS. TUES. JAN. 4—MORN. JAN. 4)

Correspondent Who Has Seen Both in War Says Bombing by Hitler Unified English for Combat.

This is the second of a series of uncensored articles on Great Britain's immediate situation by an Associated Press man just returned from England where he went from France after that country fell.

JAN-6

By WILLIAM McGAFFIN.
Associated Press Correspondent.

One of the French stenographers in our Paris office became so panicky when war was declared that she tossed up her job and bolted for the country.

George Angus, veteran telegrapher in our London office, was blown clear across the roof by the concussion of a nearby land mine a few nights before I left town. Unhurt, he picked himself up and came back down to work as though nothing had happened.

In the contrast between Latin emotion and British phlegm lies part of the story of the French defeat. In fairness to the French it should be emphasized that their morale was pretty good throughout the entire "phony war" period. The stenographer's reaction, however, was typical of how they blew up when the Germans pierced the extension of the Maginot Line, the defense system they had been taught was "impregnable."

Desertions Were Significant.

One of the first indications I had that military morale was cracking was on a May day when a grimy, road-stained soldier slipped in the back door of my apartment and asked for Yvonne, the maid. It was Albert, her husband.

He had deserted along with some 6,000 other tank corps men and fled to Paris after a disastrous encounter with the Germans at Namur.

"They told us the Belgians were up there holding the line," he said. "When we got there, there was no one but Germans."

As the Germans pressed on panic spread to the civilian population. Even Josette, who kept the little bistro below the office, managed to find a seat in one of the long string of mattress-topped cars that clogged the southbound highways so that they were often unusable for military transport. It was not the fault of the French people. They had been led by their press and politicians to believe they were sitting pretty behind the tough Maginot Line. When the break came, bewilderment and frustration were the natural consequences.

British Learn Lesson.

The British have profited from this French mistake. Their newspapers and politicians constantly take the opposite tack, warning against overconfidence and optimism.

British roads will not be clogged with refugees if England is invaded for the High Command has issued rigid orders for every one to stay put, and is prepared to see the orders carried out.

In further keeping with this idea, the British have refused to declare any of their cities open cities, as the French did. They will not surrender any of them without a fight. Churchill said that London would be defended street by street, and that goes for every town.

Parachute troops were a menace with which the French were inadequately prepared to cope. They improvised hastily a shotgun army at the eleventh hour but the British have had time to perfect an elaborate home guard organization.

Like the American National Guard, the British home guard is made up of men who work at their jobs in the daytime and devote spare hours in the evening to military drill. They are on constant call in their own and neighboring towns. They are armed with second-hand American rifles and Browning machine-guns.

Although this is light equipment, it is thought sufficient to back up the regular army, with its more powerful weapons.

Parachutists themselves were not so great a menace in France as the fear they provoked among the population. I remember one day when the Paris police were flooded with warnings that parachutists were descending on the city. One woman swore she could see a man's legs dangling in front of her window. A man emptied his revolver outside his window at a weather balloon floating across town.

The Germans encouraged these scares, and on Great Britain they dropped empty parachutes, cases of maps and other paraphernalia in an effort to convince the people that parachute troops were being landed. The English were not taken in. The phony props were picked up and put on view in a glass case.

Hitler Solidified Morale.

The British always felt they had many similarities with the Germans, and the military had a difficult time getting the people to hate them as an enemy. Little old ladies would invite the German pilot who bailed out into their gardens to come in and have a cup of tea. Hitler solved this problem with his aerial onslaught.

One of the greatest advantages the British have over the French is the superiority complex bred into them, which is a bore in peacetime. This, I believe, is one of the two big reasons for British morale.

Another reason is the way that they have managed to readjust their lives to war conditions. It helps them take the bombs with a smile, like the cockney cop who told of his son:

"I have the silliest son. I can't get him to come in out of the raids. The other night we all went to the Anderson shelter and he kept sticking his head out. Finally I said to him, 'come in here you silly goof and give the stuff a chance to fall.'"

Britain Slow to Draft Labor As Workers Are Seen Restive

Bevin Declares Step Would Slow Down Production—Weekly Pay Checks Are One Source of Grievances.

This is the third of a series of uncensored articles on Great Britain's immediate situation by an Associated Press man just returned from England, where he went from France after that country fell.

By WILLIAM McGAFFIN.
Associated Press Correspondent.

John Englishman, who works in the ladies ready-to-wear at Selfridge's, may find himself one day soon turning out carburetors in an airplane factory. That's an exaggerated, perhaps, but perfectly possible example of the labor-drafting step Great Britain may have to take, if she is to win this war in the factory.

Winston Churchill's new Government got the right in the Defense Powers act last May 22 to order any man to leave the job he is doing if it is considered non-essential to the war effort and to take one that is essential. Mr. Churchill never has used this power—partly because it is loaded with political dynamite.

Neutral observers say that British labor already is restive. Labor Minister Ernest Bevin declares that use of this measure would heighten that feeling and in the long run would bring no worth while speedup in production.

The veteran union boss who walks like a heavyweight wrestler and talks like a stevedore presents this argument on behalf of five million union members: "Give labor what it wants and it will work its head off, but force labor and it will be sure to slow down."

Unfilled Orders Mounting.

Yet the growing pile of unfilled munitions orders beside the numerous factories that are working below capacity has posed a grave problem. Labor conscription in the opinion of certain military men and industrialists is the only answer.

One recognized reason why there is a shortage of skilled labor is that some of it has been absorbed into the army. The logical thing to do, in the opinion of one group of experts, would be to release these men to return to their old jobs. Indeed, they would go much further—they would release thousands of unskilled laborers, as well, to be trained for technical factory jobs. They argue that the army is unnecessarily large for its present responsibilities; that it is needlessly immobilizing a reservoir of manpower.

Their proposition, however, is considered by the powers-that-be as "too advanced and too experimental." To date the only action in this direction has been the freeing of several thousand utility workers to help repair bomb damage and of 15,000 unskilled laborers to clear away bomb debris from London streets.

That Question of Unemployed.

A question American reporters often ask is: "If there is a labor shortage, why are there still thousands of unemployed?"

We are told by the Government that the "hard core" of unemployment has been reduced now to about 75,000. Certainly a great reduction has been made in the unemployed total, which was set at 766,845 last July, but some impartial observers reply that "hard core" does not tell the whole story, and raise further questions.

Why, for instance, are the jobless miners of South Wales not brought up to London to dig air raid tunnels? Why are skilled war workmen whose factories have been bombed not moved to other areas at once, instead of being kept on the dole in their own neighborhood until the factories can be put into running order again?

These were two of the questions being asked in the opposition press as I left England three weeks ago. The transfer of bombed-out workers was carried out to a certain extent in the case of Bristol, but the newspapers declared that generally red tape and muddling seem to have blocked any thorough absorption of the unemployed.

Another factor is that most British factories began the war on an eight-hour production day and even now there are many which do not work the clock around. In some cases where the men themselves want to defy night raiders, the employers refuse to take the risk even though the Government says it will be responsible.

One grievance of the British workman today is his weekly pay check. The last official survey, made in July, showed that the war had boosted the average weekly wage of all workers in metal, engineering and shipbuilding industries from three pounds (about $12 on the basis of the present exchange rate) in October 1938 to four pounds and five shillings (about $17).

But the workman contends that his salary has not kept pace with the war-invoked rise in the cost of living.

The employers themselves contend publicly that it would do no good to raise wages now, since the raise would automatically entail higher production costs and consequently a still higher cost of living, thus nullifying the additional salary.

When you ask labor leaders in general what they want, they reply it is a "better chance in the future of a caste-ridden land that draws most of its leaders from the 2 per cent of the population attending 'public' schools."

One of their major fears is that the war will jeopardize the advantages they have managed to acquire up to now. For instance, labor men say they would like an iron-clad guaranty of protection if their ranks are to be opened to a flood of new labor which undoubtedly would mean a post-war surplus of skilled workmen.

British Hope Eden Can Win Russia's Friendship in War

New Foreign Secretary Revives Efforts Which Were Blocked by Opposition of Lord Halifax

By WILLIAM McGAFFIN

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (AP).—A few short hours after Anthony Eden moved into the British Foreign Office again after the 3-year absence precipitated by the Chamberlain appeasement program, he was closeted in a long "friendly" talk with Russian Ambassador Ivan Maisky.

This was an unusual experience for the little Russian. Repeated rebuffs had been his fate under Mr. Eden's predecessor, Lord Halifax, whose appointment as ambassador to Washington left the post clear for the return Mr. Eden always had yearned to make.

The meeting symbolizes a pressing double problem which has weighed on Winston Churchill ever since he became prime minister—that is, how to win Russian support and how to control Britain's reactionary Conservative Party which dominates the country's political life. The two are related.

Red Friendship Blocked

Britain even under Neville Chamberlain recognized the need of Russian co-operation, if possible; of Russian neutrality, at the least. But the courting of the Russian bear was halfhearted and futile, particularly under Lord Halifax. He represents the dominating reactionary element in the Conservative Party that has always feared Communism more than Nazism—at least up to the beginning of the war.

England finally sent wealthy Socialist Sir Stafford Cripps to Moswith some maneuver that nullified the gain.

Mr. Eden and Prime Minister Churchill are Conservatives, too, but of the "young turk" brand. They see as vitally important the task of winning Soviet Russia to Britain's aid—or at least preventing her from springing to life on Fuehrer Adolf Hitler's side.

Reds Might Decide War

Thus with Lord Halifax gone, the British campaign takes on new impetus. How successful it will be is another question. Britain has gained American aid. If now she could win over Russia, observers say it might be the deciding factor in the war.

The British are encouraged by various reports of "coolness" sprung up between the Soviets and Germany since the signing of the nonaggression pact which preceded the war. They are fairly certain Germany is getting little or no help from Russia at the moment. But they have not forgotten their conviction that the Russian policy always has been to "divide and conquer." They say there is no evidence to indicate Russia has abandoned the idea generally credited to her of waiting till England and Germany both are exhausted.

Russian Policy Expounded

Reporters in London, admitted to the Russian Embassy by the square-shouldered Muscovite doorman who first peers through a speakeasy-style slit in the door, hear Mikhail Korj expound Russian policy. This small, sparkling, round-faced first secretary of the embassy and ace press [illegible] man of the London diplomatic corps argues convincingly that Russia wants only two things—to develop her own resources and to trade with everyone.

The Soviets say they want to be friends with Britain but add under their breath that they look behind all Whitehall offers for any hint that Britain is trying to get he Russians to fight Britain's battle. They say the Conservative old guard always has had the thought that by fence sitting and cunning manipulation it could get the Nazis and the Soviets at each other's throat.

Eden Liked by Russians

It seems, however, that if any Briton could win the Russians over it would be Anthony Eden. The British public firmly believes there is more to him than his Savile Row clothes and Oxford accent. They know that in Russian eyes he has been on the "right side" of most of the important international developments of interest to Russia ever since the Spanish civil war. These include the matter of Spanish nonintervention, the Chinese-Japanese war and nonappeasement in the Czecho-Slovak crisis.

The Russians themselves say that Mr. Eden is one of the Englishmen they "distrust the least." The question is: Can he tear down the great wall of suspicion and distrust erected in Russian minds by a long line of old guard British statesmen?

Labor Sentiment Grows

Critics of the old-guard faction say this is only one of the things they have done to "weaken Britain's war effort." These critics incidentally represent no inconsiderable body of opinion extending even into the ranks of some of the younger members of the Conservative Party itself. The Labor (which in England is synonymous with Socialist) opposition in the House of Commons won 154 seats in the last general election in 1935 to the Conservatives' 387.

In recent months Socialist sentiment has increased so substantially in the United Kingdom many observers predict they would turn the Conservatives out if an election were held tomorrow.

One of the bitterest charges against the old guard conservatives is that they are "continuing to play politics" at the most critical time in England's history.

Appointments Criticized

These critics join in the overwhelming sentiment that Mr. Churchill, still dynamic despite his 66 years, is the best possible choice as the nation's leader. But, they argue, he has become almost a "prisoner" of the Conservative reactionaries.

Leading opposition newspapers such as the News Chronicle and Daily Herald say the principal claim to high office of such men as Chancellor of the Exchequer Kingsley Wood and Lord President of the Council John Anderson, and Capt. Margesson, who replaced Mr. Eden as war minister, is that they have been good party wheelhorses. They accuse the Conservaties of following the "time-honored practice" of depriving men of "real ability" from serving the nation in these responsible posts for the sake of "grabbing off political plums."

New Halifax Post Attacked

One of the opposition papers' deepest disappointments came when Mr. Churchill, who succeeded Mr. Chamberlain as leader of the Conservative Party, appointed Lord Halifax, one of the "men of Munich" and Conservative vice leader, to the Washington ambassadorship in succession to the late Lord Lothian.

Up to the start of the Italian offensive, editors of such opposition papers as the News Chronicle and the Herald complained that the "dead hand" of the Foreign Office—as wielded by Lord Halifax—was slowing down the war by invoking a spirit of super-caution on the services. They maintained the army and navy were ready and anxious for bold steps long before the surprising Greek resistance gave them an opening that could not be refused.

Greeks Started Action

But for the Greeks, they are convinced the forces might still be marking time under a "wait and see" policy.

These editors have accused the Conservatives of hamstringing not only Mr. Churchill but also the "twin hopes of the masses"—Trade Union Leader Ernest Beyin, who became Labor minister, and Socialist Herbert Morrison, who now is home security chief in charge of the air-raid shelter program.

Despite their complaints, the government's critics are trying to "play ball" with it. For they know too well the part disunity played in the collapse of France.

HEAVY COST OF EUROPE'S "NEW ORDER."

What Europe pays for having a "new order" thrust on it is seen in the following officially compiled statistics just released in London regarding German exploitation of occupied territories. This takes two main forms.

A. The costs of military occupation, which are the measure of the unwillingness of the people to submit voluntarily to the "new order."

B. Excessive imports to Germany through clearing accounts which are the German estimate of the ability of each occupied country to pay in order to maintain that material superiority for Germany which the "new order" is designed to provide:

SUMS DEMANDED BY GERMANY ARE:

France: 400,000,000 francs or 20,000,000 reichsmarks per day.

Denmark: 1,500,000 crowns per day.

Norway: Between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 crowns per day.

Belgium: 2,400,000 reichmarks per day.

Holland: 1,200,000 reichsmarks per day.

Roumania: 1,750,000 reichsmarks per day.

CLEARING BALANCES

Denmark's change in clearing balances based on national bank returns was 225,000,000 reichsmarks.

Norway: approximately 150,000,000 reichsmarks.

Holland: at the end of September the rise in the Dutch clearing balance was estimated at 120,000,000 florins. It was probably at least 180,000,000 florins (225,000,000 reichsmarks.)

Belgium and France: no regular clearing arrangements.

TOTAL EXPLOITATION COSTS.

Based on the above figures, it is estimated that the total exploitation to November 30 was:

Norway:	570,000,000	reichsmarks,	or 197	reichsmarks	per head.
Denmark:	400,000,000	"	, or 105	"	per head
Holland:	465,000,000	"	, or 50	"	" "
Belgium:	400,000,000	"	, or 47	"	" "
France	3,560,000,000	"	, or 85	"	" "

Total exploitation: 5,400,000,000 reichsmarks.

The cost of maintaining the German forces at present in occupied territory is 750,000,000 reichsmarks, or 15% of the total war expenditure.

Waves of British Warplanes Attack Naples and Palermo

R. A. F. Hammers Fascist Points As Far South As Central Africa

Duce's Press Warns U. S. Against Trying To Convoy Ships To Britain

[By the Associated Press]

Valletta, Malta, Jan. 9—British fighter planes shot down four of a dozen Italian planes and anti-aircraft fire bagged another in raids that prompted three alerts in this British Mediterranean island fortress today.

The four shot down by fighter planes crashed into the sea. One wounded Italian pilot was rescued from the water.

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 9—Long-range British bombers smashed at the key Italian port of Naples early today, the Italian high command announced, in a series of raids, that stretched from Italy proper to central Africa.

The bombers swept over Naples, some one hundred miles south of Rome, in successive waves shortly after midnight, the Italian communique said. Five persons were killed and about thirty wounded.

Some fifteen buildings as well as a hospital ship in Naples harbor were hit, the Italians acknowledged. Most of the "numerous bombs," they said, fell "in the sea."

R. A. F. Ranges South

From Naples the R. A. F. offensive spread southward to picturesque Palermo on the Island of Sicily, across the Mediterranean to the Libyan ports of Tripoli and Bengasi and almost to the Equator in attacks on Italian military bases in Eritrea and Somaliland.

Three persons were killed at Tripoli, the communique said, while declaring that in the other raids no casualties or material damage occurred.

The Italians themselves, now faced with a weekly war cost estimated by the Rome radio at the equivalent of $40,000,000, seemed to be concentrating on the war at sea.

Sub Reports Two Sinkings

In the Atlantic, the high command announced, a raiding Italian submarine reported a double bag of a British auxiliary cruiser and a 3,600-ton steamer.

Apparently operating in the Mediterranean, an Italian torpedo boat crew was credited with ramming and sinking an "enemy" submarine.

At the same time the newspaper Il Piccolo gave the United States an implied warning not to attempt to convoy merchant ships to Britain, declaring the "suicide squads" aboard Italy's torpedo-launching planes make up "such a deadly force as to compel even the commanders of the American fleet to ponder."

Fascist Flyers Attack

In Libya, the communique said, Fascist flyers attacked "enemy mechanized forces, destroying several armored cars."

On the Greek front, it said, "air squadrons effectively pounded troop concentrations and enemy military preparations. Dive bombers attacked batteries and bridges. Troops were machine-gunned by squadrons of our fighter planes."

The Italians claimed five "enemy fighter planes" were shot down in flames in various combats, while some British raiders were brought down in the attack on Eritrea and Somaliland.

Bengasi and Tripoli Raided.

Rome, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—British planes raided Bengasi and Tripoli, the Italian High Command announced today, killing three persons in the latter city, while Italian planes destroyed several armored cars in an attack on a British mechanized group.

"The enemy carried out air raids on some of our bases in Eritrea and Somaliland without causing damage," the communique also declared. "Enemy planes were shot down."

Farinacci Says Italy Feels Need For Revenge

Cremona, Italy, Jan. 9 (AP)—Roberto Farinacci, extremist Fascist, wrote today in his newspaper, Il Regime Fascista, that the "decisive word" in this war yet would be said on the Mediterranean front and that the Germans "will be present in this sector" with the Italians in order to say it.

Italy, as never before, "now feels the need for revenge," he said, "and now as ever before is ready to accept any sacrifice in order to punish British haughtiness with defeat."

This, he added, is so even though England "has caught her second wind from the attitude of the United States."

It already has been announced that the Italians are being reinforced with a German flying corps.

Rome Paper Warns U. S.

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 9—The newspaper Il Piccolo, calling Italy's torpedo-launching aviators "suicide squads," declared today they would be a threat to any United States convoys that might attempt to transport supplies to Britain.

The phrase "suicide squad" volontari alla morte—was used during the Ethiopian war to describe the Italian flyers' daring.

Key To Shipping

"This daring," Il Piccolo said, "not only is an important key to shipping in the Mediterranean. A repetition of these torpedoings from the sky of both warships and merchant ships opens vast new possibilities to Axis aviation, to control also the waters of the Atlantic, on which the speech of President Roosevelt permits one to imagine convoys of merchant ships escorted by warships, not belonging to European nations.

"We affirm with absolute certainty that this new naval air factor appears in such deadly force as to compel even the commanders of the American fleet to ponder."

Claim Greater Progress

Italy is developing air torpedoings toward greater accuracy and longer range, the newspaper added.

"Without under-estimating the air torpedoing ability of our adversaries," the newspaper said, "it remains a fact that we have made more progress."

DUCE REPLACES AIDS

Names Eighteen New Fascist Party Officials.

Rome, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—Premier Mussolini has named four new inspectors and fourteen new provincial secretaries of the Fascist party to replace officials who have enlisted for military service.

Five provincial secretaries have been assigned to special duties. Announcement of the changes was made last night.

Italian Soldiers Killed in Alps.

Berne, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—An Italian soldier was rescued and the bodies of three others were removed today from the debris of an avalanche on the Alpine frontier zone near Craveggia. The Italian authorities had requested Swiss aid in finding the soldiers, who were on border patrol duty when swept away.

British Circle Tobruk, Dash 40 Miles West

Motor Units Capture 35 Planes at Gazala; R.A.F. Raids as Far as Bengasi

Another Offensive Starts in Ethiopia

Natives, With Aerial Aid, Seize Gubba as Italian Garrison Takes Flight

By The Associated Press

CAIRO, Jan. 9.—British motorized troops were reported today to be driving on far beyond Tobruk, apparently drawing about that important Italian Libyan base the western arc of the same kind of semicircle of steel that crushed Bardia. Heavy Italian losses of planes were reported by the Royal Air Force.

Some British units, R. A. F. headquarters said, had penetrated the desert west of Tobruk as far as Gazala, forty miles away, and there seized thirty-five Fascist warplanes already put out of action by British bombers.

British general headquarters said: "While preparations for the reduction of Tobruk are proceeding, our mechanized forces are now operating west of the town."

The British also reported that the Italians were facing serious difficulties in Ethiopia, as well as in Libya. A communique said that Ethiopian "patriots," supported by the R. A. F., had driven the Italians from the western Ethiopian post of Gubba, twenty miles from the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan border, and "are now closing around the fleeing Italian garrison."

R. A. F. Strikes Far and Wide

The British thrusts have been supported by one of the most widespread aerial offensives loosed in Africa. British bombs were said to have fallen on Italian positions along the Libyan coast as far west as the port of Bengasi, 300 miles from the Egyptian frontier.

Gazala itself was heavily attacked, and at Benina, a British communique reported, 100 Italian warplanes were bombed on the ground, with "several" of them smashed and others badly damaged.

At Bengasi "four or five" ships were hit squarely, it was said, and the port's warehouses were set aflame, and near the oasis of Gi-arabub, far south of Tobruk, Italian motorized caravans were attacked.

Seven Italian planes at Tmimi were burned out, the R. A. F. said. Low-flying British planes attacked at Martuba, where fifteen enemy planes were on the ground. Two were set afire and others were badly damaged, the British reported.

All this, taken in conjunction with the previously announced British seizure of forty Italian planes at the Tobruk air base of El Adem, added up to announced Fascist plane losses of almost 100 within two days.

Air Blows Cripple Italians

An official R. A. F. statement remarked that the continuing blows at the source of Italian air power provided an "explanation for the weakness of the enemy opposition."

ETHIOP TROOPS REPORTED IN WIDE REVOLTS

Native Tribes Rise And Force Italian Garrisons To Flee Posts

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 9—British headquarters indicated tonight another war front may develop in Ethiopia, where natives are reported to have taken advantage of repeated R. A. F. raids to rise in revolt against Italian garrisons.

Since Italy declared war, it was stated unofficially, British bombers have attacked every place of importance, including the capital, Addis Ababa, in the one-time kingdom of Haile Selassie.

Wherever possible, the British raids have been followed by attacks of native tribesmen on the Fascist garrisons, the British say.

Italians Forced To Flee

In some instances, as reported in today's R. A. F. communique, the Italians have been forced to flee. A garrison driven from the post of Guba is being pursued by tribesmen who are closing in, the communique said.

Ethiopians also have been harassing Italian lines of communication, official sources disclosed, causing considerable disruption to movement of supplies to garrisons in the empire.

Haile Selassie himself is in the African war theater, his exact whereabouts unknown. He flew to Africa in September to rally his army after the British announced recognition of his Government as the lawful regime of the East African empire.

Tribes Swear Allegiance

A house in Khartum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, was placed at his disposal and soon after Ethiopian tribesmen crossed the border to swear allegiance to him anew.

Later, he was reported to have been a target of an Italian air raid on Doro a border mission post.

The Lion of Judah, assisted by British officers, has been training remnants of his former army in the modern tactics they so sorely lacked when they were conquered by Italy in 1936.

They also have been supplied with newer weapons, and some have mastered the operation of tanks and airplanes.

Battery of Mortars Seized —Salonika Raided.

Athens, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—A whole battery of mortars and more than 300 prisoners were captured by the Greeks in yesterday's local fighting along the snow-covered Albanian battle-front, it was announced here. Greek warplanes bombed and machine-gunned the battlefield areas and shot down three Italian planes, the Greek High Command asserted. In the Klisura sector, Greek patrols were said to have made minor gains.

A Government spokesman, referring to Italian claims of success against the Greeks, commented: "In fact, there have been some operations of local importance in the Pogradetz region, where the Italians attempted to capture some of our advance units. The enemy was decimated, being unable even to remove his dead (about twenty)."

He added that the main hospital at Salonika, full of Italian wounded, was bombed, but that no damage or casualties resulted.

Italian Bombers Active.

Rome, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—The Italian High Command today announced the bombing of Salonika and of Greek troops and bridges in Albania.

"On the Greek front," the communique said, "patrol activity and local actions were reported. . . . Our air squadrons effectively bombed troop concentrations. . . . Dive-bombers attacked batteries and bridges. Troops were machine-gunned by squadrons of our fighter planes.

"Salonika was bombed with evident effectiveness. Our planes shot down five enemy planes in flames in various combats."

Rush New Defenses in Snow; Foe Reports 200 Captives

ATHENS, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Italians threw up barbed-wire entanglements around new positions today in an effort to stem dogged Greek advances at the bayonet point.

The new intrenchments were being dug hastily in the snow-covered Klisura sector, where the Greeks reported they had overcome some of the stiffest resistance of the war to capture key positions and some hamlets.

"Important positions were captured at the bayonet point," a laconic Greek communique said. It also listed the capture of twenty mortars and 200 additional prisoners. Wednesday night's communique had announced capture of "a complete company of mortars."

Italian Ship Reported Sunk

DUBROVNIK, Yugoslavia, Jan. 9 (AP).—Unconfirmed reports heard here today said another Italian ship carrying war supplies to Albania had been torpedoed off the Yugoslav coast—the fourth reported sunk in the last ten days. The report said the ship was attacked after leaving a bay south of here, where it had taken temporary refuge.

DEFEAT OF AXIS UP TO U. S., SAYS CHURCHILL

He Stresses America's Role In Bidding Halifax Symbolic Good-By

Prime Minister Lauds Roosevelt As "A Pre-eminent Figure"

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 9—Winston Churchill, declaring that a final victory over "totalitarian intolerance" depended upon the United States, symbolically dispatched Ambassador Lord Halifax to Washington today for a mission "as momentous as any that the monarchy has entrusted to an Englishman" in a lifetime.

Speaking at a luncheon of the Pilgrims, an Anglo-American organization, the Prime Minister bade Godspeed to the Viscount and, at the same time, delivered an extraordinary eulogy of President Roosevelt as a "famous statesman"—a "preeminent figure . . . called for the third time to lead the American democracies."

Hopkins Arrives

All this preceded by a few hours the arrival in London of Harry L. Hopkins, President Roosevelt's special representative. Hopkins flew from Lisbon to an English airport and a special train brought him into the city just after the air-raid sirens had screamed the night's alarm.

Hopkins, who left the railway station with Brendan Bracken, Prime Minister Churchill's secretary, said only that he had "a good trip and I'm feeling fine."

At the luncheon, Churchill spoke of Lord Halifax "as an envoy who comes from the very center of our counsels and knows all our secrets"; as one who had "vowed himself to prosecute this war against Nazi tyranny at whatever cost until its last vestiges are destroyed."

World's Future At Stake

"It is no exaggeration to say that the future of the whole world and the hopes of a broadening civilization founded upon Christian ethics depend upon the relations between the British Empire or commonwealth of nations and the United States of America," Churchill said.

"The identity of purpose and persistence of resolve prevailing throughout the English-speaking world will, more than any other single fact, determine the way of life which will be open to generations, and perhaps to centuries, which follow our own.

Chance Would Be Lost

"If cooperation between the United States and the British Empire in the task of extirpating the spirit and regime of totalitarian intolerance—wherever it may be found—were to fail, the British Empire, rugged and embattled, might indeed hew its way through and preserve its life and strength for the inevitable renewal of the conflict on worse terms after an uneasy truce.

"But the chance of setting the march of mankind clearly and surely along the high roads of human progress would be lost and might never return.

"There we stand, all of us, upon the watchtowers of history and have offered to us the glorious opportunity of making the supreme sacrifices and exertions needed by a cause which it may not be irreverent to call sublime."

When Lord Halifax will leave was not disclosed; the Prime Minister spoke, however, of "the weeks before his departure."

Prime Minister Churchill's Address to the Pilgrims

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Jan. 9—The text of Prime Minister Winston Churchill's address to the Pilgrims follows:

It is no exaggeration to say that the future of the whole world and the hopes of a broadening civilization founded upon Christian ethics depend upon the relations between the British Empire or Commonwealth of Nations and the United States of America.

The identity of purpose and persistence of resolve prevailing throughout the English-speaking world will, more than any other single fact, determine the way of life which will be open to generations, and perhaps to centuries, which follow our own.

Chance Would Be Lost

"If cooperation between the United States and the British Empire in the task of extirpating the spirit and regime of totalitarian intolerance—wherever it may be found—were to fail, the British Empire, rugged and embattled, might indeed hew its way through and preserve its life and strength for the inevitable renewal of the conflict on worse terms after an uneasy truce. But the chance of setting the march of mankind clearly and surely along the high roads of human progress would be lost and might never return.

"Glorious Opportunity"

There we stand, all of us, upon the watch towers of history and have offered to us the glorious opportunity of making the supreme sacrifices and exertions needed by a cause which it may not be irreverent to call sublime.

I have always taken the view that the fortunes of mankind in its tremendous journey are principally decided for good or for ill—but mainly for good, for the path is upward—by its greatest men and its greatest episodes.

I therefore hail it as a most fortunate occurrence that at this awe-striking climax in world affairs there should stand at the head of the American Republic a famous statesman, long versed and experienced in the work of government, in whose heart there burns the fire of resistance to aggression and oppression, and whose sympathies and nature make him the sincere and undoubted champion of justice and of freedom and of the victims of wrongdoing wherever they may dwell.

And not less do I rejoice that this pre-eminent figure should newly have received the unprecedented honor of being called for the third time to lead the American democracies.

His Majesty's government had placed in Washington an Ambassador, Lord Lothian, whose character and qualities gained him the trust and friendship of President Roosevelt. Suddenly, unexpectedly, Lothian was struck down by death.

A link was broken, a gap was opened, and a loss of the highest consequence was sustained at a very grave moment for the British and American peoples and for the causes which they have in their different ways espoused.

We therefore thought it our duty to restore this link, to fill this gap, to repair this loss by sending, without regard to the derangement of our forces and circle here, the best man we could find, without regard to any other consideration whatsoever. We chose our Foreign Secretary, who had himself chosen Lord Lothian, to fill Lord Lothian's place.

Our choice was most agreeable to the President, and it commands the full confidence of nearly all those in this country who mean to persevere in our righteous cause until its certain victorious end is reached.

"Man of Light and Learning"

In Edward Halifax we have a man of light and learning, whose company is a treat and whose friendship it is an honor to enjoy. I have often disagreed with him in the twenty years I have known him, but I have always respected him and his actions because I know that courage and fidelity are the essence of his being and that, whether as soldier with his regiment in the last war or as the ruler of 400,000,000 in India, he has never swerved from the path of duty as he saw it shining out before him.

As a man of deep but unparaded and unaffected religious convictions and as for many years an ardent lover of the chase, he has known how to get the best out of both worlds.

Like all members of the present national government in Great Britain, he has vowed himself to prosecute this war against Nazi tyranny, at whatever cost, until its last vestiges are destroyed.

We send to the United States an envoy who comes from the very center of our counsels and knows all our secrets. Although while Lord Halifax is serving as Ambassador out of this country he cannot be a member of the war Cabinet, he will be, if I may borrow a military term not inappropriate to the times in which we live, as it were, seconded from it.

He still attends all our meetings and will continue to do so during the weeks before his departure; and, should he be able to return here for consultation at any time in the Summer, as I hope may be possible, he will resume his full functions and responsibilities as a Minister of the Crown.

We now bid him and his brilliant and devoted wife godspeed and all good fortune, and it is our fervent hope that he may prosper in a mission as momentous as any that the monarchy has entrusted to an Englishman in the lifetime of the oldest of us here.

NAZIS HIT BACK HARD FOR TWO RAIDS BY RAF

London, Jan. 10 (Friday) (AP).—The Royal Air Force attacked targets in western Germany during the night, the British announced today, while German bombers struck at Britain from London to Liverpool in one of the biggest and most widespread raids in several weeks.

Reports from widely spread districts of England indicated that the Nazi air attacks were directed mainly against coastal towns and inland manufacturing areas in an apparent effort to repay the RAF for heavy raids on Emdon and Wilhelmshaven the night before. It was the first activity by the Luftwaffe in 3½ nights.

The Nazi layoff was attributed to the recent bad weather, though the RAF braved it to attack Germany. But with clearing skies the Nazis struck at London soon after dark last night.

South Wales Revisited.

Points in South Wales and the west of England reported new visitations. In south England, an explosion in the sky during an anti-aircraft barrage shook houses 10 miles away.

The "raiders-passed" signal sounded here after scattered attacks on the capital and elsewhere, mostly by single bombers. Firemen rushed to extinguish one blaze in London.

Liverpool was among the Merseyside towns visited, but only one fatality was reported there. A northwest town was harassed by incendiaries and explosives.

(The Berlin radio, heard by The News, said Bristol had been heavily bombed.)

RAF Shows the Way.

The RAF was the first to break the lull, with a seven-hour raid Wednesday night and early Thursday on the naval dockyards of Wilhelmshaven and Emden, the Air Ministry disclosed. Flying all the way through snow, the bombers were declared to have started large fires in both ports.

London, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—"Free French" headquarters announced today the 1,400-ton French submarine Narval, first unit of the French Navy to join Gen. Charles de Gaulle's forces, had been sunk by enemy action. A communique said the submarine, a fifteen-year-old vessel, was lost in operations with the Allied forces after she had "distinguished herself."

Meanwhile the British Admiralty announced that the submarine Regulus is overdue and must be considered lost. She had a surface displacement of 1,475 tons and normally carried a crew of fifty officers and men.

German Bases Bombed.

London, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—British planes raided Wilhelmshaven, German major naval base, for seven hours last night, the Air Ministry announced today, and started fires in the great naval dockyard, the Marine Werft.

A violent and prolonged attack was also made on the Emden naval base, the Ministry declared, and at least twenty fires started there.

The Air Ministry's news service reported that the Emden attacks began at 8 P. M. and continued at intervals until early this morning, the British flying through a hail of anti-aircraft fire.

30.24-6869

30.24-6869

"The vigor with which Wilhelmshaven and Emden were defended showed the importance which the Germans attach to these ports and also the respect which they feel for our bombers," the Ministry said.

Snow extended without a break over the land and frozen water, the news service said, but added that the weather "did nothing to protect the dockyards."

Some of the bombers attacked Bauhafen harbor at Wilhelmshaven, on each side of which there are slips and drydocks and submarine and shipbuilding yards, the news service said. Just at the west of the harbor one fire started which was visible for fifty miles, it reported, while later an even bigger fire started in the southern corner of the harbor.

London's sirens screamed tonight and anti-aircraft batteries went into action after three nights of quiet as the Nazi air force opened an attack on the capital. It was the first night alarm since the all clear sounded about midnight Sunday.

Eleven Killed in Reich.

Berlin, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—Eleven civilians were killed and fourteen were injured by British air raiders who scattered high explosive and incendiary bombs over the coastal regions of northwest Germany during the night, the German High Command reported today. Minor damage to one industrial plant was acknowledged, but most of the bombs were said to have fallen in residential sections.

A troop camp on England's southeast coast was also reported effectively bombed.

Two hits were scored on a motor factory near Coventry in the course of several lone-wolf raids on England yesterday, the High Command also reported today. Air force operations were limited by adverse weather conditions, the communique indicated.

The attack on the Coventry factory, it said, was made from an altitude of only 300 feet in the face of "the strongest anti-aircraft and machine gun defense," the raider having dived through a balloon barrage to reach his objective.

Dublin, Jan. 9—The Government declared in an official statement tonight that "bombs which were dropped at Rathdown Park, Dublin, on the night of January 1-2 and on Donore Terrace on the night of January 2-3 have now been identified as of German origin.

Bombs dropped in other parts of Ireland were previously identified as German and the Government has protested to Berlin.

JAN 10 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Friday, Jan. 10—A large-scale British air attack was directed last night at industrial and supply centers in western Germany, but authorized sources reported early today that only a few planes succeeded in breaking through the defenses and dropping explosives on various towns.

Even these, it was said, did not inflict damage on war-essential objectives, but destroyed some apartment houses and one school. The localities were not identified.

One British plane was shot down by German planes, authorized sources said, and the efforts of the others were frustrated by anti-aircraft forces employing all means of defense including barrage balloons.

Most Fail To Reach Goals

Most of the raiders were said to have failed to reach their goals and released their bombs over open country of the western frontier districts.

Meanwhile, the Luftwaffe continued attacks on the British Isles. Military targets at Bristol and other towns in south England were bombed effectively, the informed sources said, and large fires broke out in the raided areas.

Oust "Imperialist" Regime, Dreiser Counsels British

U. S. Novelist Urges English Leftists To "End This War For Money And Privilege"

JAN 10 1941

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 9—Theodore Dreiser, American novelist, cabled the forthcoming "people's convention," sponsored by the Leftist People's Vigilance Committee, to "set aside" what he called Britain's imperialist governing group and promised that "ninty-five per cent. of the Americans who make America what it is will come to your aid."

Paul Robeson, Negro singer and actor, also sent his "warmest greetings" to the convention, which will be held Sunday.

Dreiser saluted the convention "warmly and hopefully" and suggested for England "a people's government—a government of workers and farmers and clerks of England—and no other."

Dreiser said: "Your imperialist group lives and functions for itself—not for your advancement or liberty.

"It has done nothing for you or for the 500,000,000 people who inhabit the empire, nor will it.

"Set it aside. End this war for money and privilege and help the world to a new day. Our American five per cent. who control America will fight you, but the ninety-five per cent. of Americans who make America what it is will come to your aid."

Harry Adams, well-known Leftist, is chairman of the committee, whose leading members include W. J. R. Squance, former general secretary of the Locomotive Engineers and Firemen's Union, and D. N. Pritt, Socialist lawyer and member of Parliament.

Adams, a former official of the buildings trade union, Squance and Pritt will be the principal speakers at the one-day convention.

ENGLAND SEEKING WORK FOR ALIENS

Plans Laid To Use 250,000 In War Efforts Against Axis Powers

Included Are 50,000 Germans And Austrians, Survey Shows

JAN 10 1941

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 9—Great Britain's alien population of approximately 250,000, including 50,000 Germans and Austrians, is going to assist in the war against the Axis.

This was revealed tonight with the disclosure of an international labor branch set up by the Ministry of Information to make the best use of friendly aliens.

The announcement lent added significance to a dispatch from Ottawa which said Prince Friedrich of Prussia, a grandson of Kaiser Wilhelm, was among 250 to 300 internees who recently sailed for England.

Support From Labor

Trade union leaders are supporting the plan which provides that aliens employed in war industries be paid and insured as British workers are.

The alien workers will wear special insignia—the women brooches, the men lapel buttons—with an engraving of a smith forging a sword.

The British Home Office said internees were gradually being released on twenty-two grounds, among which are return to key jobs and willingness to serve in the Pioneer (engineering) Corps of the British Army.

The latest approximate figures on foreign nationals in England include: 14,000 Poles, 10,000 Czechs, 10,000 French, 4,000 Norwegians, 7,000 Dutch, 14,000 Belgians and 50,000 Germans and Austrians.

RAID SIREN GREETS HOPKINS IN LONDON

Representative of Roosevelt Reports Good Trip.

JAN 10 1941

London, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—Harry Hopkins, special representative of President Roosevelt, arrived in London by special train tonight ten minutes after the capital's air raid sirens began screaming their first nocturnal warning since Sunday.

"I had a good trip and I'm feeling fine," Mr. Hopkins told newspaper men.

He climbed into a limousine with Brendan Bracken, secretary to Prime Minister Churchill, who had met him at the English town where a plane had brought him from Lisbon.

He was smiling when he came into an illuminated area way from the blackout. Herschel Johnson, United States Charge D'Affaires, and Foreign Minister Anthony Eden's private secretary greeted Mr. Hopkins.

R. A. F. TO TRAIN BOYS

Program Designed to Meet Demand for Pilots.

London, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—Sir Archibald Sinclair, Secretary for Air, announced today the establishment of a training plan to open the Royal Air Force to boys of 16 and older to meet a growing demand for pilots.

There are about 700,000 boys between 16 and 18 to whom the training will be open.

"We are making a broad way into the R. A. F. which will open to young men who have had every kind of educational experience, even those who have abandoned their education at an early stage," Sir Archibald said.

The plan includes special educational facilities, formation of university air squadrons and short university courses for air crew candidates.

Lincoln Shaft Imperiled

250-Foot Memorial in London, Hit by Fire Bombs, in Danger of Collapse

LONDON, Jan. 9 (AP).—The 250-foot Abraham Lincoln Tower surmounting Christ's Church in Westminster Bridge Road, Lambeth, south of the Thames, has been so damaged by German aerial attacks that it is in danger of collapse.

Americans subscribed approximately $17,500 to build the tower as a memorial to President Lincoln. It was dedicated by Lincoln's son, Robert Todd Lincoln, who was American Ambassador to Great Britain from 1889 to 1893.

The shaft, encircled by red stripes and white stars, has been hit by fire bombs three times recently.

The re-union of Ireland was steadfastly opposed also by Mr. Andrews's predecessor, the late Lord Craigavon.

Australia Offers More Aid

To Send Britain Another Air Squadron for Middle East Army

MELBOURNE, Jan. 9 (AP).—An offer by the Australian government to the British government of another army air co-operation squadron was announced today. It followed receipt of messages from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas Blanney, commanding the Australian Imperial Forces, stressing the value of such squadrons as protective fighting organizations for the army.

The squadron will be for duty in the Middle East. The air crews and ground staffs will be Australian, but the equipment will come from the Royal Air Force.

"Flying Mines" Over France

[By the Associated Press]

Vichy, Jan. 9—French reports today said charges of explosives had been found attached to balloons which have floated over southern France, apparently from Britain.

The reports described these contraptions as "flying mines" and suggested they had been sent up during raids over Britain, had broken from their moorings during storms and then drifted over France.

One such balloon recovered by the French was said to have borne the name of a Liverpool manufacturer.

More Mine Laying

Stockholm, Jan. 9 (AP)—Reports from German-occupied Norway tonight said several ships had been sunk by mines in coastal waters recently and that mine danger was increasing, indicating the likelihood of British mining operations.

Other reports from Oslo said the Norwegian Nazi leader, Vidkun Quisling, had failed to win wide support for his National Party and that the German commissioner, Josef Terboven, had promised to support him further with German occupation forces.

NAZI WAR LULL IS 'CREATIVE,' SAYS GOEBBELS

Propaganda Chief Cites Calm Before Storm On Western Front

JAN 10 1941

Calls It "A Fatal Mistake" To Misinterpret Apparent Quiet

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 9—An apparent pause in German military operations was described by Paul Joseph Goebbels, Propaganda Minister, today as "creative," and he said Nazi offensives "run off with the regularity of a clock because preceding them have been intervals of most careful preparation."

The lull, Goebbels told foreign correspondents, "is only apparent."

"A Fatal Mistake"

"German leadership knows exactly what it wants and how to do it," he said, "and it is a fatal mistake not to realize this."

Goebbels cautioned the foreign newspapermen against attributing the apparent quiet to any possible indecision on the part of Adolf Hitler's war leaders.

He recalled the prolonged inactivity of German forces on the Western front last winter and said "on May 10 the great offensive began in the West which, in the shortest time imaginable, brought France to her knees."

Press Clubroom Opened

Goebbels spoke at the opening of a clubroom reserved exclusively for foreign newspapermen. He said he hoped to come often to the club so that they might question him.

British bombers, slashing at the northwestern German coast in night raids, were disclosed by the German high command to have killed eleven civilians and injured fourteen others.

The German report said most of the 30,300,000-Mark Debt

New York, Jan. 9 (AP)—The German radio said today the Reich's floating debt amounted to 30,300,000,000 marks on October 31, 1940, as compared with 28,300,000,000 marks on September 30. The mark is pegged at 40 cents.

The radio, quoting the Ministry of Finance, said the increase was due chiefly to liabilities accruing from an increase in the issue of non-interest bearing Treasury bonds and Reich drafts from 26,600,000,000 to 27,900,000,000 marks.

Maryland Man Aids U. S. Colony In Poland

JAN 10 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Warsaw (Via Berlin), Jan. 9—Warsaw's little American colony of sixty-eight has found guardian angels in Rev. Gaither P. Warfield, American Methodist missionary, and his secretary, Ruth Lawrence.

High among their accomplishments has been success in persuading the German Government to grant special food rations to the Americans still here in this former Polish capital.

Russian Prisoner

The Rev. Mr. Warfield, a former resident of Frederick, Md., fled from Warsaw September 7, 1939, shortly after the German invasion. Crossing eastern Poland he ran into Soviet Russian forces and spent six weeks as a war prisoner in Russia. He was handed over to the Germans then, was released by them as a civilian and returned to Warsaw.)

The total of sixty-eight Americans compares with a colony of some 300 before the war.

American-Born Poles

Of those left, there are thirty-five men and women with business or professional interests in Warsaw. The remaining thirty-three are American-born Poles who are awaiting anxiously their United States passports from the consulate general in Berlin.

These first-generation Americans have been absent from the United States so long that they have forgotten most of their English.

Both the Rev. Mr. Warfield and Miss Lawrence speak Polish fluently, however, and, therefore, have been able to render valuable services in straightening out difficulties over their papers with United States Vice-Consul Thaddeus Chylinski, who then forwards them to Berlin.

In addition to undertaking the distribution of such extra food as the German Government allows, the Rev. Mr. Warfield and Miss Lawrence raised funds to enable the destitute members of the American colony to pay for their supplies.

In addition to the general ration of twelve pounds of bread, two pounds of sugar, two eggs, fourteen ounces of flour and ten ounces of meat, the following additional food was obtained for each American in December:

Fifteen pounds of bread, fifteen rolls, three pounds of fresh meat, three pounds of smoked meat, half a pound of bacon, three-fourths of a pound of butter, one-fourth of a pound of vegetable oil, twenty eggs, two and one-half pounds of sugar, two pounds of flour, two pounds of macaroni and one and one-half pounds of marmalade, three and one-half ounces of chocolate, an ounce of tea and five lemons.

Born At Rockville; Father Still There

Frederick, Jan. 9 (AP)—The Rev. Gaither P. Warfield, Methodist missionary stationed at Warsaw, is a native of Rockville, Md., and entered the ministry after service with the Army Air Corps in 1917-18.

A brother, R. L. Warfield, member of the Frederick County School Board, lives here. His father, Dr. Robert C. Warfield, lives at Rockville.

The Rev. Mr. Warfield visited here several years ago. He married a Polish woman.

A graduate of Rockville High School, he joined the Air Corps during the war, and later attended Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., in preparation for the ministry.

LEAHY CALLS AGAIN

Envoy Received for Long Talk With Petain.

Vichy, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—Admiral William D. Leahy, the new American Ambassador to France, was received today by the Chief of State Marshal Petain, for what was believed to be a discussion of the general situation. He had had his first meeting with the Marshal yesterday when he presented his credentials, but that was a formal occasion and they had little chance to talk then.

Today's audience, arranged at the desire of both officials, was held in the Marshal's office in the Hotel Parc. Admiral Leahy was accompanied by H. Freeman Matthews, first secretary of the embassy.

Thai Army Driving Into Indo-China; French Retire, but Claim 40 Planes

By The Associated Press.

HANOI, French Indo-China, Jan. 9—French military authorities reported tonight the destruction of at least forty Thai (Siamese) war planes as brisk border fighting shifted to air and artillery battles.

French communiqués did not mention land activity, but earlier tonight a general French withdrawal of five to ten miles within the frontier of Cambodia Province was acknowledged.

French seaplanes operating from Tonle Sap [Great Lake] in Cambodia aided land planes in attacking Thai airdromes, the French reported as the undeclared war gained momentum. Simultaneously, Thai planes bombed Indo-China towns, and the French said there had been twenty-two casualties at Siemreap, near the northern end of Tonle Sap.

Sporadic artillery dueling was reported in progress across the Mekong River boundary and at various points along the Cambodian battle front. The French insisted, nevertheless, that Thailand's drive, the most ambitious in weeks of sporadic border fighting, was merely "fireworks."

While the French frontier forces "retired to new defense lines" in Cambodia, that part of Southwestern Indo-China that juts into Thailand, friction developed in Northern Indo-China between Japanese soldiers and the French at Hanoi, the capital, and at Haiphong, principal northern seaport.

So-called "unauthorized" Japanese demands for police powers at Hanoi and Haiphong have been refused. Frenchmen blamed the "excitability" of Japanese soldiers newly arrived from Canton, China, for numerous recent Japanese-French clashes.

Japanese forces were stationed at Hanoi and Haiphong under reluctant agreement of the French after France's collapse in the European war. Japan's ostensible purpose was to facilitate attacks on Chinese Government forces in Southwest China.

Some quarters expressed the opinion tonight that Japanese had instigated the Thai attack on Cambodia after having helped the Thailanders to arm, thus applying pressure for concessions in Southern Indo-China without directly provoking United States reaction.

[It is noteworthy that this part of the dispatch was passed by Hanoi's censorship. Contradictory versions of responsibility for Thailand's moves developed in Vichy, the capital of unoccupied France.]

The main Thai attacks on a ninety-five-mile front of Western Cambodia and on a 190-mile front of Northern Cambodia were supported by planes in widespread bombings.

Shoving across rough mountains in the northern area, the Thailanders apparently were trying to capture Somrong, ten miles within Cambodia, while in the western region one of the principal objectives was Sisophon. In the western zone the French have abandoned Poipet.

The French said their troops were withdrawing to the previously prepared lines because border terrain in those areas was strategically indefensible. The French have fortifications in the region of Sisophon, which is on the Saigon-Bangkok railway.

Bangkok Tells of Advance

BANGKOK, Thailand, Jan. 8 (Delayed) (AP)—The Thai Army is advancing into Cambodia with the support of air raids covering virtually all the province, according to information contained in tonight's High Command communiqué.

Ninety planes participated in extensive bombing raids yesterday, the communiqué said, and the entire town of Sisophon is ablaze.

"Despite heavy anti-aircraft fire, all Thai aircraft returned safely," the communiqué declared.

The French forces were said to have given up newly established defense positions, retreating "far into the interior."

A heavy artillery duel across the Mekong River yesterday was reported to have damaged oil tanks at Thakek on the French side, in Laos province, causing a "huge conflagration." French machine-gun emplacements and ammunition dumps also were said to have been destroyed.

Damage to "some houses" on the Thai side of the river by French shellfire was acknowledged. It was officially declared that "there were no casualties."

Thailand Raided, Vichy Says

VICHY, France, Jan. 9 (AP)—The French announced officially today that their planes had bombed the Thai villages of Aregna and Kemasan "in reprisal" for the Thai bombing of a village in Indo-China near Savannaket and the town of Sisophon.

Some French sources charged that aid to Thailand was coming from "an Asiatic country" and that ceded air bases in Indo-China had been used as intermediate landing fields for planes being delivered to Thailand. It was recalled that in December a boatload of arms for Thailand from Japan was turned back at the demand of Indo-Chinese authorities.

A contrary opinion, however, was expressed by authorized sources to the French press. They declared "there is not one trace of truth in the report that Japan is behind Thailand." They added: "Britain is trying to manoeuvre Thailand and push her against Indo-China."

Decoux Reported Hopeful

SHANGHAI, Jan. 9 (AP)—Domei (Japanese news agency) reported today from Hanoi that Admiral Jean Decoux, Governor General of Indo-China, had departed for his annual visit to Saigon accompanied by a number of high government officials.

Before departing, Domei said, Admiral Decoux declared he was still hopeful of a peaceful settlement of Thai territorial claims, but added that France would defend Indo-China to the utmost.

The news agency said a government spokesman had flatly denied that the government had any intention of moving from Hanoi to Saigon.

Asks Decoux to Join de Gaulle

MANILA, Jan. 9 (AP)—Gaston Willoquet, representative of "Free France" in the Philippines, is attempting to enlist Indo-China under the banner of General Charles de Gaulle, head of the "Free France" movement.

M. Willoquet said tonight he had addressed a letter to Governor General Decoux of Indo-China informing him that he had embraced General de Gaulle's principles and expressing the hope that Admiral Decoux would do likewise. M. Willoquet is considered one of the most influential Frenchmen in the Far East.

ITALIAN NUN IS KILLED IN JAPANESE BOMBING

Two Others Wounded in Raid—200 Chinese Lose Lives

HONG KONG, Jan. 9 (AP)—Sister Marie Dessi, Italian matron of St. Joseph's Hospital at the East River port of Waichow, fifty miles northeast of Hong Kong, was killed yesterday and two Italian nuns were wounded in a Japanese bombardment which, the mission reported, also took the lives of 200 Chinese and injured another 200.

An earlier account in the British-owned newspaper, China Mail, said two Italian priests were among the dead, but the mission said no priests were killed.

The newspaper said many passengers drowned when bombs sank two boats and wrecked wharves. Waichow underwent a bombing Tuesday, according to the newspaper, but the damage was not great.

St. Joseph's Hospital and the Italian Catholic Mission Church were both said to have been struck by bombs.

Belgians Work In Nazi Factories

Almost every week special trains with Belgian workers leave for the Reich.

8 Swedes Brave Cold To Save 24 From Sinking Dutch Ship

Launch Lifeboat To Rescue Survivors When Freighter Goes In Ten Minutes As Cargo Shifts

JAN 10 1941

[By the Associated Press]

An Eastern Canadian Port, Jan. 9—Eight crewmen of a Swedish ship launched a lifeboat into the frigid and rolling North Atlantic to rescue twenty-four survivors of the Dutch steamer Soemba as they clung with numbing fingers to rafts, life belts and bits of wood washed from the deck of their sunken ship.

The story of the heroic rescue was brought here today by survivors of the Soemba, which rolled over and went down last Sunday when its cargo of steel shifted. Between thirty-four and thirty-six sewmen of Dutch, English, Chinese and Canadian nationality perished.

"I was serving breakfast," said Steward H. Osborne, a Briton, "when all of a sudden she started to go over.

On Raft In 5 Minutes

"Within five minutes I was aboard a raft with thirteen others. It couldn't have been much more than ten minutes before she went down, easy like, smooth, with no trouble."

Only two of six lifeboats on the Soemba could be released and they were smashed t obits against the side of the ship.

It was below zero. The men seized rafts, lifebelts, fragments of the lifeboats and wood washed from the decks.

Into this picture of chaos and terror steamed the Swedish rescue ship.

"Worst I've Ever Seen"

"It was the worst sight I've ever seen," said a member of the Swedish ship's crew.

"Men were dying ,their frozen fingers slipping from the objects that had kept them afloat. Survivors were hanging on to anything."

An 18-year-old British member of the rescue crew died of exposure after being pitched overboard when the lifeboat, its rescue mission completed in four hours, was battered against the mother ship.

British Ship Torpedoed 500 Miles From Ireland

New York, Jan. 9 (AP)—The Ellerman Wilson freighter Bassano, 4,843 tons, radioed today that she had been torpedoed about 500 miles northwest of Ireland.

The British vessel had been trading between New York, Canada and England.

The 401-foot Bassano was only three years old. She was especially constructed for sailing in ice-ridden waters. She last left New York December 31.

Free French Submarine Sunk, London Reports

London, Jan. 9 (AP)—"Free French" headquarters announced today the 1,400-ton French submarine Narval, first unit of the French navy to join Gen. Charles de Gaulle's forces, had been sunk by enemy action.

A communique said the submarine, a 15-year-old vessel, was lost in operations with the Allied forces after she had "distinguished herself."

U. S. BALKING AXIS IN SOUTH AMERICA

Will Not License Exports to Their Nationals.

Buenos Aires, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—North American importers said today that the United States Government had started solution of the problem of anti-American business representation here by shutting off at the source the products coming to such firms in South America through its export licensing system.

[Nelson A. Rockefeller charged yesterday that some United States business houses were represented in South America by men supporting the Axis.]

The importers said that they had received instructions from the United States indicating that hereafter the Washington Government, before issuing permits for the exportation of restricted products on a list which is lengthening daily would require importers to furnish with their permit request a certified copy of the customs order. In this way it would be possible, the importers explained, to keep a close check on the firms handling North American exports.

One official of a North American commercial organization in Buenos Aires said that anti-American representation of United States products was particularly strong in the steel industry, with German agents in the Argentine capital buying large quantities from independent New York exporters.

The majority of German and Italian firms in Argentina recently formed Argentine subsidiaries in the hope of protecting this flow of products. Informants said, however, that they believed Washington was likely to strengthen the export system to cover this situation.

46 Americans Reach Lisbon

LISBON, Jan. 9 (AP).—Forty-six American citizens, the vanguard of about six hundred stranded in France whom the State Department and the Red Cross are sending home, arrived at Lisbon in a special railroad car today. A few will leave on the American Export liner Excambion tomorrow and the others will remain here until passage is arranged.

Swiss to Seek Soviet Trade Pact

Berne, Switzerland, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—The Swiss Government announced today it would send an economic delegation to Moscow soon to negotiate with Soviet Russia for a trade agreement. The Swiss now have no diplomatic relations with Russia.

Food Rationed in Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia, Jan. 9 (AP).—The first food rationing by card in Yugoslavia, effective here tomorrow, will affect purchases of sugar, flour, rice, coffee and cooking oil. The measure was decided on by the local authorities. Other cities, including Zagreb, are considering similar action.

Sofia Cabinet In Night Talk

Sofia, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Bulgarian Cabinet met in an unusual night session after Premier Bogdan Philoff, for the second time in two days, conferred with King Boris today presumably on German efforts to bring Bulgaria into the Axis orbit.

Although officially no significance was attached to the meeting, private Berlin dispatches reported new German pressure on Bulgaria.

Greenland's Arms Purchases Expedited

Washington, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—The State Department disclosed today that the United States had facilitated the purchase of arms in this country by the authorities of Greenland, Danish colony now cut off from the homeland by the German occupation of Denmark.

The arms purchased here are being used by "the small number of policemen employed by the Greenland authorities to patrol the Cryolite mine at Ivigtut, which is Greenland's economic asset," an announcement said. At the same time the State Department said the United States had sent no troops to Greenland nor had it established any air or naval bases there.

TRANSFER OF 4 SHIPS TO BRITISH IS BARRED

Maritime Commission Denies New Policy—'Just a Slowdown'

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9 (AP)—The Maritime Commission rejected today applications for the transfer to foreign registry of six American vessels, including four to Great Britain, but officials insisted the action had no significance as regards further shipping aid to the British.

One of the rejected applications, by the Black Diamond Steamship Company of Weehawken, N. J., asked permission to sell four cargo vessels—the Black Gull, Black Eagle, Black Falcon and Black Hawk—to Cunard White Star, Ltd., of Liverpool, England.

The four vessels, each of a gross tonnage of about 5,000, were built at Hog Island in 1919.

The commission also rejected applications by the Sword Steamship Line, Inc., New York City, for authority to sell the cargo vessel Gold Sword to Wallen & Co. of Hong Kong and by the Seekonk Corporation of San Francisco for authority to sell the cargo vessel Willmoto to the same company. Registry of both vessels would have been changed to Panama.

Asked whether the rejection of the Black Diamond application meant that the supply of American cargo vessels available to Great Britain was nearing exhaustion, an official said:

"It doesn't mean a thing except that the applicants pressed us for an answer and the answer was no.

"It does mean, however, that in the future we intend to keep these applications under consideration for some time and carefully consider each one. There's just a little slowdown and that's all."

U. S. Adds 50% To '41 Orders of Machine Tools

Industry Told to Expand Production of 'Critical' Items in Defense Output

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The government has arbitrarily increased by 50 per cent all its orders of "critical" machine tools to be delivered for defense production in 1941.

Disclosing this today, defense officials described the arrangement and the machine-tool maker's acceptance of it as one of the biggest steps yet taken to end "industrial blackouts."

The authorities said the increase in orders of tools for making planes, tanks, guns and other weapons was decided upon to meet complaints of the tool manufacturers that they could not learn total requirements of the American and British armament programs and consequently could not plan further expansion intelligently.

Since needs growing out of the European war constituted a "moving target" that could not be gauged accurately in advance, officials said, the manufacturers were told simply to add 50 per cent to all orders they already had for 1941 delivery.

The response of the industry, generally, it was said, was to this effect: "We don't see how it can be done, but, since you say it has to be done, we'll do it."

The increase in orders applied only to "critical" tools, such as horizontal and vertical boring machines, radial drills and planers, jig-boring machines and gear equipment. Many other tools, either easier to make or less in demand for defense production, were not affected.

Instead of a previously scheduled production of $600,000,000 this year, it was said, the industry would probably turn out $700,000,000 worth of products. This compares with a normal output of about $150,000,000 a year.

Officials said that virtually all the more than two hundred large machine-tool companies in the country now were employing two or more shifts a day.

In many New England plants, it was said, a six-day week of the ten-hour shifts daily was the rule. Some plants elsewhere are running two shifts of eight hours each; others three shifts of eight hours each.

Many production authorities question the value of three full shifts a day, contending that some operations must cease part of the day to permit clean-up and maintenance work.

Air Line Pilots Face U. S. Call

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9 (AP).—Rear Admiral John H. Towers told a Congressional committee today that commercial lines and aircraft factories are to be warned that the Army and Navy may have to call their pilots who are army and navy reservists to active duty by June 30.

BLAMES BOND DROP ON RESERVE BOARD

Morgenthau Says Anti-Inflation Plan Caused Unwarranted Decline

Treasury Head Predicts U. S. May Have To Pay Higher Interest On Future Issues

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 9—A Treasury charge that the Federal Reserve Board "caused an unwarranted decline in the Government bond market" brought into the open again today a long-standing feud between Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, and Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the board.

Morgenthau, speaking at a press conference, said the publication by the board on January 1 of an anti-inflation plan was "entirely responsible" for the recent decline. He declined to explain in detail how the board's action influenced the bond market.

A Treasury index of representative long-term Government bonds showed that on December 30 their average price per $100 par value was $111.66. They declined to $109.74 from that date until last night, and recouped to $110.21 today.

Eccles Declines To Reply

Eccles declined to make any reply to Morgenthau, at least for the present.

The anti-inflation report, which Eccles had said was not his personal idea alone, but was the official report of the Federal Reserve Board, the presidents of the twelve Federal Reserve Banks and the Federal Advisory Council of individual bankers, said that the defense business boom might possibly cause inflation some day and that preventive steps should be taken.

The recomended steps included: An increase in bank reserve requirements for the purpose of decreasing the amount of idle money; removal of the President's power to devalue the dollar; repeal of Treasury powers to issue greenback money and to monetize foreign silver; eventual balancing of the budget; neutralization of the credit effects of gold imports, and sale of future issues of Government securities to the public instead of banks.

Pride In High Prices

Morgenthau, a one-time gentleman farmer who was President Roosevelt's neighbor in Dutchess county, New York, has taken a great pride in the high prices of Government bonds since he became Secretary of the Treasury in 1934.

He predicted today that the Treasury might have to pay more interest on future securities issues than in the past. He indicated particularly that a $500,000,000 national defense note issue, scheduled this month, might have to bear more than the three-quarter of one per cent. interest which he placed on a similar issue last month.

In spite of his accusations, however, he refused to say in response to repeated questions that he was opposed to the Federal Reserve plan. He indicated he would reserve further comment until Congress asks his opinion in a formal hearing.

Such a request might be made, he explained, "if Congress takes the plan seriously." Some officials attributed the Secretary's reluctance to comment further to reports that President Roosevelt was agreeable to at least some parts of the Federal Reserve plan.

British Shares Here Sought

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9 (AP).—Officials disclosed today that a group of American investment trusts was negotiating for the purchase of $600,000,000 worth of American industrial securities from Great Britain.

Britain, they said, wanted to speed up the liquidation of these securities, taken over from individual British investors, to facilitate cash payments on current war orders in the U. S.

The officials said they understood that a trade association representing all the leading investment trusts was sponsoring the plan. Although it is still in a preliminary stage, they said they believed a syndicate headed by Tri-Continental Corp. might be set up to handle the deal, which would be one of the largest single securities transactions, outside of government financing, in the history of American business.

The British acquired about $700,000,000 of readily marketable American securities from private investors.

Roosevelt To Petain

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 9—President Roosevelt told Marshal Henri Philippe Petain, chief of the French state, in a New Year's message made public today, that he prayed that France might soon again "enjoy the blessings of peace with liberty, equality and fraternity."

The President's message, given out by the State Department, said:

"My heart goes out to France in these days of her travail and I pray that the French people may soon again enjoy the blessings of peace with liberty, equality and fraternity."

The slogan of the French republic—"Liberty, Equality and Fraternity"—was discarded by the new French state when it dropped the designation of republic.

State Department officials said the New Year's message was sent by cable and was not the message delivered to the marshal by Admiral William D. Leahy, the new American Ambassador, who has just arrived in Vichy.

'Conditions' Not Right, Says Note To Envoy

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 9—The United States has rejected a French proposal that the two governments undertake a special project for the migration of refugees from France to the Western Hemisphere.

A note from Secretary of State Cordell Hull to the French Ambassador, Gaston Henry-Haye, outlining the Government's views on the whole question of refugee migration was made public by the State Department today.

In response to the French suggestion that the United States seek to work out some plan in cooperation with France and the other American republics, Hull said that this government "does not believe any useful purpose can be served by discussing migration problems bilaterally with the French Government or multilaterally with the several governments at this time."

Conditions Not Right

"Present world conditions operate to cause governments in many instances to forego free exercise of their authority and the essential requirements for a constructive solution of the fundamental problems of migration and resettlement do not prevail," the secretary continued.

The French proposal was intended primarily to solve the problem of refugees and German origin, mainly Jewish, now in unoccupied France.

The French Government asked the United States to study with it ways and means of organizing immigration to the American hemisphere and approach the other American governments for their cooperation.

Making Every Effort

Hull's reply said the United States was making "every consistent effort to contribute effectively to relieve the pressure caused by the overconcentration of refugees in certain countries, including France." American laws now, however, do not permit of any further liberalization, the note said.

It was pointed out that visas had been granted for a number of persons in France who had not been able to obtain exit permits to leave that country for the United States and other American nations.

Speeding Up Of U. S. Aid To Britain Is Urged

British Consul General In New York Calls Steel, Ships And Credit Greatest Needs

New York, Jan. 9 (AP)—Godfrey Haggard, British consul general in New York, today predicted "the second battle of Britain" would come soon and urged the speding up of United States aid to Britain.

Steel, transport ships and credit, Haggard said in a speech at the Engineers Club, were Britain's greatest needs in the United States.

Haggard dismissed any thought of a negotiated peace and predicted that "sooner or later we have got to carry the war to the Continent as well as resist invasion."

The War Department has allocated $190,500 for additional construction at the air base being established at Borinquen Field, Puerto Rico, swelling the total to be spent there to $1,181,500.

The department has completed arrangements with the Maritime Commission for acquisition of the former trans-Pacific Dollar liner, President McKinley, which the army will use as a combined passenger and freight transport. The ship is now at Seattle, Wash.,

Previously announced tentative schedules for mobilizing remaining units of the National Guard will be carried out.

The army's move to unify the Caribbean command followed closely the navy's reorganization of sea forces into Atlantic, Pacific and Asiatic fleets.

Mr. Stimson said he could not say when the new command would start functioning or whether other commands would be included later.

Caribbean Defense Unified

Stimson Announces Consolidation of Panama and Other Commands.

Washington, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—Consolidation of the army's commands at the Panama Canal and in the Caribbean area was announced today by Secretary Stimson to strengthen Western Hemisphere defenses.

Mr. Stimson said the existing Panama Canal and Puerto Rican departments and the new Trinidad base command would be unified under the command of Lieut.-Gen. Daniel Van Voorhis, Canal Zone chief.

The purpose of the move, Mr. Stimson told a press conference, is to provide a unified command for the entire Caribbean area with the aim of increased efficiency and, particularly, centralized control of air defenses and forces.

Nothing About Newfoundland.

Mr. Stimson declined to disclose what re-enforcements were planned for the Caribbean area or how strong would be units assigned to the new base on Newfoundland.

"What's the use of telling Mr. Hitler how many troops we are sending to the Caribbean?" Mr. Stimson said. "He may have sources of finding out but I am not going to be one of them."

The initial garrison for Newfoundland, northenmost of the string of base sites acquired from Great Britain, will leave New York about January 15 aboard the transport Edmund B. Alexander, Stimson said. The vessel, which was the world war transport America, will be moored temporarily at St. Johns as a station ship.

Other defense developments announced by the War Secretary included:

DANUBE CANNOT NOW FEED AXIS

U. S. Reports Nazi Program Unlikely to Succeed.

Washington, Jan. 9 (A. P.).—Germany and Italy have little chance of success, the Department of Agriculture said today, in a their effort to make the Danube Basin countries supply the Axis-controlled portions of Europe with food, feed and fiber supplies normally imported from overseas markets. The peacetime farm surpluses of Rumania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Hungary were insufficient, the department said, to meet continental Europe's needs, and the German-sponsored agricultural expansion programs for these countries are encountering serious difficulties.

A report prepared by Dr. Frederick Strauss of the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations says:

"Even if Germany had succeeded in monopolizing Danubian surpluses before the war, they would still have met fully the German peacetime needs only for bread grain and dry beans. During 1935-39, for example, the total Danubian exports fell short of German import needs by 36 per cent for bread grains, 95 per cent for butter, 48 per cent for eggs, 92 per cent for oil seeds and 97 per cent for oilcake."

The report added that the war had increased Germany's need for these basic supplies, while in 1940, the Danubian supplies were sharply reduced by adverse weather conditions and large-scale military mobilization, particularly in Rumania. The report said that Germany was doing everything possible to expand Danubian production. In predicting little success, it cited such factors as lack of some essential fertilizers, especially phosphates; also labor shortages, reduced numbers of draft animals, impossibility of further mechanization, shortages of fuel, binder twine and other essentials, and a high degree of illiteracy among the peasants concerned.

Princess Still in U. S.

Officials Say Princess Hohenlohe Will Leave Soon on Agreement

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9 (AP).—Officials said today that the Princess Hohenlohe, Vienna-born friend of German officials, who has been here on a visitor's permit for more than a year, was still in the United States, but was expected to leave soon under an informal agreement.

The Princess originally was ordered to leave by Dec. 21, but this date was extended with the understanding that she leave by a specified date and at a particular place, and with the further understanding that deportation proceedings would be started unless she did so.

1,200 Americans Remain In Japan, Set to Leave

State Department Reports Exodus Has Been Smooth

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9 (AP).—The exodus of Americans from the Orient in response to State Department advice has brought all but 1,200 out of Japan, officials disclosed today, and those remaining are prepared to leave quickly in the event of a serious emergency.

More than 8,000 Americans were in Japan when the State Department, three months ago, issued precautionary advice to nationals in the Far East to come home.

Fewer numbers have left China and other parts of the Orient but the homeward movement is still under way and officials said evacuation could be carried out now in the Pacific with far less confusion and difficulty than the government has experienced in getting Americans out of Europe.

There still are 6,000 Americans in China, only about 1,000 fewer than a year ago. Officials attributed the relatively small exodus from there, however, to the fact that most Americans without pressing reasons for staying already had returned home in the course of the three-and-one-half-year Chinese-Japanese war.

Spee's Plates On British Ship?

Boston, Jan. 9 (AP)—A tale that plates from the hull of the scuttled German battleship Graf Spee was used to repair a battle-damaged British vessel was told today by an officer of the freighter East Indian, in from South American ports.

The officer, who preferred to remain anonymous, said the British auxiliary Carnarvon Castle sailed into Montevideo after a brush with a German raider and that her damage was repaired with pieces from the battered hull of the pocket battleship, scuttled about a year ago.

MINE BELT FITTED TO LINER AMERICA

Largest U. S. Passenger Vessel Leaves Norfolk Navy Yard For New York

No Guns Placed On Ship Yet. Craft To Start 12-Day Cruise Of Caribbean

[By the Associated Press]

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 9—America's largest passenger liner—the America—sailed today for New York after having a mine belt or "de Gausing" cable installed at the Norfolk Navy Yard. The cable is designed to neutralize the effect of magnetic mines.

A new method was followed in equipping the America with the mine cable, it was said. Instead of running the cable entirely around the outside of the ship, as is done in most cases, it was run along her deck for a certain distance and then through the interior of the ship until the entire vessel had been encircled.

18,000 Feet Of Cable Used

The new method, it was said, was adopted to avoid as much as possible the marring of the lines of the new vessel by installing the cable. More than 18,000 feet of the cable were used in the installation.

Contrary to reports, it was learned that no guns were installed on the ship, but it was reported that provisions had been made for a fire-control system on the big liner.

Going On Caribbean Cruise

Still another unconfirmed report is that the America will be equipped with guns after her coming cruise and will be used as an army or navy transport.

The ship is due at New York tomorrow and will go on a twelve-day Caribbean cruise. It was believed in unofficial circles that the anti-mine device was put on the ship as a precaution against possible magnetic mine hazards in the Caribbean and other West Indian areas.

Japanese Paper Scores Defense Plans Of U. S.

Asks If Budget Figures Do Not Foreshadow Offensive Attitude In Orient

New York, Jan. 9 (AP)—The Domei radio quoted the newspaper Asahi Shimbun tonight as asking whether President Roosevelt's "enormous defense figures" as outlined in his budget message to Congress do not foreshadow "a wholesale offensive attitude" by the United States Navy in the Orient.

The Miyako Shimbun was quoted as asserting the United States "is entangling herself in danger."

Defense Job Reported Offered To LaGuardia

New York Times Says Post As Assistant To President In Coordination Work Tendered

New York, Jan. 9 (AP)—The New York Times says it understands President Roosevelt has offered to Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia the post of executive assistant to the President in charge of coordination of national defense efforts.

"If Mayor LaGuardia should take the job, it will mean, it was said in Washington, that he would be the link between the President and all defense efforts," the newspaper said.

In his message to the City Council yesterday the Mayor said any man in the Council chamber would respond to the call of duty in the national emergency, adding that no one in the city government was indispensable.

GIBSON TAKES WHITE'S AID TO ALLIES POST

Former Vermont Senator Heads Committee To Defend America

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 9—Ernest W. Gibson, 39-year-old lawyer and former Republican Senator from Vermont, tonight accepted the chairmanship of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, succeeding William Allen White, Kansas newspaper editor who resigned last week.

The committee announced that Lewis W. Douglas, president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company and former Budget Director, would divide with Gibson the work formerly undertaken by White "because of the heavy increase it has undergone."

White Honorary Chairman

Douglas was named chairman of the national board, replacing the former policy board, and White was elected honorary chairman and member of the executive committee.

Gibson, who practices law in Brattleboro, Vt., accepted the position by telephone from his Vermont home. He was appointed to the Senate last summer by former Governor George D. Aiken to fill out the unexpired term of his late father.

White, 72-year-old editor of the Emporia Gazette, resigned as chairman with the plea that "the need for hard, concentrated, intelligent work on the chairman job is too much for a man who has to earn a living running a country newspaper."

For Young Man With 'High Vision'

He suggested that the job required a young man with "high vision," working full time at it.

Reports were published last month that the committee had been divided as a result of a statement by White that "If I were making a motto for the committee it would be 'the Yanks are not coming.'" The committee promptly denied any such division.

White took over the committee's chairmanship at its formation last May 19. For eight months he worked to advance the committee's proposals—increased American arms production, all possible material and financial help to China, extension of embargoes on war materials for Japan, joint use of American and British Pacific naval bases and joint protection by the two fleets of the Atlantic and Pacific.

White's Reason For Membership

Last month he announced in a statement copyrighted by the Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance that his only reason for being a member of the group was "to keep this country out of war."

He expressed opposition to repeal of the Johnson Act, which bars loans to debt-defaulting nations, and said that it was "not true even remotely that we favor repealing of that portion of the neutrality law which forbids American ships to carry contraband into the war zones."

"That would be leading us to war," he said, "and our organization and I personally are deeply opposed to it."

Assailed Wheeler And Clark

In his first speech in the Senate last August, Gibson charged Senators Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, and Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri with "behaving as if the war was a Hollywood spectacle, rather than the most hideous atrocity in the history of the world."

Gibson's speech was occasioned by the Senators' opposition to the Burke-Wadsworth selective service law then pending in the Senate.

Gibson Urges Sacrifice For Britain, Greece, China

Montpelier, Vt., Jan. 9 (AP)—Ernest W. Gibson, former Vermont Senator named chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, asserted tonight "we must be prepared to sacrifice" to help Britain, Greece and China.

Gibson said that at present he was subject to service with the "armed forces of this country, but pending my induction I am glad to undertake this work, the importance of which cannot be overestimated."

On Active List At Own Request

Gibson, a captain in the army reserves, recently was placed on the active list at his own request.

Asserting "this is no time for faint heart nor divided loyalties," Gibson said that "wherever the free man struggles it is our duty to aid him."

"To do this we must be prepared to sacrifice—sacrifice those things which in our worldliness we have held most dear—our luxuries, our leisure and our money; for it is only through sacrifice that we can ever realize the greatness of the blessings which God has given us."

Windsor Dedicates New Golf Course— And Wins His Match

Cat Cay, Bahamas, Jan. 9 (AP)—The Duke of Windsor dedicated a new golf course in this exclusive winter resort today and proceeded to share the first victory over it.

Edward, Governor of the Bahamas, teamed with James West, New York, to defeat Charles Yates, Atlanta, former British Amateur champion, and William Dodge, New York oil company executive, 1 up in a nine-hole match.

War Communiques

British

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 9 (AP).—The British Middle East command communique:

LIBYA—While preparations for the reduction of Tobruk are proceeding, our mechanized forces are now operating west of the town.

As a result of our patrol activity on the Sudan frontier, an enemy post northwest of Kassala has been evacuated and occupied by our own troops.

ETHIOPIA—Patriots encouraged by support from the Royal Air Force have compelled the Italians to evacuate the post of Guba. The Patriots are now closing round the fleeing Italian garrison.

KENYA—Nothing of importance to report.

The Royal Air Force command communique:

Bomber aircraft of the R. A. F. continued yesterday their intensive bombing of Italian airdromes and landing grounds in eastern Libya.

Gazala, Martuba, Tmimi and Benina were all heavily attacked. In addition, Bengasi and Tobruk were raided.

At Martuba our aircraft carried out low-flying attacks on eleven (Italian) S-79's and several CR-42's on the ground. Two of the S-79's were set on fire and others badly damaged.

Two S-79's on the ground at Gazala were also attacked, one of them being severely damaged and the other was seen to be already unserviceable.

At Benina, about 100 enemy aircraft on the ground were heavily bombed. Several of them were destroyed and others badly damaged. Seven S-79's on the Tmimi landing ground were seen to be burned out.

A particularly heavy raid was made on Bengasi, during which four or five ships received direct hits and a number of fires were started in warehouses.

A further bombing attack was made on Tobruk defenses and other military objectives.

Enemy convoys northwest of Giarabub were attacked by both our bombers and fighters and considerable damage caused.

On Jan. 7 a successful raid was made on military stores and buildings at Elbasani, Albania, but flying conditions were extremely bad. Snow, sleet and rain made observation of the results of the raid difficult, but high explosives and incendiary bombs were seen to hit several buildings and a number of fires were started.

On the nights of Jan. 6-7 and Jan. 7-8 Massaua, Eritrea, was raided. The power station and submarine bases were selected for special attack. A number of high explosive bombs fell on the submarine base, starting a fire.

From all the operations covering the period under review, all our aircraft returned safely.

LONDON, Jan. 9 (AP).—The communique of the Ministries of Air and Home Security:

Shortly before dawn this morning, a single enemy aircraft dropped bombs in Kent. No one was hurt and no damage was done.

During daylight, there has been some slight activity over this country, mainly near the east and southeast coasts, but no report of bombing has been received from any area.

An Air Ministry communique:

Last night aircraft of the Bomber Command attacked a naval dockyard at Wilhelmshaven and Emden.

At Wilhemshaven many explosions were observed and these were followed by large fires. More than twenty fires were started in docks at Emden.

Other aircraft bombed an enemy airdrome on the island of Borkum, where barracks were hit and fire broke out.

None of our aircraft is missing.

Greek

ATHENS, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Greek general headquarters communique:

During today's local combats, important positions were captured at bayonet point. About 200 prisoners and much material, including twenty mortars of 87-mm., have fallen into our hands.

The Ministry of Home Security communique:

No raids on Greece today.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 9 (AP).—The German high command communique:

The air force, despite unfavorable weather throughout the day, made a number of audacious, individual attacks. One combat plane, despite the strongest anti-aircraft and machine-gun defense, scored two direct hits from a 100-meter altitude (about 325 feet) on a motor works near Coventry which was protected by barrage balloons.

A heavy combat plane, commanded by 1st Lieut. Mons, attacked an armed merchantman of approximately 10,000 tons 480 kilometers (about 300 miles) northwest of Donegal Bay.

After two hits, the ship stopped in flames with her hull torn open.

A troop camp on the English southeast coast was effectively bombed.

The enemy last night dropped incendiaries and explosives in the northwestern coastal region which chiefly hit residential sections. At only one place was minor damage caused to an industrial plant. Civilian losses were eleven killed and fourteen injured.

The crew of a combat plane, with Lieut. Hoeflinger as commander, 1st Sergt. Vogelhuber as bomber, Flyer Odelga as radio operator and Sergt. Herfort as gunner, especially distinguished itself in the raid on the motor works near Coventry.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Italian high command communique:

In Cyrenaica (Libya) there is nothing new to report on the land front. Our formations of fighters and assault planes attacked a group of enemy mechanized forces, destroying several armored cars.

Enemy air raids on Bengasi and Tripoli caused slight damage and three deaths in Tripoli.

On the Greek front patrol activity and local actions were reported.

Numerous formations of our air squadrons effectively pounded troop concentrations and enemy military preparations. Dive bombers attacked batteries and bridges. Troops were machine-gunned by squadrons of our fighter planes.

Salonica was bombed with evident effectiveness.

Our planes shot down five enemy fighter planes in flames in various combats.

In East Africa there is nothing particular to report.

The enemy carried out air raids on some of our bases in Eritrea and Somaliland without causing damage. Enemy planes were shot down.

Enemy planes in several waves attacked Naples and Palermo the night of Jan. 8-9. Numerous bombs were dropped at Naples, mostly falling into the sea. A hospital ship was hit in the harbor and about fifteen buildings in the city, including a church. Five were killed and about thirty injured.

At Palermo there was neither important damage nor victims.

One of our torpedo boats, commanded by Lieut. Nicolo Nicolini, rammed and sank an enemy submarine. One of our submarines commanded by Capt. Tosoni Pittoni sank an enemy auxiliary cruiser, a 3,600-ton steamer, in the Atlantic.

British Prestige Rises With Roosevelt Speech, but Peril Is Still Very Real

JAN 10 1941

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

British war prestige has gone up immeasurably in recent days, and John Bull begins to command the respect formerly accorded him as the policeman of Europe.

What with President Roosevelt's assurance of unlimited material aid, and the smashing Allied victories over the Fascists in Africa and Albania, things are looking more rosy. Important nations are taking note of John's improved fortunes.

From Moscow the mysterious, the significant news came yesterday that the Soviet press had given prominence to Mr. Roosevelt's promises of help for Britain. Such publication means much when we stop to consider that Russian newspapers are the instruments of the Government.

It means that the Muscovite chief, Stalin, wants the people of Russia to know of Britain's good luck. It's another indication that Adolf Hitler isn't carrying Stalin about in his vest pocket.

The Turkish authoritative radio too praised Mr. Roosevelt's promises of aid for Britain.

Turkey's Position Important.

Such comment from Turkey is important. The Turks, as guardians of the Dardanelles gateway to the Near East, have an alliance with Britain which supposedly will become effective if either of them is attacked in the eastern Mediterranean. However, circumstances may force Turkey to act with Russia if it comes to war, and the fact that they both show approval of Britain's increasing strength should prove encouraging to London.

Still, with all this, and with the victorious Allied forces today smashing at the gates of the strategic port of Tobruk in Italian Libya, one can't help wondering whether this swift rise in British stock is really a healthy one. There would seem to be a danger that friends of Britain might allow there sensational successes to blind them to the perils still surrounding the Allies.

The comment of the Nazi press is that no matter what aid America may give Britain, it will be too late. That has a basis of possibility.

I have kept emphasizing in this column that England is probably faced with a life or death crisis in the next few months.

Germany is at the apex of her strength and, as Churchill puts it, Britain is "still a half armed nation fighting a fully armed nation."

England's task is to muster quickly enough strength to stand off the Germans until she can arm herself fully.

BUT U.S. HAS PROBLEM

IN FABRICATED ALLOYS (960)

BY DEVON FRANCIS

ASSOCIATED PRESS AVIATION EDITOR

(ADVANCE) WASHINGTON, JAN. 9--THOUGH THE BRITISH HAVE RESORTED TO MELTING THEIR HOUSEHOLD ALUMINUM POTS AND PANS INTO FIGHTING PLANES, THE PROSPECTS FOR AMPLE SUPPLIES OF THE METAL FOR AMERICAN AIRCRAFT MANUFACTURE HAVE RELIEVED THE DEFENSE COMMISSION OF ONE RAW MATERIAL WORRY.

THE AMERICAN PROBLEM IS, RATHER, ONE OF FABRICATED ALUMINUM ALLOYS IN THE FORMS OF SHEETS, RODS, BARS AND "EXTRUDED" SHAPES.

FULLY HALF OF THE EARTH'S SURFACE CONTAINS BAUXITE. IN THE UNITED STATES IT IS KNOWN TO OCCUR IN WORKABLE QUANTITIES IN ARKANSAS, ALABAMA, GEORGIA, TENNESSEE AND MISSISSIPPI. FROM BAUXITE, SOMETIMES CLAY-LIKE, SOMETIMES APPEARING AS HARD, RED-TINGED ROCK, COMES "ALUMINA," KNOWN AS ALUMINUM CONCENTRATE.

THE ALUMINA MUST BE REDUCED CHEMICALLY TO MAKE VIRGIN ALUMINUM. THAT, IN TURN, MUST BE ALLOYED WITH COPPER, NICKEL, MAGNESIUM AND OTHER HARDENING METALS TO PRODUCE A SUBSTANCE HARD ENOUGH TO STAND THE VIOLENT STRESSES PLACED ON ALL-METAL WARPLANES.

GOOD BAUXITE DEPOSITS ARE SO RICH IN ALUMINUM THAT FOUR POUNDS OF THE STUFF WILL PRODUCE A FULL POUND OF VIRGIN METAL.

WHILE AMERICAN ALUMINUM SUPPLIES ARE VIRTUALLY UNTAPPED--AND THE SUPPLIES IN THE ENTIRE HEMISPHERE ARE ALMOST UNTOUCHED--TWO PROBLEMS, NEITHER CRITICAL AS YET, DO FACE THE ARMED SERVICES AND THE AIRCRAFT INDUSTRY IN ASSURING THEMSELVES A STEADY FLOW OF ALUMINUM FOR THE 40,000 WARPLANES SCHEDULED TO ROLL OFF PRODUCTION LINES IN THE NEXT 18 MONTHS.

JAN 10 1941

ONE IS THE LIMITED PLANT FACILITIES FOR MAKING ALUMINUM CONCENTRATE. THE UNITED STATES HAS ONLY TWO ALUMINUM CONCENTRATE PLANTS, ONE AT MOBILE, ALA., AND THE OTHER AT EAST ST.LOUIS, ILL. A THIRD IS BEING BUILT.

(MORE) EJPITAKER

THE SECOND PROBLEM IS THE PRODUCTION OF FABRICATED FORMS. AMONG THEM IS SHEET ALUMINUM ALLOY, ROLLED TO VARIOUS THICKNESSES TO COVER THE FUSELAGE AND WINGS OF WARPLANES. ANOTHER FORM IS EXTRUSIONS, PRODUCED BY FORCING NOT BUT SOLID ALUMINUM ALLOYS THROUGH DIES. AS IN THE STEEL INDUSTRY, RODS AND BARS CONSTITUTE AN IMPORTANT SHARE OF THE OUTPUT OF ALUMINUM FABRICATORS.

THAT ANY SHORTAGE IN THE PRODUCTION OF FABRICATED FORMS CAN BE AVOIDED IS BEING DEMONSTRATED CURRENTLY BY ONE OF THE SO-CALLED INDEPENDENT COMPANIES, REYNOLDS METALS CO., IN CONSTRUCTING THREE FACTORIES FOR SHEETS, EXTRUSIONS, RODS AND BARS, ON A SCHEDULE CALLING FOR COMPLETION IN LESS THAN NINE MONTHS.

MOREOVER, BY LATE SPRING OR EARLY SUMMER, REYNOLDS IS EXPECTED TO BE ONE OF THE NATION'S TWO SOURCES OF VIRGIN ALUMINUM AS WELL AS ONE OF THE PRINCIPAL SUPPLIERS OF WHAT IS KNOWN IN THE TRADE AS STRONG ALLOY SHEET.

WHEN ONE OF THE WEST COAST AIRPLANE MANUFACTURERS RECENTLY ANNOUNCED IT HAD TO CURTAIL PRODUCTION BECAUSE OF A SHORTAGE OF ALUMINUM, THE PROBLEM POSED WAS ONE OF THE AVAILABILITY OF FABRICATED FORMS RATHER THAN OF VIRGIN ALUMINUM. THE ALUMINUM COMPANY OF AMERICA, FOR DECADES THE SOLE PRODUCER OF THIS COUNTRY'S VIRGIN ALUMINUM, PROMPTLY DENIED THAT A SHORTAGE EXISTED. THIS PROMPTED A SECOND STATEMENT FROM THE AIRPLANE MANUFACTURER THAT HE COULD NOT GET THE METAL FOR AIRPLANE MAKING.

EDWARD R.STETTINIUS, JR., RAW MATERIALS EXPERT FOR THE DEFENSE COMMISSION, DENIED THAT ANY SERIOUS SHORTAGE OF ALUMINUM EXISTED.

JAN 10 1941

(MORE) EJPOSAER

THE TRADE ITSELF HAS CONCEDED THAT IN THE NEXT FEW MONTHS TEMPORARY SHORTAGES MAY OCCUR IN FORGINGS, EXTRUSIONS, TUBING AND SHEETS. INDEPENDENTS HAVE COMPLAINED OCCASIONALLY THAT THE INDUSTRY COULD KEEP PACE WITH THE DEMAND IF THEY WERE CALLED INTO CONFERENCE BY THE DEFENSE COMMISSION BEFORE REQUESTS FOR ADDED PRODUCTION WERE FORMULATED.

THE EASE WITH WHICH THE UNITED STATES CAN BOOST THE SUPPLY OF

ALUMINUM, NOT ONLY FOR AIRCRAFT BUT ALSO FOR AIRCRAFT ENGINE MANUFACTURE, IS INDICATED BY THE RELATIVE INEXPENSIVENESS OF BUILDING PLANTS FOR TWO OF THE THREE PROCESSES INVOLVED IN DELIVERING THE METAL TO AIRCRAFT COMPANY YARDS.

IT HAS BEEN ESTIMATED THAT $30,000,000 WOULD BUILD A SCORE OF ALUMINUM CONCENTRATE PLANTS, AND THAT $120,000,000 WOULD BUILD TEN REDUCTION PLANTS TO PRODUCE VIRGIN ALUMINUM. FABRICATING FACTORIES, OWNED BY THE ALUMINUM COMPANY OF AMERICA AND A LARGE NUMBER OF "INDEPENDENTS" LIKE THE REYNOLDS COMPANY, ARE MORE EXPENSIVE TO CONSTRUCT.

ALUMINUM IS OF SUCH VITAL IMPORTANCE IN WARPLANE MAKING, OF COURSE, BECAUSE IT IS STRONG, YET WEIGHS ONLY ABOUT A THIRD AS MUCH AS STEEL. A GREAT DEAL OF RESEARCH WORK HAS BEEN DONE ON STAINLESS STEEL FOR AIRCRAFT MAKING, BUT AS YET THAT METAL IS USED ONLY IN ENGINE FIREWALLS, INSTRUMENT PANELS, THE TUBING OF FABRIC-COVERED PLANES AND THE SECTIONS OF WING SPARS JUST BEHIND THE ENGINES.

IN ADDITION TO THE ALLOYS, PURE ALUMINUM IS USED TO COVER WINGS AND FUSELAGES TO PREVENT OXIDATION. THE PURE METAL IS SO SOFT THAT IT CAN BE SCRATCHED WITH THE POINT OF A PENKNIFE. THE ALLOYS, ON THE OTHER HAND, ARE SO DURABLE THAT AFTER YEARS OF FUSELAGE AND WING SERVICE THEY SHOW PRACTICALLY NO "FATIGUE," COMMON TO ALL METALS.

THE PRODUCTION OF ALUMINUM IN THE UNITED STATES IN 1939 WAS 327,000,000 POUNDS, SUFFICIENT FOR ALL INDUSTRIAL AND HOUSEHOLD USES. IN SPITE OF INCREASED AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION IN 1940 TO SUPPLY THE DEMANDS OF ENGLAND AND THE U.S. ARMED SERVICES, ABOUT 400,000,000 POUNDS COVERED BOTH INDUSTRIAL AND HOUSEHOLD PURCHASES.

WHAT THE AMERICAN OUTPUT WILL BE IN 1941, WITH ADDITIONAL PLANTS BEING BUILT AS DEMANDS INCREASE, IS ONLY GUESSWORK, BUT IT PROBABLY WILL EXCEED A HALF BILLION POUNDS. THAT COMPARES WITH THE BILLION POUNDS A YEAR WHICH, IT IS ESTIMATED, CAN BE PRODUCED BY THE AXIS POWERS AND THE FACTORIES IN THE TERRITORIES THEY HAVE CONQUERED.

SOUTH AMERICA IS RICH IN BAUXITE, PARTICULARLY THE GUIANAS, BUT THE UNITED STATES WOULD TURN TO THAT CONTINENT, AS IT HAS TO THE DUTCH EAST INDIES, ONLY FOR VEINS OF HIGHER ALUMINUM CONTENT THAN THOSE AVAILABLE DOMESTICALLY.

THE NEW REYNOLDS ALUMINUM CONCENTRATE PLANT AND A NEW METAL REDUCTION PLANT ARE GOING UP AT LISTER, ALA. THEY WILL PRODUCE 60,000,000 POUNDS OF VIRGIN ALUMINUM A YEAR.

OTHER REDUCTION PLANTS ARE IN ALCOA, TENN., BADEN, N.C., MASSENA, N.Y., AND VANCOUVER, WASH.

FABRICATING FACTORIES ARE WIDELY SCATTERED. IN ADDITION TO THOSE AT ALCOA, MASSENA, NEW KENSINGTON, PA., EDGEWATER, N.J., LOUISVILLE, KY., AND RICHMOND, VA., FOUNDRIES FOR CASTING ALUMINUM ARE IN LOS ANGELES, CLEVELAND AND PITTSBURGH.

ENGLAND'S FATE STILL HANGS

BLITZKRIEG TECHNIQUE HASN'T CHANGED CLASSIC STRATEGY:
CONCENTRATION OF FORCE (1,000) NUMBER ONE

(EDITOR'S NOTE: THIS IS THE FIRST OF FOUR SPECIAL NEWS SERVICE ARTICLES LOOKING INTO BRITAIN'S MILITARY CAMPAIGN FROM THE UNUSUAL BEHIND-THE-SCENES VANTAGE POINT OF AN ON-THE-SPOT ASSOCIATED PRESS CORRESPONDENT VERSED IN MILITARY SCIENCE -- AND NOW UNHAMPERED BY CENSORSHIP. THE WRITER, TAYLOR HENRY, A NATIVE OF PALESTINE, TEX., AND A GRADUATE OF THE U.S. MILITARY ACADEMY, HAS JUST ARRIVED FROM COVERING THE ASSAULT ON ENGLAND SINCE ITS START, AND BEFORE THAT COVERED THE CONFLICT IN FRANCE. TOMORROW: HOW MUCH HAS GERMAN BOMBING HURT ENGLAND?)

BY TAYLOR HENRY

(ADVANCE)...NEW YORK, JAN 6-(AP)-MILITARY EXPERTS ARE AGREED AFTER GERMANY'S EIGHT-MONTH-LONG BLITZ AGAINST FRANCE AND ENGLAND THAT THE BASIC PRINCIPLES OF STRATEGY STAND UNCHANGED DESPITE MODERN MECHANIZED WARFARE.

JUST AS IN THE DAYS OF NAPOLEON OR CESAR OR ALEXANDER, THE WAY TO WIN WARS TODAY IS TO CONCENTRATE MORE FIRE POWER AT ANY GIVEN POINT THAN YOUR ENEMY.

IT DOESN'T MATTER WHETHER YOU ARE FIGHTING WITH BOWS AND ARROWS OR DIVE BOMBERS AND SIXTY-TON TANKS -- THE ARMY THAT CAN LAY DOWN THE HEAVIEST VOLUME OF FIRE IS THE ONE THAT IS GOING TO WIN.

IT WAS FIRE POWER REPRESENTED BY OVERWHELMING SUPERIORITY OF TANKS AND PLANES AND MACHINE-GUNS THAT WON THE BATTLE OF FRANCE FOR GERMANY; IT WILL BE THE SAME CONCENTRATION OF SHELLS AND BOMBS THAT WILL WIN THE BATTLE OF BRITAIN FOR EITHER GERMANY OR ENGLAND.

THE UNDERLYING DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE BATTLE OF FRANCE AND THE BATTLE OF BRITAIN IS THE ENGLISH CHANNEL--FORMING A DIFFICULT NO MANS' LAND BETWEEN THE GERMAN AND BRITISH ARMIES.

SINCE WARS STILL ARE WON OR LOST BY THE ACTUAL CONFLICT OF ARMED BODIES OF TROOPS, THE OUTCOME OF THE PRESENT BATTLE DEPENDS PRIMARILY ON CROSSING THAT WATERY NO MAN'S LAND AND BRINGING THE TWO ARMIES INTO PHYSICAL CONTACT. HERE AGAIN THE ANSWER IS IN CONCENTRATION OF FIRE POWER.

REDUCED TO WORDS OF ONE SYLLABLE, IF THE GERMANS CAN CONCENTRATE ENOUGH FIRE POWER IN THE SHAPE OF DIVE BOMBING AIRPLANES TO CLEAR WHAT IS TECHNICALLY KNOWN AS A "BEACH HEAD" ON THE BRITISH COAST TO LAND THEIR STILL OVERWHELMINGLY SUPERIOR NUMBERS OF WELL-ARMED MEN AND FIRE-SPURTING TANKS FOR A DIRECT ATTACK AGAINST THE BRITISH ARMY, THEY ARE CONCEDED BY MILITARY OBSERVERS TO HAVE A GOOD CHANCE OF WINNING THE WAR.

HIS METHOD WAS SIMPLICITY ITSELF. HE BORROWED OR STOLE THE FOUR TANKS FROM THE TWO DIVISIONS ON EITHER SIDE OF HIS POSITION, TOOK FOUR CAPTURED GERMAN TANKS AND ADDED THEM TO HIS OWN COMPANY OF FOUR TANKS TO MAKE A CONCENTRATED TANK UNIT WHICH, WHILE STILL OUTNUMBERED BY THE GERMANS, WAS ABLE TO MEET THEM ON A SUFFICIENTLY EVEN FOOTING TO PREVENT THE GERMANS CROSSING THE RIVER.

CHARLES DE GAULLE, OUTSTANDING FRENCH EXPERT ON MECHANIZATION AND NOW LEADER OF THE FREE FRENCH FORCES, DID THE SAME THING AT ABBEVILLE. HE TOOK A TANK DIVISION AND RAIDED BEHIND THE GERMAN LINES SO SUCCESSFULLY THAT THE FRENCH HAD A BREATHING SPELL TO REORGANIZE THEIR THIN POSITIONS ALONG THE SOMME.

BUT WHEN THE GERMANS REALLY TURNED LOOSE THEIR FULL FORCE, NEITHER DELATTRE NOR DE GAULLE WERE ABLE TO STEM THEIR ADVANCE.

THEY DID NOT HAVE THE EQUIPMENT WITH WHICH TO OFFSET THE GERMAN FIRE SUPERIORITY.

JAN 10 1941

I WAS WITH GENERAL CORAP'S NINTH ARMY WHEN IT COLLAPSED ALONG THE MEUSE AND OPENED THE GAP WHICH GAVE GERMANY THE NORTH OF FRANCE.

I WAS WITH THE FRENCH ADVANCED OUTPOST JUTTING OUT INTO NO MAN'S LAND ON THE AISNE RIVER WHERE THE FRENCH NORTHERN POSITIONS PIVOTED BACK FROM THE MAGINOT LINE WHEN THE NAZIS SWARMED OVER IN THE FINAL ATTACK STARTING JUNE 5.

THE FRENCH WHO HAD JUST TAKEN UP THEIR ADVANCED POSITIONS WERE BARELY ENTRENCHED IN FOX HOLES SCOOPED OUT OF THE HARD EARTH. AGAINST THESE POSITIONS THE GERMANS LAUNCHED WAVE AFTER WAVE OF DIVE BOMBERS WHICH SCREECHED OUT OF THE AIR FROM 4000 FEET DOWN TO 50 FEET, BOMBING AND MACHINE-GUNNING THE FRENCH TROOPS WHO HAD LITTLE MORE THAN RIFLES WITH WHICH TO DEFEND THEMSELVES.

AS THE PLANES TURNED FROM ONE NARROW SECTOR TO ANOTHER, THE PANZER DIVISIONS, THEIR 400 TANKS LOCKED ALMOST CATERPILLAR-TREAD TO TREAD, RUMBLED OVER, THEIR FLAME THROWERS SPOUTING FIRE 100 FEET AHEAD AND THEIR AUTOMATIC WEAPONS HURLING CANNON SHELLS AND BULLETS.

BEHIND THEM CAME FAST MOTORCYCLE TROOPS MACHINE-GUNNING THE FRENCH TROOPS THAT REMAINED; AND BEHIND THOSE CAME THE TRUCKS CARRYING THE INFANTRY TO HOLD THE GROUND.

THERE WERE NO FRENCH PLANES IN THE SKY; THEIR TANKS WERE OUTGUNNED; THEIR AUTOMATIC WEAPONS WERE SCATTERED OVER A WIDE POSITION. IT WAS A CASE OF RUN OR BE KILLED ON THE SPOT.

THAT MAY READ LIKE ANCIENT HISTORY NOW, BUT IT IS IN THE ANALYSIS OF THE BATTLE FOR FRANCE THAT THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE GERMAN BOMBING OF BRITAIN AND THE BRITISH BOMBING OF GERMANY APPEARS.

BOTH SIDES ARE ATTEMPTING TO PREVENT THE OTHER FROM MANUFACTURING AIRPLANES AND MUNITIONS IN SUFFICIENT QUANTITIES TO GAIN FIRE SUPERIORITY.

EVERYTIME GERMANY KNOCKS OUT A BRITISH AIRPLANE FACTORY OR DEMOLISHES A TANK DEPOT, EVERYTIME THE RAF SMASHES A GERMAN OIL STORAGE TANK OR BLASTS THE KRUPP MUNITIONS WORKS THE OTHER'S BID FOR THE VITAL ELEMENT OF OVERWHELMING FIRE POWER HAS BEEN REDUCED JUST THAT MUCH.

Essential Wartime Industries Damaged Little, British Say

Estimates Gathered From Observers Put Raid Loss at Less Than 5 Per Cent

(Taylor Henry, back from service as a war correspondent in England, discusses bomb damage to British industry in this second of four articles from the behind-the-scenes viewpoint of a writer versed in military science—and now unhampered by censorship. He is a graduate of the United States Military Academy. Tomorrow: What aid does Britain need?)

By TAYLOR HENRY,
Associated Press War Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—While German night bombers in four months of blitz against England have laid waste some cities and blasted and burned huge hunks out of others, British officials claim that damage to the island's essential war industry so far has been surprisingly small.

JAN 10 1941

Naturally, the extent of damage to military objectives in individual raids is a closely-guarded secret. That is the reason official communiques constantly refer to the destruction of "homes, churches and shops" and never mention that factories, railroads or bridges have suffered as well.

But the average of estimates I gathered from a large number of observers places damage to all war industry in the country at less than 5 per cent while damage to the aviation industry has been no more than 10 per cent.

Just before I returned to New York from England as the old year ended, I made a week's intensive survey of the damage Nazi explosive and fire bombs had done to war industry.

Without official sponsorship, I went where I wanted to and saw what I wanted to. I visited factory after factory and talked to officials and workmen in every city that had been blitzed: Coventry, Southampton, Bristol, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester and dozens of smaller industrial centers in the Midlands.

I found many factories that had been destroyed or damaged sufficiently to stop production, but I found almost 10 times as many that had not yet been hit.

And to your wartime Englishman all that matters is to keep up war production.

Coventry, Southampton Hard Hit.

Two days before I left England I talked with a high official who has charge of tabulating damage to what are officially termed "key points"—essential industry and communication.

"To us it is a question of brutal realism," he said.

"Naturally it's hard if your wife or children are killed by bombs, if the business your family has worked generations to build has been destroyed overnight. But as far as the war is concerned, to use one of your favorite American expressions, so what!

"Our factories are still turning out the arms with which to smash back at Germany, and our communication networks are still transporting them."

Apart from London the two hardest hit cities in England have been Coventry and Southampton. There the damage is almost unbelievably bad. After the war is over it will take three to five years to rebuild them.

In Bristol there are districts so badly hit they make Coventry look like a thriving city. In Birmingham whole sections, including part of its central business district, have been knocked into hollow shells of buildings.

Liverpool, on the other hand, has had it comparatively easy, while Manchester has come to be known as "the city the blitz forgot." Even the clocks are still running in Liverpool and Manchester.

In London, except for the east end, damage when I left was still spotty. The great fire raid on the "city" business district has happened since.

But, even at that time, it was almost impossible to go more than 200 yards in any direction without seeing spectacular evidence of bomb destruction.

Much of London Open Space.

However, approximately nine-tenths of greater London is open space—parks, rivers, lakes and streets. A large percentage of bombs dropped from high altitudes, even when carefully aimed, necessarily must explode harmlessly in these open areas.

Damage to cities, in addition to the estimated 5 per cent more or less permanent physical damage to industrial plants, nevertheless has had the effect of slowing up production.

Workers' homes have been destroyed; suburban bus and railroad lines to factory areas have been put out of action temporarily, and local food supplies have been destroyed.

If a man can't get his three square meals a day, if his means of getting to and from work has been knocked out, if he has no home to go back to for a night's sleep, his work suffers.

In one city, only three bombs were dropped in the suburb where an important airplane factory is located. The nearest was half a mile from the factory. Yet because of disruption of transportation that factory was forced to work on half shifts for three days.

In another city, the central section was so badly blasted that work in the surrounding industrial area—itself not even touched by the blitz—was stopped for four days.

But British officials declare that three days for one factory or four days for another when taken in the light of 365 days a year for all of England's far-flung industries is scarcely a pinprick.

There are apparently two reasons why bomb damage has been less than one might expect:

1. The way British industry has been scattered throughout the island over wide areas.

2. The basic difficulty of a flight bomber flying at 12,000 or 13,000 feet planting sufficient direct hits on a comparatively small factory to put it out of action.

Decentralization an Aid.

Before the war, the great complaint of British industry was that it was too decentralized. It is that same decentralization that today is making it possible for Britain to carry on.

Factories grouped in Birmingham, for example, have been hit and badly hit. The day after the worst blitz on Birmingham, I drove slowly through the city, got out at factory after factory and saw only blackened walls guarding twisted masses of machinery.

My immediate reaction was that the Germans must be delivering heavy blows to British war industry.

Then I drove on out through the sprawling mass of blast furnaces and steel mills that stretch for miles and miles to the north and west of Birmingham through West Bromwich, Walsall and Wolverhampton.

No real damage had been done anywhere in the whole vast area. In some of the most important factory towns, workers told me the sirens hadn't even been sounded for weeks.

It is the same story as you approach Liverpool through the great shipyards that line the Mersey River, make the circle through the port city that is carrying three quarters of Britain's ocean-borne traffic and swing back along the northern bank of the Mersey to Manchester.

While British industry generally is thought of as being concentrated in these areas, actually factories dot the countryside in suc ha way that to knock any one specific plant out of action would take a raid approaching the intensity of those which laid waste the concentrated centers of Coventry and Southampton.

It is this decentralization that makes the work of the night bomber so difficult.

Nazis "Fly the Beam."

Picture to yourself a factory covering, say, a quarter of a square mile. During the day its camouflage melts it into the surrounding fields or rows of workers' houses. At night it is blacked out so that even on the brightest moonlight nights it is only another blob of black on a black landscape.

High above, flying at around 13,000 feet—more than 2 miles high—is the Nazi bomber. He has come in "flying the beam" on a course which has been plotted previously to put him as nearly as possible over the factory objective when he hits the cross beam.

These beams are radio waves sent out from two points along the occupied French coast to intersect on the objective. They work much like the radio beam which keeps American commercial airline pilots on their course. A radio signal reaches its maximum intensity when the plane is on the course and fades as it turns to one side or the other.

When the German pilot reaches the bombing point he hears a new note from the intersecting beam and immediately signals the bombardier to let go his load.

This first stick will be a "Goering breadbasket" of combined high explosives and fire bombs designed to start a blaze near enough to the target to make it visible. If it falls anywhere within a mile of the target, it will serve its purpose.

High Level Bombing Difficult.

Then comes the really tough job for the bomber. He must use his bomb sight—and the British admit the Germans have a "fairly good" bomb sight—to rain high explosives on the factory itself.

From 2 miles up in the air that is no easy task, as the bomb at that altitude must be released some 2 miles in advance of the target. And at 2 miles up, if the bombardier even so much as sneezes as he pulls the trigger, it may throw the bomb a quarter of a mile off its objective.

That is operating under ideal conditions.

But, as a rule, Nazi bombers have found conditions far from ideal from their point of view. Anti-aircraft guns are blazing up at them from below, drawing a screen of bursting shells around the factory.

I was at an aircraft factory one night when a Nazi bomber got in so close we thought our number was up. He dropped his first bomb about 500 yards away and spaced the next three up to within 40 yards of the main building.

The next one had to be a direct hit. But it never came.

The anti-aircraft guns ringing the factory had put up such a tremendous barrage that the Nazi had to bank and run to save his own skin before he had a chance to let that next one go.

British Ships Sinking Faster Than Yards Can Build Them

Britain Still Says She Rules Seas but Officials Agree Nazi Siege Is More Serious Than in 1917; Vessels Greatest Need in Aid Program

(In this third of a series of special news service articles looking "Behind Britain's Battle," Associated Press Correspondent Taylor Henry, just back from England, presents some of the latest information on Britain's main war problems—ships and planes.)

By Taylor Henry

JAN 10 1941

New York, Jan. 8.—(AP)—Germans are sinking British ships faster, British shipping circles say, than British shipyards, working at high speed, can turn them out.

This is probably the paramount fact underlying the question of "aid to Britain" today.

It is not this article's purpose to go into the pros and cons of aid to Britain, but to report some of the salient facts and claims behind the pleas that have been made for aid.

At the moment, the main fields in which aid is sought are planes and ships. Of these two, the more urgent appears to be ships.

The British still boast that their ships rule the seas, but they have discovered the menace to their maritime commerce is even more serious than the menace from the air.

Short of Freight and War Ships

Their marine deficiencies are in both freight ships and war ships, and one leads to the other. The lack of enough fighting vessels to protect freight vessels leads to more casualties among the freighters, aggravating their lack.

The British are sending convoys of slow-moving freighters, 20 and 25 in a group, across the Atlantic strung out over as much as 30 miles of sea with only one converted merchant cruiser and perhaps a destroyer to guard them.

The destroyer, likely as not, is one of those released from coastal patrol duty and short-range convoy work by the 50 destroyers obtained from the United States in the defense base deal.

These convoys, and those like them steaming in on other ocean highways, are virtually England's only link with the outside world. They are the prey of the Nazi counter-blockade of surface raiders, submarines and coastal bomber planes.

Attacking Close to Coast

German air and sea raiders are attacking and sinking British ships within a few hundred miles of the British coast itself.

British officials and neutral shipping circles agree that Germany's sea siege against England's tight little island is even more serious than in 1917.

British naval circles are grateful for the destroyers from the United States, but say Britain's maritime situation has grown worse since their delivery three months ago.

The British want ships, and are not particular how they get them.

They have suggested that American freighters and tankers, operating or building, be sold, leased, swapped or given outright to England. British Shipping Minister Sir Ronald Cross said a few days ago that he has "covetous eyes" on foreign ships laid up in American ports.

The British say, however, any of these aids would not help much unless enough American warships were provided—under the British flag or under the American flag—to convoy the defenseless merchantmen safely across the seas.

War in Air Less Pressing

More romantic but less pressing for the moment is the war in the air and the means with which to wage it.

The British during last year, according to official figures, have received approximately 1500 planes from the United States.

Actually, I was told just before I left England in mid-December, the number is far in excess of 1500.

American aid and British production together are coming along so well that usually conservative air experts say it is possible that England will have parity in the air with Germany, if not superiority, by midsummer this year.

British planes, especially their fast fighters such as the eight-gun supermarine Spitfire and the Hawker Hurricane, are already considered by American military experts to be superior to anything the Germans put in the air.

New British Planes Better

The two new British fighter planes, the Whirlwind and the Tornado, which were thrown into the Battle of Britain just before the old year ended, are even better than their Spitfire and Hurricane prototypes.

Specifications on the new planes are not yet available, but it is an open secret in aviation circles that they are more heavily armed, miles faster and have a higher ceiling than anything Britain previously had.

At the same time, the British—with their fingers crossed—hope they have found the answer to night blitzes in a special variation of the Boulton Defiant equipped with sensitive detector apparatus which makes it possible for them to find the night bombers even on the darkest nights.

U. S. Planes Holding Their Own

American planes, particularly the Lockheed Hudson which is used mostly for coast patrol, reconnaissance and light bombing, have taken their place alongside the British and are holding their own in performance.

British pilots with whom I have talked say they like to fly the American planes. They describe them being soundly built, easy to fly and reliable in a pinch.

This is borne out by the almost phenomenally small number of losses of American planes. Figures are a secret, but it is known that on a proportional basis the losses of American planes have been considerably less than of British.

30.24 — 6883

30.24.6883

Up to mid-December, for example, not an American plane being flown from Canada to England had been lost at sea, although British experts said they did not expect to keep the record up throughout the winter.

The only complaint British fliers have against American planes is that they are less heavily armed than the British, but that is being fast remedied both in the original models as the yare built in the United States and by the planes being converted after they reach England.

American bombers, patricularly the long range type equipped with the Army's Sperry bombsight, were loudly welcomed by the British as making up a temporary shortage in the planes with which the RAF is pounding Germany's key industries.

BRITAIN HOPES WEYGAND MAY DESERT VICHY

JAN 10 1941

Some Sources Feel That De Gaulle Will Swing Loyalty Of General

At Present, However, "Free French" Move Is Headache To London

Taylor Henry, Associated Press correspondent, just returned from three years of service in England and France, looks "behind Britain's battle."

By TAYLOR HENRY

New York, Jan. 9—The Free French movement, which daily is looming larger in British calculations of what it will take to beat Germany, has turned out to be one of the Churchill Governments biggest headaches.

The cure for the headache may lie in the possibility of reconciliation between Gen. Charles de Gaulle, present leader of the Free French movement, and Gen. Maxime Weygand, French commander in chief in North Africa and De Gaulle's long-time superior officer.

The British frankly admit they are wooing Weygand.

Vast Influence A Factor

They want him because they want support of the North African colonies and the troops there which Weygand controls. They want him because next to the aged Marshal Petain, Weygand probably is the most respected French leader today and would command a large following in German-occupied and unoccupied France as well as the colonies.

But the British already have built up de Gaulle as the recognized leader of the Free French movement. Weygand, as the commander in chief who advised the French Government to ask Germany for an armistice, has been criticized both by supporters of de Gaulle and by British officials.

Harmonious Deal Sought

For some weeks, delicate negotiations have been underway behind the scenes in London seeking a formula that will save face for both leaders and permit them to work in harmony.

The British apparently feel that once such a formula has been found, the task of converting Weygand to the Free French cause will be half done.

French-British circles explain the problem this way:

De Gaulle and Weygand never have been friendly, even before their open break on the question of capitulation to Germany.

Matter Of Rank

Weygand, as the senior ranking general of the French army and in virtual control of a greater territorial area than De Gaulle, could scarcely be expected to play a secondary role to de Gaulle.

De Gaulle is naturally reluctant to turn over the movement which he founded to a man he has never liked and whose orders he defied when he refused to accept France's surrender.

This feeling, neutral diplomatic circles in London believe, was behind de Gaulle's December 3 statement when, in an interview at which Weygand's North African position was discussed, the Free French leader said his movement would welcome "any French general."

All-Inclusive Invitation

"All Frenchmen, whoever they are, de Gaulle added, "who can contribute anything, will be welcome. There is no exclusion, no exception."

The possibility, however, that de Gaulle's feelings might be changing was seen in a broadcast he made to North Africa December 28.

In the radio speech, believed to have been directed at Weygand, de Gaulle said:

"All French leaders, whatever may have been their mistakes, who will draw the sword which they have sheathed, shall find us by their side without excluding anyone and without any thought of ambition."

Two Factors Seen

Weygand still is the war's No. 1 mystery man, but the British believe two factors are pushing him toward the Free French movement:

1. The British success in Italy's colony of Libya which borders the French North African possessions controlled by Weygand.
2. Increasing German pressure on the Vichy Government.

A strange coincidence links Weygand's arrival in North Africa and the planning of the British Libyan offensive.

Weygand went to North Africa October 5.

Ten days later British War Secretary Anthony Eden was in Egypt planning the smashing drive against the Italian army, which got under way December 9.

Two Conferences Rumored

At that time reports were current in usually well-informed London circles that Eden had even conferred twice with Weygand. Emphatic British denials only strengthened the belief of neutral diplomats that there might be a basis of truth for the reports.

Just a week before the British began their offensive against Libya, Weygand was reported to have relaxed the punitive measures ordered by the Vichy Government against known followers of de Gaulle in North Africa.

Throughout November and December Weygand made numerous visits to colonial leaders as well as native chieftains in what appeared to be a fence-building expedition to make certain of their loyalty—whether to Weygand personally or to the Vichy Government is a question Italy particularly would like to have answered.

Italy Foresees Danger

Shortly afterward the Italian magazine Rassegna Italiana, in a bitter article, pointed out that the combination of France's African possessions and British African territories would create a "gigantic bloc" which could be used against Italy.

Putting these points together, neutral observers consider it likely any decision Weygand may make will be influenced greatly by the success of the British armies driving through Libya toward the generalissimo's Tunisian border.

And at the moment Britain feels Weygand at the head of a strong army in North Africa is her best guarantee that her defeated ally will not be turned into an active foe.

Aid Bill, Speed Call Given To Congress

JAN 11 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Full Power for Roosevelt to Aid Britain Is Provided in Defense Bill; Would Open U. S. Ports to Repair British War Vessels

Washington, Jan. 10—After President Roosevelt urged quick action on his vast lease-lend program, Administration leaders asked Congress today to give him sweeping powers to transfer American-made military equipment to Great Britain and other warring "democracies."

Mr. Roosevelt told his press conference just before the legislation was introduced in both houses of Congress that the powers which it gave him were needed to avoid delay.

Bill's Provisions

The bill would permit the President, "when he deems it in the interest of national defense," to:

1. "Manufacture in arsenals, factories and shipyards under their jurisdiction, or otherwise procure, any defense article for the government of any country whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States.

2. "Sell, transfer, exchange, lease, lend or otherwise dispose of, to any such government any defense article.

3. "Test, inspect, prove, repair, outfit, recondition, or otherwise to place in good working order any defense article for any such government.

4. "Communicate to any such government any defense information pertaining to any defense article furnished to such government under paragraph (2) of this subsection.

5. "Release for export any defense article to any such government."

Could Repair British Warship

A statement issued by Congressional leaders said that the bill's provision permitting the President "to test, repair, outfit or otherwise to place in good working order any defense article" meant that repairs could be made to defense articles whether manufactured in the United States or not.

"It could conceivably mean, for example," the statement said, "that the British battle cruiser Renown could be repaired in the Brooklyn navy yard if the President considered it in the interest of our national defense to do so.

Ten Billion Cost Foreseen

"The provision is broad enough to permit the use of any of our military, naval, or air bases to outfit and repair the weapons of countries whose defense is vital to the defense of the United States."

The measure authorizes the appropriation of funds "in such amounts as may be necessary" to carry out its provisions. Estimates of eventual cost have reached $10,000,000,000, and Senator Alben W. Barkley (Dem., Ky.), the majority leader, has estimated that from $2,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 may be appropriated this year.

Could Turn Over Blueprints

As for the section permitting the communication of "defense information," Barkley declared that it gave the President discretionary authority "to make available designs, blueprints and other information for using particular equipment."

Such information, he said, would relate only to defense articles actually supplied to foreign nations under the bill.

"Only What We Can Use"

The Government, Barkley explained, would order for foreign governments "only those materials which our army and navy could use."

"This means that we shall be producing the same material for our friends as for ourselves," he said. "It should eliminate double assembly lines in our factories, and should help to standardize our war materials among the democracies."

Barkley said the measure contained no waiver of the Wage-Hour law, the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act or the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

In reply to a question from Senator Arthur H. Vandenburg (Rep., Mich.), Barkley said it was planned to have the House and Senate Foreign Affairs Committees consider the legislation simultaneously in order to speed action.

Committee Dispute Looms

After Speaker Rayburn had referred the bill to the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Chairman Andrew J. May (Dem., Ky.) of the Military Committee told reporters that it was clearly a defense measure and should be studied by his own committee.

It was not clear at once whether this situation would delay the measure's trip through the House. May said he would call his committee together Monday morning to consider its rights. Chairman Sol Bloom (Dem., N. Y.) said he planned a meeting of the Foreign Affairs Committee at about the same time, to pave the way for hearings which he hoped to start Tuesday.

Leaders' Statement On Bill

In the Senate the bill was offered by Barkley and in the House by Representative John W. McCormack (Dem., Mass.), the majority floor leader. The two men joined in issuing the following statement:

"The bill simply translates into legislative form the policy of making this country into the arsenal for the democracies, and seeks to carry out President Roosevelt's pledge to send to these countries, 'in ever increasing numbers, ships, planes, tanks, guns.'

"It follows the precedent established by Congress last June when the President was empowered to authorize the Secretaries of War and Navy to manufacture, purchase and repair war materiels for the American republics. Under the present bill, this country is enabled to furnish war materiels of every kind to any country whose defense the President considers to be vital to the defense of the United States.

The Chief Provisions

"The chief provisions of this bill enables the United States—

"To manufacture war-defense materiels for such countries in Government-owned arsenals, factories and shipyards;

"Our Government will only order for foreign governments such materiels as our army and navy can use. This means that we shall be producing the same materiel for our friends as for ourselves. It should eliminate double assembly lines in our factories and should help to standardize our war materiels among the democracies. The power to manufacture under this provision does not carry with it a waiver of the Wage-Hour Act, the Walsh-Healey Act, the Wagner Act, and similar domestic legislation.

Procurement Method

"To procure or purchase any war materiels from our private airplane plants, shipyards or other factories;

"It will be for the President to decide the condition and the manner in which foreign governments can obtain war materiels under this provision.

The Materiel Involved

"To sell, lease, lend or otherwise dispose of any war materiels to any country whose defense is vital to the defense of the United States;

"The President can, under this section, dispose of new material as well as equipment now in the hands of our army or navy, according to our own needs as he sees them. A sale or lease of such articles can provide for payment in kind, or for any direct or indirect benefit to the United States. A certificate from our chief of staff or chief of naval operations will no longer be needed. A transfer of defense materiel can be made, in the President's discretion, without the formality of public advertisement or without the other restrictions which now apply to the disposition of Government property.

The Repair Provision

"To test, repair, outfit, or otherwise to place in good working order any defense article;

"This would apply equally to defense articles whether manufactured in the United States or not. It could conceivably mean, for example, that the British battle cruiser Renown could be repaired in the Brooklyn navy yard if the President considered it in the interest of our national defense to do so. The provision is broad enough to permit the use of any of our military, naval, or air bases to outfit and repair the weapons of countries whose defense is vital to the defense of the United States.

"Communicate Information"

"To communicate to any such government information pertaining to any defense article furnished to such government under the proposed bill;

"This section gives the President the discretion to make available designs, blueprints, or other information for using particular equipment. Such information would relate only to defense articles actually supplied to foreign nations under this bill.

"To release any defense articles for export.

"This eliminates restrictions in the Espionage Act of 1917 and in the Embargo Act of July 2, 1940, against the exportation of certain war materials. It does not, however, authorize the use of American vessels to deliver war materials to combat areas.

Appropriations Required

"In addition, the proposed bill forbids any foreign country which obtains defense articles or defense information from the United States from transferring them to any other country without the President's consent. It also enables the United States to buy war materials in the American republics, Canada or other countries whose defense is vital to ourselves, if such materials are not readily obtainable in this country.

"While the bill contains an authorization for an appropriation, full effects cannot be given to its provision until appropriations are actually provided by Congress."

In urging speedy action on the bill, President Roosevelt said the broad powers it gave him were needed to avoid delay.

The President told his press conference that he did not necessarily want the power apparently given in the bill, but that somebody had to have it so that quick action could be taken.

Licensing Metal Exports

He told reporters that Latin American nations, as well as "democracies" at war, could be benefited by the lease-lending plan if it were found necessary.

Mr. Roosevelt also announced that he had signed a proclamation requiring copper, brass, bronze, zinc, nickel, and potash to be exported only under export licenses, effective February 3.

These materials, he said, are needed for this nation's defense. They were added to an already large list by recommendation of the Administrator of Export Control.

Scope Of Aid-Lease Bill Fiercely Assailed

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 10—Foes of President Roosevelt's foreign policy criticized today the bill authorizing transfer of American-made military equipment to warring "democracies," and Senator Bennett C. Clark (Dem., Mo.) declared that the legislation "is simply a bill authorizing the President to declare war."

Administration supporters, however, expressed confidence that the Senate would give overwhelming approval to the measure after the House had acted.

When the bill was introduced in the House by Representative John W. McCormack (Dem., Mass.), a dozen members jumped up to make remarks, but Speaker Sam Rayburn (Dem., Texas) recognized Representative Joseph W. Martin, of Massachusetts, the Republican floor leader.

Party Bill? Martin Asks

Martin said that apparently no Republican members of Congress had been consulted in preparation of the legislation, and asked whether it was to be consideerd in a non-partisan manner.

The Democracy Arsenal Bill

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10 (AP).—The text of the measure introduced in Congress today to effect President Roosevelt's plan of lending or leasing military equipment to democracies follows:

A BILL TO FURTHER PROMOTE THE DEFENSE OF THE UNITED STATES, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that this act may be cited as "an act to promote the defense of the United States."

SECTION 2

As used in this act—

(A) The term "defense article" means:

(1) Any weapon, munition, aircraft, vessel, or boat;

(2) Any machinery, facility, tool, material or supply necessary for the manufacture, production, processing, repair, servicing, or operation of any article described in this subsection;

(3) Any component material or part of or equipment for any article described in this subsection;

(4) Any other commodity or article for defense. Such term "defense article" includes any article described in this subsection: manufactured or procured pursuant to Section 3; or to which the United States or any foreign government has or hereafter acquires title, possession, or control.

(B) The term "defense information" means any plan, specification, design, prototype, or information pertaining to any defense article.

SECTION 3

(A) Notwithstanding the provisions, of any other law, the President may, from time to time, when he deems it in the interest of national defense, authorize the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the head of any other department or agency of the government:

(1) To manufacture in arsenals, factories and shipyards under their jurisdiction, or otherwise procure, any defense article for the government of any country whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States.

(2) To sell, transfer, exchange, lease, lend or otherwise dispose of, to any such government any defense article.

(3) To test, inspect, prove, repair, outfit, recondition or otherwise to place in good working order any defense article for any such government.

(4) To communicate to any such government any defense information pertaining to any defense article furnished to such government under paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(5) To release for export any defense article to any such government.

(B) The terms and conditions upon which any such foreign government receives any aid authorized under subsection (A) shall be those which the President deems satisfactory, and the benefit to the United States may be payment or repayment in kind or property, or any other direct or indirect benefit which the President deems satisfactory.

SECTION 4

All contracts or agreements made for the disposition of any defense article or defense information pursuant to Section 3 shall contain a clause by which the foreign government undertakes that it will not, without the consent of the President, transfer title to or possession of such defense article or defense information by gift, sale or otherwise, or permit its use by any one not an officer, employee or agent of such foreign government.

SECTION 5

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the head of any other department or agency of the government involved shall, when any such defense article or defense information is exported, immediately inform the department or agency designated by the President to administer Section 6 of the act of July 2, 1940 (54 Stat. 714), of the quantities, character, value, terms of disposition and destination of the article and information so exported.

SECTION 6

(A) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act.

(B) All money and all property which is converted into money received under Section 3 from any government shall, with the approval of the Director of the Budget, revert to respective appropriation or appropriations out of which funds were expended with respect to the defense article or defense information for which such consideration is received, and shall be available for expenditure for the purpose for which such expended funds were appropriated by law, during the fiscal year in which such funds are received and the ensuing fiscal year.

SECTION 7

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy and the head of the department or agency shall in all contracts or agreements for the disposition of any defense article or defense information fully protect the rights of all citizens of the United States who have patent rights in and to any such article or information which is hereby authorized to be disposed of and the payments collected for royalties on such patents shall be paid to the owners and holders of such patents.

SECTION 8

The Secretaries of War and of the Navy are hereby authorized to purchase or otherwise acquire arms ammunition and implements of war produced within the jurisdiction of any country to which Section 3 is applicable, whenever the President deems such purchase or acquisition to be necessary in the interests of the defense of the United States.

SECTION 9

The President may, from time to time, promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of this act; and he may exercise any power or authority conferred on him by this act through such department, agency, or officer as he shall direct.

McCormack retored that he was "very sorry that my friend should raise that question" and said he "assumed that national defense transcended partly politics."

Martin agreed, but said "we should be given some consideration in preparation of this program."

Hitler Called "Devil Incarnate"

In the Senate, Senator Kenneth McKellar (Dem., Tenn.), terming Adolf Hitler a "devil incarnate," proposed "repeal of all laws which would in a nyway interefere with our giving Great Britain all aid that the President or Congress might find necessary."

When McKellar took his seat, Senator John A. Danaher (Rep., Conn.) read a message by President Millard Fillmore (1850-1853) urging non-intervention in internal affairs of other nations.

Senator Robert M. La Follette (Preg., Wis.), who indorsed President Roosevelt's third-term candidacy, told reporters that he would oppose the measure.

"Asking Congress Abdicate"

"This is not a request for a blank check," La Follette said. "It is a demand that Congress abdicate vital and important powers."

Senator Theodore Francis Green (Dem., R. I. told reporters that: 'This is a bill to aid the United States, using Great Britain to help us while we prepare our defense. So long as Britain holds out, the more time we will have to prepare."

Senator Clark of Missouri, foe of Administration foreign policies, asserted that the measure would permit the President "to declare war so far as international aiffairs are concerned and to set up a totalitarian government so far as domestic affairs are concerned."

"Gives Absolute Power"

Morris A. Sheppard (Dem., Texas), chairman of the Senate Military Committee, said he thought Congress would approve the measure because of the world emergency. Senator James H. Hughes (Dem., Del.) said he was prepared to support it because he was "inclined to go pretty far in aiding Britain."

Senator Ellison's Smith (Dem., S. C.) commented that "we are about to give him (the President) absolute power over the purse and the people, but it will not be done with my consent."

Senator Arthur Capper (Rep., Kan.) told reporters that "we ought to go slow."

Baruch Asks Backing For Defense Effort

Washington, Jan. 10 (AP)—Bernard M. Baruch, who as chairman of the War Industries Board in the World War was virtual czar of defense production, today said President Roosevelt's revamping of the defense setup was a "long forward step," and he called on the public to give hearty cooperation.

He asserted, however, that he would prefer one-man control instead of the two-man setup created by Mr. Roosevelt when he gave William S. Knudsen and Sidney Hillman coequal powers over production.

Asked the reason for his preference, he replied that he has "always advocated one-man control because of my experiences in the World War. There should be a committee for consultation and there should be one man for action."

He pointed out, however, that he did not intend to be critical of the new arrangement; that he hoped the country would give full support to it, and that he believed it would succeed.

Marshall Declares Bill Would Lead To Naziism

New York, Jan. 10 (AP)—Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee, said tonight in commenting on the Administration bill to lend or lease war equipment to countries at war that "Mr. Roosevelt has asked Congress to surrender to him its exclusive war-making power and authority.

"He is asking for exactly that kind of dictatorial power which has so incensed him when exercised by governments elsewhere in this chaotic world," Marshall said in a statement. ". . . If Mr. Roosevelt gets his wish, National Socialism will replace democracy here, and the United States will go to war."

550 ENGLISH PLANES POUND NAZI FRANCE

1,000-Square-Mile Area Is Blasted In Mightiest Day Assault Yet

Dover Cliffs Are Shaken By Bombing Across Channel—Airports Attacked

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 10—In the mightiest daylight offensive ever loosed by the Royal Air Force, half a hundred British bombers and a great swarm of 500 fighter planes delivered a ground-shaking assault today over a thousand square miles of northwestern France.

The Air Ministry itself announced in general terms merely that more than one hundred fighters were involved, but unofficial observers of this great action said the fighters outnumbered the bombers by ten to one.

They were declared to have struck at the Channel straits areas of Calais and Boulogne and elsewhere upon the bases of the Nazi invasion effort, sweeping the German positions with bombs and machine-gun fire—the latter from eight-gunned fighter craft which formed the biggest escort ever to take off from England.

Three Nazi Interceptors Downed

Three of the few German planes which rose to challenge the raiders were shot down, the Air Ministry said, and only one British plane was lost—that on the return trip.

For an hour, just at midday, British explosives fell. Hits were claimed upon a series of airdromes—assaulted by planes diving down to within 200 feet of the target—and upon German patrol ships and military buildings.

The southeast English coast—twenty to thirty miles from the coastal targets—shuddered under the shock. Britons on the shore reported that bombs dropped by the first line of attacking craft were heard bursting in France before the last wave had passed out of sight of the English coast.

Likened To Great Nazi Raids

It was a raid likened by British aviation circles to the great Nazi mass attacks of last September on Britain, "but more successful" than these. British experts said it indicated that Britain now had enough planes to risk heavy losses in daylight operations.

[The official German news agency reported that eight British planes were destroyed in the attack. German warplanes were declared to have "intercepted energetically."]

This daytime attack followed night forays even bigger in scope, extending from the coast of Norway to interior Germany and southern France—many of them carried out through very dirty weather.

Brest Hit For Six Hours

Brest, France, the German-operated submarine base, was assaulted for six hours, said the Air Ministry, with whole sticks of bombs; fires were set off and a large ship in the harbor was squarely hit.

A returning pilot reported an immense explosion followed a hit by a salvo of bombs near a dry dock and said that a harbor building "literally disintegrated and a mushroom of black smoke rose to a height of several hundred feet."

Results Elsewhere

The announced results elsewhere:

In Germany—Synthetic oil plant at Gelsenkirchen left erupting in explosions and fires; factories, blast furnaces and railways attacked in the Ruhr; the inland ports of Duisburg-Ruhrort and Düsseldorf again bombed.

In Holland—Docks at Flushing, a major port, attacked, along with an oil-storage plant at Rotterdam.

In France—Brest hit again; Dunkerque and Calais as well.

In Norway—A railway bridge near Egersund "severely damaged."

Delayed official advices from the Mediterranean area declared, too, that in raids through Wednesday night and yesterday morning bombs fell "either on or very near the stern" of an Italian battleship of the 35,000-ton Littorio class at Naples, "causing a dull red glow," and that other bombs spread fire among an unstated number of big motor vessels.

Explosions "on or near" ships moored at Palermo, Italy, also were reported.

Italian Supplies Ships Hit

Tonight the Air Ministry announced that during last night and early today several tons of bombs were dropped on Italian naval vessels in harbor at Messina, Sicily, and on wharves, docks, oil-storage plants and an army marshaling center.

One stick—a series—of bombs was declared to have fallen across Fascist cruisers, but observation of the damage was described as impossible because of the heavy smoke screen thrown up by the vessels.

Explosions and fires were reported in the wharves, near a dry dock and close to an oil plant.

The slowly gathered details of the day's raids in France as announced by the Air Ministry tonight implied, but did not directly claim, far heavier German plane losses than those craft shot down in combat.

A forest near Calais in which Nazi planes had been hidden was declared to have been set aflame.

Further, the Ministry asserted that when British pilots attacked gun posts and troops near Wissant there was no attempt at interception by German fighters.

A Polish pilot was declared to have flown at ground level across an airdrome, opening his machine guns at a number of grounded German planes. He reported shooting down a Nazi Messerchmitt fighter as he climbed away and landing safely at his base in England despite the fact that his open throttle was jammed in that position.

Another pilot told of spraying four German patrol boats with machine-gun slugs, and he, too, reported seeing a Messerschmitt going down, with smoke trailing, into the sea.

Raids On Oil Stores

While last night's attack on the German oil stores at Gelsenkirchen and Rotterdam was overshadowed by the fury of the day's assaults, the Air Ministry's unusually detailed announcements of the results suggested that in the official view there were in the whole night-and-day campaign no more important objectives.

Fires, multicolored explosions, a shower of flames forming a ragged line 200 yards long—all these were reported.

Factory buildings were said to have been hit by many high explosives, and soon the heavy black smoke of burning oil rose over the whole scene.

After the attack on oil stored in Rotterdam harbor, pilots reported fires visible from miles away and said that when they left explosions still were popping.

At Essen, site of the Krupp armament works, fires were declared set off

Airdromes Hit From 250 Feet

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 10—British bombers protected by hundreds of fighters swarmed over 1,000 square miles of northwestern France for an hour today in a great daylight raid, blasting airdromes, military installations and patrol vessels, the British announced tonight.

Coastal observers at one place counted fifty bombers roaring over the Channel. The raid, one of the heaviest ever carried out by the British by day, was the first in which such a large number of fighters was used to protect the bomb carriers.

The eight-gunned fighters were declared to have outnumbered the bombers 10 to 1, indicating that some 500 fighters were used in the mammoth assault.

Aviation circles described the British foray as resembling the mass German daylight raids on these islands last September and October, "but more successful."

The attack began shortly after midday in the Calais area and progressed deep inland and up the coast toward Boulogne. British fighters were said to have darted down to within 250 feet of the ground to machine-gun airdromes used by German air raiders.

Raiders Unchallenged

Taken largely by surprise, few Nazi pilots challenged the R. A. F. Several German planes were reported damaged before they had a chance to rise. Three of those which did get into the air were reported downed.

(A Berlin dispatch said a big group of British bombers accompanied by a protective squadron of fighters was beaten back near Calais by Nazi chasers this afternoon.

(The Germans were reported to have shot down one British Blenheim bomber and one Spitfire fighter. They asserted no bombs were dropped on any objectives.)

"Offensive Spirit"

Aviation circles said this "offensive spirit" of the British could be interpreted as indicating they are not now so short of planes that they dare not raid by daylight.

The attacks were a continuation of assaults by the British last night, the heaviest of which was a six-hour pummelling of the German submarine base at Brest. Other targets of the night raiders were industrial plants in Germany's Ruhr Valley.

Only a few hours after the night raiders set their planes down back home, the daylight attackers swarmed over the Channel to loose bombs whose blasts shook the southeast coast on this side. The attack began shortly after noon and a little later the bombers roared back to their bases.

Residents of one South Coast town reported "at least fifty bombers" took part in today's daring assault. The planes sped through clear skies, these observers said, and before the last wave was out of sight bombs dropped by the first waves were heard exploding across the Channel.

The Ministry of Information said that airdromes, military installations and patrol vessels were bombed and machine-gunned from low level.

Summing up the night attacks, the Air Ministry news service said dock and storage buildings at Brest, just around the French coast from the western entrance to the Channel, were repeatedly straddled with sticks of bombs.

The attack, the third on Brest within a week, was carried out by pilots of the coastal command, who reported starting fires near the military port and direct hits on a large ship in the harbor.

Score On Drydock

Other bombs were declared to have burst on the mole and between the docks. One pilot said his salvo burst near a drydock, followed by an immense explosion.

"A building literally disintegrated and a mushroom of black smoke rose to a height of several hundred feet," this pilot said.

The Air Ministry said the Brest attack was made by a strong force of planes aided by bright moonlight in which the docks could be picked out clearly.

In today's daylight raids, the British announced officially that three German fighters were shot down and that not a single British plane was lost. In addition to those downed, a number of Nazi craft on the ground were reported damaged.

So great was today's attack that repercussion of exploding bombs shook the southeast English coast, twenty to thirty miles on this side of the Channel.

The R. A. F. began the attack shortly after noon and a little later a large formation of twin-motored British bombers came roaring back from the direction of the German-occupied port of Boulogne. A strong force of fighters hovered protectively around the homing bombers.

Ruhr Regions Hit

The Air Ministry announced that explosions and fires were seen in a Gelsenkirchen synthetic oil plant after R. A. F. bombers pummeled it and other objectives in the Ruhr.

Ground haze, the communique said, made it difficult for R. A. F. pilots to observe the full effects of their bombs on the oil plant and elsewhere.

The inland ports of Duisberg-Ruhrort and Duesseldorf and factories, blast furnaces and railways in the Ruhr also were attacked.

Two Planes Lost

On oil-storage plant at Rotterdam and docks at Flushing in the Netherlands and Dunkirk and Calais on the French Channel coast were other targets in the night raids.

Planes of the coastal command were said to have attacked successfully the dock area at Brest and severely damaged a railway bridge near Egersund, on the southwest coast of Norway.

JAN 11

Dover, England, Jan. 10 (A. P.).—British bombers made a large scale attack on cross-channel targets in France shortly after noon today and heavy explosions could be heard along the southeast English coast. The ground shook to the explosions although the English and French shores at this point are between twenty and thirty miles apart.

A little while after the first blasting of heavy bombs a large formation of twin-motored R. A. F. bombers was seen returning from the direction of the German-occupied port of Boulogne. They were guarded by a strong fighter force.

In London one high explosive bomb missile fell in a crowded street, caused several casualties. In another part of the capital two persons were killed when an anti-aircraft shell fell to earth before exploding.

In the South of England, an explosion in the sky, during a barrage thrown up by the ground guns, shook houses ten miles away.

Reports indicated that the assaults elsewhere were aimed mainly at coastal towns and inland manufacturing areas. Liverpool was raided over a period of several hours but only one fatality was reported there. A shower of fire bombs was loosed on another northwest of England town, but no serious damage was reported.

Enemy aircraft were reported this afternoon near a southwest town and an east Anglian town, where distant explosions were heard. Many British fighters were seen flying toward the coast to meet the raiders as they swept across the channel.

London, Jan. 11-(Sat.)-(AP)-Royal Air Force bombers once more blasted at Brest naval base in German-occupied France last night, an official announcement said today.

London Suffers New Fire Raid

Hundreds of Incendiary Bombs Reported Extinguished as Fast as They Fall.

London, Jan. 10 (A. P.).—German raiders hurled several hundred fire bombs on London last night in one of the biggest and most widespread series of raids carried on against England in recent weeks, but no serious fires were caused, the Government announced.

JAN 11 1941

One large district of the capital was the object of an especially heavy attack, and most of the incendiary bombs were loosed there in an apparent effort to repeat the destruction inflicted on the heart of the city in the major fire raid of December 29. Newly organized fire bomb squads doused the missiles almost as fast as they fell, however, and emerged with flying colors, the Ministry of Home Security declared. In one borough alone, it added, twenty small fires were put out without any call upon the regular fire department for aid.

Ending a three and a half nights' lull in the air war on England—a lull attributed to the weather—the Nazis ranged from London to Liverpool and from Wales to northeast England. An official communique said that the number of casualties, however, was nowhere large.

LONDON, Jan. 11 (Saturday) (AP) Hundreds of high-explosive and incendiary bombs were rained on a south coast town in England last night and early today in a furious German air attack.

The British Press Association said it was feared that there were many casualties. Six churches, several theaters and a number of business premises were reported damaged. Communications facilities also suffered.

[Censorship prevented disclosure of the town's name.]

The raided area included residential districts, and a number of persons were made homeless.

A first attempt to start a fire raid on the town was turned back early last night by Royal Air Force fighter planes. Then a second and larger wave droned in from the sea some time later under more favorable attacking conditions and "smothered" the town with incendiaries and explosives.

One high explosive bomb blasted an Air Raid Precautions post. Many casualties were feared to have resulted.

London was free of raiders meanwhile, but Liverpool and other Merseyside towns reported the unusual experience of listening to circling German planes for hours without the accompaniment of bomb blasts or gunfires. The "nuisance raiders" left, still without bombing.

D. N. B. Reports Failure of Foe's Bombers, Laid to 'Energetic' Interception

BERLIN, Jan. 10 (AP).—D. N. B., the German official news agency, reported tonight that eight British planes were destroyed in today's daylight attack by the Royal Air Force on northern France. German warplanes were declared to have "intercepted energetically."

The British bombers, accompanied by a protective squadron of fighters, were beaten back near Calais by Nazi chasers, informed sources said, asserting no bombs were dropped on any objectives.

20 Killed In Germany

JAN 11 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 10—British planes raiding "various places" in western Germany last night killed twenty persons and left many injured, the German high command announced today.

The British raids were carred out, today's communique said, while German planes were attacking central and southern England and giving especially heavy poundings to Manchester, Liverpool and London.

Military Damage Denied

The high command said the British failed to hit any military or military-economic objectives, adding that the chief damage was inflicted on several apartment houses, Bethlehem Cloisters near Cologne and a Catholic journeymen's home at Duesseldorf. The latter was said to have been destroyed.

Two British raiders were reported downed, one by a Nazi night chaser and the other by anti-aircraft.

During raids last night by the Royal Air Force, authorized Germans said, a hospital in Flushing, German-occupied Holland, was hit by bombs and two nurses killed.

Residential sections of Gelsenkirchen, Wesel and neighboring villages were damaged by the British, it was said.

Barrage balloons around one unidentified industrial plant in the region so surprised the raiders, Nazis reported, that they were unable to make their attack and production continues unhampered.

WAVELL'S BIG SIEGE GUNS POUND TOBRUK

British Haul Cannon From Bardia To Tackle Next Objective

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Jan. 10—Britain's batteries in Libya shelled Italian-held Tobruk today in the initial blow of an attack patterned after that which reduced Bardia, fifty miles to the east, five days ago.

Nearly cut off by an encircling movement of British mechanized units fifty miles to the west, Tobruk was rapidly being surrounded by British land forces, while its perimeter of outer defenses was battered by big siege guns rolled into place from Bardia.

The British, conceding it would take some time to bring up their full siege strength, said it was too early to speak of an "assault."

Faces Triple Attack

The seacoast town—if the Bardia pattern is followed—faces not only a heavy attack from land but severe bombing from the air and shelling from the sea.

Such a triple offensive reduced Bardia in eighteen days and resulted in the capture of its garrison of more than 30,000 soldiers.

In another sector far from the Libyan front British land forces were reported advancing almost at will across Italy's African Empire.

Buna Recaptured

Some 2,500 miles to the southeast the British general headquarters reported that troops of the reinforced South African army had recaptured Buna in the Moyale sector of Kenya, which the Italians have held for months.

In between there were reports that revolting tribesmen in Italian-conquered Ethiopia were attacking airdromes and cutting the Italian lines of supply to the Kenya sector.

British dispatches said there was no sign of Italian opposition at Buna, which is an important road junction point one hundred miles south of the Ethiopian border.

El Wak Abandoned

The British indicated their forces had carried the fight also to Italian East Africa in the Kenya-Italian Somaliland border zone, where they reported the Fascist troops had abandoned El Wak.

While Tobruk was being put under siege, the British sought to drive a corridor across the "hump" of Libya to cut off the whole province of Cirenaica.

This would put the British advance guard on the Mediterranean at the base of the Gulf of Sidra, 300 miles from the Libyan-Egyptian frontier and isolate both Tobruk and Bengazi.

FIGHTING IN EAST AFRICA

Buna in Kenya Colony Entered—Italians Reported to Have Abandoned El Wak

Cairo, Jan. 10 (A. P.).—British big guns opened up with a heavy shelling of the outer defenses of encircled Tobruk today in an apparent forerunner to a grand assault on the Italian-held Libyan base.

British military authorities here said that it would take more time, however, to bring up their full strength for a knockout blow. They said that their preparations were proceeding along the same lines as those which brought the capture of Bardia, seventy miles east of Tobruk.

At the same time, flaring action was reported against Italian East Africa, hundreds of miles southeast of the Libyan front. The British announced that their forces had entered Buna, Kenya Colony crossroads some 100 miles south of the Ethiopian border, and that El Wak, in the Kenya-Italian Somaliland border zone, had been abandoned by the Italians.

Buna is in the Moyale sector, which the Italians have held for months. The British said there was now no sign of opposition from Italians there. They also reported the capture of Serobatib, on the Sudanese-Ethiopian frontier, about forty miles north of Kassala.

Drive Gains Momentum.

The British drive against Italy's African empire, a drive which already has eaten up 5,000 square miles of territory in a month, was reported today to be gaining momentum on a widening front extending from Libya to Ethiopia.

While the advance guard of the Army of the Nile pressed on across the Libyan desert west of besieged Tobruk, British general headquarters said extensive R. A. F. raids on Italian bases in Ethiopia were encouraging an incipient native uprising in that Fascist colony.

There were hints that Ethiopia, where fighting between British and Italian forces thus far has been limited largely to frontier skirmishes, might soon become a real battleground.

Fascists Forced to Flee.

British military men said native tribesmen had followed up many recent R. A. F. raids on Ethiopia by attacking the bombed Italian garrisons, forcing Fascist troops in some instances to flee.

Ethiopian guerrillas also have been harrassing Italian lines of communication, it was said, disrupting the movement of supplies to frontier posts.

(Haile Selassie, refugee Emperor of Ethiopia, whom the British have recognized as lawful ruler of the Italian-conquered nation, is known to have been in Africa since September, presumably in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, for the purpose of rallying his people to revolt against the Italians.)

British mechanized troops, who were reported yesterday to have driven 40 miles beyond Tobruk to seize an Italian airdrome at Gazala, were believed by observers here to be aiming for the coastal road below Bengasi. Bengasi is about 300 miles from the Egyptian border.

Trying To Drive Wedge

It appeared here that the British were trying to drive a wedge straight across the "hump" of eastern Libya, isolating Bengasi as well as Tobruk without the necessity of fighting their way along the coast.

The Royal Air Force claimed another victory over Italian flyers at Malta, where four of a dozen Fascist planes that gave that Mediterranean stronghold three alerts yesterday were reported shot down by British fighters. A fifth Italian plane was said to have been downed by anti-aircraft fire.

Battleship 'Glowed' After Naples Bomb Attack, R. A. F. Says

Direct Hits on Italian City's Rail Station Also Are Claimed

By the Associated Press.

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 10.—British bombs fell "on or very near" the stern of an Italian battleship of the Littorio class, "causing a dull red glow," the R. A. F. reported tonight of a Wednesday night raid on Naples.

The Littorio class is Italy's new 35,000-ton division—the Littorio, Vittorio Veneto, Impero and Roma. Only the Littorio and Vittorio Veneto have been put into service. The others are building.

One of the class was claimed by the British to have been hit and left "badly down by the bows" in the aerial torpedo attack on the Taranto base the night of November 11-12.

Naples Rail Station Hit.

The communique also reported direct hits on the Naples railway station and added that fires were started among large motor vessels in the harbor and along the water front.

Further raids were made yesterday on besieged Tobruk, following attacks Wednesday night, it reported.

The battleship, merchant shipping, docks and the railway station at Naples were objectives of a particularly heavy raid on that frequently-assaulted Italian city, the R. A. F. said.

(The Italians acknowledged that five persons were killed and some 30 injured by waves of British attackers Wednesday night when, they said, "numerous bombs" struck 15 buildings and a hospital ship in the harbor.)

Fires Seen on Water Front.

Returning pilots said fires blazed quickly among large motor vessels in Wednesday night's attack. A string of fires was said to have been seen along the water front from the north end of the dry dock to the jetty.

"Several bombs" hit buildings on the quay, rail lines were blasted and a series of thundering explosions erupted, the R. A. F. account went on.

Palermo, on the Island of Sicily, the object of a Wednesday night raid, also received a return call, the communique said, adding that bombs straddled the wharf there, causing explosions.

The British said Benina airdrome, in Libya, again was raided, with at least 12 Italian planes destroyed and hangers and other buildings blown to pieces by direct hits.

British Offensive In Italy Possible, London Circles Say

Success Would Add Bases And Raise England's Prestige in Balkans

BACKGROUND—

Because of successes of British forces in Egypt and Libya and of Greeks in Albania, position of Italians has grown steadily worse, and observers have constantly pondered the question of whether Germany, Italy's axis partner, would send definite assistance to Italy. Recently German flyers arrived in Italy to aid in the war.

By DREW MIDDLETON,
Associated Press War Correspondent.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—A British offensive against Italy to checkmate Germany's long-threatened invasion of England is being spoken of as a possibility by military circles here as the result of recent developments in the Mediterranean.

Victories by the Army of the Nile, as well as by Greek forces in Albania, have brought widespread speculation that the end of Italian resistance in North Africa may be near.

Once the North African campaign is cleaned up, some observers believe, the Royal Navy and Air Force may open widespread attacks on Italian ports and military centers in an all-out attempt to bring Italy to the point of surrender or revolution.

Behind the navy and air force would be Britain's Army of the Near East, ready for an invasion of Italy either across the Mediterranean or the Adriatic.

So long as fighting on the Eastern front remains localized in North Africa and Albania, the Germans can afford to discount Italian reverses as having no real bearing on the outcome of the war, military analysts point out.

Should Italy be threatened by invasion, however, Germany would find it necessary to strengthen her ally by diverting not only planes, but troops to Italy, they said.

A beaten Italy, it was added, means British bombers operating from Italian airfields and British troops in the Brenner Pass.

The military advantages which Britain would derive from knocking Italy out of the war would be equalled by political gains, these observers contend, strengthening British prestige in the Balkans and giving new spirit to nations now under German domination.

Subject of Conjecture.

Neutral military men said that the number of troops Germany would have to send into Italy to make her formidable enough to resist invasion successfully—or even to salvage her armies from North Africa and Albania—is a subject of conjecture.

They point out that after Caporetto—where the Italians suffered a smashing defeat at the hands of the Austrians in the World War—the British sent three army corps totaling about 500,000 men and France sent hundreds of guns to hold Italy for the Allies.

Even the German Army hardly could divert that many men to Italy without halting plans for an invasion of Britain, these analysts believe.

Moreover, should events reach the point where Germany would find herself impelled to rush aid to Italy to save her axis partner from outright invasion, it is pointed out, she scarcely would be able to move sufficient warships or submarines into the Mediterranean to challenge British naval superiority there.

Neutral military men agree that any attempt by the British to shift the main theater of war from the western to the eastern front would be a bold and ambitious move.

They recall, however, that the man now directing Britain's war strategy is the same Winston Churchill who conceived a similarly ambitious plan during the World War—the Allied attack on the Dardanelles.

In his writings he still stoutly maintains that his original plan would have worked had the army and navy listened to him. They have to listen now.

"The Italian fleet apparently will not come out to try to protect the transport of supplies across the Mediterranean. This sea, which Mussolini often boasted he would make an Italian sea, is today less Italian than it ever has been. The fact is that Britain controls the Mediterranean, and with that control, the key to the Middle East."

The high command reported also that Fascist planes "hit about 100 enemy mechanized vehicles" in the Libyan desert, while other British mechanized equipment was destroyed by artillery fire at Tobruk and Italian warships shelled "enemy coastal positions" in the Greek campaign.

Political Moves Ordered

Other Italian planes were credited with bombing Salum, Egpyt, and machine-gunning tents and armored cars in east African areas near Kassala and Sciusceib.

"Local Actions" In Albania

Only "local actions" and artillery activity on the Albanian front were reported by the Italian command, but it claimed effective bombardment of Greek coastal positions and hits on anti-aircraft emplacements at an "enemy naval base."

An official announcement placed Italian losses for December in the war with Greece at 8,951 men, including 1,301 killed, 3,052 missing and 4,598 wounded.

Premier Mussolini's order for more concerted Fascist party activity in Albania was given to Tefrik Mboria, head of the Albanian branch.

Churchill Denounced

Virginio Gayda, leading Fascist editorial spokesman, charged in Il Giornale D'Italia that British Prime Minister Churchill sought to establish "Anglo-Saxon domination of the world."

He remarked that the United States had lost "precious markets in Europe" and added:

"If the United States with a realistic sense and clearer vision of European things, wanted to settle its affairs better, it should line up, in the interests of its own trade, on the side of young nations (Germany and Italy) instead of digging such a deep and dangerous chasm against them."

In addition, the high command reported, Fascist warships "effectively bombed enemy coastal positions" in the Greek campaign.

The British battleship was not identified, but the daily war bulletin said it was hit despite "violent anti-aircraft reaction" during an attack on a large naval formation in the Eastern Mediterranean.

Convoy Ships Torpedoed.

One of the two submarines sunk by torpedo boats was the French 1,400-ton Narval, the communique said, identifying her as a vessel incorporated in forces serving England."

("Free French" headquarters in London announced the loss of the Narval by "enemy action" yesterday. She was identified as the first unit of the French Navy to join the "Free French" forces on the side of Britain.)

Two merchant ships in convoy were reported torpedoed by an Italian submarine in the Mediterranean, while other submarines were said to have sunk the 2,833-ton Greek steamer Anastassia and the armed British steamer Shakespear in the Atlantic.

Two Italians planes "failed to return" from the attack in which the British battleship was hit, the high command said, and one British plane was shot down.

(Twenty-three survivors from the 5,029-ton Shakespear landed at the Cape Verde Island of Sal Wednesday and reported that several crew members were killed in the explosion of the submarine torpedo which sent the vessel to the bottom. Nineteen crew members were missing.)

Malta Base Is Bombed.

The high command reported that Italian planes had bombed and machine-gunned the British air and naval base of Malta, hitting five planes and an anti-aircraft battery on the ground and two steamers.

(A Valletta dispatch last night said British fighters shot down four of a dozen Italian planes attacking Malta, while anti-aircraft fire accounted for a fifth. Slight damage and no casualties resulted from the Italian attack, the British announced.)

British planes were reported to have dropped incendiary bombs on Messina, in Sicily, but the high command said resulting fires were "immediately put under control."

Coast Is Shelled Again.

Rome, Jan. 10 (A. P.).—Italian warships effectively bombed enemy coastal positions in the campaign against the Greeks, the Italian High Command reported today, while on land, "local actions took place in some sectors of the Eleventh Army, with artillery activity on the remainder of the front."

Italian warplanes, it added, bombed and machine-gunned marching troops and motor vehicles, and bombed anti-aircraft battery emplacements defending an important enemy naval base.

Meanwhile today Premier Mussolini ordered more effective action on the part of the Fascist party members among the Albanian "masses" in an audience granted to Tefik Mboria, head of the Albanian branch. He had reported to Il Duce on political conditions in Albania.

Mussolini's instructions were along the lines of those he gave to Fascist chieftains in Italy on November 10—that they show more activity in making contact with the people, looking after their morale and extending relief to the needy.

An official Italian announcement today placed Fascist losses in the war with Greece during December at 8,951 men, including 1,301 killed, 3,052; missing and 4,598 wounded.

CAIRO, EGYPT, JAN. 10-(AP)-BRITISH PILOTS DROPPED SEVERAL TONS (CORRECT) OF BOMBS ON THE HARBOR OF MESSINA, SICILY, LAST NIGHT AND A WHOLE SERIES OF EXPLOSIVES FELL ACROSS ITALIAN CRUISERS, THE BRITISH MIDDLE EAST COMMAND ANNOUNCED TONIGHT.

THE VESSEL ATTACKED WERE SAID TO HAVE LAID DOWN SUCH THICK SMOKE SCREENS THAT WHATEVER DAMAGE WAS DONE COULD NOT BE OBSERVED.

Silent on Haile Selassie.

London, Jan. 10 (A. P.).—The Italians have lost two platoons, totaling about sixty men, in a brief fight in the Kassala area, on the frontier between the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and Eritrea, military spokesmen said today.

Foreign Office spokesmen declined to comment on the whereabouts of Haile Selassie, the refugee Emperor of Ethiopia, whom the British have recognized as the lawful ruler of the Italian-conquered nation, and who is known to have flown to Africa last September, presumably for the purpose of rallying his people to revolt against the Italians.

Italy's Position Critical, Australian Leader Says

NEW YORK, Jan. 10 (AP).—The British Broadcasting Corp. quoted Australian Army Minister P. C. Spender, who has been on a visit to his troops in North Africa, as saying today that Italy's position there in general and in Libya particularly, "is now desperate."

The B. B. C. broadcast, heard here by N. B. C., said Spender, now on his way home, told interviewers in Calcutta:

2 Submarines Declared Sunk And 4 Freighters Attacked

English Motorized Units Blasted By Fascist Planes, Rome Says

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 10—Destructive blows against enemy naval powe. and shipping, including a bomb hit on a British battleship, sinking of two submarines and attacks on four merchant vessels, were announced today by the Italian high command.

The widespread Italian sea and air thrusts were accompanied on the political front by an order from Premier Mussolini for "more effective action" by the Fascist party among the Albanian masses and a renewed Italian press assault on British-American collaboration.

The bombing of a British battleship (unofficially denied in London) occurred in a raid on an eastern Mediterranean naval formation, the Italian command said. It said one British plane was shot down but acknowledged two Italian aircraft failed to return.

One of the two submarines sunk by Italian torpedo boats, the communique said, was the 1,400-ton French Narval. (Loss of the Narval, first French naval unit employed on Britain's side, was reported by "free French" headquarters in London yesterday.)

Greek Ship Reported Sunk

Italian submarines operating in the Atlantic were said to have sunk the 2,883-ton Greek freighter Anastassia and the armed British ship Shakespear. Other submarines were credited with torpedo hits on two vessels in a Mediterranean convoy.

The one hundred British motor units said to have been hit by Fascist warplanes were headed toward Acroma, about one hundred miles south and slightly west of Tobruk, the principal remaining Italian stronghold in eastern Libya.

DASH MATTER - FOLLOW ROME CASUALTIES

--DASH-- XXX WOUNDED JAN 11 1941

AN OFFICIAL ITALIAN RESUME ON DEC. 23 SAID THAT IN THE FIRST SIX MONTHS OF EUROPEAN WAR, ITALY'S CASUALTIES NUMBERED 18,824 men KILLED, INCLUDING 4,531 KILLED, 10,099 WOUNDED AND 4,238 MISSING.

THESE FIGURES, COVERING THE PERIOD FROM ITALY'S ENTRY INTO THE WAR AGAINST THE ALLIES ON JUNE 10 UNTIL DEC.12, DID NOT BREAKDOWN THE LOSSES BY FRONTS AND DID NOT INCLUDE THE LATEST FIGURES FROM ALBANIA, WHERE LOSSES WERE SAID TO HAVE BEEN HEAVY.

RED CROSS FIGURES AT ATHENS SHOW THAT THE GREEKS HAVE TAKEN MORE THAN 14,000 PRISONERS SINCE THE BEGINNING OF THE GREEK-ITALIAN CONFLICT. IN ADDITION TO THESE THE ITALIANS WERE SAID BY THE GREEKS TO HAVE SHIPPED HOME 35,000 SICK AND WOUNDED FROM THE PORT OF VALONA ALONE.

British Motor Forces Bombed, Italians Say

ROME, Jan. 10 (AP).—A formation of Italian assault and fighter planes "sighted and hit about 100 enemy mechanized vehicles" heading toward Acroma, about 100 miles south and slightly west of Tobruk, Libya, the high command asserted today.

In addition, the daily communique said, British mechanized equipment was destroyed by artillery fire in the Tobruk zone.

Italian planes also bombed Salum, Egypt, the high command said.

Tent encampments and armored cars were machine-gunned by Fascist warplanes in the Kassala zone and near Sciusceib, in East Africa, while raids by British motorized forces were said to have been "repelled" northeast of Kassala and losses inflicted on the raiders.

Greeks 'Lose' Alexander

Rome, Jan. 10 (AP)—Italians were told today by the newspaper Il Piccolo that Alexander the Great, the Macedonian conqueror and leader of the Greek states, was really a "pure Albanian," and disclaimed there was any relationship between that ancient figure and the "Semitized" Greece now at war with Italy.

Italian Naval Raidlet

Athens, Jan. 10 (AP) — A naval force of 200 Italians in motor launches successfully raided the Ægean island of Kinaros last Monday, it was revealed here today.

The raiders, after searching the huts of the inhabitants, departed the next day.

Only two people live on the island.

Fascist Zeal in Albania Is Ordered by Mussolini

By The Associated Press.

ROME, Jan. 10—Premier Mussolini ordered today "more effective action" by Fascist party members among the Albanian "masses" in an audience granted to Tefik Mboria, head of the Albanian branch, who had reported on political conditions in Albania.

Signor Mussolini's instructions were along the lines of those he gave to fascist chieftains in Italy Nov. 18, that they show more activity in making contact with the people, looking after their morale and extending relief to the needy.

80 Albanians Reported Executed By Italians

Struga, Yugoslavia, at the Albanian Frontier, Jan. 10 (AP)—Eighty Albanians, captured by the Italians after revolting at Pishkupati on the shore of Lake Ochrida, were reported to have been executed by a firing squad today.

Fighting between the Albanians and the Italian troops started when the Albanians refused to continue forced labor on roads and fortifications, border reports said.

Albanian gendarmes and customs officers were said to have joined several hundred laborers in the uprising, and both sides suffered casualties.

Some of the Albanians escaped.

Italian positions between Pishkupati and Lin, three miles farther north, were reported under heavy attack by the Greeks.

Greeks Take Klisura And Threaten Valona

Map on Page 2

[By the Associated Press]

Athens, Greece, Jan. 10—The strategically important town of Klisura, on the central Albanian battle front, has fallen to Greek troops after a week of bitter fighting, an official announcement said today.

As a result the Italians probably will be forced to give up Tepeleni, fifteen miles to the west, the next important objective on the route of the Greek march toward Valona, military circles said.

Valona Important Port

Valona is the last important port in southern Albania still in Italian hands and the immediate objective of the Greek drive in this sector.

Greek troops were reported also to have advanced a few miles beyond Klisura in the direction of Berati, with the Italians in disorderly retreat.

Premier Gen. John Metaxas announced the taking of Klisura to the Cabinet this morning and sent a telegram to the Greek forces.

Population Rejoices

The announcement was a signal for widespread Greek rejoicing.

Church bells pealed throughout the country. Crowds gathered around general headquarters, while King George and others appeared at windows.

The Greeks said they have not had time to count their prisoners nor the "large quantity" of materials of all kinds seized.

200 More Captured.

Two hundred more prisoners and a score of 87-millimeter mortars were captured by Greek forces during local actions, in which they captured "important positions" at bayonet point, the Greek high command reported last night.

A government spokesman said the Italians had withdrawn to new positions protected by barbed wire. The positions taken by the Greeks, he said, were of "considerable strategic importance."

The high command reference to the capture of 20 more mortars underlined a claim of the previous day, when the Greeks announced the capture of "a whole company" of mortars. The spokesman said this seizure included "Italian officers, men and materials."-DASH-

Klisura stands astride a cross road, one fork of which leads to Berat and Durazzo, while the other leads to Valona.

The Greeks have been aiming two drives at Valona, one on the central front, toward Klisura and Tepeleni, and the other up the Adriatic coast from Porto Edda and Chimara.

The spearhead of the Greek thrust in the Klisura sector is only about 30 miles from Valona.

The Italians began falling back toward Klisura on December 4 after the fall of Premet, where they made a dogged stand in an attempt to halt the Greek offensive. Heavy fighting marked their retreat to prepared positions on the heights around Klisura.

Greek sources at that time said the Italians brought up strong reinforcements to defend the pass at Klisura, apparently attaching great strategic importance to preventing a break through at this point.

Early in the battle for Klisura a Greek spokesman said:

"Realizing the great importance of the pass the Italians have concentrated as many forces as they could in their determination to frustrate at any cost the plans of the general staff."

Dispatches from the front during the past two weeks have told of repeated Italian counter - attacks aimed at relieving the pressure on Klisura. Greek communiques, however, have told of the capture of height after height in the region, frequently at bayonet point.

Tepeleni's Fall Imminent As Hellenic Spearhead Drives On

[Story on Page 2]

[By the Associated Press]

Athens, Jan. 10—While Greeks at home rejoiced in the streets over fresh victories in Albania the forces at the front today reportedly pushed past captured Klisura toward Valona—last important port in southern Albania still held by the Italians.

Greek troops occupying Klisura found it had been burned and pillaged, a general headquarters communique said tonight.

600 Italians Captured.

Most of the townspeople had deserted the town, but 600 Italian soldiers were taken prisoner and four guns, some tanks, more mortars and automatic guns were captured, the communique added.

Greek aviation was reported to have bombed and machine-gunned Italian positions without losing a plane.

With the spearhead of the Greek drive in the Klisura sector only about thirty miles from Valona, Italian troops beyond Klisura were said to be in disorderly retreat.

Tepeleni's Fall Forecast

As a result of Klisura's fall, military observers predicted the Italians probably would be forced to abandon Tepeleni, fifteen miles west of Klisura on the way to Valona.

The Greeks met stubborn resistance at Klisura and said the Italians apparently attached considerable military importance to the town, for they brought replacements and installed them in carefully prepared positions on the Klisura heights.

Greek communiques related the capture of height after height, many of them by bayonet-wielding troops, in the weeks-long attack. Today the fall of the town and the heights were announced officially.

Crowds Throng Streets

As Premier Gen. John Metaxas told his Cabinet about the successes, crowds gathered joyfully in the streets to celebrate.

King George and others high in the Government appeared at windows, and bells pealed throughout the country.

It was a few miles beyond Klisura, in the direction of Berat, that the Italians were said to be withdrawing in disorder. Klisura stands at a crossroad—one leading to Berat and Durazzo, the other to Valona.

Three Drives Imperil Port

Three Greek drives have been headed at Valona, two on the central front toward Klisura and Tepeleni, from Premet and Argirocastro, and the other from Chimara and Porto Edda up the Adriatic coast.

Emphasizing how important the Greeks considered the taking of Klisura, a spokesman said:

"The Italians have concentrated as many forces as they could in the determination to frustrate, at any cost, the plans of the general staff."

Italian Losses Heavy

The spokesman, referring to a Rome high-command communique which spoke of "local action" on the part of the Italian army, said:

"Here's what happened. Our attack units pushed their lines forward and occupied heights long fortified by the Italians, captured seven Fascist officers and 450 men, small-caliber mortars, machine guns and automatic weapons of all kinds, and other items not even counted yet.

"The enemy suffered heavily from our fire in this local 'action,' as shown by the number of dead left in the positions we captured and the Italian retreat that followed."

The Italian army in Albania still is being reinforced steadily, he said, and new fortifications are being built in the determination to try to halt the Greeks.

'Lost In A Fog—'

Two Foreign Planes Over Switzerland Said To Be German Bombers

Bern, Switzerland, Jan. 10 (AP)—Two foreign planes which flew over Switzerland today causing alarms in Bern, Zurich and Lucerne, were identified in a general staff communique tonight as two German bombers "which apparently lost their way in the fog."

The communique said the bombers crossed over the Swiss Jura mountains near Neuchatel, from France. One flew near Lucerne while the other went over Zurich. Both disappeared over Lake Constance and headed toward Germany.

Bern, Switzerland, Jan. 11-(Sat.)-Air raid alarms in Bern and other cities in neutral Switzerland sounded warnings shortly before 6 A.M. today (11 P.M., EST, Friday.) The all-clear sounded in the Bern area 40 minutes later without incident.

RUSSIA, IN NEW TREATIES, AGREES TO SUPPLY AND FEED WARRING GERMANY

"Greatest Grain Deal" In History Included, Berlin Says

Soviet And Argentina Said To Plan "Giant" Wheat Pact

[By the Associated Press]

Moscow, Jan. 10—Soviet Russia agreed today to send to warring Germany quantities of food, especially grains, in a significant collaboration officially described as "an enlarged economic agreement."

[In Germany DNB called it the "greatest grain deal in history" and said it was so arranged that it could be called "an economic plan" as well as a deal.]

Russia also will furnish industrial raw materials and oil products in exchange for Germna industrial equipment under the new treaty, which runs until August 1, 1942.

Amounts Not Specified

Amounts were not specified, but Tass said the new pact provides for "deliveries considerably exceeding the level of the first year of operation" of an agreement which was signed last February 11 and of which the present program is an enlargement.

[The agreement of last February in its present turn had provided for a liveller interchange of goods than the original pact of August 20, 1939, sealed on the eve of the present war.]

Tass said the new agreement "constitutes a further stage in the execution of the economic program outlined by the two Governments in 1939."

Passed In "Friendly Spirit"

It said the negotiations "passed in the spirit of mutual understanding and confidence comforming to the friendly relations existing between the U. S. S. R. and Germany. Tass added that "all economic problems, including those which arose in connection with incorporation of new territories in the U. S. S. R., were solved in conformity with the interests of both countries."

The trade agreement was in fact one of five compacts signed here today.

Border Revisions Made

The others dealt with such subjects as mutual border revisions and settlement of property claims and migrations connected with Russia's absorption of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania.

Tass said the trade pact was signed by Dr. Karl Schnurre, German economic and foreign expert, and A. A. Mikoyan, Soviet foreign trade commissar.

Dr. Schnurre, who has made frequent trips between Berlin and Moscow since last October, was with Vyacheslaff Molotoff when the Russian Premier-Foreign Commissar made a trip to Berlin last November on a mission never fully explained.

The repatriation accords were expected to return to the Reich 40,000 Germans in Lithuania and 10,000 in Latvia and Estonia.

Frontier Reported Settled

A German wireless announcement heard in New York said the Soviet-German frontier had been settled from the Baltic to the Hungarian border.

The resettlement of population was limited to German citizens now living in Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, and Russian nationals in the Memel and Suwalki districts taken over by Germany, the wireless report said..

These transfer agreements, signed by Soviet and German officials in Riga and Kovno, provide for optional transfers if the option is exercised within two and a half months of the signing of the treaties. At the same time a treaty signed in Moscow regulated property questions arising from the civilian transfers.

Russia Signs New Pact for Food to Nazis

Series of Treaties Steps Up Trade, Fixes Border From Baltic to Hungary

By The Associated Press

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—Germany and Soviet Russia signed today at Moscow a series of treaties, including a new trade agreement designed to aid Germany's war effort and "involving many billions of marks," it was announced here officially.

Other agreements recognized trade pacts which Germany had with the Baltic states of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia—recently absorbed by the Soviet Union—and provided for regulation of border and population resettlement problems.

D. N. B., the official German news agency, said the trade agreement included the "greatest grain deal in history" and had been worked out so carefully on the basis of scientific study of the capacities of the two countries that the transaction could be called "an economic plan" as well as a deal.

Negotiations have been under way since last October on the basis of treaties signed Feb. 11, 1940.

Machines for Oil

Under the terms of the new treaty regulating commerce between the two countries until Aug. 1, 1942, Germany will provide Russia with an expanded list of manufactured items, such as industrial machinery, in return for petroleum, ores, cotton, naphtha products and various foodstuffs, particularly grain.

Precise sums were not stated, but D. N. B. said the deal "involved many billions of marks," and was greater in scope than the previous Russo-German understanding.

Several Problems Involved.

Berlin, Jan. 10 (A. P.)—An agreement between Germany and Soviet Russia regulating certain aspects of trade, border and resettlement problems was reported officially to have been signed this afternoon at Moscow.

A spokesman said the details of the pact, (a furtherance of the rapprochement between the two countries which antedates the European war), would be disclosed tomorrow. In a general way, he said, existing trade agreements are extended and the trade deals which Germany had with Russian-absorbed Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia now are recognized by Russia.

The negotiations, in progress since October, were based on accords reached February 11, 1940.

One of the new pacts regulates commerce between Germany and Russia until August 1, 1942, with increased deliveries by both nations. Germany is to send industrial machinery in return for raw materials, naphtha products, foods and especially grain. Various commercial questions, including those arising from acquisition of new territories, are settled, it was announced officially.

Russia, Argentina Said To Plan "Giant" Deal

Buenos Aires, Jan. 10 (AP)—Informed sources reported tonight that a Soviet trade mission was en route here to negotiate a "giant trade agreement" based mainly on the export of Argentine grain to Russia.

Thus grain dealers here expressed interest in a Berlin announcement of today that Germany had made with the Soviet "the greatest grain deal in history."

[Editor's Note—The reported Russian plan to buy in Argentina may explain where the U. S. S. R. hopes to obtain enough wheat to supply both herself and Germany.]

Rumors Denied

The Argentine Government denied rumors that negotiations with the Russians already had been started, but Daniel Amadeo Videla, Minister of Agriculture, remarked:

"If they come we will welcome them. We are ready to sell anything to anybody."

Argentina closed the Russian commercial agency Iuyamtorg in 1930 and since then has had no trade relations with the Soviet.

Sources close to the Government said soundings now had been made "through third persons" on the feasibility of a trade agreement.

These sources added that the Russians had offered to buy not only part of Argentina's big grain supplus but hides and other agricultural products as well.

Beef-Laden French Ship Ready To Run Blockade

Buenos Aires, Jan. 10 (AP)—The 8,000-ton French merchantman Mendoza, partly loaded with beef, sailed today for Montevideo to complete its cargo for what appeared to be the first attempt by a French ship to reach home from this country since the German conquest of France.

Informed sources, speculating over the Mendoza's plans, said the British consul had not been asked for navicerts (prior navigation certificates to permit passage of the British blockade).

Ambassador Silent

Questioned last week when the French Government bought a thousand tons of frozen Argentine beef and sought to purchase an additional 4,000 tons, Louis de Robien, the French Ambassador, said:

"I regret I am unable to say anything."

Other embassy officials explained the Mendoza and four other French merchantmen in the harbor were being prepared for voyages under orders of the French Marine Minister, "who alone would be able to comment."

Ship's Guns Removed

The Mendoza's defensive cannon apparently had been removed. The drab war paint she formerly wore was covered with brighter hues. Two huge painted French flags gleamed from her sides.

Diplomatic sources were puzzled by the preparations as well as the sailing in view of what they called a virtual certainty that British warships would seize the merchantman as soon as it was on the high seas in compliance with announced blockade plans.

Nazis Suspected

A "Free French" committee in Buenos Aires charged the sailing preparations were German-inspired to "create a fresh incident between England and France."

The possibility that a French destroyer from Dakar, in French West Africa, would attempt to escort the food ships, the committee added, would "just make the incident bigger."

The other French merchantmen reported being prepared for sailing are: The 9,586-ton Aurigny, the 10,816-ton Campana, the 9,975-ton Formose and the 3,891-ton Katiola. The Katiola was the firest merchantman to leave France for South America after France's collapse.

The other ships have been in port since the armistice.

VICHY FACES CRISIS OVER FOOD DEARTH

Paris First To Feel Pinch, Press Puts Blame On Unoccupied Zone

Beef-Laden French Ship Ready To Run Blockade From South America

[By the Associated Press]

Vichy, France, Jan. 10—An acute food shortage forced its way tonight to the head of the problems facing the French Government, and may become a serious political issue.

The pinch first was felt in Paris, and a section of the city's press made an issue of it with the unoccupied zone.

The Government took emergency steps to supply Paris and an authorized spokesman denounced the British blockade.

U. S. Attitude Cited

Vichy pointed out that there was much American sympathy toward a campaign to relax the blockade, but a Paris paper retorted that this was a smoke screen of American collaboration with the blockade.

The recent snowstorms which blocked transportation made the public aware that France is living from hand to mouth.

Tonight an emergency committee set up to deal with the problem of supplies met under the chairmanship of Pierre-Etienne Flandin, Foreign Minister.

Reaction To Leahy

JAN 11 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 10—The presence of United States Ambassador Admiral William D. Leahy in Vichy was interpreted by authorized German quarters today as a step "to attenuate the bad impression" of the United States in France over lack of ample food relief from America.

The shipments of condensed milk from the United States were regarded as merely "a drop of water on a hot tile." (The American Red Cross has obtained permission from Britain to send milk through the blockade to unoccupied France.)

Occupied Zone's Need

Vichy, France, Jan. 10 (AP)—Official circles expressed hope today that the British blockade would be relaxed sufficiently to permit shipments of medicines for the German-occupied portions of France.

Pleasure was voiced over a British broadcasting company announcement that a shipment of 13,000 doses of vitamins, now held at Bermuda, would be permitted to continue to unoccupied France.

It was explained, however, that "the need of the children in the occupied zone for medical aid is even greater than here." Sections of the Paris press have been complaining that the Government here had failed to obtain adequate supplies for the occupied area.

Irish Wheat Causes Concern

Peak U. S. Production By 1942 Forecast

Washington, Jan. 10 (AP)—President Roosevelt said today that he would delay appointment of a new Ambassador to Great Britain until next week.

JAN 11 1941

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 10—Harry L. Hopkins, President Roosevelt's personal envoy, had an overtime luncheon talk with Prime Minister Churchill today and in a later interview predicted that United States production of war materials would reach its peak late in 1941 or early in 1942.

In a serious mood after the luncheon—which lasted an hour past the usual time—Hopkins declared that he was here to "discuss matters of mutual urgency to our two countries."

"United Labor Front"

At first he said "mutual interest," but later was asked if "mutual urgency" couldn't be substituted and he agreed.

Sitting in a chair and puffing a cigarette, he answered "no comment" to most questions.

To one he said, "Nothing is less important than my impressions of air raids."

Asked about labor's attitude toward the production program, he said: "There will be united effort and it will be very successful."

To Stay Several Weeks

Before his luncheon engagement Hopkins saw Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Lord Halifax, Ambassador-designate to the United States.

He said he expected to stay two to four weeks—"until I have finished the job I came to do."

This is Hopkins' first visit to London since 1934. He had "only met" Churchill before.

Hopkins, who arrived last night, went to the Prime Minister's official residence for his first visit after indicating that he meant to get down to business quickly.

For the afternoon he planned a tour of London.

"I have no misgivings about the outcome of this war... There is going to be a united and altogether successful effort in the production of defense materials to be used by ourselves, Great Britain and Greece and China."

Before the luncheon, Hopkins had seen Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, and Lord Halifax, who is going to Washington as British Ambassador.

Hopkins said he would remain two to four weeks, or "until I have finished the job I came to do." He predicted "successful" labor co-operation in the American arms program.

Hopkins and Churchill In Long Conference

LONDON, Jan. 10 (AP).—Harry Hopkins, President Roosevelt's personal envoy, and Prime Minister Churchill talked for a long time over a luncheon table at No. 10 Downing St. today to start what Hopkins himself described as discussions on "matters of mutual urgency to our two countries."

JAN 11 1941

To the press, afterward, the American emissary predicted U. S. production of war materials would reach its peak in about another year, and declared flatly:

ASKED ABOUT THE ATTEMPT FOR AN IMMEDIATE SPEED-UP IN PRODUCTION OF WAR SUPPLIES AS COMPARED WITH THE LONG RANGE EFFORT, HE REPLIED "THE ANSWER IS VERY MUCH IN THE AFFIRMATIVE."

HE DECLINED TO GUESS ABOUT HOW LONG THE WAR WILL LAST.

HOPKINS ARRIVED IN LONDON LAST NIGHT AT THE START OF A HEAVY AIR RAID, BUT HE BRUSHED THAT EXPERIENCE ASIDE TODAY AND SAID "NOTHING IS LESS IMPORTANT THAN MY IMPRESSIONS OF AIR RAIDS."

WITH A GRIN, HE SAID HIS VALET HAD TOLD HIM THIS MORNING THAT HE WOULD NEED SOME MORE ENGLISH-TYPE WHITE SHIRTS, WITHOUT ATTACHED COLLARS, AND SOME LONG UNDERWEAR.

AFTER THAT, HE SAID, "I HAD A VERY GOOD BREAKFAST WITH SOME GOOD AMERICAN COFFEE."

Malvern, England, Jan. 10—The Archbishop of York's Church Conference, meeting here, declared today that private ownership of the nation's main industrial resources may be a "stumbling block" to Christianity, making it more difficult for men to lead Christian lives.

A document embodying the conference's ideas said that "while these resources can be so owned, men will strive for their ownership. . . . As a consequence, the way of life founded on the supremacy of the economic motive will remain—which is contrary to God's plan for mankind.

"The time has come for Christians to proclaim the need for striving toward a form of society in which, while the essential values of the individual and human personality are preserved, a continuance of these abuses no longer will be possible."

The document pointed out that the church could never commit itself to any proposed change in the structure of society" as being a self-sufficient means of salvation, but added:

"In our present situation we believe the maintenance of that part of our society by which the ultimate ownership of the principal industrial resources of the community can be vested in the hands of private owners may be a stumbling block."

The Bishop of Malmsbury said he hoped the economic declaration would become the basis for a united assertion by all Christian churches.

Methodists to Turn Over Property to Japanese

By the Associated Press.

TOKIO, Jan. 10.—The United Methodist Mission has decided to deliver church property valued at approximately $100,000 to the Japanese Methodist Church, it was learned authoritatively today.

It also was decided at an annual meeting that the mission would continue its work in Japan, even though 45 American workers already have departed and 10 others plan to leave "because of the international situation." Seventy-five missionaries are remaining.

Foreign church officials disclosed in December that major American, British and Canadian church properties, valued at millions of dollars, were in process of being turned over to the Japanese as a result of a recent religious law.

The law required discontinuation of foreign financial assistance and placed control of mission schools, hospitals and social enterprises entirely in Japanese hands.

Chungking, China, Jan. 10 (AP)—Chinese quarters declared tonight that the early arrival of United States war supplies might spell the difference between success or failure in the event—considered likely—that Japan should launch a tremendous new offensive against Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's armies.

A high Chinese official declared China's need of supplies from the United States was equally if not more urgent than Britain's requirements.

However, he said, the latest expressions of United States policy were a source of great encouragement to the Chinese Government, particularly the equal rating accorded the European and Asiatic wars and the view that China is playing an important role in the struggle of democracies against aggression.

FIERCE RAIDS ON INDO-CHINA THREATENED

Thai Says Large Cities Face Destructive Attacks From The Air

Asserts Assaults Will Be In Retaliation For French Forays

[By the Associated Press]

Bangkok, Thailand, Jan. 10—Large cities of French Indo-China face destructive raids, like those which hit the border town of Sisophon, the Thai supreme command asserted today.

Day and night air attacks will be carried out on Saigon, Dalat and Ponompenh, the communique said, in retaliation for reported French forays against Bangkok, Ubol and Prachinburi.

The attacking French planes were driven back before they could bomb the cities, the communique said, but retaliation will follow. The French previously had threatened to bomb Thailand's capital unless border attacks on Indo-China ceased.

[The Thai consulate at Singapore issued a communique describing Sisophon, twenty miles within the Indo-Chinese border province of Cambodia, as destroyed by fire resulting from a ninety-plane attack two days ago.]

The supreme command also announced further advance by land troops against Indo-Chinese forces. The French were said to have resisted little, yielding positions and large quantities of equipment.

French Claim Recapture Of Fort Near Samarong

Hanol, French Indo-China, Jan. 10 (AP)—Reinforced French troops today recaptured a fortification near Samarong in northern Cambodia and ousted Thai forces, French authorities announced tonight.

A Thai plane was reported shot down near Siemreap in southern Cambodia, and continued artillery fire was reported across the Mekong on both sides.

Thai planes bombed Batambong and the railway town of Siemreap in the vicinity of the famous "lost civilization" ruins at Angkor, the supreme command said.

Two French planes, it was reported, attempted to raid the Thai towns of Nagorn, Rajsima, Ubol and Srisakes in the northeast region, but were driven off with only one civilian casualty.

Bombs Destroy Town

Singapore, Jan. 10 (AP)—The town of Sisophon, twenty miles within the Cambodia, has been destroyed by fire resulting from a ninety-plane attack by the Thai (Siamese) air force, the Thai consulate announced today in a special communique.

Sisophon, according to a delayed dispatch yesterday from Bangkok, was bombed two days ago and was reported by the Thai high command to have been set entirely ablaze.

Siam Orders Raids On Indo-China Cities

[By the Associated Press]

Bangkok, Thailand, Jan. 10—The supreme command of Thailand (Siam) announced today its decision to carry out day and night bombing raids on Saigon, Dalat and Ponompenh, large cities in French Indo-China, in retaliation for reported French attempts to bomb Bangkok, Ubol and Prachinburi in Thailand last night.

A communique said three French planes which attempted to raid the Thai cities were repulsed before reaching their destinations.

Land Forces Advance

The supreme command also announced that Thai land forces continued their advance, seizing several enemy positions.

The French, the communique said, retreated without offering serious resistance anywhere, leaving behind the bodies of French Moroccan troops and large quantities of arms and equipment.

Hungarians Snub Nazi Soldiers

People Fear War Is Near and Blame Germans for Great Shortage of Food.

BY EDWIN SHANKE

Budapest, Dec. 23 (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—German soldiers shouted greetings above the rumble of car wheels to a load of Budapest suburbanites whose train was sidetracked for the troop transport.

The German troops smiled broadly as they shouted and dangled their feet from boxcar doors. But there was no response —only a silence emphasized by cold eyes staring through frosted coach windows.

Each load of German troops and equipment passing through this country into Rumania deepens the fear that Hungary, by permitting mass movement of the Nazis in a process tantamount to occupation, may be bringing the chaos of war down upon the heads of her people. Hungarians live in fear that the Allies might bomb their rail lines. Weekly tests of air raid sirens remind them of the danger. But at the same time, the Hungarians realize their Government is, virtually helpless under Axis pressure and must accept the inevitable.

German soldiers no longer hesitate to appear in uniform on the streets of Budapest. Occasionally this brings open expression of Hungarian feelings.

Hungarians hold the danger of war and shipments to Germany responsible for a general belt-tightening in this country. A declaration by a deputy on the floor of Parliament that "Hungarians will have to eat less" was confirmation of what every one already knew.

The people of Hungary can no longer enjoy cream. Restaurant menus are strictly limited and one-dish days have appeared.

In several nearby villages, irate housewives smashed store windows because they found they couldn't get wheat they wanted--particularly lard--after standing for hours in the cold.

Attacks were also made on the docks at Brest and oil targets at Rotterdam.

Another Air Ministry communique:

The synthetic oil plant at Gelsenkirchen was the main objective of the R. A. F. attacks last night.

Though a ground haze at times made it difficult to observe the results fully, explosions and fires were seen in the oil plant.

War Communiques

British

LONDON, Jan. 10 (AP).—A communique of the Ministries of Air and Home Security:

There is nothing to report.

An Air Ministry communique:

It is now known that in last night's raid on northwest England two enemy bombers were shot down by anti-aircraft fire.

One of our bombers engaged and shot down an enemy fighter during the operations over Germany last (Thursday night.

A Ministry of Information statement:

It is learned in London that a force of R. A. F. bombers, strongly escorted by fighters, made an extensive sweep over the Pas de Calais at midday today.

Several enemy airdromes were bombed and machine-gun attacks were made from low level on military installations and control vessels.

Only a few enemy fighters were encountered. Three were shot down and a number damaged on the ground. None or our aircraft is missing.

Another Air Ministry communique:

The main attack by bombers of the Royal Air Force last night was made against the Ruhr where an oil plant at Gelsenkirchen and a number of other objectives were bombed.

The inland ports of Duisburg-Ruhroht and Dusseldorf and a number of other objectives in the Ruhr, including factories, blast furnaces and railways, were also attacked.

Elsewhere an oil storage plant at Rotterdam and docks at Flushing, Dunkerque and Calais were bombed.

Two of our aricraft are missing.

CAIRO, Jan. 10 (AP).—A British Middle East Command communique:

Libya: Covered by operations to the westward, the concentration of our forces around Tobruk is continuing.

On the Sudan frontier our patrols inflicted a number of casualties on the enemy holding positions east of Serobatib, which we captured Jan. 7. Serobatib is on the Sudan-Ethiopian frontier, about forty miles north of Kassala.

Kenya: Yesterday morning one of our mobile columns entered Buna unopposed. It has also been ascertained that the enemy had abandoned El Wak as the result of our successful raid there last month.

Another British Middle East Command communique:

A heavy raid was carried out by the bomber aircraft of the Royal Air Force on Messina, Sicily, during the night of Jan. 9-10. Several tons of bombs were dropped on naval vessels in the harbor and on wharves, docks and oil storage plants. One stick of bombs fell across cruisers in the south part of the harbor. Observation of the damage done was impossible, owing to a heavy smoke screen thrown out by the cruisers.

Another stick of bombs straddled the army marshalling yards and oil tanks to the south of the harbor. Fires were started at wharves and near the drydock. Other bombs fell very close to the oil storage plant, causing explosions with green flashes. All our aircraft returned undamaged to their base.

The Royal Air Force Command communique:

A successful attack was made on Benina Airdrome by bomber aircraft of the R. A. F. on Jan. 8. Direct hits were registered on hangars, buildings and dispersed aircraft. A number of hangars and barracks were seen to be gutted. Many aircraft were set afire and at least twelve were seen to be burning fiercely.

One of our aircraft after dropping its bombs, machine-gunned the airdrome from a height of only 250 feet.

During the night of Jan. 8-9 heavy attacks were made on Bengazi. Bombs fell on government buildings near the central mole causing fires and explosions. One ship outside the outer mole is believed to have received a direct hit.

The same night Tobruk was raided. Direct hits were registered on buildings. Further raids were carried out yesterday but full details have not yet been received.

A battleship, merchant shipping docks and the railway station at Naples were objectives of the particularly heavy raid carried out on the night of Jan. 8-9. Bombs fell either on or very near the stern of a battleship of the Littorio class causing a dull red glow. Other bombs caused an outbreak of fire among large motor vessels.

Fires were also started along the waterfront from the north end of a drydock to a jetty. Several bombs hit buildings on the quay and railway lines while the railway station also suffered direct hits. A gasometer was set on fire causing a series of explosions in the drydock area and shipping areas. One particularly violent explosion occurred on the north railway line.

Another aircraft attacked Palermo where explosions were caused on or near shipping moored to the jetty. Bombs straddled northern mole and a wharf between middle and southern jetties.

In Italian East Africa troop concentrations were attacked by our bombers, all bombs falling in the target area.

Malta was raided twice yesterday, the first time by enemy monoplane fighters some of which carried out a low machine-gun attack which did only slight damage.

Our fighters engaged the enemy, shooting four of them down into the sea. One enemy pilot was rescued, but he was severely wounded.

A fifth machine was shot down by anti-aircraft fire. The second enemy raid was carried out by dive bombers on shipping but no damage or casualties resulted.

Greek

ATHENS, Jan. 10 (AP).—A Greek headquarters communique:

Today's successful operation resulted in the occupation of Klisura. The town of Klisura was found deserted, pillaged and burned.

About 600 prisoners, including twenty officers, were taken, and one military flag, four guns, tanks, more mortars, automatic weapons and all kinds of materiel have fallen into our hands.

Our aviation has very successfully operated in the battle fields, having bombed and machine-gunned enemy objectives. All our aircraft returned safely to bases.

A Ministry of Home Security communique:

No raids on Greece today.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 10 (AP).—The German High Command communique:

Our airforce yesterday carried out armed reconnaissance as far as northern Scotland. Last night strong combat formations succesfully bombarded war essential objectives in central and southern England, especially Manchester, London and Liverpool.

The enemy's attacks last night were primarily directed against various places in western Germany. Besides several apartment houses, Bethlehem Cloister near Cologne was damaged and a Catholic journeymen's home at Dusseldorf destroyed. Military and military-economic objectives were not hit.

Civilian losses were twenty killed and a number injured, nearly all of whom were outside raid shelters. One enemy plane was downed by a night chaser and another by anti-aircraft fire.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 10 (AP).—The Italian High Command communique:

On the Greek front local actions took place in some sectors of the 11th Army with artillery activity on the remainder of the front.

Troops on the march and motor vehicles were bombed and machine-gunned by our air force. Anti-aircraft and artillery emplacements defending an important enemy naval base were effectively hit.

Our warships effectively bombarded enemy coastal positions.

Bombing squadrons attacked a big naval formation in the eastern Mediterranean. Despite violent anti-aircraft reaction, a battleship was hit. An enemy fighter plane was shot down. Two of our planes failed to return.

Our air formations subjected the air and naval base at Malta to an effective bombardment and machine-gunning. Five planes on the ground, two steamers and an anti-aircraft battery were hit. One of our fighters was shot down.

Two enemy planes which attempted raids on our territory were shot down.

In East Africa tent encampments and armored cars were machine-gunned by our planes in the Kassala zone and near Sciusceib. Raids by enemy motorized forces were repelled northeast of Kassala, inflicting losses on the enemy.

Enemy planes dropped incendiary bombs on Messina, causing only the outbreak of fires which were immediately put under control without casualties.

One of our submarines commanded by Com. Manlio Petroni torpedoed and sank the 2,883-ton Greek steamer Anastasia in the Atlantic. Another submarine operating in the Atlantic under the command of Com. Salvatore Todaro sank the 5,000-ton armed steamer Shakespear after sharp fighting.

A submarine operating in the Mediterranean under command of Com. Paolo Vagliasindi torpedoed two steamers of undetermined tonnage in a strongly escorted convoy.

30.24-6895

Two enemy submarines were sunk by our torpedo craft. One was the French Narval, incorporated in the forces serving England. The submarine Regulus, whose loss was announced by the British Admiralty, was one of those reported destroyed in a previous bulletin.

6 COMMODITIES OFF FREE EXPORT LIST

Copper, Brass, Bronze, Zinc, Nickel And Potash Put Under License

Order Expected To Restrict Trade Further With Japan And Russia

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 10—Copper and five other commodities classed as strategic materials for national defense were brought under export license control today in a move expected to restrict trade with Japan and Soviet Russia.

The other products for which export licenses will be required by the new Presidential order, effective February 3, are brass, bronze, zinc, nickel and potash.

President Roosevelt said it was necessary to control the exports of these materials because of the accelerating needs of the defense program.

Russian Purchases Gain

Japan was the largest purchaser of copper in the United States last year, taking 225,065,811 pounds, while Russia, a relatively small purchaser before the European war, moved into third place with 108,955,900 pounds. Great Britain was the second largest at 137,937,735 pounds.

The extension of license control to the six new commodities today left almost no important defense materials on the free export list.

During the last few months, scores of metals, chemicals, rubber, petroleum and other products were subjected to export control, and complete embargoes were imposed on the exportation of aviation gasoline and iron and steel scrap to any countries outside the Western Hemisphere except Great Britain.

Japan Big Buyer Of Oil

Despite the licensing control, however, Japan has continued to be a large purchaser of petroleum products in the United States. Commerce Department figures for November show her purchases were valued at $8,900,000, an increase of $1,700,000 over October. Comprised mainly of lubricants and fuel oil, the petroleum purchases represented more than half the total exports to Japan from this country in November.

President Roosevelt was asked at his press conference today if copper was added to the controlled list because of reports that Germany was receiving some copper through Russia. He replied in the negative and said the action was taken only because the products were needed here.

Secrecy Veils Navy Work on Atlantic Bases

Admiral Towers Refuses to Give House Committee Data at Public Session

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10 (AP).—A cloak of official secrecy was thrown today about the progress of work on the new Atlantic naval bases, sites for which are being acquired from the British.

Rear Admiral John H. Towers, Chief of Naval Aviation, declined to answer questions concerning them at a public session of the House Naval Committee, and explained that he was acting in accordance with instructions received a short time earlier from the Chief of Naval Operations.

He assured the committee it would be given full details regarding the new outposts—in secret session. At that, Chairman Carl Vinson, Democrat, of Georgia, who has usually opposed private sessions of his committee, said an early opportunity would be provided for one.

No explanation was given for the secrecy, but Admiral Towers's attitude was in line with that expressed by Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, yesterday when he parried inquiries about Army garrisons with the assertion that he had no intention of being one of Hitler's sources of information.

Admiral Towers testified freely concerning work at the Navy's domestic training stations. He said progress was being made in the development of new training stations for flyers at Atlanta, Dallas, and New Orleans, as well as at other air stations which are being expanded. More than 90 per cent of the $10,000,000 appropriated last year for the work has been obligated, Admiral Towers said, and possibly another $14,000,000 may be needed.

The admiral said he was in agreement with Representative Melvin J. Maas, Republican, of Minnesota, as to the desirability of maintaining many of the stations on a permanent basis, in view of the vast expansion of the fleet air arm now in progress, but he asserted that policy had not been determined by the Navy Department.

Admiral Towers testified that about fourteen of every 100 candidates as naval pilots get commissions, but he conceded that it may become necessary to relax the educational requirements in order to enlarge the pool of pilot material.

While Admiral Towers discussed this phase of naval aviation, the Navy Department announced it was arranging for a further $18,000,000 expansion of the aircraft industry.

Of this total, $14,090,350 was for expansion of facilities of the propeller division of Curtiss Wright Corporation, and $3,968,130 for construction of a new plant by the Ohio Crankshaft, Inc., of Cleveland, which manufacturers airplane engine crankshafts.

Chrysler to Co-operate

DETROIT, Jan. 10 (AP).—K. T. Keller, president of Chrysler Corporation, said today that his company, the Glenn L. Martin Company, and officials of the National Defense Advisory Commission had reached a tentative agreement under which Chrysler would produce parts and sub-assemblies for the Martin B-26 medium bomber.

Through the co-operative efforts of the two companies, it is hoped to produce the planes at the rate of 100 a month in a new assembly plant to be built at Omaha.

"After we have learned what the airplane people have found out by many years of practical experience," Mr. Keller said, "the automobile industry may and probably will be able to improve and speed up manufacturing processes.

"But any idea that the automobile industry can revolutionize aircraft production is the bunk."

Edsel Ford, president of the Ford Motor Company, announced earlier this week at San Diego, Calif., that his company was considering a similar arrangement for making parts and sub-assemblies here for the Consolidated and Douglas Aircraft Corporations.

BOARD SURVEYS BRITISH ASSETS

Reserve Warns Against Estimating 'Purchases.'

Washington, Jan. 10 (A. P.).—The Federal Reserve Board cautioned the public today against overestimating the resources available to the British Empire for purchase of American war materials.

No mention was made of President Roosevelt's proposal to "lend" materials to the British after they pay cash for current orders.

The board discussed British assets in its monthly bulletin, which estimated that at the beginning of the war the empire had $7,115,000,000 worth of gold, securities and other assets theoretically available to pay for American purchases.

After saying that it could not tell how much of these assets had been used up, the board said:

"The situation cannot, however, be adequately presented in terms of such figures. In the first place there is no one figure that really measures British dollar resources."

Then it explained that some of the wealth in the empire belonged to other nations, that some of the securities—although intrinsically valuable—had no immediate market, that gold held on the other side of the Atlantic might be sunk en route here, and that other assets might lose much of their apparent value if they had to be sold in a relatively short period of time and swamp the markets.

Of the remaining empire assets the board said much of these already have been pledged for payment of contracts when the purchased airplanes or other materials are delivered.

Another possible empire source of dollar assets was said to be investments in Latin America and elsewhere, but "possibilities of this sort appear to be limited."

An authoritative source nign in United States governmental circles estimated three weeks ago that Great Britain had placed about $2,000,000,000 worth of orders for munitions and material in this country, on a cash and carry basis.

Board Estimates Exports to Britain

Washington, Jan. 10 (A. P.).—The Federal Reserve Board estimated today American exports of all kinds of merchandise to the British Empire might total $3,500,000,000 in 1941, a gain of $1,400,000,000 over 1940.

This was explained as a guess of the effect of British war orders which, placed in the last year, are expected to be filled this year.

It was not an estimate of what might be sent to Britain under the President's new lending plan.

2-Billion British Arms Pawn Likely

Washington, D. C., Jan. 11 (AP).—Highly placed federal officials say that the British Government may be asked to put up about $2,000,000,000 of British assets in the United States as collateral for war materials which President Roosevelt has proposed to lend to Britain.

These authorities, who declined to be quoted by name, reported that the plan was being considered "earnestly" to supplement a proposal by large New York investment trusts to purchase approximately $600,000,000 of British investments in this country. One said this phase of the deal might "come to a head in a few days."

Whatever is left, if this deal goes through, will be American real estate and British-owned companies of subsidiaries operating here.

According to the plan under consideration, these would be placed in escrow with a government corporation as collateral for the war material.

War Losses Half-Billion In Holland

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 10—Damage estimated at $500,000,000 was done to Dutch property in the five-day German blitzkrieg which conquered the Netherlands last May, according to information just received in diplomatic circles here.

The details of destruction, while apparently authoritative, were unofficial in character. The United States has not been represented in the Netherlands since shortly after German occupation of the country, and no American correspondents are now stationed there. There has been, as a result, very little factual information on conditions in Holland under Nazi occupation.

Picture Of The Havoc

The total damage to private property, according to the survey by Dutch appraisers, exceeded 700,000,000 guilders (a guilder was worth 68 cents before the invasion).

A single city—Rotterdam—suffered half of the damage when it was blasted by a furious German air raid the day the nation surrendered.

45,000 Left Homeless

In Rotterdam, where the German planes dropped hundreds of explosive and incendiary bombs from a low height, an estimated 11,000 business premises and 26,000 residences were reported destroyed. About 45,000 people were left homeless and lost all their possessions.

As an example of the losses suffered by Dutch business firms the survey said that an estimated 37,000 typewriters were destroyed in Rotterdam alone.

Damage done to Dutch ships during the brief but furious fighting was placed at 10,000,000 guilders. An estimated seven per cent. of the nation's merchant marine was sunk at anchor, but 400 vessels, most of them small, have been raised and repaired, and 350 more are being salvaged.

Practically no damage was done to Holland's famous tulip fields, the report said, and bulbs now are a major export, with most sales to Germany.

Some aspects of life in the Netherlands under the Nazis given by the same report, included:

Just before cold weather set in a regulation was issued enabling each family to get an overcoat against a ration coupon.

Roosevelt Gives His Views On Women's Part In Defense

Addresses Gridiron Widows Off The Record At Luncheon—President And Club Exchange Trophies

[By the Associated Press]

Highland, N. Y., Jan. 10—President Roosevelt arrived here from Washington by train tonight and motored to his home at Hyde Park to spend the week end.

Mrs. Roosevelt accompanied the President. They were met at the station by their daughter, Mrs. John Boettiger, and her husband, Seattle publisher, who are spending a vacation in the East.

[Washington Bureau of The Sun]

Washington, Jan. 10—President Roosevelt in a thirty-minute speech at a luncheon of the Woman's National Press Club today gave the club and its guests a preview of the part women will be expected to play in the country's national defense effort.

Details of this speech were taken off the record, he announced, after he had smilingly noted the fact that there "were men present." But he added that in due time there would be a public statement of his views upon the subject.

Before leaving to catch his train for Hyde Park, Mr. Roosevelt presented to the members of the club through their president, Helen Essary, of the Washington Times Herald, a silver donkey.

First President To Be Guest

Mr. Roosevelt was the first President to be a guest of the club, and as a token of his visit he left behind this trophy.

At the beginning of the luncheon the members, on their part, presented Mr. Roosevelt an alarm clock as a reminder that he is almost invariably late at his Friday morning press conferences. The clock was purchased as a Christmas gift from the Gridiron Widows in December, but became lost in the shuffle.

Mrs. Roosevelt, a club member, accepted the gift on behalf of her husband, warning the latter that in the future sho would set the alarm for the hour when he is supposed to turn off his lights at night.

Would Use It On Conferees

There have been so many alarms at the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt said, that she sometimes thinks it hardly seems necessary to have an extra one.

But a good use for the clock, she predicted, will be as a signal when night political or legislative conferences should end. "I can put the clock just inside the door," she said, "when it's time for callers to go."

Falla, the President's pet pup, is a plenty good alarm for the morning when the President gets up, she added.

More than 260 persons—members of the club and one guest for each—gathered in the large ballroom of the Willard Hotel for the occasion. The head table, at which only the honor guests, officers and committee chairmen of the club were seated, was decorated with red carnations and fern. Southern smilax draped the walls.

Notes Presence Of Men Reporters

Many of the members had brought their husbands, in some cases newspapermen who cover President Roosevelt's press conferences.

Noting this, the President said he thought it might be a good idea sometime to dispose with his press conferences and go over to his wife's.

Furthermore, the joint press conferences, he said, would be an excellent labor-saving device and another forward step in Government reorganization.

Martinique Citizens Resent U. S. Patrol

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 10—Residents of Martinique, strategic French-owned island in the Caribbean, are "very resentful" of the presence of two American destroyers outside the harbor of Fort de France, a French passenger steamer master declared today.

Capt. Jacques Fromont, master of the Saint Domingue, which arrived today from the southern island, said the destroyers had replaced British warcraft which previously patrolled the harbor entrance.

Took Over Patrol

Two months ago it was reported from San Juan, Puerto Rico, that American neutrality patrol warships had taken over the watch on the island from the British West Indies Squadron.

"Why do you have to have destroyers there?" asked Captain Fromont, a World War veteran who was decorated by Marshal Petain, now Chief of State of unoccupied France.

"It would be better not to have them there," he continued, "at least not in view of the people."

He added that the two warships were stationed about six miles off shore during the day, but, according to islanders' reports, came "right up to the harbor entrance at night."

"The Germans—Bah!"

When newsmen explained that some quarters had expressed concern over the possibility of German control of the island, Captain Fromont replied, "—Ah, the Germans—bah!"

Aboard the Saint Dominque were thirty-five demobilized French soldiers, most of whom had been residents of the United States when they were called to the colors. Nine other passengers were French civilians and one was an American.

All had reached New York by varied routes from France to North Africa to Martinique.

Prisoner Accused In Nazi Cash Deal

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 10—A Government prosecutor asserted today that Isidore Lazarus, who was sentenced to prison for passport fraud, had carried large sums of money from Germany for such top Nazi leaders as Hermann Goering and deposited it in other countries where some "was believed to have been used to finance espionage work and propaganda."

Lazarus, 58 years old, had pleaded guilty to an indictment alleging he had made false statements in obtaining a passport and had used the passport so obtained. He was sentenced to two years in prison and fined $2,500 by Federal Judge Vincent L. Leibell.

New High Officials

Assistant United States Attorney Richard J. Burke said that the defendant, "according to his own story, said that he had been engaged in international exchange, under the name of Lee Lane, since 1933, when the Nazis came into power in Germany, and was a close friend of German leaders."

Besides Marshal Goering, Burke named as among these friends Dr. Paul J. Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda; Hjalmar Schacht, ex-Minister of Economics, and Robert Ley, Labor Minister.

Aided Refugees

Lazarus had taken money out of Germany, Burke added, in behalf of Goering, Ley and Schacht. The prosecutor said the defendant had insisted to investigators that he had used his connections to help refugees "get a small percentage of their money out of Germany," but, Burke stated, "most of their funds remained in Germany and probably wound up in the pockets of German officials."

Both Lazarus and his counsel insisted in court today that Lazarus had cultivated high German officials only to aid victims of persecutions—Jews, Catholics and Protestants alike. Lazarus is a Jew.

The indictment said that Lazarus was born in Rumania in 1882 but that in obtaining a passport through the American consul in Berlin in 1937 he stated he was born in 1887 in Fort Wayne, Ind. Lazarus used this passport, the indictment added, in entering this port from France on the liner Normandie June 26, 1939.

Transactions Listed

After arriving here, the prosecutor said, Lazarus carried out the following banking transactions:

Deposited in his own name $36,000 in the Guaranty Trust Company in New York after transferring it from a Stockholm bank.

Opened an account under the name of "Lee Lane" with the Schroder Trust Company, depositing $32,000 transferred from an Amsterdam bank.

Placed $70,000 worth of securities in a safe deposit box in the Guaranty Trust Company.

When Judge Leibell expressed an opinion that the Government's charge against him was well founded, the prisoner replied:

"Give me the opportunity and I'll bring the big men from Europe to prove that these insinuations, as far as my motives are concerned, are altogether false.

Ex-Confidence Man

"I have given thousands and thousands of dollars to aid refugees of my own race, as well as Catholics and Protestants. Send me to jail for life if you want, but let me clear myself of these aspersions."

The Government said Lazarus first came to this country in 1900 and that since 1923, he had obtained and used seven different passports. Official records showed, the court was informed that Lazarus was convicted in 1912 in Colorado for operating a confidence game and four years earlier had served time in Joliet Penitentiary Illinois, for a similar fraud.

Ratio Of Civilian To Military Deaths Soars In World War II

Figure In First Conflict Was 75 To 1—Now Its Only 3 To 1—Nazi Raids Are Blamed

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 10—Civilian deaths in the European conflict already have equaled the number of civilian deaths during the entire four years of the World War, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company estimated today.

On the basis of information available, bombardments from the air, land and sea, the company's statisticians said, have changed the ratio of seventy-five military deaths to one civilian death in the World War to three military to one civilian death in this conflict.

Civilian deaths in the current war exceed 100,000 against a total of 300,000 in the armed forces, the report said.

The statistics showed that during the 1914-18 war, 1,117 British civilians died in air raids, while up to November, Britain reported 20,000 civilian deaths in air raids since the beginning of this war.

The figures also showed 50,000 civilian deaths in Warsaw, Poland, where the heaviest civilian loss of life was recorded. Forty thousand "refugee casualties" were listed for Belgium and northern France, and 30,000 for Rotterdam's civilian mortality.

NO MUTINEERS NOW

Pitcairn Island Becomes Haven for War Refugees.

Weymouth, Mass., Jan. 10 (A. P.).—Pitcairn Islanders, hard hit themselves by the war in Europe, have offered a haven to child refugees from bomb-torn Britain on their lonely Pacific isle which sheltered the mutineers of the Bounty 151 years ago.

This was revealed in a letter received here this week from an islander who wrote:

30,24-6897

30.24 6897

". . . There are some refugees being sent to the island between 6 and 16 years of age. No babies are to come. I do not know how many yet. Some (persons) have offered to take them in."

"Ships are very few and far between and not much trading is done on them now as before the war," ran the letter, which was dated October 15, 1940.

"We have heard that two ships which used to call here have been sunk by submarines with our orders on both of them, which makes us short of many things we need."

The message, written by a seventy-three-year-old woman missionary, was received by Granville P. Lindley, a radio engineer who went to Pitcairn in 1938 to set up the island's short-wave radio station.

MERCY SHIP CARGO DAMAGED BY FIRE

Red Cross Supplies Aboard British Freighter In New York, Are Burned

Three Bombers Untouched. Craft Was Expected To Sail In 24 Hours

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 10—Fire raged for an hour tonight in a freighter recently sold to the British and reported by police as ready to sail within twenty-four hours with a load of airplanes, Red Cross supplies and steel.

The blaze, brought under control at 6.30 P. M., was confined to Hold No 3 of the freighter, the Black Heron sold to Britain three weeks ago by the Black Diamond Steamship Company, of Weehawken, N. J.

Police said the hold, which was badly damaged, contained blankets bandages and other Red Cross supplies. Three bombing planes, which were lashed to the deck, were not damaged.

LaGuardia Visits Ship

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia went aboard the ship, talked to Capt. Walter Stafford and then said:

"It is too early to determine the cause."

Later, Fire Marshal Thomas Brophy said he had definitely established that there was no sabotage. He said workmen had been using a welding machine directly above the hold to fasten a plane to the deck. A small hole, he said, was burned in the deck, and it was possible that sparks had ignited the burlap-wrapped bundles below.

The British purchasing commission said it had no knowledge that any of its cargo had been placed aboard the 4,926-ton ship.

After Longshoremen Leave

The fire was discovered a half hour after longshoremen completed loading cargo for the day.

Land companies and fireboats fought the blaze. Damage was not estimated immediately.

The Black Heron was one of four vessels the Black Diamond Company sold to the British. The others were the Black Condor, Black Osprey and Black Tern.

WINDSOR EXPECTED AT U. S. AIR SHOW

Duke May Visit Miami This Afternoon If Weather Permits Flight

He Probably Would Return To Bahamas Right After Seeing Maneuvers

[By the Associated Press]

Miami, Fla., Jan. 10—If good weather prevails tomorrow at Cat Cay, the Bahamas, the Duke of Windsor is expected to fly here for the afternoon performance of the all-American air maneuvers.

Since there is no airport at the island resort, it will be necessary to bring the Duke here in an amphibian plane. Rough weather might prevent such a plane from landing near the Cay, fifty miles from here.

Duchess Not To Come

First reports indicated the Duchess might accompany the Duke, but later it was understood she would remain at Cat Cay until they leave for Nassau Sunday. Should the Duke come to the air show, he probably would return late tomorrow afternoon.

Officials of the maneuvers said the amphibian would bring the Duke directly to the airport where the show is being held.

Assails U. S. Program For Airplane Engines

Miami, Fla., Jan. 10 (AP)—Col. G. Defreese Larner, general manager of the National Aeronautics Association, the largest aviation group in the United States, today told the Miami Kiwanis Club that the United States is to spend "some $50,000,000 of the taxpayers' money" on "out of date" airplane engines.

Speaking during the three-day mid-winter air show on Miami's municipal airport, Larner said this country had radial, air-cooled engines far in advance of the 1,200-horsepower British Rolls Royce engine to be produced by an automobile company.

He criticized the Allison 1,100-horsepower liquid-cooled airplane engine, being fitted to the army's new Curtis pursuits, as "a five-year-old model." This country, he said, has 2,000-horsepower engines already in production, and the European belligerents are basing their spring and summer aviation plans on new engines of that power.

Dive-Bombing Shown

During the first day of the air show navy dive bombers, simulating the devastating attacks made by German planes in both the Battle of France and the Battle of Britain, "wrecked" a portion of a wood-and-fabric city on the municipal airport.

As nine Grumman planes attached to the Opalocka Naval Air Station shot toward the ground and then pulled up to race for altitude, buildings toppled and flashes encircled the objective.

For safety's sake no actual bombs were dropped on the "city," erected a bare quarter of a mile from the spectators' stand, but the howl of the bombers' engines carried across the airport against a strong wind, and the men in the cockpits, fighting the momentary dizziness of "pullouts," demonstrated the technique originated in the United States for defense against an enemy bent on invasion.

Navy To Receive Bids For Collier And Yacht

19,080-Ton Craft And Converted Boat Deemed Of No Further Use To Service

Washington, Jan. 10 (AP)—The navy announced today that the 19,080-ton collier Proteus and the converted yacht Nokomis would be sold Bids will be opened February 11. Officials said the vessels were of no further naval use.

The Proteus is in the James river off Fort Eustis, Va. She was built by the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Company in 1911.

The Nokomis, a hulk, is at the Norfolk Navy Yard. She was built for Horace E. Dodge, of Detroit, in 1917, and acquired by the navy that year and converted into a patrol vessel.

U. S. Restores Several World War Submarines

Navy Officials Disclose They Have Been Reconditioned And Are In Service

Philadelphia, Jan. 10 (AP)—Navy officials disclosed today that several submarines of the World War type, tied up in the back channel at the Philadelphia Navy Yard for at least a dozen years, have been reconditioned and are again in service.

A total of twenty such submersibles are being repaired. All will be assigned within a few weeks, it was said, to the newly created Atlantic fleet.

The newest of the craft were built in 1924. Many were laid down under the World War naval program.

5000 RIFLES MONTHLY

Winchester Beats Schedule for New Garands.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 10 (A. P.).—The first Garand semi-automatic army rifle produced by private industry rolled off the assembly line at the Winchester Repeating Arms Company today and was presented to Major-Gen. Charles M. Wesson of Washington, Army Chief of Ordnance. The weapon, heretofore produced only at the Federal arsenal in Springfield, Mass., was the first of 65,000 to be manufactured at the Winchester plant under an $8,710,000 contract.

John C. Garand of Springfield, inventor of the rifle, and several high-ranking War Department officers heard Gen. Wesson term it the most effective combat rifle in the world. Edwin S. Pugsley, Winchester vice-president, said that the first rifle was completed almost three months ahead of schedule and that the firm soon would be turning out 5,000 monthly to augment the daily production of 550 at Springfield.

Mussolini's African Dream Apparently About to Be Shattered

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

The far citadels of Mussolini's great African empire, of which he has been inordinately proud, are beginning to shake from the disaster which has overtaken his army of conquest in the Libyan desert.

While it would be rash to draw sweeping conclusions from the Allies' successes, it is justifiable to say that their progress does in fact threaten the existence of Italy's whole African structure.

That means Libya, Ethiopia, Eritrea, Italian Somaliland, and British Somaliland which the fascists captured last August when the British advisedly offered little resistance.

The rapidly multiplying signs bring vividly to mind a graphic passage in Churchill's recent appeal to the Italian people to throw Il Duce overboard. In citing the wages of continuing the conflict, he said:

"Our armies are tearing and will tear your African empire to shreds and tatters."

Invasion of Italy Debated.

The danger undoubtedly exists that Churchill's prediction may be fulfilled. Because of this, and the striking Greco-British victories over the fascists in Albania, London is beginning to buzz with talk of an offensive against Italy itself, with the idea of knocking Mussolini out of the war completely. Such an operation also would tend to checkmate Hitler's threatened invasion of Britain.

Recognition of these facts would account in part for the German activity in the Balkans. If the Allied menace to Italy continues to increase, Hitler undoubtedly will attempt to counter it in some manner.

Allied progress continued in both Mediterranean theaters today. From Greece comes the official announcement that the Greco-British forces have captured the important fascist stronghold of Klisura in central Albania. That further increases the threat to the strategic port of Valona toward which the Greeks have been driving persistently for weeks. The fall of Valona would clear the fascists out of southern Albania.

In Africa, along with the rapid advance of the allied forces into Libyan territory, comes the striking word that the native rebellion in the mountain fastnesses of wild Ethiopia is swelling. This revolt has been brewing ever since Mussolini in 1935 defied world opinion and by overwhelming force beat into submission one of the most fiercely independent peoples on earth.

Terrible Vengeance Possible.

The Ethiopian upheaval may easily produce a major catastrophe if it gets going full blast. Tragedy looks down from the rugged mountains onto the Italian cantonments and the many thousands of colonists whom Mussolini has sent into that primitive country. The Ethiopians are likely to exact terrible vengeance.

Savage revolts against the Italians have been increasing, especially in the southern part of the country. Yesterday the British reported that a rebellion in western Ethiopia had forced Fascist forces to flee from one outpost.

These revolts have been set in motion by word of the British success in Libya. They aren't by any means spontaneous, however, for information from British sources says that plans for them have been carefully laid.

Haile Selassie reportedly is in the Egyptian Sudan himself, leading his people in the effort to regain the throne.

REMARKING THAT THE UNITED STATES HAD LOST "PRECIOUS MARKETS IN EUROPE," GAYDA SAID: "IF THE UNITED STATES WITH A REALISTIC SENSE AND CLEARER VISION OF EUROPEAN THINGS WANTED TO SETTLE ITS AFFAIRS BETTER, IT SHOULD LINE UP, IN THE INTERESTS OF ITS OWN TRADE, ON THE SIDE OF YOUNG NATIONS (MEANING GERMANY AND ITALY) INSTEAD OF DIGGING SUCH A DEEP AND DANGEROUS CHASM AGAINST THEM."

VICHY POINTED OUT THAT THERE WAS MUCH AMERICAN SYMPATHY IN A CAMPAIGN TO RELAX THE BRITISH BLOCKADE, BUT ONE PARIS PAPER RETORTED THAT THAT WAS MERELY A SMOKESCREEN FOR AMERICAN COLLABORATION WITH THE BLOCKADE.

THE VICHY GOVERNMENT TOOK EMERGENCY STEPS TO TRY TO SUPPLY PARIS.

GERMANY'S AXIS PARTNER, ITALY, ALSO FEELING THE PINCH OF SHORTAGES, ORDERED A CENSUS OF ESSENTIAL FOOD STOCKS TO PROVIDE A BASIS FOR FURTHER RATIONING.

THIS STRANGE FAR EAST IS THE HOME OF THE SOMEWHAT MYSTERIOUS INTER-NATIONAL DATE LINE. THIS IS AN IMAGINARY ONE BETWEEN THE NORTH AND SOUTH POLES THROUGH THE MIDDLE OF THE PACIFIC OCEAN, ALONG THE 180TH MERIDIAN, NOWHERE TOUCHING LAND. IT IS PART OF THE 24-HOUR TIME SYSTEM. TIME IS SUPPOSED TO BEGIN THERE EACH DAY. WHEN IT IS ONE MINUTE AFTER MIDNIGHT AN INCH EAST OF THE LINE IT IS ONE MINUTE AFTER EACH OF THE SUCCEEDING 23 HOURS AS ONE GOES EASTWARD AROUND THE WORLD.

WHEN ONE COMES TO THE 24TH TIME ZONE, IT IS ONE MINUTE AFTER MIDNIGHT AGAIN BUT ONE MINUTE AFTER MIDNIGHT OF TWO DIFFERENT DAYS. THEREFORE THIS 24TH TIME ZONE IS DIVIDED INTO TWO PARTS. IN THE EASTERN HALF IT IS ONE MINUTE AFTER MIDNIGHT OF A MONDAY AND IN THE WESTERN HALF IT ALSO IS ONE MINUTE AFTER MIDNIGHT BUT OF A TUESDAY. THIS SOUNDS COMPLICATED BUT IT IS UNDERSTANDABLE WHEN ONE STARTS THERE - ON A MAP - AND GOES THROUGH THE SUCCESSIVE TIME ZONES, EASTWARD AROUND THE WORLD.

AT SEA, A SHIP THAT CROSSES FROM SAN FRANCISCO TO MANILA OR TOKYO SIMPLY LOSES A DAY OUT OF THE WEEK WHEN SHE CROSSES THE LINE. COMING EASTWARD, THE SHIP GETS AN EXTRA DAY IN THE WEEK AND HAS TWO DAYS OF THE SAME NAME ON THE DAY SHE CROSSES THE LINE.

NAZIS SET PORTSMOUTH AFLAME

JAN 12 1941

JAN 12 1941

FIRES FOLLOW HEAVY ASSAULT ON NAVAL PORT

Incendiary Bombs Shower on London in Great Night Attack.

BLAZES IN CONTROL QUICKLY

R. A. F. Strikes at French Coast Anew, Bombarding Brest and Le Havre.

Portsmouth, England, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—The German air force, sticking to its one-town-nightly program, concentrated a heavy attack last night and early today on Portsmouth, Great Britain's biggest naval base.

Massed waves of bombers loosed hundreds of incendiary bombs, causing widespread havoc.

Buildings destroyed included several large stores and six large movie theaters were burned out.

[The dispatch showed signs of heavy censorship at this point.]

Good neighbor groups, many from nearby towns, helped fight the fires, smothering incendiaries with blankets, carpets and almost any suitable thing they could lay their hands on. They were credited with preventing scores of fires.

No estimate of casualties was available at once. Homeless persons were collected in buses and taken to special centers. The more fortunate residents shared food and clothing with those bombed out of their homes. Bakers pooled their stocks and distributed all the bread they could produce.

Many of the homeless carried birds in cages and other rescued pets, even poultry from their back yards. A special rescue squad cared for dogs brought from the ruins and co-operated in the search for pets.

Heavy London Raid.

London, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Waves of German planes laden with incendiary and high explosive bombs assailed London tonight in another great fire raid, but this time fire-fighters were reported to have smothered many of the incendiaries before they could gain headway.

Even so, many small fires lighted the sky where British interceptor planes sought to beat off the attackers.

After the first hour of the raid, one fire official said, "There were at least twenty watchers for every bomb that fell and we had them out in no time."

Shortly after the assault started, police said "it looks like a good one."

In its early stages the Germans seemed to be trying to repeat on an even wider scale the destructive fire raid on the night of December 29-30.

The explosive phase of the attack also was heavy. In one five-minute period seven heavy thumps were heard.

The clang of fire gongs penetrated to shelters throughout one area. In one sector alone at least 350 men were fighting fires.

Large numbers of planes could be heard, some of which were believed to be night interceptors. Several London areas felt the thump of bombs.

A shower of incendiaries hit one area of London which already had been heavily bombed.

Fire fighters clambered about on rooftops, or worked through the streets, methodically extinguishing the fire-bombs as fast as they could.

Raids in France.

Royal Air Force planes followed up yesterday's six-hour daylight assault on the big German submarine base at Brest, on the coast of occupied France, with another overnight blast, in the course of which widespread fires were started and direct hits were made in the bow of a big ship, the Air Ministry announced today.

Amplifying the brief communique of the Air Ministry, its news service said that during the attack on Brest many sticks of high explosive bombs were dropped across docks and one pilot saw a very large fire when he arrived, which was still burning as fiercely when he left Brest an hour later.

The announcement said that the attackers encountered light and heavy anti-aircraft shells bursting in a continuous ring around the docks, but were able to penetrate the barrage and escape without being hit.

A ground haze prevented some fliers from observing the full results of their bombs.

Later the Ministries of Air and Home Security said that an enemy aircraft dropped bombs on a town in East Kent in the afternoon and killed a small number of persons.

Shipping at Le Havre also was attacked, the communique said, and all the British planes returned safely.

Meanwhile, Nazi raiders were reported near a northwest of England town shortly before noon today.

Two enemy planes attacking this country were destroyed last night, one by the R. A. F. and the other by anti-aircraft fire, it was officially stated.

LEAD DAY RAID

LONDON, JAN. 11--(AP)-THE "ALL CLEAR" SOUNDED OVER LONDON BEFORE 10 O'CLOCK TONIGHT (4 P.M. E.S.T.) TO END A TREMENDOUS FIRE AND BLAST RAID BY NAZI PLANES WHICH WAS THE WORST SINCE THE GREAT RAIN OF INCENDIARIES ON DEC. 29.

FOR ABOUT FOUR HOURS WAVE AFTER WAVE OF HEAVY BOMBERS HAD SWEPT OVER LONDON IN ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO SET FIRE TO WIDE SECTIONS OF THE CAPITAL.

BUT, ALTHOUGH THE RAID APPEARED TO BE EVEN GREATER IN POINT OF AIRCRAFT INVOLVED--AND BOMBS DROPPED THAN THE PREVIOUS FIRE BLITZ, THERE WERE INDICATIONS IT WAS NOWHERE NEAR AS DAMAGING.

FIRE FIGHTERS WERE REPORTED TO HAVE SMOTHERED MANY OF THE INCENDIARIES ALMOST AS SOON AS THEY ALIGHTED.

Many Killed in England.

LONDON, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—German raiders pounded Portsmouth with hundreds of high explosive and incendiary bombs last night, killing a number of persons and causing considerable damage to houses and commercial buildings, the Government announced today.

At the same time, the Royal Air Force followed up yesterday's six-hour daylight assault on the big German submarine base at Brest, on the coast of occupied France, with another overnight blast, informed spokesmen reported.

Meanwhile, Nazi raiders were reported near a northwest of England town shortly before noon today.

In the Portsmouth raid a high explosive bomb was said to have registered a direct hit on an air raid precautions post, blasting it to bits, and the casualties were believed heavy there.

Six churches and several theaters were reported damaged and communication facilities suffered, while many persons were made homeless by bombs that fell in residential districts, the official communique said. It added that fires were caused, but that the situation was well in hand.

Elsewhere in England a few bombs fell, but no one was killed and only slight damage resulted, the Government said. London had a quiet night, free of raiders. Planes circled over Liverpool and other Merseyside towns for several hours, but no bombs were reported and no gunfire was heard there.

Two enemy planes attacking this country were destroyed last night, one by the R. A. F. and the other by anti-aircraft fire, it was officially stated.

LONDON'S FIREFIGHTERS RALLY TO SAVE CITY IN 4-HOUR BATH OF FLAME

Nazis In Intensive Raid Use New 'Dynamite Sandwich' Technique

Assault Threatens But Fails To Achieve Devastation Of Dec. 29

By DREW MIDDLETON
Associated Press Correspondent

London, Jan. 11—This citadel of Britain stood firm tonight against an onslaught of hundreds of fire and explosive bombs dropped by squadrons of heavy German bombers in a short but intense raid.

The attack threatened but never achieved the destruction done in London's great fire of 1940—the "fire Blitz" December 29 on The City, London's crowded, old financial district.

If, as it seemed for awhile, the Luftwaffe was trying to repeat that devastation on an even wider scale, observers said it failed.

Firemen Keep Pace With Bombs

Volunteer fire watchers and fighters rallied as incendiaries hurtled down. They extinguished fires which were so bright for a time that you could read a newspaper on the blacked-out city's roofs.

An Associated Press reporter saw at least fifty incendiaries swish to the ground at one time and start rows of bright blue lights. One by one they went out as firemen reached them.

The dome of St. Paul's Cathedral once again stood out impressively against the flaming backdrop.

Strain Appears Not So Great

But, unlike the earlier raid the main blazes were speedily put out, even in sections where there are no residents or night workers and even though there were more planes and more bombs in a shorter time.

The strain on fire-fighting apparatus appeared not to be as great and there was no indication that it was necessary to call in fire-fighting apparatus from outlying districts.

Over In About 4 Hours

Changing weather conditions were believed to have caused the abrupt all-clear after about four hours because of the risk of landing crashes for the homing bombers.

It was learned later that raiders also had dropped bombs on three districts of southeastern England.

In London, one bomb crashed through the roof of the subway, causing some fatalities among occupants of an air-raid shelter.

Others were killed by a direct bomb hit on a bus.

"Dynamite Sandwich" Technique

The raiders appeared to have developed a new "dynamite sandwich" technique. First they dropped incendiaries, then high explosives—as they usually do after fire bombs light up targets—but tonight they finally loosed more incendiaries. It was believed they hoped thus to set fire to debris caused by the high explosives.

From the supper hour until almost 10 P. M., an endless chain of Nazis sprayed the city with incendiary and high explosives, apparently intending to make London tonight's target for the Luftwaffe's "one-town-a-night" concentrated attack as Portsmouth, the big English Channel naval station, was last night.

It was described as the hardest task so far for the capital's augmented force of fire watchers, charged with quickly snuffing out the barrage of incendiaries and "Molotoff breadbaskets" which scatter clusters of small bombs in midair.

20 Watchers For Every Bomb

One fire officer reported "There were at least twenty watchers for every bomb that fell, and we had them out in no time," but there was the eerie spectacle of hundreds of fire fighters battling incendiaries on roof tops in the glare of hot flame while the raids lasted.

One deafening blast after another at times forced the roof watchers into their observation cubicles or drove them to underground shelter.

Associated Press observers telephoning from widely scattered sections of the London area reported "the heaviest night yet."

"I have been in a shelter and I'm covered with soot loosened by falling bombs," one of them said.

The rumble of exploding bombs came from several areas of the capital soon after the start of the raid, and large numbers of planes could be heard overhead. Some of them were believed to be British night fighters.

A shower of incendiaries fell in one area which already had been heavily bombed.

350 Firefighters In One Area

Volunteer firemen clambered on roofs and worked through the streets in the methodical business of batting out the small but fiercely hot flames of the fire bombs.

In another district the clang of fire bells penetrated to crowded shelters below ground, and surface watchers could see the glow of many small fires against the sky. By conservative estimate, at least 350 men were fighting fires in this one area.

Except for Portsmouth, Britain was virtually bomb-free Friday night, and the only air attack up to the nightfall alarm in London was on one town in east Kent where, the Government said, "an enemy aircraft dropped bombs" and killed "a small number of persons."

Portsmouth Is Hit Hard

PORTSMOUTH, England, Jan. 11 (AP).—This naval station bore deep new scars today after the Nazi attack last night.

Nazi planes streamed in over the south coast throughout Friday night and dropped hundreds of fire bombs and high explosives on Portsmouth and its 250,000 inhabitants.

A government announcement admitted "a number of fatalities" and "considerable damage" to buildings and homes.

[Rigid censorship was applied to reports on the raid. Press from the bombed city contained only one word, "Portsmouth." All else had been deleted.]

Widespread havoc was caused by the massed waves of German bombers. Several large stores and six burned-out theaters were among the damaged buildings. Some residential areas were cleared because of the danger of unexploded delayed-action bombs.

Many casualties were reported in one Air Raid Precautions post, said to have suffered a direct hit. The homeless gathered at special centers to receive food and clothing from bakers' and grocers' pooled stocks and from other inhabitants whose homes survived. "Good neighbor groups" of firemen and rescue workers, many from near-by towns, were credited with having prevented heavier destruction.

R. A. F. Hammers Brest, Hits Ship, Starts Fires

Naval Base Bombed, Le Havre Also Attacked

LONDON, Jan. 11 (AP).—Royal Air Force planes scored direct hits on the bows of a large vessel and started "widespread fires" in an attack last night on the naval base at Brest, in German-occupied France, the Air Ministry announced today.

Shipping in the harbor at Le Havre, France, also was attacked by the British raiders, a communique said. All the British planes were reported to have returned safely.

Amplifying a brief communique, the Air Ministry news service said that during the attack on Brest "many sticks of high explosive bombs were dropped across docks, and one pilot saw a very large fire when he arrived which was still burning as fiercely when he left Brest an hour later."

The announcement said the attackers encountered "light and heavy anti-aircraft shells bursting in a continuous ring around the docks," but were able to penetrate the barrage and escape without being hit. A ground haze prevented some flyers from observing the full results of their bombs.

Nazis Lose First Bomber To Briton in U. S. Plane

London Describes It as Initial Victory of Its Kind

LONDON, Jan. 11 (AP).—The Air Ministry announced today that "Germany has lost her first bomber to an American fighter aircraft flown by a British pilot."

The Ministry told the story this way:

"Three of these (American) aircraft were on patrol when weather conditions necessitated recall to their bases. The leader had actually landed when he caught sight of a Ju 88 (Junkers bomber). He promptly took off again and, climbing back into the clouds, rejoined his two companions just as one of them opened fire on the raider.

"Smoke at once enveloped the raider, and when the leader joined the fight the German machine began to lose height as the pilot apparently searched for a landing place.

"The fight was watched by a retired naval captain and his home-guard son, who farm near by. They reached the wreckage as one of the crew was attempting to set fire to the machine. The captain covered them with a shotgun and the son disarmed the four men and took them prisoner. One had been slightly wounded."

Warns Of Liability For Bombs On Ireland

Dublin Says Government Concerned Must Accept It When Responsibility Is Placed

Dublin, Jan. 11 (AP)—The Irish Government announced today that the "external government concerned" would be asked to accept liability where "the origin of bombs or other weapons of aerial attack dropped on this country can be established" and added:

"Pending the outcome of such representation, the Irish Government takes responsibility for making good damage caused and relieving distress."

After it had announced identification of certain bombs and aerial sea mines dropped last week in the Dublin area as of German origin, the Irish Government ordered a protest at Berlin. German sources denied responsibility.

London Strikers Win In Fire-Watching Protest

East End Dock Rail Workers to Get Raise as Volunteers

LONDON, Jan. 11 (AP).—Railroad workers at the East End docks won concessions today in a strike against carrying out "highly dangerous" compulsory fire-watching duties at the ordinary rates of pay. They decided to return to work Monday after the company withdrew the compulsory fire-watching plan and agreed to a readjustment of pay for such duties.

At the same time, civil defense workers—including firemen, stretcher bearers and rescue squads—presented to the Home Office a plea for a $2-a-week pay increase because of mounting living costs. The base pay of the workers is $13 weekly.

Barrage Balloons Trouble Eire

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Jan. 11 (AP)—Barrage balloons drifting across Ireland [Eire] fouled cable lines and cut off power today in parts of two counties.

Dalton Asserts Climax Of War Is Approaching

Says Navy Seized Ships Trying to Run Blockade

LONDON, Jan. 11 (AP).—Hugh Dalton, Minister of Economic Warfare, told an audience tonight that the war would move to a climax in the "next few months, perhaps in the next few weeks."

Fuehrer Adolf Hitler, he said, "cannot afford much longer to remain passive while his junior partner in crime is being hammered in Africa and Albania, on the seas and in the air." The Axis must face "the steadily increasing support, both moral and material, which comes to reinforce our cause from the United States," he declared.

Speaking of "economic war on all its fronts," he revealed that "only in the last few days the Navy has picked up a number of would-be blockade runners."

Supplies from the United States which Great Britain was allowing through her blockade to unoccupied France would be limited to medical supplies "in the strict sense," Dalton declared, and "there will be strict safeguards against the abuse of these arrangements." Among the blockade-free supplies are vitamin concentrates, preserved milk and children's clothes.

"We reserve the right at any time to stop further shipments if the conditions which we have laid down are not observed," he said.

120,000 More Register For Service in Britain

Men of 20 and 36 Included in New Classes

LONDON, Jan. 11 (AP).—Half of Great Britain's "36's"—men born between July 1 and Dec. 31, 1904—and twenty-year-olds born between Nov. 10 and Dec. 31, 1920, a total of about 120,000, registered today for military service.

Although official figures are lacking, it is estimated 4,000,000 men now are registered. A total of 3,675,000 were reported under arms on Dec. 20, 1940.

The men over thirty who registered today were the first permitted to apply for vacancies in civil defense—the auxiliary fire and first aid services and the police war reserve—instead of for the army, navy will register on Jan. 18.

The second half of the "36" class or air force.

World War Hero Receives Medal After 26 Years

LONDON, (AP.)—Twenty-six years ago during the retreat from Mons, James Bristow carried vital information across three-quarters of a mile of open countryside raked by machine-gun fire.

Although twice wounded he saved a platoon from being cut off and was awarded the distinguished service medal.

He received it a few days ago. The War Office letter which accompanied it made no mention of the delay.

British Events Hold American

Washington, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—There is one American who does not want to come home from the war zone.

The Foreign Service Journal reveals his story in this letter received by the State Department:

"I have a young brother, an American citizen, resident for some years in England, who flatly refuses to return. First, because he was sick; then, because he fell in love; then, because he was getting married now because a bomb fell on his mother-in-law. What can I do to persuade the boy (and his wife) to return while it is still possible?"

Ship Convoy System Criticized

Some British Analysts Believe Method of Protection Should Be Abandoned.

BY ROBERT E. BUNNELLE

London, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Losses inflicted by German submarines upon British shipping in recent months have stirred a debate in shipping circles here as to whether the convoy system has outlived its usefulness.

Some quarters, pointing to weekly losses averaging more than 60,000 tons, believe the system needs radical overhauling, while others contend it should be discarded completely.

Before the Germans won a foothold on the Bay of Biscay, with submarine bases outside the English Channel bottleneck, the British boasted that their convoys offered 98 per cent protection for merchant ships.

After the German occupation of the French coast, however, the merchant shipping losses jumped sharply, reaching a peak of 159,288 tons for the week ending September 23, 1940.

During the last week of 1940, losses declined to 37,556 tons, but informed sources attributed the drop to bad weather and a consequent decline in submarine activity rather than to any positive solution of the problem.

Arguments Against Convoys.

Arguments being advanced against the convoy system are:

1. It keeps urgently needed shipping tied up in port awaiting the convoy formation, and then slows the movement of every ship to the speed of the slowest in the convoy.

2. A convoy presents a better target for bombing planes than single ships and is easier to locate when signaling to submarines.

3. Because a convoy moves slowly, planes can shadow it until submarines get on the job or until an air attack is planned.

4. It makes ships in the convoy line vulnerable to spread-eagled discharge of torpedoes.

Defenders of the convoy system contend:

1- British shipping losses from January to June, 1917, were 2,087,000 tons but after institution of the convoys declined to 1,572,000 tons in the last half of that year.

2. That uncontrolled merchant shipping would multiply the problems of patrol and make easier the work of Nazi submarines and planes, which could lie in wait in the areas to the southwest and northwest of the British Isles, through which virtually all sea traffic to the islands has to pass, and attack without fear.

Fast Ships Not Affected.

3. That single fast ships can and do travel alone and do suffer losses.

4. That convoy ships are slow anyway, and in any case would be easy targets.

Britain's Navy, which maritime sources say now has to do three times more work than in 1917 and in 1918, when the United States and French navies were aiding the patrols, would like more destroyers from the United States—or elsewhere—for convoy patrol work.

Many persons in naval circles believe that if the British had an adequate number of destroyers in addition to bases in Ireland, Great Britain would have the shipping issue solved.

LONDON, JAN 11-(AP)-VICE-ADMIRAL EMIL MUSELIER, COMMANDER- IN-CHIEF OF THE "FREE FRENCH" NAVAL FORCES WHICH ARE FIGHTING ON AT BRITAIN'S SIDE, APPEALED IN A BROADCAST TONIGHT TO MEN OF THE INACTIVE FRENCH FLEET AT ALEXANDRIA TO JOIN THE STRUGGLE.

FRENCH UNITS THERE WERE DISARMED AFTER THE FRENCH ARMISTICE.

"WITH US YOU WILL SWEAR TO BE FAITHFUL TO THE EXAMPLE OF ALL OUR COMRADES WHO HAVE FALLEN SINCE THE BEGINNING OF THE WAR," THE VICE ADMIRAL DECLARED.

HE SAID THE "FREE FRENCH" FLEET NOW HAD 30 MEN OF WAR AND 80 MERCHANTMEN IN SERVICE AND THAT ALL SAVE 50 OF THE MERCHANTMEN WERE MANNED BY FRENCH CREWS.

No Nazi Factories Out Of Commission, Goering Says

Air Force Head Says R. A. F. Attacks Fail

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 11—Marshal Goering declared tonight that not a single German factory has been "put out of commission by the British." He contrasted this with what he said was the destruction of many plants in Britain.

Goering, head of the German air force and Adolf Hitler's No. 1 lieutenant, speaking before 574 miners honored with the War Service Cross, said that the destruction of munitions plants—not attic fires—was a decisive factor in war.

The German air force, he said, interfered with from 60 to 70 per cent. of British production, and added that theer was "no comparison possible" between the bombs the Germans dropped on Britain adn those the British dropped on Germany.

Birthday Tomorrow

Britain, he dtclared, must see the arrival and departure of between 200 and 300 ships daily to keep up her economy. Meanwhile, the German air force "must and will see to it" that shipping difficlutles become more and more serious, he said.

Goering, who will be 48 tomorrow, recalled that Adolf Hitler had entrusted him with carrying out the first four-year plan and then with a second.

"You have justified my faith in you," he said. "The plan, first ridiculed by our foes, later feared and hated, is lengthened.—it had to be lengthened—in the midst of war."

GOERING BOASTS BOMB SUPERIORITY

Not A Single German Factory Destroyed By British, Says Reichsmarshal

England's War Production Curbed 60 To 70 Per Cent., He Tells Miners

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 11—"No comparison is possible" between the bombs Germans have dropped on Britain and those the British have dropped on Germany, Reichsmarshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering declared tonight.

The German Air Force, he said, has interfered with sixty to seventy per cent. of British production and the British have put out of commission not a single German factory.

The Reichsmarshal, head of the Nazi Luftwaffe and Adolf Hitler's No. 1 lieutenant, spoke at the Flyers' Club before 574 miners honored with war service crosses. His speech, on the eve of his forty-eighth birthday, was broadcast.

Cites Britain's Need Of Ships

Goering told the miners that Britain needs the arrival and departure of from 200 to 300 ships a day to keep up her economy and that "when these ships become fewer and fewer and eventually none," difficulties ensue.

And, he added, the German air force "must and will see to it" that Britain's shipping difficulties grow more and more serious.

"Iron and coal are necessary to arm," Goering said. "We are rich in iron and coal."

"Fulfill Function" As Bombs

The Reichsmarshal acknowledged that the iron "is not so good," but he declared he was unconcerned about quality "because so long as it rains down on foes' heads in the form of bombs and shells it fulfills its function."

Calling the miners comrades of Germany's soldiers, Goering told them: "It is not pleasant when bombs fall on dwellings, but not a single German armament works has been put out of operation.... If you ask your comrades how it looks over there they will tell ..."

you it is indescribable.... And here, of course, there are destroyed houses, but not a destroyed factory."

Goering said Germany's 1940 coal production was 500,000,000 tons, while the output of all the rest of the world was 1,000,000,000 tons.

Nazis Declare Planes Strike in Mediterranean

Two British Warships, One an Airplane Carrier, Are Listed Hit in First Blow

BERLIN, Jan. 11 (AP).—German combat planes participated in their first operations in the Mediterranean yesterday and scored hits on two British warships, including an airplane carrier, the high command announced today, but it disclosed no details.

A German plane sank an 8,000-ton merchantman in the Atlantic west of Ireland today, D. N. B., the official German news agency, reported.

A submarine commanded by Lieut. Comdr. Hans Gerret von Stockhausen was reported by the high command to have sunk 52,800 tons of shipping on a recent trip. In all, the submarine was credited with sinking 101,530 tons of shipping and "so severely damaging" an 8,000-ton armed enemy merchantman "that its loss is certain."

Strong Nazi air units attacked last night the British naval base at Portsmouth, the high command said, among other points in southern England, and caused "extensive fires." The attack on Portsmouth was described as a "large-scale" raid, with formations of bombers participating.

No British warplanes appeared over the Reich during the night, it was said. Authorized Germans said the Royal Air Force appeared only in the vicinity of Brest, France, yesterday and dropped thirteen explosive and fourteen incendiary bombs. These were said to have caused no military damage. One bomb, these sources said, exploded near an anti-aircraft battery but not near enough to be effective.

The German night raid on Portsmouth, it was said, was highly effective. Excellent visibility was reported to have enabled pilots to observe their hits. Some pilots were quoted as saying they saw a large fire and heard explosions northwest of Grosport, across the harbor from Portsmouth, which indicated that a munitions plant might have been struck. Six Nazi craft did not return, it was admitted.

Conquest of Hunger Called Nazi War Aim

BERLIN, Jan. 11 (AP).—The conquest of hunger and the security of Europe through productive labor were defined today as Germany's war aim by the weekly "Das Reich." The revolution against hunger has been concluded domestically by the Nazi procurement of work for every one, the paper said.

"This revolution is still in store for the English," "Das Reich" said. "No powers on earth, not even Mr. Roosevelt personally, will be able to save them."

NAZIS FAIL TO FILL SOVIET PACT QUOTA

News Service Lays Blame On Time Required To Make Machinery

By PRESTON GROVER
Associated Press Correspondent

Berlin, Jan. 11—Germany once more has tapped the pool of Russian resources without resorting to the war which some neutral sources long have insisted is "inevitable."

Under the terms of yesterday's economic agreement between Russia and Germany—made public in part today—Germany claims she will receive increased supplies of much needed food, cotton, minerals and oil.

Promises Machinery

It is precisely these raw commodities which Germany needs to offset the British blockade and preserve her strength for possible trouble with the United States—which, conceivably, lies beyond the horizon.

In return for raw products out of Russia, Germany promises to supply the industrial machinery which Russia has long been wanting in order to make herself to some degree self-supporting and able to make use of her own raw products, now largely usable only for export.

Amount Not Revealed

How greatly Germany's supplies will be augmented has not been given out, nor at any time has there been published any indication of how much material Germany has received from Russia under the terms of the trade treaty concluded February 11, 1940.

One of the reports current at the time that the Soviet Premier, Vyacheslaff M. Molotoff, visited Berlin, in November, was that he insisted Germany was not delivering the full quota of machinery and manufactured goods promised Russia in return for raw material deliveries.

Explains Delays

This is supported now by a statement in Dienst Aus Deutschland, a highly placed news commentary service, which explains that delayed deliveries by Germany were due to the fact that it took so long to manufacture the machines wanted by Russia.

Dienst adds, however, that already—before the first year of the treaty has ended—Russia has fulfilled her part of the bargain. Germany, Dienst says, expects to deliver her share of the first year's bargain three months late, or sometime in May.

Increases Called For

In spite of these belated German deliveries, informed sources asserted that an increasing amount of grain, petroleum and other essentials were arranged under the new agreement.

What was described as "the greatest grain deal in history" has been worked out under the pact signed yesterday, and "many billions of marks" are said to be involved in the proposed exchange.

Dienst asserted that, despite the increasing amount of raw materials now used by Russia herself, she still is able to deliver generously such items as oil because of the development of a "second Baku" oil field at Romny, between the middle Volga and the Urals.

Transportation Is Problem

Transportation of the increased supply of goods from Russia, one of the greatest problems on account of limited rail facilities, was declared "a soluble problem" by authorized sources.

While it is true that Germany is in need of Soviet supplies, Dienst asserted Russia, also, has virtually no other source of supply for certain machinery.

England as a supplier for other countries has about fallen out of the race, Dienst contended, and America has made clear her determination to put a great part of her production in the hands of England.

Nazi Baltic Trade Ends

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 11—Informed sources disclosed today that the German-Soviet agreement signed yesterday in Moscow provides that Germany is to have no direct commercial relations with Russia's absorbed Baltic states after February 11.

Germany heretofore had a big trade and heavy investments in those Baltic states—Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia—and many German citizens were employed there.

When Russia took over the states numerous problems developed, which these sources declared to be solved now "after many difficulties."

Drawing On Surpluses

Germans called the trade accord a "100 per cent. barter agreement—no gold, no credits needed, none wanted."

In a general way the trade pact binds Germany to deliver machinery, as informed sources put it, "for the industrial development" of Russia, while Russia sends products for "sustenance and war production."

Both nations are drawing on surpluses for export to each other, it was said.

Silent About Oil

These quarters said they understood that "Russian grain shipments to Germany, in progress almost a year, had been raised appreciably." As for oil from Russia, these source declined to elaborate, but said simply that "our supply was taken into consideration.'

RUSSIA EXPECTS TREATIES WITH OTHER NATIONS

Paper Says It Will Deal With Any Friend as With Germany.

PACT TO GOVERN TRADE

It Also Fixes Borders and Provides for Exchange of Nationals.

Moscow, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—The newspaper Izvestia, organ of the Russian Government, followed up disclosure of new trade and friendship pacts with Germany by announcing today that Russia intends to conclude other economic treaties and agreements with other States, both belligerent and non-belligerent, in 1941.

Izvestia offered this forecast as a sign that Russia shows no favoritism so long as her frontiers and interests are not threatened.

"Attempts made by the press hostile to the Soviet Union to prove that any agreement concluded between the U. S. S. R. and Germany is directed against third Powers cannot stand," Izvestia said.

"It is time it was understood that the Soviet Union, as a non-belligerent power, follows its own independent policy and will continue to follow it regardless of what statesmen of the Eastern and Western Hemispheres may think of this."

Stalin Is Quoted.

Izvestia cited Stalin's statements of March, 1939:

"We stand for peace and strengthening of business relations with all countries. That is our position, and we shall adhere to this position as long as these countries maintain like relations with the Soviet Union and as long as they make no attempt to trespass on the interests of our country.

"We stand for close and friendly relations with all neighboring countries which have common frontiers with the U. S. S. R. That is our position and we shall adhere to this position as long as these countries maintain like relations with the Soviet Union and as long as they make no attempt to trespass directly or indirectly on the integrity and inviolability of the frontiers of the Soviet State."

Pravda, the Communist party newspaper, headed its editorial on the accords with Germany, "New Victories of Soviet Foreign Policy."

"Contrary to the efforts and all kinds of tricks by the Soviet Union's enemies endeavoring to drive a wedge between the U. S. S. R. and Germany," it said, "the U. S. S. R. consistently is pursuing its policy of peace and friendship toward Germany as toward all States willing to pursue a like policy toward the U. S. S. R."

Full Settlement Seen.

A Russian communique on the five agreements signed yesterday at the Kremlin declared last night that all economic problems between the countries had been settled.

Besides broadening trade relations, the agreements were said to have fixed mutual boundaries in newly acquired territories and settled resulting repatriation problems.

To carry out the repatriation process, expected to be completed in seventy-five days, simultaneous agreements were signed in Riga, Latvia, and Kaunas, Lithuania, to cover the Baltic States absorbed by Russia.

[An Associated Press dispatch from Berlin states that informed persons disclosed today that the German-Soviet agreement provides that Germany is to have no direct commercial relations with Russia's absorbed Baltic States after February 11.

Germany heretofore had a big trade and heavy investments in them, and many German citizens were employed there.]

Germans to Return to Reich.

In the repatriation process 40,000 Germans were expected to return to the Reich from Lithuania and 10,000 from Latvia and Estonia. Russians living in German Memelland (Northeastern tip of German East Prussia) and the Suwalki District of German-occupied Poland also will return to their homeland.

Provision was made for settlements between Russia and Germany for property owned by their nationals.

Under the trade agreement, Russia promised to send Germany wheat, oil, cotton, flax, manganese and other raw materials in return for German industrial machinery.

The total turnover, Russian sources said, would exceed by far that of the last year under the trade pact of last February 11. The February 11 agreement extended a pact signed August 20, 1939.

The agreement signed yesterday runs until August 1, 1942.

Called Barter Treaty.

Berlin, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—German informants call the new trade accord with Russia a "100 per cent barter agreement—no gold, no credits needed, none wanted."

In a general way, the trade pact binds Germany to deliver machinery, as informed persons put it, for the industrial development of Russia, while Russia sends products for sustenance and war production.

The accord was characterized as the answer to various rumors allegedly started by the "opposition" in the closing days of the German-Russian negotiations in an effort to indicate disturbed relations.

Vichy Lays Anti-Semitic Shop Curbs To Nazis

"Aryanization" In Paris Called Too Severe To Be Work Of The French

Vichy, France, Jan. 11 (AP)—Government spokesmen declared tonight that "Aryanization" of 11,000 Jewish-owned shops at Paris was exclusively the act of German authorities.

While France has her own new anti-Semitic laws, it was said, "France would not push things so far."

Every shop in Paris has been required to report whether its ownership is Jewish. Commissioners are being appointed for firms owned by Jews.

Moscow Rebukes American And British Critics Of New Pact With Nazis

SAYS POLICY IS PEACE WITH ALL NEIGHBORS

Red Press Speaks Out In Justification Of Trade Treaty With Reich

Asserts Soviet Will Make More Deals This Year As It Pleases

BY HENRY C. CASSIDY

[By the Associated Press]

Moscow, Jan. 11—The Government and party press of the Soviet Union spoke out sharply today in justification of the new economic deal between Germany and Russia and rebuked British and American statesmen who may consider it warlike.

Furthermore, the newspapers announced, Moscow will make additional trade treaties in 1941 as she pleases, with nations both at war and at peace.

Soviet's "Independent Policy"

"It is time," said an editorial in Izvestia, the Government organ, that the world understands the United States of Soviet Russia follows an "independent policy and will continue to follow it."

Both Izvestia and Pravda carried editorials which cast some new significance on the expanded German-Russian trade pact signed here Friday, under which Germany is supposed to receive, principally, increased supplies of Soviet wheat.

[Buenos Aires sources have indicated that Russia is sending a mission there to buy much Argentine wheat. This might be transshipped to Germany.]

Russia And United States

"There are," said Izvestia, "in Britain and the United States some leading statesmen who believed that the United States, in full conformity with international law and the position of neutrality, may sell to Britain everything — including even warships — whereas the Soviet Union cannot sell to Germany even cereals without violating the policy of peace.

"These strange contentions provide a curious example of juggling with international law and neutrality and can only have the meaning of a political maneuver.

Europe's "Mightiest Powers"

"Economic relations between the U. S. S. R. and Germany and corresponding agreements form, above all, a most effective means of strengthening peace and friendship between the U. S. S. R. and Germany — the two mightiest powers in Europe."

To refute "hostile" press suggestions that German-Russian agreements are directed against third powers, Izvestia went on:

"In the course of 1940 the Soviet Union concluded, and intends to conclude in 1941, economic treaties and agreements with other States, both belligerent and non-belligerent."

Cites Stalin's Statement

The newspaper cited Joseph Stalin's March, 1939, statement of foreign policy and said the U. S. S. R. stood on it.

Stalin said at that time:

"We stand for peace and the strengthening of business relations with all countries. That is our position; and we shall adhere to this position as long as these countries maintain like relations with the Soviet Union and as long as they make no attempt to trespass on the interests of our country.

For Peace With Neighbors

"We stand for peaceful, close and friendly relations with all neighboring countries which have common frontiers with the U. S. S. R. That is our position and we shall adhere to this position as long as these countries maintain like relations with the Soviet Union and as long as they make no attempt to trespass directly or indirectly on the integrity and inviolability of the frontiers of the Soviet State."

This policy, said Izvestia, was "once again confirmed."

Pravda's editorial was in the same vein. It said the Friday agreements provided "fresh proof of the durability of good-neighborly relations between the two greatest European States."

Reports Traffic Troubles 'Fully Overcome' By Pact

New York, Jan. 11 (AP)—The German radio said tonight that, under the new German-Russian economic agreement, "Russia will be open to the transit of goods from Germany to distant countries."

Ten frontier rail crossings, the Danube and the Baltic will be used to bring Russian grain and other material to Germany, and vice versa, it was stated. Traffic difficulties, it was contended, have been "fully overcome."

The new pact runs until August 1, 1942.

Norwegian Gets Death Sentence

Arendal, Norway (via Berlin), Jan. 11 (A. P.).—A twenty-five-year-old workman, Rolf Hansen, was sentenced to death today by a court-martial after being convicted of attacking a German soldier. Another sentence of five years' imprisonment for possession of a pistol was given.

Hansen was said to have left a Christmas party intoxicated. When the soldier asked him what time it was, according to the charge, Hansen struck the German. The soldier drew his bayonet, the court found, and then Hansen pulled out a pistol and shot the soldier through the lung. The soldier is recovering.

Bardia Dead and Prisoners Put at 44,868; British 'Retrieve' Escaping Italian General

Cairo, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—The British disclosed today the full magnitude of their conquest of Bardia—44,868 Italians captured or dead, impressive quantities of armament seized or destroyed—and announced that their compaign to smash Tobruk, Libyan headquarters, seventy miles to the west, was proceeding satisfactorily.

Before Bardia fell, six days ago, it had been generally supposed that there were no more than 20,000 troops there. Today, however, a Middle East Headquarters communique put Italians killed and captured at 2,041 officers and 42,827 men.

This means that about 100,000 Italians by British count have been rendered ineffective since the British blitzkrieg in the desert got into motion a month ago.

Moreover, the British said that they had captured or destroyed at Bardia 368 medium and field guns, 26 heavy anti-aircraft guns, 68 light guns, 130 tanks and 708 transport vehicles.

This material was in woeful shape both from lack of maintenance and from British bombardment, the communique implied.

A special announcement said that one of three generals who escaped from Bardia now has been "retrieved." It was not revealed whether this was Gen. Annibale (Electric Whiskers) Bergonzoli, who was among the missing when the fortress city was captured.

R. A. F. command of the skies over North Africa was said by British military experts today to be forcing the Italian Marshal Rodolfo Graziani to fight the battle of Libya in the dark. Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell, on the other hand, is free to strike at his own time and place against the Italian army of North Africa massed at garrison towns along the Libyan coast from beleaguered Tobruk west of Tripoli, these spokesmen declared.

The R. A. F., the British said, is working with the fleet in an effort to prevent Marshal Graziani from receiving any reinforcements from Italy, and the British Middle East Command reported last night that several tons of bombs were dropped on the harbor of Messina, Sicily, on Thursday night. Sticks of explosives were said to have fallen across Italian cruisers, partly hidden by a smoke screen.

Flyers Keep At It.

The R. A. F. reported today that night attacks on Italian airdromes at Benina and Berka in Libya had resulted in hits on barracks, hangars, runways and grounded planes.

"Our fighters maintained a constant patrol in the Tobruk- Derna area yesterday," the communique also said. "No conclusive engagements were made with the enemy."

R. A. F. bombers also attacked Italian East Africa, scoring firemaking hits in the target area of the Caproni airplane workshops at Mai Adaga, according to the communique, which said of Asmara: "Large numbers of bombs were observed to burst among buildings."

In the Tashai-Tessenei area, it was said, Italian troop concentrations were dive-attacked.

The General Retrieved.

A special communique announced today: "Yet another of the Blackshirt generals who absented himself just before capture of Bardia has been retrieved while trying to escape on foot toward Tobruk." No details were added.

[Three days ago the British announced that Gen. Bergonzoli, commander of Bardia, and two other generals had slipped through their hands. One was soon captured. The new prisoner may be Electric Whiskers himself. The British believed that he had fled in a motor boat, but did not dismiss the possibility that he went on foot.]

Tobruk and Bengasi Raided.

Rome, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—The Italian High Command reported today that British planes raided the Libyan coastal bases of Tobruk and Bengasi, killing nine Mohammedans and injuring four. Artillery actions were said to have taken place at Tobruk, which is now under siege by the British, and near Jarabub, more than 150 miles to the south.

The High Command said that Italian planes destroyed some British mechanized equipment in attacks on formations of tanks and armored cars. Raiding British motorized units were said to have been driven back on the Sudan front, and two British planes were reported shot down, one in Libya and the other in a raid on Eritrea.

Congo Troops May Fight.

London, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Reports circulated in London today that Belgian Congo troops may join the fight against the Axis. There was speculation whether, in such a case, they would join Gen. Charles De Gaulle's Free French forces in adjoining French Equatorial Africa for a blow at Libya from the south, or cross the lower tip of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan to join in the operations against the Italians in East Africa.

Italy's Casualties At Bardia Put At 2,041 Officers, 42,827 Men

Donovan At Front

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 11 (AP)—Col. William J. Donovan, who is regarded as personal representative of Frank Knox, United States Secretary of the Navy, set out into the desert today for a tour of the British front in Libya.

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Jan. 11 — Italy's Marshal Rodolfo Graziani made no move today to relieve his beleaguered garrison at Tobruk, eighty miles inside Libya, but the British moved up troops and guns under massive air protection and plopped shells into the seaport's semicircle of defenses from four carefully placed batteries.

The guns of Tobruk replied, but aside from these artillery duels there was no fighting on the fourth day of the siege.

R. A. F. patrols were out all day yesterday on the road west of Tobruk leading to Derna, where British mechanized ground forces also are operating, but there was no conclusive engagement with Fascist airmen.

Believed Smaller Than Bardia's

Despite his tremendous losses, Graziani still has a considerable army to the west, but the fact that it is not coming up leads the British to believe that Tobruk will fall as did Bardia, Salum and Sidi Barrani before it.

The size of the Tobruk garrison is not known here but it is believed smaller than that of Bardia. The latter turned out to be considerably larger than the British anticipated, for official figures released today put the captured, dead and wounded there at 2,041 officers and 42,827 men.

Of these more than 40,000 were prisoners, for the Italian dead and wounded at Bardia did not exceed 2,000.

Fascist Toll Around 83,500

Total Italian losses in the last month are figured at somewhere around 83,500 dead, wounded and imprisoned, from five regular divisions and three Black Shirt brigades destroyed by the British.

Figures for total equipment captured since the British Blitz began in Egypt are:

Light tanks	162
Guns of all calibers	589
Artillery ammunition (rounds)	30,000
Machine guns	600
Light machine guns	700
Rifle and machine-gun ammunition (rounds)	11,000,000
Lorries	1,700

Equipment Seized At Bardia

At Bardia, today's Middle East command report said, 386 medium and heavy field guns were taken, along with 26 heavy anti-aircraft guns, 68 light guns, 13 medium tanks, 117 light tanks and 708 transport vehicles.

Many of the lorries were found to be unserviceable.

In addition, quantities of military stores and foodstuffs have been taken.

The bayonet, used so effectively in the last war, has played a prominent part in this desert campaign.

Fascists Dislike Bayonet

Several positions have been rushed by the British at bayonet point, and the attacking officers say that Italians and Libyans alike have shown a strong dislike of what they have termed this "obsolete" weapon.

While the North African armies maneuvered today for the grand assault on Tobruk, the Middle East command announced a continuance of "vigorous" patrol action against the Italian masters of Ethiopia.

Italian Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, British military observers said, must fight the rest of the battle of Libya "in the dark" because command of the North African skies has been seized by the Royal Air Force.

Too, they pointed out, both the R. A. F. and the fleet are attempting to see to it that Graziani gets no reinforcements from home.

[There were reports in London that troops of the Belgian Congo might join in the fight against the Axis. It was suggested that if they participated it probably would be with the free French forces of Gen. Charles de Gaulle.]

Fugitive General Retrieved

A special British communique announced today that "yet another of the Black Shirt (Fascist militia) generals who absented himself just before the capture of Bardia has been retrieved while trying to escape on foot toward Tobruk."

Whether this was the much-publicized Gen. Annibale (Electric Whiskers) Bergonzoli—recently reported unaccounted for by the British—was not stated.

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 11 (AP)—The R. A. F. today reported night attacks on the Italian airdromes at Benina and Berka in Libya had resulted in hits on barracks, hangars, runways and grounded planes.

Attack

New York, Jan. 11 (AP)—The British Broadcasting Company announced this "record of an Italian success" in a program heard today by the C. B. S. shortwave station:

"Last Tuesday morning 200 Italians landed from two destroyers on the tiny Greek island of Tinaros, which is one of a group southeast of the Greek mainland. The island was shelled for half an hour from the sea and then the 200 Italians stormed up the beach. The attack was irresistible and they put to flight the whole population, which consisted of two shepherds.

"After staying a few hours to pinch the victory, the Italians withdrew in good order."

AXIS AIRMEN UNITE, CLAIM 4 WARSHIPS HIT

Two Plane Carriers, Cruiser Among Targets In Mediterranean Raid

Rome, Jan. 11 (AP)—Claiming bomb and aerial torpedo hits already on four British warships, the German and Italian high commands issued parallel announcements today that Axis air forces had joined in offensive action against British seapower in the Mediterranean.

The Rome newspaper Il Giornale D'Italia said, "The action is continuing."

Between them the Berlin and Rome communique from the Axis high commands reported that two British aircraft carriers, a cruiser and a destroyer had been hit by torpedo planes and dive-bombers.

They were the first announcements that the German Duftwaffe had come to Italy's aid in the Mediterranean. The Italian High Command called it "fraternal, close cooperation," saying the Nazis "participated brilliantly."

Axis Planes Attack Convoy

The first encounter between joint Axis air power and British seapower in the Mediterranean occurred in the Sicilian Channel, neck of the Mediterranean between the Italian Island of Sicily and French Tunisia, North Africa, 90 miles wide at its narrowest point.

It was an attack on a convoy strongly protected by warships.

Presumably the convoy was one reported previously attacked in the western Mediterranean Jan. 9 when the Italians said their bombs hit a British battleship. (That claim had been denied unofficially in London.)

The convoy had passed through the channel about noon yesterday when the Italians and Germans swept down upon it, said Stefani, official Italian news agency.

Italians Had Nazi Aid

"For the first time," the communique declared, "units of the German air force, in fraternal, close co-operation with the Italian air units, participated brilliantly in the attack."

"Two torpedo-launching planes hit an aircraft carrier with a torpedo," the communique said. "Three dive-bombers hit the cruiser with two heavy bombs.

"Despite the most violent anti-aircraft reaction and repeated attacks by enemy fighter planes, all our planes returned to their bases."

The high command said the German fliers "succeeded in hitting one of the aircraft carriers with heavy and medium bombs" and "also hit the destroyer."

The port of Valietta, on the British island of Malta, was reported bombed heavily early today.

GERMAN FLIERS HELP ITALIANS, CLAIM 4 SHIPS

BY RICHARD MASSOCK

Rome, Jan. 11 (AP).—Four British warships have been hit in a new joint German-Italian aerial offensive which is proceeding in the Mediterranean, the Fascists announced today.

The "fraternal, close co-operation" of the Nazis was stressed in this first action for the Germans in the Mediterranean. The Italians gave these as the results of the attack in the Straits of Sicily:

An aircraft carrier hit by an Italian aerial torpedo; a cruiser struck by two heavy bombs from Italian dive bombers; a second aircraft carrier hit by heavy Italian bombs; one of these aircraft carriers hit also by both heavy and medium German bombs; a destroyer hit by the Germans.

Stefani, official Italian news agency, said the British warships were protecting a convoy.

The first of three clashes in the Mediterranean engagement, the Italians reported, took place 10 miles northeast of Linosa, an island near Malta and south of Sicily. The second engagement was reported 40 miles southeast of Pantelleria, south of Sicily, while the third bombardment was reported southwest of Malta.

The Italians claimed also to have bombed Malta.

(Italian casualties in Albania up to Dec. 21 were quoted by United Press as 2,081 killed, 6,515 wounded and 3,783 missing. Of the dead, 28 were Albanians, who also numbered 53 wounded and 108 missing.

(Naval casualties in December were listed as 119 killed, 82 wounded.

(Italian casualties in North Africa up to Dec. 31 totaled only 727 killed, wounded or missing, a communique said.)

Greeks Press Fleeing Italians Toward Berati

Seize More Prisoners and Materiel After Finding Klisura 'Pillaged, Burned'

ATHENS, Jan. 11 (AP).—Paced by low-flying Greek and British planes, reported to be bombing and machine-gunning the retreating Italians, the Greek captors of Klisura pressed onward toward Berati, Albania, today, according to dispatches from the front.

Important heights dominating the road to Berati, north of fallen Klisura, were reported occupied, with additional prisoners and war materials taken by the Greeks. A large number of loaded supply trucks was said to have been abandoned by the Italians. Others were put out of commission by Greek flyers.

Italian casualties in the Klisura sector, about thirty miles south of Berati, were reported heavy. The Athens radio said 400 Italian dead were found in the abandoned lines at one point, indicating desperate resistance while the Greeks were laying siege to the mountain highway town. Many Italian wounded had to be abandoned in the retreat, it was said, and these were cared for by Greek surgeons.

The Italian position at Tepelini, west of Klisura and one objective of the two-pronged Greek offensive based on that captured town, was reported, meanwhile, still strong but becoming more difficult.

In the coastal sector the Italians were making a stubborn defense. They have refrained from counter-attacking for the last few days, it was said. Bad weather over most of the front made operations difficult.

The British Royal Air Force reported that "enemy troops and motorized convoys, including tanks," were "in full retreat" from Klisura, which was occupied yesterday by Greek troops. British airmen, coordinating their attacks with those of the Greek air force, made successful attacks on this column yesterday despite the weather, an R. A. F. communique said.

One fork of the Klisura drive was directed northward toward the oil fields of Berati and the Port of Durazzo; the other pointed westward toward Tepelini and Valona.

Greek troops were reported to have advanced a few miles in the direction of Berati soon after the capture of the "deserted, pillaged and burned town of Klisura yesterday.

The Greek high command said 600 prisoners, including twenty officers, were taken in the occupation of Klisura, which is about thirty miles east of Valona and about half that distance east of Tepelini.

"One military flag, four guns, tanks, more mortars, automatic weapons and all kinds of material have fallen into our hands," a communique said.

The Italian forces which gave up Klisura were said to be in disorderly retreat, and some observers regarded the early fall of Tepeleni as practically a certainty, since its defense was said to hinge to considerable degree on Klisura.

Another Greek column has been striking at Valona along the Adriatic coast, but little word of its progress has been disclosed in the last few days.

A Greek spokesman said the Italian army in Albania was being reinforced steadily and was building new fortifications in an effort to halt Greek advances.

Albanians Battle Fascists.

Struga, Yugoslavia, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Reports here today said that eighty Albanians, captured by the Italians after revolting on the northern front, had been executed by a firing squad.

The revolt is said to have resulted in heavy fighting between the Albanians and the Italians after the natives had refused to continue forced labor on roads and fortifications.

Admits 12,377 Casualties.

Rome, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Italian casualties in the war against Greece from the start of hostilities on October 28 to December 31 were announced officially today to be 12,377 men, of which 2,081 were listed as killed, 6,515 wounded and 3,781 missing. These included fifty-eight Albanians killed, fifty-three wounded and 108 missing.

Italian authorities contrasted the figures with reported British estimates of 35,000 Italians wounded and Greek announcements that 14,000 prisoners had been captured.

PLANES COVER GREEKS' DRIVE ONTO BERATI

British Craft Reported Aiding Thrust North Of Captured Klisura

Mopping-up Operations Yield More Prisoners And War Materials

[By the Associated Press]

Athens, Sunday, Jan. 12—Mopping-up operations, in which the Greeks have captured about a hundred more Italians and additional quantities of war material, were reported by the high command today.

Although its communique mentioned only "restricted local cleaning-up operations," dispatches from the front reported progress yesterday from captured Klisura toward Berati under cover of low-flying Greek and British warplanes.

Heights dominating the road toward Berati, about thirty miles north of Klisura, were reported occupied with the capture of additional prisoners and materials, among which the communique listed ten 18-millimeter mortars, "many machine guns and automatic rifles."

Tepeleni Reported Weakening

An earlier Athens radio report had said the Greeks found 400 Italian dead in one part of the abandoned Klisura lines and that many wounded, abandoned in the retreat, were being cared for by Greek field surgeons.

Although no gains were reported elsewhere on the Albanian front, the Italian position at Tepeleni, another stronghold guarding a highway leading to the important port of Valona, was said to be weakening.

Views Fall Of Klisura From Post On Mountain

By J. WES GALLAGHER
Associated Press Correspondent

With the Greek Army on the Central Albanian Front, Jan. 9 (Delayed). Here on a misty mountain slope above Devil's Gap, leading into strategic Klisura lay the twisted, green-clad bodies of Italian infantrymen I saw die under a Greek bayonet charge today.

Their cairns were little mounds of bright red unexploded Italian hand grenades.

From nearby mountain posts I saw a two-day battle in which the stocky Greek mountain troops decimated two Italian divisions, captured a great number of prisoners and smashed Fascist communications between Klisura and Berati to the north.

Sweep Beyond Town

As this dispatch was written advance Greek units were sweeping through Devil's Gap into Klisura, and beyond the town other squads had "closed the circle" about the mountain objective.

The final smash against Klisura began yesterday morning with the Greeks sweeping down the mountain sides north of Klisura to pinch off Italian defenders there from their comrades defending Devil's Gap, the southern entrance to the town.

From an observation post 3,000 feet up I watched Greek columns fight their way down into the valley from even higher posts.

Couriers Bring News

The Italians, heavily entrenched, put up a fierce fight, aided by hundreds of mortars and automatic weapons, but at darkness couriers brought back news of the first day's success.

Two enemy aircraft were destroyed during last night's attack on Portsmouth, one by our night patrols and one by anti-aircraft gunfire.

A communiqué issued by the Air and Home Security Ministries:

There has been very little enemy air activity over this country today. Early this afternoon an enemy aircraft dropped bombs on a town in East Kent. Some houses were damaged and a small number of persons were killed.

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 11 (AP)—The British Middle East Command issued the following communiqué today:

On the Sudan and the Kenya Frontiers—Vigorous action by our patrols is continuing.

Italian casualties in Bardia in killed and captured amount to 2,041 officers and 42,827 men. In addition we captured or destroyed medium and heavy field guns, 368; heavy anti-aircraft guns, twenty-six; light guns, sixty-eight; medium tanks, thirteen; light tanks, 117, and transport vehicles, 708.

The high degree of unserviceability in the equipment and more especially in the mechanical transport resulted largely from our bombardment of Bardia, but it also shows complete lack of maintenance during and after the Italian rout from Sidi Barrani.

The R. A. F. issued the following communiqué:

During the night of Jan. 9-10 bombers of the R. A. F. raided enemy airdromes at Benina and Berka in Libya. At Benina the runway, hangars, buildings and dispersed aircraft were hit and explosions caused. A number of enemy aircraft were destroyed at Berka as a result of the bombing and considerable damage was done to the barracks, hangars and other airdrome buildings.

Our fighters maintained a constant patrol in the Tobruk-Derna area yesterday. No conclusive engagements were made with the enemy.

In Italian East Africa attacks were made on the Caproni workshops at Mai Adaga [in Eritrea]. Fires were started in the target area. At Asmara large numbers of bombs were observed to burst among buildings, causing heavy explosions, while in the Tashai-Tessenei area dive attacks were carried out on troop concentrations.

The airdrome at Iavello [in Ethiopia] was attacked on Jan. 9 by aircraft of the South African Air Force. A large number of bombs dropped on the target area, resulting in a fire which spread rapidly over the airdrome. Two aircraft were destroyed and others were undoubtedly damaged.

Numerous reconnaissance flights from which most valuable data were obtained were carried out.

From all these operations our aircraft returned safely.

ATHENS, Jan. 11 (AP)—The British Royal Air Force issued the following communiqué today:

Enemy troops and motorized convoys, including tanks, in full retreat from Klisura [in Albania], occupied yesterday by Greek troops, were successfully attacked, despite bad weather conditions, by many R. A. F. bombers.

North of Klisura and on the road to Berat our pilots bombed convoys in retreat and bombs were seen to explode on or in the vicinity of the targets.

All our aircraft returned safely.

Greek

ATHENS, Sunday, Jan. 12 (AP)—The Greek High Command issued this communiqué today:

There were restricted local cleaning-up operations yesterday [in Albania]. About 100 prisoners were taken and much war material has fallen into our hands, including ten mortars of 81 mm., many machine guns and automatic rifles.

The Ministry of Home Security communiqué:

No raids on Greece.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 11 (AP)—Today's Italian High Command communiqué:

Enemy naval formations were subjected to successive intense attacks by our detachments of torpedo-launching planes and dive-bombers in the Sicily Channel.

Two torpedo-launching planes, commanded by Captain Bernardini, with Naval Lieutenant Bassago as observer, and by Lieutenant Caponetti, hit an aircraft carrier with a torpedo.

A section of three dive-bombers commanded by Lieutenant Nalvezzi, Sergeant Mazzei and Sergeant Crespi hit a cruiser with two heavy bombs.

Another squadron of dive-bombers attacked and hit an aircraft carrier with heavy bombs.

Despite the most violent anti-aircraft reaction and repeated attacks by enemy fighter planes, all of our planes returned to their bases.

Simultaneously, for the first time, units of the German Air Corps, in fraternal, close cooperation with Italian air units, participated brilliantly in the attack on the same naval units, succeeding in hitting one of the aircraft carriers with heavy and medium bombs. They also hit a destroyer.

The port of Valletta, on Malta, was bombed early on the day of Jan. 11.

On the Greek front local actions continued in the sector of the Eleventh Army. Attempted enemy attacks in other sectors were repelled.

In Cyrenaica [in Libya] artillery actions took place in the Tobruk zone and near Jarabub.

One of our formations of assault and fighter planes attacked a formation of tanks and armored cars, destroying several. A Hurricane fighter plane was shot down in air combat.

Enemy air raids in the Tobruk and Bengazi zone caused some damage and nine deaths, including seven children, and injuries to four, all Mohammedans.

The crew of an English plane which was forced down was captured.

In the East Africa raid armed motor vehicles were repulsed on the Sudan front.

An enemy plane was shot down during an enemy air raid in Eritrea reported in the bulletin of Jan. 8.

Enemy planes flew over Palermo yesterday evening, dropping some bombs on the port without casualties, but with light damage to the docks. An enemy plane was shot down. Another enemy plane, of the Blenheim type, was shot down by our fighters in the Gulf of Naples.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 11 (AP)—Today's German High Command communiqué:

One submarine, of whose operation partial results have been previously reported, sank a total of 52,800 tons of shipping during a recent cruise. Thus the submarine, commanded by Commander Hans Gerret[illegible] Stockhausen, has destroyed a total of 101,530 tons of enemy merchant shipping space and also so severely damaged an armed enemy merchantman of 8,000 tons that its loss is certain.

The air force yesterday carried out armed reconnaissance and continued mining of English ports.

An attempt by enemy chasers and bombers to enter occupied French territory during the day was repelled by anti-aircraft and chasers before the enemy could score any success. Chasers downed two and anti-aircraft six enemy planes.

German airplane formations on Jan. 10 for the first time participated in a fight in the Mediterranean region. In this operation several hits were scored by them on two warship units, among which was an airplane carrier.

Last night strong plane units successfully attacked targets in Southern England. Bomb hits caused extensive fires, especially at Portsmouth. Six of our own planes failed to return from the flight against the enemy.

To Fly Serum To Greeks

New York, Jan. 11 (AP)—Serum for 25,000 anti-tetanus and 25,000 anti-gangrede injections will be flown by clipper to Lisbon Wednesday and sent from there to Athens, the Greek War Relief Association, Inc., announced today.

Portugal's African Colonies

[By the Associated Press]

Lisbon, Jan. 11—War has forced Portugal's African colonies to look around for new markets.

Because British maritime authorities are tight-fisted with navicerts, Angola's and Mozambique's warehouses are jammed with hundreds of thousands of tons of merchandise awaiting shipment.

At Lisbon docks, there are perhaps 150,000 tons of goods destined for the colonies—that cannot be moved until the British give the word.

In their search for new outlets, the Portuguese colonies have turned first to their neighbor, the Union of South Africa.

Jose de Almada, colonial adviser of the Foreign Office, is on his way to South Africa to try to negotiate a trade agreement for exchange of coffee, oil-bearing seeds, hardwoods, foodstuffs and other colonial products for the Union's industrial goods.

Cast Off By British

Such an arrangement worked well during the first World War. After the armistice, however, the Union denounced the pact, adhering to the British Empire's post-war policy of fostering imperial trade through advantages to the members of the commonwealth.

Portugal's colonies have always done most of their business with the motherland, shipping their raw materials here and getting back manufactured products.

In 1939, continental Portugal's imports from the colonies were valued at 252,948,942 escudos, 12.15 per cent. of all imports. The escudo is currently quoted at twenty-five to the dollar. Exports to them were worth 172,639,027 escudos, 12.89 per cent. of all exports.

Rich Angola, in West Africa, furnished the bulk of the goods shipped to the Continent, 140,802,786 escudos worth, while Mozambique was second with shipments valued at 74,205,377 escudos.

Spain Opens Negotiations

However, Mozambique was a better market for Portuguese products, buying 79,011,844 escudos' worth against Angola's 73,091,613.

Spain has opened negotiations for the importation of wood from the Portuguese colonies but here again it is up to the British.

A possibility exists also that the United States may ultimately absorb larger amounts of colonial produce. However, the fruits, seeds, coconuts and woods of the African possessions are largely competitive with Central and South American products, and Washington's policy of encouraging trade among the Americas hurts the Portuguese colonies' chances.

BULGAR LOSES HOPE

Politician Says Country Can Not Resist.

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—A member of the Government majority in Paliament declared in effect today in a newspaper article that Bulgaria must open her doors if requested to do so by a great Power. Presumably he was referring to speculation over German troop transit through Bulgaria to Greece and the Dardanelles.

Official circles, however, said that the author of the article, Deputy Christo Statev, wrote purely as a private citizen and they reiterated that Bulgaria's policy was one of consistently seeking peace.

Statev wrote that neither political idealism nor political manipulation "can prevent events when, with a bloody fist, they knock on closed doors. We must receive events with open eyes if we want to be realists and guard our own interests."

The German radio reported in a broadcast heard here today by the listening station of the National Broadcasting Company that a new Hungarian decree provides for construction of 1,200 air raid shelters at Budapest in the near future. Hungary is an avenue for troop movements from Germany into Rumania.

Deputy Asserts Bulgaria Must Yield to Force

Government Backer Says 'Realists' Will OpenDoor if 'Bloody Fist' Knocks

BY THOMAS HAWKINS

SOFIA, Jan. 11 (AP).—Apparently referring to the supposition that Germany soon may demand the privilege of sending troops through Bulgaria toward Greece and the Dardanelles, a member of the government majority in Parliament declared, in effect, today that Bulgaria must open her doors if asked by a great power to do so.

The Deputy, Christo Stateff, wrote in the newspaper "Gora": "Under present circumstances the policies and desires of all neutral states are entirely dependent upon the military and diplomatic moves of the great powers."

Neither political idealism nor political manipulation could "prevent events when, with a bloody fist, they knock upon closed doors," he added. "We must receive events with open eyes if we want to be realists and guard our own interests."

Official circles said the Deputy had written only as a private citizen; in general terms they restated the nation's policy as one consistently seeking peace. In what one informant interpreted as a reference to pro-British Turkey, Stateff asserted that if "the storms" came, Bulgaria was prepared—presumably meaning she would resist if attacked as a result of her attitude.

Some looked for a new statement of the government's position in a speech to be made tomorrow by Premier Bogdan Philoff.

The best available semi-official outline at the moment was that Bulgaria saw no probability of material developments in the near future, because of the icy condition of the Danube, but did not rule out the possibility of a German request for transit of troops through this country.

Swiss Sound Raid Alarms

Bern, Switzerland, Jan. 11 (AP)—Air-raid alarms which sounded just before dawn today in Bern, Frioourg and Lausanne were reported later to have been caused by one unidentified plane.

A high command communique said the plane crossed the Jura Mountain frontier from France, circled and returned without dropping any bombs.

Bern, Zurich and Lucern had alarms yesterday afternoon caused by the appearance of two foreign planes, described in a communique as German bombers, which apparently lost their way.

5 Air Alarms In Geneva

Geneva, Sunday, Jan. 12 (AP)—Five air-raid alarms in Geneva last night and early today set a record for any Swiss city in a single night as waves of unidentified planes were reported over the western tip of this neutral country.

The fifth alarm in Geneva sounded at 12.20 A. M. It lasted fifty minutes.

The planes were said to be passing toward Italy and back.

Reports reaching Bern said the northern Italian industrial city of Turin was being bombed.

This would indicate the planes were British.

French Bomb Warning

[By the Associated Press]

Hanoi, French Indo-China, Jan. 11—The reported threat of the Thailand (Siamese) Government to bomb three French Indo-China cities in current border warfare brought a warning from French officials today that if the cities are attacked French planes will bomb Bangkok, Thai capital.

Officials here announced that French flyers attacked Srazno and Prachimbury yesterday.

French troops also were said to have clashed with Thai forces in "spirited fighting" at three places on the north and west Cambodia fronts.

French Threaten to Bomb Bangkok as Indo-China Fights Advancing Army

BANGKOK, Jan. 11 (AP).—Thailand (Siamese) authorities enforced a strict blackout here and in numerous provincial cities tonight in Asia's undeclared "sideshow" war, as Thai and French Indo-China forces skirmished along the jungle land border between the two countries.

The Thai high command said its forces had crossed into Cambodia Province, French Indo-China, at several points and still were advancing. Gunfire rattled across the Mekong River frontier farther north.

Eleven Thai bombers attacked the Indo-China city of Siemreap, about 100 miles from Thai's order in Cambodia, and shot d n three French pursuit planes, the high command said.

[At Hanoi, the capital of French Indo-China, officials announced their flyers had attacked Srazno and Prachimbury yesterday, and warned that they might, bomb Bangkok should Thai forces carry out a reported intention to bomb a number of Indo-China centers.]

Japan Urged To Aid Axis

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 11—The Domei (Japanese) radio today broadcast a letter to the Tokyo newspaper Nichi Nichi, quoting Lieutenant General Horinouchi as saying:

"Japan should come to the assistance of her ally, Germany, with the same enthusiasm and to the same extent as the United States is going to the assistance of England."

While the United States is helping Britain far more than if she actually were participating in the war, Horinouchi said, relations between Japan and Germany appeared to be limited to an exchange of New Year's telegrams.

He suggested the dispatch to Europe of a "corps of young Japanese volunteers" to contribute to an Axis victory.

ALASKA ROUTE BASES MAPPED

BY WADE WERNER

Ottawa, Jan. 11 (AP).—Construction of a series of air bases between the United States border and Alaska for American pursuit planes is planned by the Canadian Government, it was reported today.

The bases will be built by Canada, it was said, but will be available for the use of United States military planes.

A commercial route to Alaska already is being flown Winter and Summer, but military pursuit planes of short range need better facilities to insure adequate landing spaces and radio guidance.

The new bases, it was understood, also will be able to accommodate the biggest bombers.

A radio beam, it was said, will be installed over the route. Then, American short-range pursuit ships—vital to Alaskan air defense—will be able to fly from Selfridge Field, Michigan, for instance, to Fairbanks and other Alaskan bases without losing radio guidance.

Canada Plans U. S.-Alaska Link With Chain of All-Year Air Bases

Dominion Project, Extending From Edmonton to Northwest, Will Provide Safe Winter Route for American Pursuit Ships and Bombers

By The Associated Press

OTTAWA, Jan. 11.—A plan to construct a series of air bases between the United States border and Alaska will be announced soon by the Canadian government, it was reported reliably today.

The bases will be built by Canada, but will be available for use by American military planes flying to or from the United States and Alaska, in line with the principles of joint Canada-United States defense.

The project will provide the United States with a safe year-round airway to Alaska for fast pursuit planes—not only singly but in large squadrons. A commercial route already is being flown winter and summer, but pursuit planes have a shorter range, and thus better facilities are needed to insure adequate landing space and radio guidance for squadrons flying in short jumps. The new bases will be equipped to handle the largest bombers, which can fly far, but need longer runways when they land.

The commercial line operates two or three times weekly from Edmonton to Grand Prairie to Fort Nelson and thence to Whitehorse by way of Watson Lake and Teslin. From Whitehorse a spur connects at Juneau with Pan-American Airways which, however, suspends operations in winter. From Whitehorse the line runs to Dawson and thence to Fairbanks.

Ships already can fly a radio beam to Edmonton, and it is understood that beams will be installed over the whole route. Small, short-range pursuit ships thus would be able to fly from Selfridge Field, Michigan, for instance, on a radio beam the whole way to Alaskan bases. The route is feasible in summer for seaplanes, because of numerous lakes.

TRIO TO WRITE BASE LEASES

President Names Men to Go to London.

Washington, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—The State Department announced today that a delegation of American officials would leave for London on January 17 to work out formal leases for American naval and air bases traded by Great Britain for destroyers.

The announcement said:

"The President has designated the following American officials to proceed to London to work out the technical details of the formal leases in connection with the military bases of the United States in Newfoundland, Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica, St. Lucia, Trinidad, Antigua, and British Guiana agreed upon in exchange of notes between the governments of the United States and Great Britain under date of September 2, 1940:

"Charles Fahy, Assistant Solicitor-General; Col. Harry J. Malony, Field Artillery, United States Army; Commander Harold Biesemeier, United States Navy."

It added that they would go to Lisbon via clipper plane from New York.

A board of experts has recommended sites for the bases, leased for ninety-nine years, and the State Department and the British embassy have been working out the details.

The Work Goes On.

Pending signing of the formal leases the British Government will permit work to proceed, officials said, to avoid delay.

Construction work has started on the Newfoundland bases, and engineering and survey parties are working on other sites with a view to starting construction at an early date.

Secretary Hull told his press conference today that it was not true that the British Government had charged the United States for the land involved. He also denied that the British Government was charging duties on American materials to construct the bases, and termed untrue reports that the United States would have to pay taxes on the base sites.

Other officials said that the agreement provided that all bases would be leased for ninety-nine years free rent and charges other than compensation to owners of private property who suffer losses.

Swope Lauds Naval Bases

Harrisburg, Jan. 11 (AP)—Guy J. Swope, President Roosevelt's nominee for Governor of Puerto Rico, says that after the United States has finished its Caribbean defenses "a mosquito won't even be able to navigate in one piece."

Swope, former United States Representative from Pennsylvania, who is present Auditor General of the island, came here for a visit at his home.

He added that "I am not at liberty at this time, for obvious reasons, to give any details" about the defense work.

Work Already Under Way

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11—With an indication that agreement had been reached with Great Britain on the eight United States base sites, State Department officials said today that actual construction work already had been started on the Newfoundland base and that survey and preliminary engineering work had been completed or was in progress at Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Trinidad, St. Lucia, Antigua and British Guiana.

To speed up the construction the British Government granted permission for work to go forward although formal leases had not been signed.

U. S. and Britain Agree On Sites for 8 Bases

Hull Reveals Accord and Sending of Mission to London to Sign Leases

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP).—Secretary Hull tonight announced that agreement had been reached by the United States and Great Britain on sites for eight American air and naval bases to be constructed on British possessions in the Western Hemisphere.

Formal 99-year, rent-free leases will be signed, officials added, as soon as an American mission composed of Charles Fahy, Assistant Solicitor General; Col. Harry J. Malony, U. S. Army, and Commander Harold Biesemeier, U. S. Navy, work out technical details with British officials. They will go to London via Lisbon on the Clipper leaving January 17.

DELAY AT TRINIDAD.

The principal delay in reaching agreement on the sites resulted from study of several possible bases at Trinidad.

Trinidad officials proposed reclamation of 25 square miles of marsh land, which was found unacceptable for the American military and naval experts.

The State Department announcement included a statemen by the [illegible]vernor of Trinidad explaining the reclamation proposal, but accepting the American choice of sites.

CITE SACRIFICES.

"In doing so they (the British and Trinidad Governments) have pointed out," the Governor's statement said, "that their decision involves certain sacrifices on the part of the people of Trinidad and have expressed the hope that the United States authorities will do all they can to minimize any disturbance in the normal life of the community which the establishment of the bases may cause. The United States Government have readily given this assurance."

In return for leases on the eight bases, the United States already has turned 50 World War destroyers over to Britain.

Aid-Loan Methods

JAN 12 1941

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 11—Specific methods by which the Administration would extend aid to Britain under the proposed lease-lend bill began to take shape today even as Congressional critics called for restriction of the vast power which the measure would confer upon President Roosevelt.

Correlated Production Aim

Senator James F. Byrnes (Dem., S. C.), who participated in preliminary conferences on the legislation that was introduced in Congress yesterday, said it was likely that, if approved, the program would be put into operation by the President chiefly through the new Office of Production Management.

This, it was said, would make for complete correlation from start to finish between production for American use and for British use. The office, headed by William S. Knudsen and Sidney Hillman with Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson and Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox as members, already has been given full responsibility for American production by the President.

In addition, other sources said that agencies such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might be called upon to handle some phases of the program.

Survey Seen Needed

The first necessity for making the program effective, Byrnes said, is a survey to determine exactly what kind and quantities of equipment can be supplied to the British. He predicted that the chief items would be airplanes, destroyers and cargo ships.

At the Capitol, with both Senate and House in recess, Administration leaders laid plans for getting quick action on the aid bill which, besides authorizing the loan and lease of war equipment on any terms the President may fix, would permit the communication of "defense information" to warring democracies and allow the repair of British warships and planes in American shipyards and factories.

Collateral Sought

Meanwhile, highly placed Federal officials said that the British Government might be asked to put up about $2,000,000,000 of British assets in the United States as collateral for war materiels President Roosevelt proposes to "lend" Britain.

These authorities, who declined to be quoted by name, reported that the plan was being considered "earnestly" to supplement a proposal by large New York investment trusts to purchase about $600,000,000 of British investments in this country. One said this phase of the deal might "come to a head in a few days."

Roosevelt Okay Hinted

Whatever is left, if this deal goes through, will be American real estate and British-owned companies or subsidiaries operating here. These represent the largest proportion of British holdings in this country and are understood to exceed $2,000,000,000 in value. Under the plan being considered, these would be placed in escrow.

The officials indicated that this procedure had at least tentative approval in administration quarters and did not conflict with President Roosevelt's recent statement that it would be silly to measure British aid in terms of dollars.

Private British Property

It was also said, however, that he took the view that some program for lending materiels was necessary, first, because available assets would not pay for all needs, and, second, because many of the assets would be difficult to convert into cash as speedily as would be necessary.

Nearly all of the British investments once were owned by individual British investors or companies. Most of them have been sequestered and taken over by the British Government.

Opposition Developing

In several quarters, however, opposition was developing to the aid lease bill. One group of opponents including Senators Hiram W. Johnson (Rep., Cal.), Burton K. Wheeler (Dem., Mont.) and Bennett C. Clark (Dem., Mo.) discussed the bill at an informal conference last night. They were expected to try to defeat the bill and failing that, to propose numerous restrictive amendments.

Senator Warren R. Austin (Vt.), the acting Republican leader of the Senate, said he was in sympathy with basic Administration foreign policy but believed there should be some check on the President's powers. He said life of the legislation should be limited to two years and the army's chief of staff and the navy's chief of operations should be required to certify the desirability of shipping military equipment abroad.

Fight Over Jurisdiction

The House was expected to act first on the measure, and Chairman Sol Bloom (Dem., N. Y.) called his Foreign Affairs Committee to consider it Monday. Bloom said he hoped to complete hearings by Thursday. However, Chairman Andrew J. May (Dem., Ky.) of the Military Committee, contended that the bill was "a national defense measure and should go to our committee."

Bloom's committee met today, and afterward he announced that it had authorized him to move in the House Monday that the measure be transferred from the Foreign Affairs Committee to his group.

In the Senate, the bill was sent to the Foreign Relations Committee, which Chairman Walter F. George (Dem., Ga.) said would decide on procedure Wednesday. George said one provision might need revision to make it completely clear that the President could not give away any war material. The measure now pro-introduced in Congress yesterday, said it was likely that, if approved, the program would be put into operation by the President chiefly through the new Office of Production Management.

This, it was said, would make for complete correlation from start to finish between production for American use and for British use. The office, headed by William S. Knudsen and Sidney Hillman with Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson and Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox as members, already has been given full responsibility for American production by the President.

In addition, other sources said that agencies such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might be called upon to handle some phases of the

JAN 12 1941

Even Some Supporters of Bill Demand Amendments as Strong Fight On 'All Out' Measure Looms In Upper House Action

FOES RALLIED BY WHEELER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP). — A poll indicated today that the Administration could count on a majority of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to support its legislation giving President Roosevelt broad powers to send war supplies to nations resisting "aggression."

Eight committee members said they were for the measure; four declared against it; four said they had not made up their minds, and five were either unavailable or made no statement.

In addition, it was indicated that the Administration would receive the votes of at least three of those now uncommitted, making a total of 13 of 21 members for the measure.

HOUSE TO ACT FIRST.

The House will act first on the legislation, and on meeting Monday will have to settle a dispute over which of its committees should handle it.

The Military Committee decided, 15 to 4, today to demand control of the measure, which already had been assigned to the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Chairman Bloom (D-NY) of the latter group said there was "no doubt" that his committee [illegible] had received the bill.

[illegible] leaders expressed confi[illegible] bill would remain with [illegible] committee, and the latter called his group to meet Monday to begin consideration of it.

Bloom said that Secretary Hull probably would be the first witness and that Secretaries Morgenthau, Stimson and Knox would be heard.

Speaker Rayburn told reporters there was not a "particle of doubt" that the House would approve the legislation.

SENATE FIGHT LOOMS

A strong fight was in the making on the Senate side, however, and a group led by Senator Wheeler (D-Mont.) began organizing to oppose the bill. A meeting of opponents was scheduled tentatively for next Wednesday.

Even among some supporters of the measure there was talk of restrictive amendments. Chairman George (D.-Ga.) of the Foreign Relations Committee predicted that it would be amended to require that nations receiving war materials post nominal security for future payments.

"If we could acquire some interest in the tin and rubber business of the British," he said, "it wouldn't be a bad deal for us."

Senate Poll Divided on War Aid

SENATOR MURRAY (D.-MONT.): "I favor the measure generally. I am willing to fight this war to the last Englishman, because I feel that the defense of Great Britain is important to our future security."

AGAINST THE BILL

SENATOR CLARK (D.-MO.): "It is simply a bill authorizing the President to declare war."

HARD FIGHT SEEN.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (By International News Service).—A survey by International News Service disclosed that approval of the "all out" aid to Britain program will come after a terrific battle.

The fight will be centered largely in the Senate, where anti-interventionists marshalled their militant forces to make the issues of "dictatorship," "undeclared war," and the "end of Democracy" to the country in a radio campaign.

The fight will be along non-partisan lines. Eastern Seaboard Republicans, with few exceptions, favor "utmost effort" to aid the British, Chinese and Greeks in their wars against Axis powers, while the anti-intervention bloc is composed largely of Mid-Western Democrats and Republicans.

ROOSEVELT WAITS.

Strategy of the Administration in calling for virtual dictatorial powers for the President to handle the program, estimated to cost between five and ten billion dollars, was learned to be that the President will accept and sign any "arsenal for the democracies" legislation, Congress sends to him, whether it limits his authority or not.

Drastic revision of the bill to limit powers conferred on the President to two years was projected by Democratic and Republican Congressmen.

Senators Austin (R.-Vt.), acting minority leader, and Bridges (R.-N. H.), both endorsing the British aid program, favored the two-year limit on Presidential authority, which is approved by the anti-interventionist bloc headed by Senator Wheeler (D.-Mont.).

Senator Austin said he would oppose the provision in the bill eliminating the Munitions Control Board and the repeal of the 1917 Espionage Act to permit transfer of American warships to the British.

"I favor," Austin said, however, "repair of British warships in American navy yards."

"What if this means war?" he was asked.

"What of it?" he retorted. "The conquered nations did not commit acts of war and the ruthless conquerors ignored their innocence. The time has passed to give such considerations any credence whatever."

OUTRIGHT GIFTS.

Bridges said he favored giving war supplies outright to the British, saying, "the United States is not going to get anything back anyway."

Senator Vandenberg (R.-Mich.), a member of the no-war bloc, refused to comment on the aid bill, but said with emphasis, "I'll have plenty to say about it on the floor."

Senator Wheeler announced he would go on the radio tomorrow night to denounce the measure as leading the nation into war.

Asserting the lease-lend proposal means "dictatorship" and "is a monstrosity" comparable to "Hitler's demands for complete dictatorial power from the Reichstag," Rep. Fish of New York, ranking Republican on the Foreign Affairs Committee, declared:

"Unless it is drastically amended, the bill will give the President the power to abrogate any existing law, not only including the Johnson and Neutrality Acts, but any law relating to either foreign or domestic problems.

"Under the specious guise of aiding democracies abroad, it is a complete and total abrogation of democracy at home."

Fish warned a radio audience that "if this bill passes in its present form the Congress might as well dissolve, as it would give the President full and complete control over the destinies of our people" and would be a "complete blackout of our free institutions, representative government and our American system of free enterprise."

TINKHAM FIGHTS.

a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, declared, "This bill gives President Roosevelt the dictatorship power he has sought ever since he was first elected to Rep. Tinkham (R.-Mass.), also the White House and I am going to fight, not British aid, but for the survival of our Government."

ROOSEVELT IS SAID TO BE SURE OF BILL

Described as Confident He Will Get Arms Power.

JAN 12 1941

Hyde Park, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—President Roosevelt was described by aids today as confident that Congress would grant him the unprecedented powers proposed in an administration bill to authorize the lending or leasing of billions in war equipment to Great Britain and other democracies.

Mr. Roosevelt rested at his home, apparently relying on the word of Democratic congressional leaders that the legislation would be approved. Asked whether the President was confident that the legislators eventually would enact the bill, one White House official replied: "Oh, certainly."

There was speculation in some quarters that the measure was framed broadly enough to allow room for compromise and smooth the way for acceptance of its primary features.

Mr. Roosevelt talked with Washington officials over his direct telephone line during the day. He looked over the library in which his private and official papers will be deposited, and explained its features to his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John Boettiger of Seattle, Wash. They had not seen the gray, fieldstone structure before. Later, the President took a long drive over Dutchess county's back roads.

LANDON SEES WAR BEING IMPORTED

Says Roosevelt Is Jumping Over the Ocean.

JAN 12 1941

Tulsa, Okla., Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Alf M. Landon said in an interview today that administration plans to allow repairing and outfitting of British warships in United States ports would import the war into America.

The 1936 Republican nominee for President came here to address a banquet. His talk will be broadcast on the NBC Blue network starting at 7:30 P. M., New York time.

He said that he had made a preliminary study of the administration's lend-lease-sale plan and had concluded that President Roosevelt was "jumping over the ocean."

"In such a provision," Mr. Landon said, "he's removing our only natural barrier of defense. He's certainly bringing the war close to home. Step by step, he's working us into war."

He said that the proposal was unusual "coming from a man who sixty days ago was promising peace," and added that the broad powers sought in the bill would result in a national dictatorship.

ROOSEVELT SEEKS WAR, SAYS LANDON

Asserts His Message Means U. S. Must Fight To Make Good His Word

JAN 12 1941

G. O. P. Leader Finds Attitude Taken During Campaign Has Changed

[By the Associated Press]

Tulsa, Jan. 11—Alf M. Landon said tonight President Roosevelt "committed himself to a war policy" in his message to Congress by urging full support of peoples resisting aggression.

"If this policy is to prevail, we must fight, if need be, in order to make the President's word good," the 1936 Presidential nominee asserted in a speech prepared for the Alexander Hamilton Club's annual dinner.

"What then becomes of his pledge not to send an armed expeditionary force to Europe?

"Here is a new and entirely different interpretation of national foreign policy than he stressed during his preelection campaign.

Attitude Changed

"Then he advocated 'all aid to Britain, short of war.' Now he says we do not intend to let the dictators win.

"Instead of 'aid short of war' the President further committted himself to a war policy by urging 'full support of all those resolute people, everywhere, who are resisting aggression.'"

Landon said that those desiring "all aid to England short of war ould specifically say: 'No convoying. No American ships in war zones.'

"This is a vital issue, because the minute an American ship is sunk, and the American flag is fired upon, and Americans are killed, we are in the war, with men."

Urges Subsidies To Britain

At the outset, Landon said that "for the first time in some years, what I have to say commits no one but myself."

"Early in December," he recalled, "I advocated subsidies to Great Britain. I said we were thinking and acting too softly; that practically everyone wanted the Government to help Grent Britain.

"In a nutshell, that was what the President said three weeks later in his fireside chat. The President also proposed a subsidy but camouflaged it as a lend and lease program, with the slick scheme in mind of fooling the American taxpayers into believing that we would get the unused materials or our money back."

Like Indorsing Blank Note

Landon asserted the "lend and lease program" was like "indorsing a blank note for a friend. We never know how much it is going to cost. And when."

By giving subsidies to Britain, he added, "we will know at all times exactly to a penny how much it is costing. We can stop it whenever we want to. . . . It runs no risk of involving us in war."

He said the American people "have a great and very real interest in English success, but to say our national security rests on her victory is a misstatement.

"Even if England wins this war, and the President assures us she will, we are bound to suffer great economic and social disturbances for many years to come.

"If Hitler wins, it will be a new and terrible era for a time, and we will suffer still greater economic and political disturbances for many years.

Free Labor Will Win In End

"But in the end free labor will always whip forced labor, and without going to war to do it.

"But if we get into this war with fighting forces, when the end comes, we will suffer the greatest economic, social and political disturbances."

Landon said that Republicans, "as the opposition party," have the responsibility of planning for the post-war period.

"But we have immediate jobs ahead of us. The United States is facing a decision: whether we in the Western Hemisphere shall try to preserve intact here in the New World the democratic principle of Government, or whether we shall become, forever and a day, a party to Old World power politics. . . .

"I believe our way of life may be made easier if England wins. But the all-important determination for us is to make ourselves strong enough to preserve that way of life, no matter who wins the war."

Oil Industry Seizure Charged

Landon also charged that the President was "maneuvering behind the screen of national defense to seize control of the oil industry."

"Where is there the slightest foundation for his statement of last week of the 'urgent need' of Federal control?" Landon asked.

The Kansas oil man and 1936 Republican Presidential nominee said he supported the Federal oil-control bill when it was first proposed by the Administration eight years ago.

Later, he added, he supported the Interstate Oil Compact Commission, an independent body of oil State representatives seeking to conserve the nation's oil supplies without Federal supervision.

The commission, Landon asserted, "has grown stronger with the years" and the States have learned how to handle the conservation problem, thus ending the "urgent need" for Federal legislation.

Nye Says 35 Senators Would Vote for War

Washington, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Senator Nye, Republican, of North Dakota, declared today that there now are between thirty and thirty-five Senators ready to vote for a declaration of war if the President asks it. Senator Nye said this sentiment resulted "from the short steps toward war which the administration has been taking for a number of months."

He added that "unless the public makes its sentiment known, the administration may be able to increase the number of Senators who would be willing to go to war."

ENGLAND'S VICTORY CHANCE HELD 55-45

Gen. Strong, Seventh Corps Area, Shifts Odds From 70-30 On Nazis In June

JAN 12 1941

His "Personal And Private Opinion" Given After Serving As Observer

[By the Associated Press]

Omaha, Jan. 11—Brig. Gen. George V. Strong, former chief of the general staff's War Plans Division, offered his "personal and private opinion" today that on January 1 England stood a 55-45 chance to win the war with Germany.

General Strong, now commander of the Seventh Corps Area, with headquarters here, explained in an interview that his odds were 70-30 on Germany last June 1, but by September 1 they had dropped to 55-45, still on Germany. Then they switched and England became his favorite.

He was in England as an American observer for several months last fall.

Says Nazi Oil Is Short

He predicted that a balance of military factors shifting toward the British, plus a possible critical shortage of German oil and gasoline supplies, will cause Germany to try desperately for a knockout by summer.

The most serious menace to England, General Strong said, is Germany's counter-blockade and the sinking of British ships by submarines, surface raiders and planes.

He said any invasion of England would be a desperation move and added there was no reason to believe rumors that an invasion had been started last fall and turned back.

BRITAIN MAY GIVE 2 BILLION ASSETS FOR COLLATERAL

Washington Likely to Ask Securities Here for Loan of Munitions.

JAN 12 1941

Washington, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Federal officials said today that the British Government might be asked to put up about $2,000,000,000 of British assets in the United States as collateral for war materials President Roosevelt has proposed to lend to Great Britain.

These authorities reported that the plan was being considered earnestly to supplement a proposal by large New York investment trusts to purchase approximately $600,000,000 of British investments in this country. One said this phase of the deal might come to a head in a few days.

The investment trusts were reported to be interested chiefly in buying British-owned stocks and bonds of American corporations.

Whatever is left, if this deal goes through, will be American real estate and British-owned companies or subsidiaries operating here. These represent the largest proportion of British holdings in this country and are understood to exceed $2,000,000,000 in value. According to the plan under consideration, these would be placed in escrow with a Government corporation, as collateral for the war material.

The officials indicated that this procedure had at least tentative approval in administration quarters and did not conflict with President Roosevelt's recent statement that it would be silly to measure British aid in terms of dollars.

The President was reported to have told various persons that the British should dig into their barrel of financial assets in order to justify the material loans he proposed. He was described as believing that it would be unfair for the British to own billions of wealth in this country yet plead inability to pay for war materials.

It was also said, however, that he took the view that some program for lending materials was necessary, first because available assets would not pay for all needs, and second because many of the assets would be difficult to convert into cash as speedily as would be necessary.

Could Be Liquidated Gradually.

Presumably, informed persons said, the slow assets that might be put up as collateral for munitions eventually would become American property and be liquidated gradually.

The British investments nearly all represented what individual British investors or companies once owned. Most of them have been sequestered and taken over by the British Government.

The investments sought by the American investment trusts are all well-known stocks and bonds listed on the New York Stock and Curb exchanges. But the other assets range all the way from ownership of large industries in this country to title to thousands of acres of Texas range land.

The Treasury and the Securities Commission were reported to be consulting with the investment trusts, who have been represented by Cyril Quinn of New York, described by officials as an officer of Tri-Continental Corporation.

U. S. May Hold British Assets For Collateral

Investment Trusts Seeking 600Million inSecurities; 2 Billion Would Be Left

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP).—Highly-placed Federal officials said today that the British government might be asked to put up about $2,000,000,000 of British assets in the United States as collateral for war materials President Roosevelt has proposed to lend to Britain.

These authorities, who declined to be quoted by name, reported that the plan was being considered "earnestly" to supplement a proposal by large New York investment trusts to purchase $600,000,000 of British investments in this country. Fire On British Vessel Is Listed As Accidental

Flame On Black Heron Which Ruined War-Relief Material Due To Riveters

New York, Jan. 11 (AP)—After a lengthy inquiry, Thomas P. Brophy, Chief Fire Marshal, today officially listed as an accident a fire which did $150,000 damage to war relief material aboard the British freighter Black Heron.

He said it was "definitely established" that last night's fire was started when welders accidentally burned a hole through a steel deckplate, igniting cargo below.

Red Cross war relief supplies and supplies from the British War Relief Society were damaged but officials said it was believed some could be salvaged.

Three airplanes lashed to the deck were undamaged.

Atlantan to Give Yacht to 'Bundles'

Could Seize Ships, Experts Believe

Aid Bill Seen Giving Power to President Over 266 Craft

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP).—A study of the administration's British aid bill led some legislators to the conclusion today that it would empower President Roosevelt to seize foreign merchant ships in American ports and turn them over to Britain, if he desired.

There were 266 such vessels—refugees from the war—tied up in American ports on Jan. 1.

Most Congress members took the view that the extent of power proposed for President Roosevelt was a delicate question of law, but Chairman May (D.-Ky.) of the House Military Committee told newsmen the Administration's bill would "without question" confer power on the President to take over the ships if they were needed by any government whose defense he deemed vital to the defense of United States.

Plane Builders And Auto Plants In Partnership

General Motors, Ford and Chrysler to Make Parts for Aircraft Companies

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 11 (AP).—A national defense production partnership between some of the major automobile and airplane manufacturing plants took shape today.

Dr. George Mead, aircraft production head of the National Defense Advisory Commission, said in an interview that it was the commission's intention to have the three large automotive corporations, Ford, General Motors and Chrysler, make assemblies for 1,200 planes each—a total of 3,600.

Ford, he said, would manufacture parts for heavy bombardment craft—four-engined bombers to be assembled at a new Consolidated Aircraft Corporation plant at Forth Worth, Tex., and a new Douglas plant at Tulsa, Okla. Consolidated's planes are being built at San Diego and Douglas's at Santa Monica.

"Chrysler will build parts for Glenn L. Martin's B-26 medium bomber," he added, "and General Motors will do the same for North American Aviation's similar B-25 medium bomber. They'll be assembled at Mid-Western and Southwestern plants."

Martin ships are produced at Baltimore, and North American has its plant at Inglewood, Calif.

Dr. Mead said the commission recently perceived "that the demand for military planes would be so great in the future that we must find entirely new means of acquiring them—and we know we've found the solution in these three great automotive corporations." He added that Congress would appropriate money for the 3,600 planes, the smallest of which will cost $100,000.

Edsel Ford, who has been surveying aircraft production facilities here this week, said "the chances of our meeting the demand for 1,200 bombers look excellent," but said he would have to await a report of his engineering staff before making a definite commitment. He and his two sons, Henry 2d and Benson, and his production manager, Charles Sorenson, plan to return to Detroit tomorrow.

Donald Douglas, head of the Douglas company, also said the arrangements were indefinite but "we have told the Army and the Defense Commission that we are ready to undertake any additional task for national defense any time the government assigns it to us."

At Detroit, K. T. Keller, Chrysler president, said his company, the Martin company and the Defense Commission had reached a tentative agreement on the production plan.

Meanwhile Walter A. Hamilton, Douglas company's chief of materiel, announced the signing of sub-contracts for production of airplane sub-assemblies with the Murray Corporation of America and Briggs Manufacturing Company, both of Detroit; Fleetwings, Inc., of Bristol, Pa., and McDonnell Aircraft Corporation, of Robertson, Mo. Mr. Hamilton said the largest of the orders exceeded $30,000,000, while the total probably would exceed $100,000,000.

The Eastern plants are to manufacture wing sections, tail groups, landing gear, engine nacelles and other major units to be assembled into completed airplanes at the new Douglas factory under construction at Long Beach, Calif. The Fisher Body division of General Motors already is producing jigs, fixtures and other tooling for the new plant.

Mr. Hamilton said Transcontinental "shuttle trains" would operate between the Eastern factories and the Long Beach plan on the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and Sante Fe and their connecting railway systems. They will use 150 or more cars especially equipped for carrying airplane sub-assemblies.

Hudson to Build Ordnance

DETROIT, Jan. 11 (AP).—The Hudson Motor Car Company announced today it had contracted with the United States Navy to build and operate a $13,000,000 ordnance plant near Detroit.

A 114-acre tract of land already has been purchased by the Navy Department, and construction work, under supervision of Hudson engineers, will begin immediately, the announcement said.

Stockholders of the company, at a special meeting today, voted to amend the company charter to permit fuller co-operation in defense work. Informed sources said Hudson is negotiating at present with aircraft and engine companies for subcontract work.

CHRYSLER TO MAKE PARTS OF BOMBERS

Agrees to Manufacture for Martin B-26 Planes.

Detroit, Jan. 11 (A. P.).—Plans of the National Defense Commission for speeding up volume production of bomber types of aircraft moved a step nearer realization today with Chrysler Corporation tentatively agreeing to produce parts and sub-assemblies for the Martin B-26 medium bomber.

Earlier this week, Edsel Ford, president of the Ford Motor Company, said in San Diego, Cal., that his company would undertake, if possible, to manufacture such parts and sub-assemblies for the Douglas and Consolidated Aircraft bombers.

The announcements are in line with a proposal laid before the automobile manufacturers last October by William S. Knudsen, in charge of the production phase of the National Defense Program. Mr. Knudsen asked the car makers to ascertain what plane parts they could manufacture on a volume basis.

At the time Mr. Knudsen said that contracts would be awarded this spring for 12,000 huge bombers. The number later was increased to 24,000.

Recent discussion of the plan in automotive circles had Chrysler planning to co-operate with the Martin Company; Ford with Douglas and Consolidated, and General Motors undertaking to produce parts and sub-assemblies for North American Aviation bombers.

ROBOT PLANE WORKS, ARMY TESTERS FIND

Can Be Directed by Radio From the Air or the Ground

By The Associated Press.

DETROIT, Jan. 11—Robot planes, controlled by radio from another airplane or from the ground, are being tested by the Army Air Corps at Selfridge Field, headquarters of the Sixth Pursuit Wing Squadron.

Long talked of as an eventual force in aviation, radio control is already being used successfully on an everyday basis in flights from the Army airfield.

Four ships equipped for robot flight are stationed at the field now and more are expected to arrive from the Texas base where they were developed.

The planes in use are rebuilt BT-2 training biplanes, long obsolete for active Air Corps service. Originally two-place ships, they have been converted into single-seaters and carry the intricate radio-receiving apparatus in the fuselage behind the pilot's cockpit. A tricycle landing gear has been added to simplify landings and take-offs.

For test purposes a "safety" pilot is carried in the robot plane during flight. A flip of a switch permits him to take manual control.

Sending apparatus installed in the observer's cockpit of an observation plane, or in a truck on the ground, enables a pilot to manoeuvre the robot plane from a distance. Practically speaking, he can control the robot plane as long as it remains within sight.

Before him the control pilot has a wheel resembling that of a transport or bombing plane. Movements of the wheel corresponding to those used in normal flight control the radio impulses which activate the receiving unit directing the plane.

Rudder movements also are controlled by the wheel, instead of by foot pedals as in the conventional plane. Thus in a single movement of the control wheel the distant plane can be banked and turned. Coordination of the aileron and rudder control into a single unit limits manoeuvrability to the extent that most acrobatic manoeuvres become impossible.

Pilots who have operated the controls say the ship responds normally to the wheel, but that the greatest difficulty lies in the fact that they cannot "feel" the plane's response. The sensitive touch developed by an experienced pilot is of little use when he is sitting in one plane in flight and controlling another at a distance.

The uses to which robot planes may be put remain a military secret, if any specific uses have as yet been decided upon. A popular conjecture is that the ships may be used for practice in aerial gunnery or anti-aircraft fire.

Chilean Nitrate of Soda Bought for U. S. Defense

300,000 Short Tons Ordered for $5,400,000

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP).—Jesse Jones announced today the Defense Supplies Corporation had contracted with the Chilean Nitrate and Iodine Sales Corporation, of Santiago, for 300,000 short tons of nitrate of soda, defined as a strategic material by the Army and Navy Munitions Board.

The Federal Loan Administration said the price would be $18 a ton, which would make the total cost around $5,400,000. Delivery at the Chilean ports of Iquique, Tocopilla and Antofagasta must be made before June 30.

Of the total, 100,000 tons will be shipped directly to the United States for storage, and the balance will be stored temporarily in Chile.

Mr. Jones added that the Chilean company would pay the Chilean government $10 a ton of the purchase price in United States currency, in addition to 25 per cent of its profit on the deal, as required by a Chilean law.

U. S. Allots $10,000,000 For Gas-Attack Defense

Army Discloses Contracts for Charcoal and Chemicals

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP).—War Department plans for extensive defense preparations against poison-gas attacks were disclosed today with an announcement that contracts for gas-mask charcoal and other chemicals used in gas defensive appliances amount to $10,000,000.

Some of the contracts have already been concluded, the department said, and negotiations are proceeding on the others.

More than half of the total will cover the cost of building plants which will be owned by the government, although constructed by the firms concerned on a cost-plus-fixed-fee basis. The companies which will operate such plants are the Monsanto Chemical Company, of St. Louis, at a new plant to be constructed at East St. Louis, Ill.; the Dow Chemical Company, of Midland, Mich., and E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Other firms with whom the chemical warfare service is negotiating contracts are National Carbon Company, of New York; Barnaby-Cheney Engineering Company, of Columbus, Ohio; Atlas Carbon and Clay Company, of Glendale, Calif.; Carlisle Lumber Company, of Seattle; Dewey & Almy Chemical Company, of Cambridge, Mass., and Carbide and Carbon Chemical Corporation, of New York.

The department said that none of the projects involved injurious chemicals which would constitute a danger to persons living near the factories. Officials observed that modern gas masks and other gas defensive appliances required materials for which there was little or no commercial need, but which were required in quantity to meet the defense program.

Stettinius Appoints 'Crackdown' Staff

New Defense Group to Assure Adequate Flow of Materials

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP).—A new Government agency empowered to use "crackdown" methods to secure industry's compliance with defense orders took form today with appointment of staff officials to the Priorities Division of the Knudsen-Hillman production management office.

Edward R. S. Stettinius, Jr., director of the division, named several assistants and also a joint army-navy-industry special group to assure an adequate flow of steel products for defense and other needs.

Officials said the division would carry out any "crackdown" orders of the Knudsen-Hillman board, by means of priorities which govern the delivery of materials and use of transportation.

For assistant director of the vision in charge of administra Stettinius named James T. T member of a New York fir dustrial engineers.

Workers Are Given 5% Wage Increase

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 11—A threatened strike involving orders for $7,750,000 worth of army and navy aircraft engines was averted today after weary negotiators—urged by insistent National Defense Commissioners—finally cracked a wage dispute deadlock at a Fairchild Airplane and Engine Corporation plant at Farmingdale, Long Island.

Shortly before dawn John R. Owens, labor relations assistant of the National Defense Commission, emerged from a conference that had lasted almost continuously for thirty-six hours to announce a settlement.

Agrees To Increase

Owens said the company voluntarily agreed to a basic union demand for a general five per cent. increase in wages for all employes, and agreed to a compromise providing 50 cents an hour for beginners for the first four months, 55 cents for the next four and 60 cents thereafter.

The union originally demanded 50 cents to start, 57½ after two months and 65 after four months. About a month ago it reduced the 65-cent figure to 60 cents. The company originally offered 50 cents to start, 55 cents after six months and 60 cents within a year.

To Be Submitted Today

The settlement terms will be submitted to the workers for ratification today.

An announcement by Donald B. Cox, vice-president and general manager of the plant, that Owens' statement was "premature" sent the negotiators, who had been in session all night, back into another huddle. From this, Cox emerged a half hour later to say:

"The agreement tonight speaks for itself and we have been assured that it will be ratified. I feel confident that the negotiations have not b i up production nor impaired the . de of the employes in their company and in their work. The country needs more of that spirit."

A point stressed by Owens was that Ranger craftsmen would be paid for eight holidays annually. He said this was the "only contract yet egotiated with any company in the automobile o. air ft fields under which men would be paid for legal holidays."

Ship Starts On Cruise With Anti-Mine Device

U. S. Passenger Vessel Carries Magnetic Belt Almost Entirely Inside Its Hull

New York, Jan. 11 (AP)—The United States liner America, first American passenger ship to be equipped with a magnetic mine-repelling belt, sailed today with 751 passengers on a twelve-day Caribbean cruise.

The anti-mine device, developed by the British, is almost entirely inside the ship, contrary to the British practice of installing it outside the hull.

A company spokesman said it was installed in a routine overhaul at the Norfolk Navy Yard in the record time of three and a half days. He expressed belief that, because the liner is subject to immediate call by the navy, installation of the belt was a precautionary measure.

Deferred Men Still Face Draft

ALBANY, Jan. 11 (AP).—Classificatoin deferments under the selective service act are temporary and subject to revision, Brigadier General Ames T. Brown reminded registrants today.

Brown, dir tor of State selective service, explains the only registrants immediately available for induction are those classified as 1-A and 1-B. Thus far, only those under 1-A have been called.

Graduate of Skidmore Wins Croix de Guerre

By The Associated Press.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., Jan. 11—Miss Elizabath Adams of Providence, R. I., a graduate of Skidmore College here in 1939, has received the Croix de Guerre for "courage and devotion in transporting refugees under difficult conditions and violent bombardment" last May, friends learned today.

Miss Adams went to France on March 2, 1940, as a volunteer chauffeur in the American Friends of France Truck and Ambulance Unit.

Indicative of the perils Miss Adams faced, was a letter to her family in Providence, dated May 14, "at the front." It said in part:

"At 1:30 A. M. one black early morning we were awakened with—'Get out. * * * There isn't time to wait for the old and sick, but save the children.'

"Without lights, airplanes zooming overhead—bombs dropping about—we drove about evacuating people. * * * We are now in another town farther away, but bombs drop here just as much. One went down just this second."

NEW YORK, JAN. 11-(AP)-A FLEET OF FAST FREIGHTERS TO BE OPERATED FOR THE "COMMON CAUSE" OF BRITISH AND ALLIED SHIPPING WILL BE BUILT AT THE OLD GROTON IRON WORKS SHIPYARDS AT OLD GROTON, CONN., ALFRED HOLTER, A REFUGEE NORWEGIAN INDUSTRIALIST AND HEAD OF A PRIVATE AMERICAN-NORWEGIAN COMBINE WHICH ACQUIRED THE YARDS, SAID TODAY.

HOLTER SAID THE COMBINE PURCHASED THE YARDS FOR "AROUND A HALF MILLION DOLLARS" FOR CONSTRUCTION OF 12 TO 15 AND "MAYBE EVEN 18" FREIGHTERS A YEAR.

PLANS CALL FOR 9,500-TON FREIGHTERS, HE SAID, PREDICTING THAT THE FIRST SHIP COULD BE TURNED OUT WITHIN 11 MONTHS.

HE SAID THE COMBINE ACQUIRED THE YARDS INSTEAD OF BUILDING NEW ONES BECAUSE "THE ESTABLISHMENT ALREADY THERE WOULD PERMIT US TO SAVE FROM SIX TO EIGHT MONTHS IN GETTING OUT THE FIRST SHIP."

(WX)--INTERPRETING THE WAR NEWS

BY KIRKE L.SIMPSON

BRITISH SEIZURE IN THE LIBYAN CAMPAIGN OF A FLEET OF GROUNDED ITALIAN PLANES RAISES AGAIN THE QUESTION OF FASCIST OIL RESOURCES, AND THE EXTENT TO WHICH ITALIAN REVERSES BOTH IN AFRICA AND ALBANIA MAY BE TRACEABLE TO LACK OF FUEL.

THIS SEEMS THE MAJOR EXPLANATION FOR THE POOR SHOWING ITALY HAS MADE IN THE AIR AND AT SEA, IN LIBYA AND IN ALBANIA. INDEED, THERE APPEARS TO BE AN OIL SCARCITY FOR BOTH MEMBERS OF THE AXIS.

THE RELATIVE LULL FOR THREE NIGHTS IN NAZI AIR ATTACKS ON ENGLAND LAST WEEK WELL MIGHT BE DUE MORE TO OIL AND GASOLINE DIFFICULTIES THAN TO BAD WEATHER. THE WEATHER DID NOT PREVENT BRITISH BOMBERS FROM CROSSING THE CHANNEL TO BATTER THE INVASION COAST THOSE SAME NIGHTS. BERLIN ITSELF NOTED THAT THE NAZI AIR ATTACK ON ENGLAND WAS CONFINED TO "INDIVIDUAL" PLANE RAIDS.

IT MAY BE THAT NAZI LEADERSHIP WELCOMED A WEATHER EXCUSE FOR SLOWING UP THE LUFTWAFFE WHILE OIL AND GASOLINE STOCKS WEGE ACCUMULATED FOR LATER OPERATIONS BY AIR AND SEA. A HEAVY RAID FOLLOWED THE LULL.

LOW VISABILITY AT SEA IS THE RULE OVER THE NORTH ATLANTIC IN WINTER. IT COMPLICATES THE TASK OF NAZI SUBMARINE COMMANDERS. THEY USE A LOT OF FUEL OIL GROPING BLINDLY FOR CONTACT WITH BRITISH SHIP CONVOYS.

ITALIAN PLANES TAKEN BY THE BRITISH AT ABANDONED AIR BASES WEST OF TOBRUK WERE REPORTED LEFT BEHIND BY THE RETIRING FASCISTS BECAUSE OF DAMAGE INFLICTED BY BRITISH AIR RAIDS. THAT DOES NOT EXPLAIN, HOWEVER, HOW THEY HAPPENED TO BE CAUGHT ON THE GROUND IN THE FIRST INSTANCE.

EVERY CIRCUMSTANCE OF THE FIGHTING CALLED FOR ALL-OUT USE OF ITALIAN PLANES IN AFRICA TO STALL THE ADVANCING BRITISH. YET AT ONE BASE THE ATTACKERS FOUND 40 SHIPS, CRIPPLED BEFORE THEY COULD GET INTO AIR, AT ANOTHER 35 OR SO. THERE IS REASON TO BELIEVE IT WAS LACK OF FUEL THAT GROUNDED THEM.

A SUCCESSFUL ITALIAN INVASION OF GREECE TO REACH PORTS ON THE GREEK AEGEAN COAST MIGHT HAVE OPENED NEW OIL RESOURCES FOR ITALY EVEN IX THE BRITISH RETAINED CONTROL, FROM CRETE, OF THE MOUTH OF THE AEGEAN SEA. THE NORMAL ROUTE FOR RUMANIAN OIL IS SEA, FROM DANUBE DELTA PORTS VIA THE BOSPORUS AND DARDANELLES INTO THE AEGEAN AND THENCE TO DESTINATION. FAR MORE PLENTIFUL RUSSIAN OIL FROM THE CASPIAN FIELDS ALSO WOULD HAVE BEEN REACHABLE FOR THE ITALIANS AT BLACK SEA PIPE-LINE TERMINALS. CONTROL OF THE UPPER AEGEAN WOULD HAVE GIVEN ITALY A GASOLINE FILLING STATION.

A25WX

AS IT IS, HOWEVER, SHE IS COMPLETELY CUT OFF FROM RUMANIAN OR RUSSIAN SOURCES EXCEPT VIA GERMANY. AND SHE HAS SQUANDERED MUCH OF HER OIL AND GASOLINE RESERVE ON THE ILL-STARRED GREEK CAMPAIGN. THE BRITISH PROBABLY TOOK OR DESTROYED AT SIDI BARRANI AND BARDIA THE BULK OF ITALY'S AFRICAN GASOLINE STORAGE.

ITALY'S AIR AND SUBMARINE FLEETS WERE HER MAIN RELIANCE IN ENTERING THE WAR. NEITHER HAS SERVED HER EFFECTIVELY, NOR HAS HER OIL-POWERED SURFACE NAVY FIGURED IMPORTANTLY IN THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA CAMPAIGN. IT SEEMS WHOLLY PROBABLE THAT OIL SHORTAGE ACCOUNTS FOR FASCIST NAVY HARBOR-HUGGING TENDENCIES.

IT HAS BEEN ESTIMATED THAT THE AXIS WAR EFFORT AGAINST BRITAIN REQUIRES FROM 200 TO 300 MILLION BARRELS OF OIL A YEAR. THAT IS TWICE OR THREE TIMES AS MUCH AS OIL FIELDS IN AXIS HANDS IN POLAND OR RUMANIA PRODUCE.

THERE ARE SHARP HINTS THAT RUSSIA IS CURTAILING, NOT EXPANDING, OIL DELIVERIES TO GERMANY. THE MOSCOW PRESS COMPLAINS OF FAILURE OF SOME RUSSIAN FIELDS TO ATTAIN 1940 SCHEDULED OUTPUT. IT VOICES DEMANDS FOR STEPPING UP PRODUCTION TO MEET RUSSIAN, NOT GERMAN ARMY NEEDS.

OIL IS THE LIFE BLOOD OF THIS WAR AND BRITISH ULTIMATE VICTORY HOPES ARE PINNED LARGELY TO THE BELIEF THAT GERMANY SOME DAY WILL BE OIL-STARVED.

THE DANGER THAT ITALY MAY LOSE HER WHOLE AFRICAN EMPIRE IN THE FAST MOVING ANGLO-ALLIED OFFENSIVE WAS POINTED OUT IN THIS COLUMN YESTERDAY.

THIS IDEA WAS PUT FORWARD MERELY AS A POSSIBILITY, SINCE ANYTHING MORE DEFINITE WOULD BE COUNTING UNHATCHED CHICKS. THE POSSIBILITY IS STRONG ENOUGH, HOWEVER, SO THAT WE ARE ENTITLED TO TAKE A LOOK AT WHAT THE RESULTS OF SUCH A LOSS MIGHT BE.

LONDON MILITARY CIRCLES ALREADY ARE DISCUSSING ONE POTENTIAL EXFECT--AN OFXENSIVE AGAINST ITALY PROPER, WITH ULTIMATE INVASION

30.24-6923
30.24-6923

IN VIEW. THAT CERTAINLY WOULD BE A NATURAL DEVELOPMENT UNDER FAVORABLE CIRCUMSTANCES, BUT ITS FRUITION MUST DEPEND ON WHAT HERR HITLER DOES TO COUNTER THE ALLIED SUCCESSES IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

IF MUSSOLINI SHOULD BE KNOCKED OUT OF AFRICA, BRITAIN WOULD HAVE IMPROVED HER POSITION SO IMMEASURABLY AS TO PERMIT OF AT LEAST A POWERFUL OFFENSIVE BY AIR AND BY SEA AGAINST ITALY.

SO FAR AS CONCERNS ROME, BRITANNIA WOULD BE ABSOLUTE MISTRESS OF THE EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN AND POSSESSED OF PLENTIFUL BASES. WITH ALL FASCIST THREATS TO EGYPT AND THE SUEZ CANAL REMOVED, BRITAIN WOULD BE ABLE TO SPARE WARPLANES AND WARSHIPS FOR SUCH AN OPERATION.

THERE IS NO DOUBT THAT THE BRITISH COULD RAISE HAVOC IN ITALY BY AIR RAIDS OVER THAT CONGESTED LITTLE COUNTRY, AND BY BOMBARDMENT OF HER ATTENUATED COASTLINES. WHEN IT COMES TO TALKING ABOUT ACTUAL INVASION, HOWEVER, I FOR ONE BEGIN TO VISUALIZE MANY IMPEDIMENTS TO ITS ACHIEVEMENT. SHOULD THE FASCISTS MAKE A VIGOROUS DEFENSE, INVASION WOULDN'T BE EASY, AS WE HAVE SEEN FROM THE MANNER IN WHICH THE BRITISH HAVE BALKED HERR HITLER THUS FAR.

AN EQUALLY IMPORTANT ASPECT OF THE SITUATION IS THE FACT THAT THE LOSS OF THEIR AFRICAN POSSESSIONS WOULD BE A TERRIBLE SHOCK TO THE ITALIAN PEOPLE. SHOULD THE LOSS BE PERMANENT IT WOULD LOWER ITALY FROM THE RANK OF FIRST CLASS POWER.

A114

APART FROM ANY ADVERSE EFFECT ON THE MORALE OF THE POPULATION, THE BRITISH COULD USE POSSESSION OF THE COLONIES AS A POTENT BARGAINING POINT. A THREAT TO TREAT THESE POSSESSIONS AS PRIZES OF WAR WOULD BE CALCULATED TO LEAD MANY ITALIANS TO CONSIDER THE WISDOM OF QUITTING THE CONFLICT AND SALVAGING WHAT THEY COULD. HERE IT IS WORTH NOTING THAT A LOT OF THEM NEVER HAVE HAD ANY LIKING FOR THE WAR FROM THE START.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT BENEFIT WHICH WOULD ACCRUE TO THE ALLIES WOULD BE THE INCREASE IN BRITISH PRESTIGE ABROAD. IN THIS CONNECTION WE SHOULDN'T OVERLOOK THAT ENGLAND'S INFLUENCE OVER THE POWERFUL ARAB PEOPLES WOULD BE STRENGTHENED. SUPPORT OF THESE MOHAMMEDAN STATES WOULD MEAN MUCH IF THE LAND WAR SHOULD SPREAD IN THE NEAR EAST.

FRENCH-CONTROLLED SYRIA ALSO MIGHT SWING OVER TO THE ALLIED SIDE ONCE MORE. THIS WOULD MAKE THE FRENCH FIGHTING FORCES IN SYRIA AVAILABLE--A GREAT ASSET.

THEN BRITISH DOMINATION OF THE EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN OF COURSE MEANS THAT THE IMMENSELY IMPORTANT TERMINALS OF THE GREAT OIL PIPE-LINES TO THE COASTS OF PALESTINE AND LEBANON FROM IRAQ WOULD BE PROTECTED.

JAN 12 1941

AGAIN, IN EVENT OF A GERMAN ATTEMPT TO FORCE THE DARDANELLES, BRITAIN WOULD BE ABLE TO GIVE TURKEY AID WITH LAND, SEA AND AIR FORCES.

BY THE SAME TOKEN WE HAVE THE POSSIBILITY OF AN ALLIED ATTACK ON GERMANY THROUGH THE BALKANS. THIS IS ONE OF THE "IF" SITUATIONS, HOWEVER. IT WOULD DEPEND ON VARIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES, INCLUDING THE ATTITUDE OF TURKEY AND RUSSIA.

FINALLY, ONE EXCEEDINGLY IMPORTANT GAIN FOR THE ALLIES WOULD LIE IN THEIR INCREASED DEFENSIVE STRENGTH IN EVENT HITLER SHOULD MAKE A DRIVE AGAINST THE DARDANELLES WITH THAT BIG ARMY HE HAS MASSED IN RUMANIA. ALLIED SUCCESS HERE WOULD MEAN THE OPENING UP OF A BALKAN FRONT FOR THE ATTACK ON GERMANY'S EASTERN FRONT.

SHELTERS FOR ART WORKS

OCCUPIED NATIONS'
FAMED TREASURES
HIDDEN AWAY (650)

(ADVANCE) BRUSSELS (VIA BERLIN)-(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)-BELGIUM'S PRICELESS ART TREASURES WILL EMERGE FROM THE WAR UNSCATHED -- BUT NOT UNTIL EVEN THE SLIGHTEST POSSIBILITY OF DAMAGE THROUGH BOMBARDMENT OR OTHER WAR ACTS IS REMOVED.

BOMB-PROOF SHELTERS WERE PROVIDED FOR THE LITTLE KINGDOM'S PAINTINGS LONG BEFORE THE WAR BEGAN. AS EARLY AS AUGUST, 1939, WHEN WAR THREATENED, PRECAUTIONS WERE TAKEN BY THE BELGIAN GOVERNMENT.

THE CELEBRATED RUBENS COLLECTION OF THE ANTWERP MUSEUM WAS TAKEN INTO SPECIALLY CONSTRUCTED UNDERGROUND VAULTS OF THE MUSEUM ITSELF, AS WERE OTHER MASTERPIECES OWNED BY THIS MUSEUM. A SPECIAL MECHANISM MADE IT EASY TO SLIDE THE PAINTINGS WITH THEIR HEAVY FRAMES DOWN INTO THE VAULT OR BACK INTO THEIR PLACES AT WILL. IT TOOK THREE WEEKS TO COMPLETE THE "EVACUATION" INTO AIR RAID SHELTERS OF THE ANTWERP COLLECTION. SOME RUBENS PAINTINGS WITH THEIR HEAVY FRAMES WEIGHED UP TO TWO TONS.

VAN EYCK'S (CORRECT) "WORSHIP OF THE LAMB," CONSIDERED ONE OF THE MOST PRECIOUS WORKS OF ART IN EUROPE, WAS QUIETLY REMOVED FROM THE SIDE ALTAR OF THE CATHEDRAL AT GHENT AND "TRANSPORTED SOMEWHERE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD." AUTHORITIES DECLINE TO SAY JUST WHERE.

MOST ART TREASURES HAVE BEEN STORED AWAY FOR SAFETY AND WILL REMAIN WHERE THEY ARE, ALTHOUGH REOPENING OF SOME MUSEUMS IS CONTEMPLATED.

HE SAID THE GERMAN COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF HAD FORBIDDEN MOVING OF ART OBJECTS VALUED AT MORE THAN 5,000 FRANCS WITHOUT SPECIAL PERMITS.

"EVERYTHING THAT COULD BE DONE TO PROTECT ART HAS BEEN DONE," HE SAID.

MANY FRENCH ART OBJECTS WERE STORED DURING THE WAR IN CHATEAUX IN THE LOIRE DISTRICT, WHERE THEY ARE UNDER CARE OF GUARDIANS. THE MEDIEVAL WING OF THE LOUVRE MUSEUM IS BEING RESTORED AND MAY BE REOPENED SOON, THE COUNT SAID. THE MUSEUM OF THE CITY OF PARIS IS TO BE OPENED SOON AND THE TROCADERO MUSEUM NEVER HAS BEEN CLOSED.

-DASH-

JAN 12 1941

(ADVANCE) AMSTERDAM (VIA BERLIN)-(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)-HOLLAND'S PRICELESS WORKS OF ART ARE INVISIBLE BUT SAFE "FOR THE DURATION."

GO THROUGH THE RIJKMUSEUM OF AMSTERDAM, OR THE MAURITSHUIS OF THE HAGUE, OR TO SANY OTHER OF HOLLAND'S FAMED GALLERIES IN ROTTERDAM, DELFT, HAARLEM, UTRECHT, AND ELSEWHERE, AND YOU WILL LOOK IN VAIN FOR REMBRANDTS, VERMEERS, VAN GOGHS, FRANZ HALLS, OR JAN STEENS.

VACANT SPACES STARE AT YOU. THAT DOES NOT MEAN, HOWEVER, THAT SOMEONE HAS WALKED OFF WITH THESE WORLD FAMED ART TREASURES. IT SIMPLY MEANS THAT CAUTIOUS DUTCH MUSEUM AND ART GALLERY CUSTODIANS RECOGNIZED THE DANGER OF AIR ATTACK AND ARTILLERY FIRE, AND PUT THE PAINTINGS INTO BOMB-PROOF SHELTERS LONG BEFORE MAY 10, WHEN THE GERMAN ARMIES CROSSED THE BORDER.

GENERALLT SPEAKING, ONLY THE WORKS OF DEAD ARTISTS WERE HIDDEN. THE NATIONAL AND MUNICIPAL GALLERIES THEREFORE STILL ATTRACT VISITORS, FOR CONTEMPORANEOUS MASTERS ARE STILL ON EXHIBITION.

EVEN THE ROTTERDAM MUSEUMS REMAINED INTACT DESPITE THE HEAVY BOMBARDMENT OF THE CITY. DAMAGE TO ART THERE WAS CONFINED TO THE DESTRUCTION OF THE MAGNIFICENT CITY HALL OF MIDDELBURG, IN THE ROTTERDAM AREA, AND TO SEVERAL OTHER MASTERPIECES OF DUTCH ARCHITECTURE.

REVISING ELECTION LAWS
ALONG LINE OF TREND TO TOTALITARIANISM (540)

- - -

JAN 12 1941

BY MAX HILL

(ADVANCE) TOKYO--(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)--JAPAN HAS UNDERTAKEN A DRASTIC REVISION OF HER ELECTION LAW WHICH IS EXPECTED TO STRIKE THE KEYNOTE OF THE CURRENT TREND TO TOTALITARIANISM.

DEMOCRATIC FORMS BORROWED FROM THE OCCIDENT ARE BEING DISCARDED. EMPHASIS IS BEING SHIFTED TO THE FAMILY AND MILITARY SERVICE, CONCEPTS IN HARMONY WITH ANCIENT JAPANESE IDEALS AS WELL AS THOSE OF MODERN FASCISM.

COMMITTEES OF THE DIET (PARLIAMENT) AND THE HOME OFFICE ARE DRAFTING THE REVISION, MAIN PRINCIPLES HAVING BEEN GENERALLY AGREED UPON.

30.24-6927

30.24-6927

THE MAIN CHANGE WILL BE FROM UNIVERSAL MANHOOD SUFFRAGE TO A FRANCHISE LIMITED TO MALES OF MORE THAN 25 WHO ARE HEADS OF FAMILIES OR HAVE SERVED IN THE ARMED FORCES.

GREAT NUMBERS OF JAPANESE FEEL THAT THE NEW LAW WILL CHANGE INEVITABLY THEIR WAY OF LIFE. IT HAS THE SUPPORT OF ALL POWERFUL FORCES; THE OPPOSITION IS SLIGHT AND TIMID.

OFFICIALS ESTIMATE THAT IT WILL DISFRANCHISE SOME 4,000,000 OF THE 14,000,000 NOW ELIGIBLE TO VOTE FOR MEMBERS OF THE IMPERIAL DIET (THE ONLY EFFECTIVE OFFICES OF IMPORTANCE.)

FOREIGN OBSERVERS SEE EVEN GREATER IMPORTANCE IN THE FACT IT WILL PLACE TREMENDOUS VOTIN

JAN 12 1941

POWER IN THE HANDS

WILL PLACE TREMENDOUS VOTING WER IN THE HANDS OF EX-SERVICE MEN, TAKING THE VOTE AWAY FROM ELEMENTS THAT MIGHT OPPOSE THEM.

IMPERIAL POLICY IN RECENT YEARS HAS BEEN LARGELY DIRECTED BY ARMY [illegible] SEA

IMPERIAL POLICY IN RECENT YEARS HAS BEEN LARGELY DIRECTED BY ARMY AND NAVY LEADERS WITH THE SUPPORT OF THE RESERVISTS' ASSOCIATIONS WHICH ARE THE MOST POWERFUL ELEMENTS IN MOST JAPANESE COMMUNITIES OUTSIDE THE BIG CITIES.

JAPAN'S CONSCRIPT ARMY SYSTEM IN NORMAL PEACE TIMES RETURNS TO CIVIL LIFE EACH YEAR ABOUT A QUARTER OF A MILLION MEN WHO GO INTO THE RESERVISTS' ASSOCIATIONS TO BECOME SUPPORTERS OF POLICIES FRAMED BY ADMIRALS AND GENERALS.

BEFORE THE RESURGENCE OF NATIONALISM AND MILITARISM THAT BEGAN WITH THE CONQUEST OF MANCHURIA IN 1931, JAPAN MADE CONSIDERABLE PROGRESS TOWARD ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT. AN ELECTION LAW REVISION OF 1925 REMOVED TAXPAYING QUALIFICATIONS AND INCREASED THE ELECTORATE OF ABOUT 3,000,000 TO FOUR OR FIVE TIMES THAT FIGURE. WITH CERTAIN EXCEPTIONS EVERY MALE OF 25 OR MORE COULD VOTE.

THE ELECTIVE, AND MORE IMPORTANT, CHAMBER OF THE DIET, THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WITH 466 MEMBERS, WAS CONTROLLED ALTERNATELY BY TWO MAJOR PARTIES FAIRLY RESPONSIVE TO PUBLIC OPINION.

NOW JAPAN HAS SWUNG FAR TO THE RIGHT. SHE IS BUILDING A "NEW NATIONAL STRUCTURE" ON FASCIST LINES. SHE IS ALLIED WITH GERMANY AND ITALY.

ELECTION LAW REVISION IS PART OF THIS PROCESS. IT MAY BE ENACTED BY THE CURRENT THREE-MONTH SESSION OF THE DIET WHICH BEGAN LATE IN DECEMBER.

JAN 12 1941

THE DIET MAY BE CALLED UPON ALSO TO PASS A DEATH SENTENCE ON ITS PRESENT FORM. PROPOSED CHANGES CALL FOR REDUCTION OF SEATS IN THE ELECTIVE HOUSE FROM 466 TO 300 OR 350. ALREADY THE OLD-LINE POLITICAL PARTIES HAVE BEEN DISSOLVED.

THE IMPORTANT NEWSPAPER NICHI NICHI SAYS THE ELECTORAL LAW CHANGE "AIMS AT PRESERVING NIPPON'S FAMILY SYSTEM AND HAS THE SUPPORT OF THE MILITARY AND RIGHTIST CIRCLES." IT EXPLAINS SOME DETAILS:

"BY 'HEADS OF FAMILIES' THE PERSONS WRITTEN DOWN AS SUCH IN THE CENSUS REGISTERS ARE MEANT. IT FOLLOWS THAT EVEN THOUGH AN ELDEST SON IS OVER 25 HE CANNOT VOTE AS LONG AS HIS FATHER IS ALIVE. HIS YOUNGER BROTHERS WHO ARE OVER 25 MAY, HOWEVER, VOTE IF THEY ESTABLISH BRANCH FAMILIES (THAT IS, MARRY AND LIVE UNDER DIFFEREN ROOFS.)"

BUT THE BACHELOR WHO HAS NOT DONE MILITARY SERVICE HAS NO PLACE IN THE "NEW NATIONAL STRUCTURE."

BY EDWARD ROBINSON

(ADVANCE) LONDON--(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)--I SHUT THE RADIO OFF. I CAN'T HEAR IT ANYHOW. THE ANTI-AIRCRAFT BATTERY NEARBY IS FIRING EVERY MINUTE OR SO, AND THERE IS THE STEADY

JAN 12 1941

OF GERMAN PLANES OVERHEAD.

I SIT FOR A MINUTE SMOKING MY PIPE. THE WH-U-U-U-SH OF A BOMB FALLING, A HEAVY BOMB, SENDS ME DIVING INTO OUR SHELTER IN THE DINING ROOM. MY WIFE IS ALREADY THERE.

THE HOUSE SHAKES. WE HEAR THE CRACKLING OF TIMBERS, BREAKING BEFORE THE EXPLOSION. I COUNT "ONE, TWO, THREE, FOUR, FIVE, SIX," WAITING FOR THE NEXT ONE. IT DOESN'T COME. I RUN INTO THE HALL, GRAB MY TIN HAT AND GO OUT INTO THE STREET.

ANOTHER WARDEN, A SHADOWY FIGURE IN THE BLACKOUT, DASHES BY.

"THIS WAY, I THINK," HE PANTS.

WE RUN THROUGH THE BLACKNESS TOGETHER.

AROUND THE CORNER WE FIND A TWO-STORY HOUSE ON FIRE, THE FLAMES JUST STARTING TO GAIN A REAL FOOTHOLD. SOMEONE IS SCREAMING STEADILY. THERE IS A CONFUSED SOUND OF VOICES. ABOVE THESE AND THE CRACKLE OF FLAMES, THE SLAM OF GUNS AND THE DRONE OF THE GERMAN BOMBERS CONTINUE.

JAN 12 1941

ORDER AND EFFICIENCY COME INTO THIS WELTER OF PAIN AND CONFUSION ON THE HEELS OF THE AMBULANCE SQUAD. MOVING AS THOUGH THEY WERE AT DRILL, THE STRETCHER BEARERS BREAK OUT THEIR STRETCHERS. THE DOCTOR MOVES AMONG THE DEAD AND WOUNDED. THE SMELL OF ANTI-SEPTICS BITES THROUGH THE AIR FETID WITH SMOKE AND CORDITE AND THE MUSTY SCENT OF BLOOD.

THE FIRE TRUCK, A CONVERTED TAXI, ROLLS UP. WE ALL DROP FLAT AS ANOTHER BOMB COMES SCREAMING TO EARTH. BITS OF BRICK, EARTH, WOOD AND GLASS FALL ABOUT US SOON AFTER THE EXPLOSION.

A MAN GRUNTS HIS SURPRISE, THEN SWEARS SOFTLY WITH PAIN. WE GET

30.24-6929

30.24-6929

UP, AND THE FIREMEN START TO PLAY THEIR HOSES ON THE FIRE. ITS HEAT HITS US, AND THE FLAME DAZZLES OUR EYES...

I (MORE)

(SPECIAL NEWS SERVICE ADVANCE FOR AMS OF SUNDAY, JAN.12).

(ADVANCE)..LONDON--FIRST ADD "AFTER THE BOMBS FALL" (BY ROBINSON)-(FIRST PART SENT JAN.7) XXX DAZZLES OUR EYES...

I CUT ACROSS THE PARK ON MY WAY HOME. SUDDENLY DOZENS OF INCENDIARY BOMBS START TO FALL IN THE PARK. I BEAT ONE OUT WITH MY HELMET, KICK DIRT ON TWO MORE. THEN THERE IS A BURST OF LIGHT. THE FIRE BOMBS HAVE SET FIRE TO A ROW OF WORKING CLASS HOUSES FRONTING ON THE PARK.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN, MANY OF THEM IN THEIR NIGHT CLOTHES, ARE TRYING TO BEAT OUT THE FLAMES. SOME HAVE STIRRUP PUMPS, MOST OF THEM ARE USING RUGS, COATS, EARTH.

JAN 12 1941

FROM SOMEWHERE COMES A GREAT SHOUT "DUCK!" I FALL FLAT. THERE IS THE CRUNCHING NOISE, HORRIBLY FAMILIAR, THEN A GREAT WIND OF SOUND AND THE SENSATION OF A BLINDING LIGHT AND FIRE. IT IS EXACTLY AS IF SOMEONE HAD THROWN OPEN THE DOOR OF A TREMENDOUS BLAST FURNACE.

THE FIREFIGHTERS ARE SHOWERED WITH DEBRIS. SOME OF THEM, WOMEN AND CHILDREN AMONG THEM, LIE IN STRANGE, TWISTED HEAPS. THESE ARE THE DEAD. THE SCREAMING OF THE WOUNDED STARTS AGAIN.

A WARDEN HOLLERS, "ED, CALL THE AMBULANCE. HARRY, GO FOR THE FIREM SECOND TURNING LEFT ABOUT THREE HUNDRED YARDS UP. RUN LIKE HELL."

WE MOVE TOWARD THE BUILDINGS STILL BURNING FIERCELY--THE BOMB HAS WRECKED FOUR HOUSES IN THE ROW.

THE SAME VOICE CONTINUES, "STEADY NOW. THE INNER WALL LOOKS LIKE THE ONLY THING HOLDING OUT. IT WON'T HOLD FOR LONG. I DON'T THINK THOSE PEOPLE IN THE BOMBED HOUSES HAD ANY SHELTER BUT THE CELLAR. WE GOT TO GET THOSE BRICKS AND DEBRIS OFF THEM. BUT WATCH THAT WALL."

HIS VOICE IS FULL AND CHEERFUL.

A GROUP OF PEOPLE STRAGGLE PAST. THEY HAVE LOST THEIR HOMES, SOME OF THEM HAVE LOST MOTHERS, FATHERS, HUSBANDS, WIVES, SONS AND DAUGHTERS IN A SPLIT SECOND.

JAN 12 1941

WE START TO REMOVE THE WRECKAGE. SOMEONE CALLS FROM ONE CORNER, "HERE'S SOMEONE." THEN A PAUSE. THEN HE MUMBLES, "DON'T TROUBLE, IT'S TOO LATE." WE DIG ON THROUGH SPLINTERED WOOD, BROKEN BRICKS, FURNITURE SMASHED TO BITS.

THERE'S A SHOUT. "SOMEONE'S CALLING FROM UNDERNEATH."

A DOCTOR GETS OFF A NEWLY ARRIVED AMBULANCE. THERE'S A HOLE IN THE DEBRIS NOW. HE GOES ON HIS HANDS AND KNEES. CRAWLING, PULLING, PUSHING, HEEDLESS OF THE ROCKING WALL ABOVE, SOMEHOW HE GETS TO THE PEOPLE IMPRISONED IN THE CELLAR BELOW. HE GIVES THEM WHAT AID HE CAN--ANTISEPTICS, MORPHINE, BANDAGES, A TORCH TO ROUT THE AWFUL DARKNESS.

HE STANDS UP AND DUSTS HIS HANDS. "BETTER WORK FAST, IT'S BAD DOWN THERE."

AFTER A HALF HOUR OF WORK, WE HAVE THEM OUT. THE WALL STILL STANDS. ONCE MORE I TURN TOWARDS HOME. YOU NEVER KNOW WHAT YOU'LL FIND.

AGAIN THERE'S THE SWISH OF A FALLING BOMB. MECHANICALLY I FALL FLAT. THE GROUND SHAKES SLIGHTLY BUT THERE'S NO EXPLOSION.

I HEAR SOMEONE CALL FROM A NEARBY HOUSE, "IT'S IN OUR ALLEYWAY, BEHIND THE HOUSE."

"STAY WHERE YOU ARE," SHOUTS ANOTHER VOICE. THE NEAREST WARDEN TAKES CHARGE. SHIELDING HIS TORCH, HE SCOUTS AROUND, FINALLY FINDS THE CRATER AND PEERS DOWN. THE BOMB IS THERE, ENORMOUSLY BIG IN THE HALF LIGHT.

"DELAYED ACTION," HE SAYS QUIETLY. THEN HE SHOUTS, "WAKE UP EVERYONE WITHIN 90 YARDS. WARN 'EM AND GET 'EM OUT. I WANT EVERY DAMN' PERSON OUT. PHONE THE POLICE, GET SOME LANTERNS, STAND IN THE ROAD AND DIRECT TRAFFIC."

WELL THAT'S HOW IT IS, ONE NIGHT OF MANY. THE COMMUNIQUE WILL SAY, "SOME BOMBS WERE DROPPED CAUSING SOME DAMAGE. SOME CASUALTIES WERE REPORTED." BUT THIS IS HOW IT IS.

A DUAL ROLE

SPAIN, ONCE "LABORATORY" FOR THE PRESENT WAR, NOW HOLDS KEY GIBRALTAR SPOT

CIVIL WAR DEMONSTRATED THE AERIAL BLOCKADE

A "STEREOSCOPIC" PICTURE LINKING THE TWO WARS, BY A REPORTER OF BOTH (1,300)

JAN 12 1941

(EDITOR'S NOTE: ASSOCIATED PRESS CORRESPONDENT DWIGHT PITKIN HAD THE RELATIVELY RARE EXPERIENCE OF COVERING BOTH THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR AND THE CURRENT GERMAN ASSAULT ON ENGLAND, FROM WHICH HE RETURNED LESS THAN THREE WEEKS AGO. ON THE BASIS OF THIS EXPERIENCE, HE PRESENTS HERE AN UNUSUAL ANALYSIS OF THE BACKGROUND AND POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENTS OF THE PRESENT WAR FROM THE NEW AND SIGNIFICANT ANGLE OF THE SPANISH CONFLICT.)

JAN 12 1941

BY DWIGHT PITKIN

(ADVANCE)...NEW YORK, JAN 11-(AP)-BRITAIN MIGHT DRIVE GERMANY'S MERCHANT RAIDERS AND SUBMARINES FROM THE SEAS AND STILL BE CHOKED BY A STRINGENT BLOCKADE--FROM THE AIR.

PEOPLE ORDINARILY THINK OF A MARITIME BLOCKADE AS A STRUGGLE BETWEEN WATER CRAFT. BUT ONE WELL-PLACED BOMB FROM AN AIRPLANE CAN DO AS MUCH DAMAGE TO A SHIP AS A TORPEDO.

AND THIS FORM OF HARASSMENT CAN BE INTENSIFIED UNTIL IT BECOMES A VITAL FACTOR IN A CONFLICT.

THIS IS ONE OF THE MANY SIGNIFICANT HIGHLIGHTS ON THE EUROPEAN WAR WHICH WAS PROVIDED BY THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR--THE "LABORATORY," THE VEST-POCKET PREVIEW OF THE CURRENT CONFLICT.

IN THE SPANISH WAR, GENERAL FRANCO DID NOT HAVE CONTROL OF THE SEAS AROUND THE IBERIAN PENINSULA. HE FAILED TO SEIZE THE SPANISH FLEET AT THE OUTSET. HE MIGHT HAVE WAGED SEA WAR THROUGH AID FROM HIS "NEUTRAL" SUPPORTERS, GERMANY AND ITALY, BUT THEY EVIDENTLY DID NOT CARE TO--POSSIBLY FOR FEAR OF ANTAGONIZING THE BRITISH.

30.24-6931

30.24-6931

SO FRANCO, AS SOON AS HE BUILT UP AN EFFECTIVE AIR FORCE WITH GERMAN AND ITALIAN HELP, RESORTED TO AN AIR BLOCKADE OF PORTS LIKE BARCELONA AND VALENCIA. IT PROVED SUCCESSFUL, FOR THE DOWNFALL OF THE SPANISH REPUBLIC WAS DUE IN PART AT LEAST TO THE STRANGULATION OF ITS ECONOMIC LIFE THROUGH THE CUTTING OFF OF TRADE AT ITS PRINCIPAL PORTS.

BY SINKING OR DAMAGING SHIPS ATTEMPTING TO ENTER REPUBLICAN PORTS, FRANCO'S AIR FORCE PUSHED UP INSURANCE RATES AND MADE IT UNPROFITABLE FOR ANY ONE TO DO BUSINESS WITH THE SPANISH GOVERNMENT UNLESS AT SKY-HIGH PRICES TO COVER THE RISK.

JAN 12 1941

IN 1938 WHEN THE INSURGENT GOVERNMENT HAD UNPLEASANT INCIDENTS WITH THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT OVER THE SINKING OF BRITISH SHIPS I HAD A CHAT WITH A GERMAN AGENT IN BURGOS, SPAIN. HE FRANKLY TOLD ME, "EVERY TIME LLOYDS UNDERWRITERS IN LONDON PUT UP THE RATES ON CARGOES TO SPAIN IT'S JUST AS IMPORTANT TO US AS WINNING A BATTLE. OBVIOUSLY, THE BLOCKADE HAS TO BE APPLIED CAREFULLY AND GRADUALLY, BUT IT WILL WIN THE WAR."

NOW THE GERMANS AND THE ITALIANS ARE TRYING TO DO THE SAME THING TO GREAT BRITAIN--ON A MUCH BIGGER SCALE, SINCE THEY CAN CO-ORDINATE SUBMARINE AND AIR ATTACK.

THIS IS ONLY ONE RESPECT IN WHICH THE SPANISH WAR CASTS AN ILLUMINATING LIGHT ON POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE PRESENT WAR.

THE SPANISH WAR WAS A STRANGE MIXTURE OF THE MODERN AND THE ANCIENT,-... LONG TRAINS OF PACK MULES STRUGGLING UP MOUNTAIN SIDES UNDER THEIR HEAVY BURDEN OF CANNON...SOLDIERS IN NON-DESCRIPT UNIFORMS AND CANVAS SANDALS RUSHING TO THE FRONT IN TRUCKS CHALKED WITH THE SLOGAN "VIVA LA MUERTE" (LONG LIVE DEATH!)...COMPANIES ADVANCING ON A HORIZON AGLOW IN A PURPLISH SUNSET AND HEROICALLY DISPLAYING THEIR BANNER WITHIN RANGE OF ENEMY GUNS!...SWARTHY MOORS ALMOST COMICAL IN THEIR BAGGY PANTS STEALTHILY CREEPING THROUGH AN OLIVE GROVE TO STORM A MEDIEVAL CASTLE...MACHINE GUNS CRACKLING IN ORANGE ORCHARDS LIKE COLD MUSH FRYING IN BACON GREASE...ARTILLERY FLASHING FROM PINE COVERED HILLSIDES AS STOLID FACED PEASANTS TEND THEIR CROPS AND FLOCKS WITHIN SOUND OF THE BATTLE.

THE SPANIARDS WAGED WAR LEISURELY AND AT TIMES EXTRAVAGANTLY, BUT THERE WAS NOTHING PHONEY ABOUT IT AT ANY PERIOD.

UNDOUBTEDLY THE AXIS POWERS IN HELPING GENERALISSIMO FRANCISCO FRANCO CRUSH THE SPANISH REPUBLIC GOT VALUABLE PREPARATION FOR THE BIG WAR TO COME.

JAN 12 1941

IT SHOWED THAT THE BEST MACHINES WIN MODERN WARS.

FROM MY OWN PERSONAL OBSERVATION, THE MATERIEL CAPTURED FROM THE REPUBLICANS WAS NO MATCH FOR THE MACHINES I SAW THE INSURGENTS PUT INTO BATTLE.

THE SPANISH WAR WAS WON BY FRANCO PRINCIPALLY THROUGH AIR STRENGTH SUPPLIED BY THE AXIS POWERS. IN RETURN, THE AXIS COUNTRIES DISCOVERED WEAKNESSES IN THEIR WARPLANES AND IDEAS FOR DEVELOPING THEM INTO MORE EFFECTIVE WEAPONS. THEY ALSO WERE ABLE TO TRAIN MANY AVIATORS UNDER ACTUAL WAR CONDITIONS.

ENGLAND, FRANCE AND THE UNITED STATES ALSO GOT IDEAS FROM THE SPANISH LABORATORY. FOR THEY HAD MILITARY OBSERVERS IN SPAIN TO MAKE NOTES ON THE PERFORMANCE OF WARPLANES AND THE EFFECTIVENESS OF DIFFERENT TYPES OF BOMBS. AND AIR RAID PRECAUTION IN LONDON AND BERLIN IS MERELY A DEVELOPMENT OF WHAT WAS FOUND PRACTICAL IN SPAIN.

(ADVANCE)...NEW YORK--FIRST ADD "A DUAL ROLE" (BY PITKIN) XXX IN SPAIN.

IT WAS SUPERIORITY IN AIR STRENGTH THAT ENABLED FRANCO TO PUT OVER HIS IMPORTANT OCCUPATION OF TERUEL. THE REPUBLICANS HAD ENTRENCHED THEMSELVES FIRMLY IN CONCRETE DUGOUTS IN A MOUNTAINOUS TERRAIN THAT LENT ITSELF EASILY TO DEFENSE. BUT THEY WERE LITERALLY BLASTED OUT FROM THE AIR. ARTILLERY WAS SECONDARY TO THE AIRPLANES.

THE GERMANS THREW THEIR MESSERSCHMITTS INTO THE BATTLE AND DROVE THE OUT-MODED REPUBLICAN FIGHTERS FROM THE AIR. THEN THE GERMAN AND IT

THE OUT-DATED REPUBLICAN FIGHTERS FROM THE AIR. THEN THE GERMAN AND THE ITALIAN BOMBERS WENT INTO ACTION--MANY OF THEM FLOWN BY SPANISH PILOTS WHO HAD BY THIS TIME BEEN TRAINED--AND THEY RELENTLESSLY POUNDED THE REPUBLICAN TRENCHES.

IN THE DECISIVE CAMPAIGNS WHICH FOLLOWED, MACHINE STRENGTH GAVE THE MOTLEY-CLAD FRANCO ARMIES SUCCESS. WITH HIS AIRPLANES, FRANCO CONTROLLED THE AIR, AND HIS FLEETS OF MODERN TRUCKS PROVIDED THE MANEUVERABILITY FOR SURPRISE BLOWS AGAINST THE REPUBLICANS ALONG A THOUSAND-MILE FRONT THINLY HELD EXCEPT AT LARGE TOWNS WHERE HIGHWAYS CONVERGED.

IN FLANDERS AND IN FRANCE, THE GERMANS EMULATED FRANCO'S MARCH TO THE SEA--A BLITZ ON A SMALL SCALE.

FRANCO'S FORCES STRUCK THE WEAKEST SPOTS AND THEN FORMED POCKETS TO SURROUND WHOLE DIVISIONS OF THE REPUBLICAN ARMY. THE REPUBLICAN COMMUNICATIONS WERE SO BAD THAT SOME OF THEIR GENERAL STAFF OFFICERS, WHEN CAPTURED, CONFESSED IN AMAZEMENT THEY THOUGHT THE FRONT LINES WERE 100 MILES AWAY.

FROM SPAIN, THE GERMANS LEARNED THAT TANKS BUILT ALONG LINES OF WORLD WAR ONES WERE HIGHLY VULNERABLE AGAINST INFANTRY WHICH HAD THE COURAGE TO STAND THEIR GROUND AND BLOW THEM UP WITH GASOLINE BOMBS AND HAND GRENADES, AND GOT VALUABLE POINTERS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF BIGGER AND BETTER TANKS FOR THEIR PANZER DIVISIONS TO USE IN THE BLITZKRIEG ON FRANCE.

THE BRITISH FLEET CONTROLS THE HIGH SEAS, BUT IT CAN'T KEEP GERMAN BOMBERS BASED ON THE FRENCH COAST FROM ATTACKING THE ATLANTIC SHIPPING LANES LEADING TO ENGLISH PORTS.

IF THE GERMANS ARE ABLE WITHIN THE NEXT FEW MONTHS TO STEP UP THE INTENSITY OF THE AIR AND SUBMARINE ATTACKS ON SHIPPING IN THE ATLANTIC GREAT BRITAIN MAY FIND HER LOSSES TOPPING THE HIGH MARK OF THE WORLD WAR WHEN SHE NARROWLY ESCAPED BEING STARVED OUT.

THE PROBLEM IS MORE SERIOUS THAN IN THE WORLD WAR BECAUSE THE BRITISH ARE HANDICAPPED BY NOT BEING ABLE TO USE NAVAL BASES ON THE SOUTHERN COAST OF IRELAND. THE GERMANS KNOW THIS. THAT MAY BE WHY BOMBS RECENTLY HAVE BEEN DROPPED IN THE DUBLIN AREA. PERHAPS IT WAS A WARNING, "IF YOU DON'T WANT TO BE BLITZED, DON'T LET BRITAIN USE THOSE BASES."

THE GERMANS, ON THE OTHER HAND, ENJOY A MUCH MORE EFFECTIVE STRATEGIC POSITION THAN IN THE WORLD WAR. THEY NOW OCCUPY THE ENTIRE FRENCH WESTERN COAST. DORNIERS WHICH MAKE ONLY 150 MILES AN HOUR ARE GOOD ENOUGH FOR THE JOB. THEY CAN OPERATE IN DAYTIME BY TAKING COVER IN CLOUDS WHEN SIGHTED BY BRITISH FIGHTERS, AND IT IS ONLY A SHORT FLIGHT BACK TO THE FRENCH BASES.

ENROUTE FROM ENGLAND TO LISBON IN DECEMBER, OUR FLYING BOAT SIGHTED ONE OF THESE DORNIERS. IT TOOK NO CHANCES ON WHETHER WE CARRIED ARMAMENT OR NOT, AND QUICKLY SPED AWAY WITHOUT MOLESTING US.

THE GERMAN COASTAL BOMBERS NOT ONLY ATTACK SHIPPING, BUT PERFORM VALUABLE RECONNAISSANCE SERVICE FOR THE U-BOATS, PROWLING THE ATLANTIC, RADIOING THE POSITION OF CONVOYS.

THE PROBLEM MIGHT BECOME EVEN GRAVER, IF THE GERMAN MECHANIZED DIVISIONS CONCENTRATED NORTH OF THE PYRENEES MOVED INTO THE SPANISH PENINSULA AND OCCUPIED THE NORTHERN AND WESTERN SPANISH COASTS AS WELL AS PORTUGAL AND THE COAST DOWN TO GIBRALTAR.

A WELL-INFORMED BUSINESS MAN WHO HAS JUST COME OUT OF SPAIN TOLD ME SPAIN WOULD RESENT A GERMAN OCCUPATION OF ANY PART OF HER TERRITORY, BUT SHE IS TOO WEAK TO RESIST. IT IS DOUBTFUL THAT SPAIN WOULD PUT UP ANY KIND OF A FIGHT, ESPECIALLY SINCE THE FALANGIST PARTY--MANY OF WHOSE LEADERS ARE PRO-GERMAN--HAS BEEN GAINING IN POWER OVER THE MORE CONSERVATIVE SPANIARDS.

IT IS QUITE LIKELY, THIS OBSERVER TOLD ME, THE SPANISH FALANGISTS WOULD OPENLY JOIN IN AN ATTACK ON GIBRALTAR. A YEAR AGO, I WAS RELIABLY INFORMED WHEN I WAS IN MADRID THAT AT LEAST FIVE SPANISH DIVISIONS WERE SECRETLY STATIONED WITHIN STRIKING DISTANCE OF GIBRALTAR. AT THAT TIME, RANK AND FILE FALANGIST MEMBERS GOOKILY PREDICTED THE "ROCK" COULD BE CAPTURED IN A SHORT CAMPAIGN. TRAVELERS WHO HAVE COME RECENTLY FROM SOUTHERN SPAIN TOLD ME THE SPANISH DIVISIONS ARE STILL STATIONED NEAR GIBRALTAR, AND THAT ANY OFFICERS SUSPECTED OF BRITISH LEANINGS HAVE BEEN WEEDED OUT.

OBSERVERS WHO HAVE A CLOSE KNOWLEDGE OF THE PRESENT SITUATION IN SPAIN BELIEVE THE FRANCO GOVERNMENT WILL NOT MOVE FROM NON-BELLIGERENCY TO BELLIGERENCY UNLESS CONVINCED BY THE GERMANS THAT THE BATTLE FOR BRITAIN IS VIRTUALLY WON AND ONLY A KNOCKOUT BLOW IS NEEDED TO SEND THE EMPIRE TOPPLING.

AND WHETHER HITLER DECIDES ON OCCUPYING AT LEAST THE COAST REGIONS OF SPAIN WITHOUT THE PERMISSION OF FRANCO DEPENDS ON WHETHER HE CONSIDERS IT IS WORTH THE RISK OF FURTHER SPREADING OUT HIS HUGE ARMY.

JAN 12 1941

PORTUGAL IS NINETY PERCENT PRO-BRITISH, OBSERVERS IN LISBON SAY, BUT LACKING AN EFFECTIVE AIR FORCE AND ADEQUATE GROUND DEFENCES THE LITTLE COUNTRY WOULD FIND IT SUICIDAL TO ATTEMPT RESISTANCE.

LATIN AMERICAN REPUBLICS SET PATTERN FOR ECONOMIC COOPERATION.

EUROPE CLOSED BY WAR, THEY WORK AS UNIT
TO FIND NEW MARTS (1,000)

BY ALBURN WEST

(ADVANCE) WASHINGTON, JAN.11-(AP)-WITHOUT BENEFIT OF SCREAMING HEADLINES OR WIDE ACCLAIM, REPRESENTATIVES OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS HERE IN WASHINGTON ARE PLAYING A MAJOR ROLE IN FASHIONING A FOUNDATION FOR PRECEDENT-SETTING ECONOMIC COOPERATION IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE.

JAN 12 1941

THESE REPRESENTATIVES ARE MEMBERS OF THE 13-MONTH-OLD INTER-AMERICAN FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC ADVISORY COMMITTEE CREATED BY THE PANAMA CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN FOREIGN MINISTERS. THEY INCLUDE AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS AND FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC EXPERTS ATTACHED TO THE VARIOUS EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS.

ALREADY THE COMMITTEE HAS MARKED UP THESE ACCOMPLISHMENTS AS ITS CONTRIBUTION TO THE CONCERTED ATTACK ON THE PUZZLING PROBLEM OF FINDING BUYERS FOR A HALF BILLION DOLLARS WORTH OF LATIN AMERICAN PRODUCTS FORMERLY SOLD TO EUROPE:

1-CREATION OF AN INTER-AMERICAN BANK--AN AGENCY IN WHICH THE VARIOUS AMERICAN NATIONS WOULD POOL CERTAIN AMOUNTS OF CAPITAL TO BE AVAILABLE FOR FINANCING NEW INDUSTRIES IN CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA.

2-CREATION OF THE INTER-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT COMMISSION--A GROUP OF FIVE INDUSTRIALISTS REPRESENTING NORTH, SOUTH AND CENTRAL AMERICA WHOSE AIM IS TO ANALYZE THE PRESENT ECONOMIC PLIGHT OF THE CONTINENT FROM THE PURELY BUSINESS VIEWPOINT AND FORMULATE REMEDIES.

3-NEGOTIATION OF A QUOTA SYSTEM ON COFFEE IMPORTS INTO THE UNITED STATES WHEREBY THE14 COFFEE PRODUCING COUNTRIES OF LATIN AMERICA AGREE, NOT WITHOUT SACRIFICE IN MANY CASES, TO DIVIDE A 16 MILLION BAG NORTH AMERICAN COFFEE MARKET AMONG THE PRODUCERS OF 27 MILLION BAGS OF COFFEE, THUS WIPING OUT CUT-THROAT COMPETITION FOR THAT MARKET.

4-SUMMONING OF THE FIRST INTER-AMERICAN MARITIME CONFERENCE TO TACKLE THE PROBLEMS OF OCEAN-GOING COMMERCE IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE. IT RECOMMENDED ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INTER-AMERICAN MARITIME COMMISSION TO DEAL WITH PERPLEXING PROBLEMS OF HEMISPHERIC COMMERCE GROWING OUT OF THE EUROPEAN WAR.

JAN 12 1941

WITH ITS FIRST MEET, THE COMMITTEE INITIATED A THREE-PHASE ATTACK ON THE PRIME PROBLEM OF SURPLUS PRODUCTS NOW PILING UP IN THREATENING PROPORTIONS THROUGHOUT LATIN AMERICA.

ONE GROUP HEADED BY DR.CARLOS PARDO, FIRST SECRETARY OF THE ARGENTINE EMBASSY, IS STUDYING THE GENERAL SUBJECT OF SURPLUS PRODUCTS; ANOTHER HEADED BY DR.LEON DEBAYLE, NICARAGUAN MINISTER, SEEKS MEANS TO AID THE AILING LATIN AMERICAN COTTON PRODUCING INDUSTRY, WHILE THE THIRD, HEADED BY ANDRES PASTORIZA, MINISTER OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, SEEKS WAYS TO IMPROVE THE LOT OF CACAO PRODUCERS.

X X X CACAO PRODUCERS.

A RADICALLY NEW DEPARTURE IN INTER-AMERICAN RELATIONS, THE COMMITTEE STARTED "FROM SCRATCH" THIRTEEN MONTHS AGO.

"X X X THE GROUP HERE ASSEMBLED IS ATTEMPTING A TASK NEW IN THE HISTORY OF WORLD AFFAIRS," UNDERSECRETARY OF STATE SUMNER WELLES, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE, TOLD HIS COLLEAGUES AT THEIR FIRST SESSION IN THE CHAMBERS OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS AT THE PAN AMERICAN UNION, NOVEMBER 15, 1939.

JAN 12 1941

"THIS IS AN INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE TO FORWARD THE CAUSE OF COOPERATIVE ECONOMIC LIFE IN OUR HEMISPHERE. IT MEETS, NOT IN A SPIRIT OF COMPETITION, BUT IN THE DESIRE TO WORK OUT METHODS OF ACTION BY WHICH THE TWENTY-ONE AMERICAN PEOPLES RECOGNIZE THE JUST RIGHT OF ALL THE MEMBER NATIONS TO LIVE THEIR NORMAL LIVES, AND TO HAVE MADE AVAILABLE TO THEM THE MEANS BY WHICH THEY MAY IMPROVE THE CONDITION OF THEIR PEOPLE. THIS HAS COME ABOUT NOT THROUGH EMPIRE OR CONQUEST, BUT THROUGH COMMON SENSE AND REASON. IF WE SUCCEED, AS I FEEL WE WILL, OUR SUCCESS WILL STAND AS A GREAT MILESTONE ON THE ROAD TO A PEACEFUL, A HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS NEW WORLD."

THE WAR WAS BARELY TWO MONTHS OLD WHEN WELLES SPOKE. SIX MONTHS LATER GERMAN LEGIONS SWEPT THROUGH THE LOW COUNTRIES AND THEN ITALY ENTERED THE WAR--LATIN-AMERICA'S $525,573,000 (IN 1938) EUROPEAN MARKET FOR EXPORTS WAS VIRTUALLY WIPED AWAY.

IN RAPID SUCCESSION PLENIPOTENTIARIES OF THE AMERICAS MET IN HAVANA TO OUTLINE A BROAD PROGRAM OF MILITARY AND ECONOMIC DEFENSE OF THE HEMISPHERE. PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ASKED FOR AND WAS GRANTED A $500,000,000 INCREASE IN THE UNITED STATES' EXPORT-IMPORT BANK'S CAPITAL FOR LOANS TO THE HARD-PRESSED "GOOD-NEIGHBORS."

DOLLARS WAS THE IMMEDIATE NEED. BEFORE THE WAR THESE COUNTRIES IN MANY INSTANCES HAD SOLD RAW MATERIALS TO EUROPE AND THERE OBTAINED EXCHANGE WITH WHICH TO OFFSET THEIR UNFAVORABLE TRADE BALANCES IN THE UNITED STATES. WITH THE LOSS OF EXPORT MARKETS CAME THE LOSS OF SOURCES OF SUPPLY FOR NEEDED IMPORTS. AS A RESULT THEY WERE FORC-ED TO BUY HEAVILY IN THE UNITE

OF SOURCES OF SUPPLY FOR NEEDED IMPORTS. AS A RESULT THEY WERE FORC-ED TO BUY HEAVILY IN THE UNITED STATES. THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK EXTENDED CREDITS TO PROVIDE THE NEEDED EXCHANGE TO PAY FOR MANY OF THESE PURCHASES. BRAZIL, CHILE, PERU AND ARGENTINA, AMONG OTHERS, RECEIVED SUCH LOANS.

THE EXTENSION OF CREDITS BY THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK AND THE TREASURY WERE MEASURES FOR TEMPORARY RELIEF. THE INTER-AMERICAN ADVISORY COMMITTEE CONCENTRATED ON REMEDIES OF A MORE PERMANENT CHAR-ACTER.

TWO SUCH MEASURES, THE INTER-AMERICAN BANK AND THE COFFEE QUOTA SYSTEM OF IMPORTS INTO THE UNITED STATES, ARE EXPECTED TO RE-CEIVE APPROVAL OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS SOON. XX

WILLKIE URGES PASSAGE OF ALL-OUT AID BILL; TO LEAVE FOR BRITAIN SOON

Believes Extraordinary Powers Must Be Granted President, But For A Fixed Term—Says Congress Should Not Be Harried

[Copyright by New York Times]

New York, Jan. 12—Indicating the probability of a rift in the Republican party on the aid-to-Britain bill, Mr. Landon, by telephone from Topeka, Kan., commented on Mr. Willkie's statement as follows:

"There is no essential difference between Mr. Willkie's position and Mr. Roosevelt's position, which is to go to war, if necessary, to help England win. If Mr. Willkie had revealed it before the Republican National Convention, he would not have been nominated, and, if Mr. Roosevelt had revealed it before election, he would not have been reelected."

JAN 13 1941

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 12—Wendell L. Willkie declared today he favored "with modification" President Roosevelt's "lend-lease" arms bill, and announced he would fly soon to England for a private survey of the international situation.

He asserted the bill should grant powers to the President "for a fixed term, not too far in the future" and that Congress should not be "harried" in its passage.

JAN 13 1941

Extraordinary Powers

The defeated Republican Presidential candidate expressed the belief the nation faced an emergency under which "extraordinary powers must be granted to the elected Executive."

His announcement was contained in a 1,200-word statement given out at his office in the Hotel Commodore and amplified through questions and answers at a press conference.

Concerning his trip abroad, Willkie made it clear he would go solely as a private citizen, and said he sought personal contact with the situation abroad "just as I did when I was practicing law and wanted to know the facts of a case."

Approval In Three Hours

He disclosed that he had applied for a passport three days ago directly to Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, and had received the Secretary's approval within three hours. He said he intended to travel to Europe by clipper, would stay in England two or three weeks, and would probably return to the practice of law when he came back.

Inferentially, Willkie took exception to Alfred M. Landon's recent statement on British-American relations with the words:

"I refute the statement that our national security is not involved in a British defeat. The difference between a British defeat or victory is not only military but economic."

Willkie said he had few concrete suggestions to make now concerning modifications of the lend-lease bill but might make suggestions later.

To See Most Anybody

Asked whom he intended to see in Europe, Willkie replied:

"Most anybody who wants to see me."

He added that he would try to make appointments abroad during the coming week, probably indicating that he hoped to start during the week of January 19. He said he knew no British Government leaders personally.

Willkie said he hoped to return in time to speak February 12 at the Lincoln Day dinner here of the National Republican Club.

Still Venturesome

Asked if he might try to visit unoccupied France, he replied:

"I don't expect to, but I still am young enough to be venturesome, I hope."

The text of Mr. Willkie's statement follows:

"The so-called 'lend-lease' bill now before Congress asks for an enormous grant of executive power. Under a democratic system, in which the people's power is preserved by limiting the powers of government, every such grant of power should be jealously scrutinized.

"That is a general rule for democracy, and that rule should be applied doubly to this bill. We must not lose our democracy at home while seeking to preserve democracy abroad. It is therefore the duty of the opposition to examine every provision of the bill thoroughly.

Asks Modification

"I have examined this bill in the light of the current emergency, and I personally have come to the conclusion that with modification it should be adopted.

"This is a critical moment in history. The United States is not a belligerent and we hope we shall not be. Our problem, however, is not alone to keep America out of war, but to keep war out of America.

"Democracy is endangered. And the American people are so aware of the danger that they have endorsed the policy of giving full and active aid to those democracies which are resisting aggression. At the same time the people are virtually unanimous in their desire to build for the United States the strongest defense system in the world.

Certain Considerations

"It is the history of democracy that, under such dire circumstances, extraordinary powers must be granted to the elected Executive. Democracy cannot hope to defend itself from aggression in any other way. It is for this reason only that I favor grant of power at this time to the present Administration.

"However, there are certain considerations that ought to be taken into account:

JAN 13 1941

1. "Congress must not be harried into passage of this bill. Some of these days by that process we will be rushed right out of our democracy. The bill should be subjected to thorough debate, and such amendments should be made as Congress, representing the people, may deem necessary to retain in its own hands the fundamental power to declare war.

2. "In a democracy, every grant of extraordinary power should contain a clause automatically giving that power back to the people. In the case of this bill the powers should be granted for a fixed term, not too far in the future, at which time Congress will automatically have a chance to review the bill and either continue the powers or revoke them.

Temporary Powers

"Likewise the bill should specifically provide that the powers granted are of a temporary and not a permanent nature.

3. "It is hoped the discussion of this bill does not take the form of opposition to granting power to this Administration just because it is this Administration. We could all wish that this Administration loved power less and that it more readily relinquished it when the purpose for which it was granted had ceased to exist.

"I think I can say without boast that no man in this country has done more to stress the record of this Administration in this regard, or to paint the dangers of it.

"Perfectly Serious Charges"

"I was, moreover, perfectly serious in my charge that the reelection of this Administration would jeopardize the continuation of the democratic process in the United States. And I believe many of its acts since reelection sustain my position.

"Yet the people chose this Administration, and we must abide by that choice. We must not fall into the fallacy of depriving it of powers necessary to defend us in order to preserve the mere forms of democratic procedure. We must give it the power to act in this emergency, while at the same time assuring ourselves, by competent amendments, of a reversion of that power to us after the emergency is over.

4. "It is to be hoped that the national debt concerning the bill will not assume a partisan aspect. This should be true even though the Administration pointedly excluded Republicans from the formulating and drafting of the bill and daily continues its partisan attacks. The Republicans will gain much in public esteem if they ignore this confusion of partisanship with patriotism.

5. "While the debate over this bill is going on, the Administration can well devote itself without loss of time in the accomplishment of our national objective to concentrating on organizing the defense program.

"Defense Is Lagging"

"This program is obviously lagging. The Administration has failed to make simple organizational moves that would bring about more rapid production. There is still too much politics, public showmanship, and cheap propaganda in the defense program and the plans are still obscure. Big industrial names do not build a defense. Organization, planning and hard work will. We must place more confidence in industry—whether labor or management—and set ourselves higher goals.

6. "I hope the debate concerning this bill is confined to the merits of the bill. Appeasers, isolationists, or lip-service friends of Britain will seek to sabotage the program for aid to Britain and her Allies behind the screen of opposition to the bill.

"It makes a vital difference to the United States which side prevails in the present conflict. I refute the statement that our national security is not involved in a British defeat.

Economic And Military

"The difference between a British defeat or victory is not only military but economic. For many years now, owing to the restrictive economic legislation of the New Deal and to the unrest and uncertainty of Europe, we have been maintaining our standard of living by lavish deficit spending. In the long run this expedient won't work. It will end in national bankruptcy, inflation, collapse and the supplanting of the democratic system by a totalitarian system in this country.

"If Germany wins the present war and the trade routes of the world are closed to us or opened only on a totalitarian base, we shall inevitably suffer either such a collapse or the adoption of totalitarian controls of our economic life. We shall be driven back to a controlled economy as to both foreign and domestic trade.

Hope For Democracy

"The hope for democracy is the victory of those powers which believe in our way of life, and in a peace that really assures the principle of free enterprise throughout the world, the reopening of the trade routes, the reestablishment of the open markets and the rebirth of the confidence of men in one another.

"The present bill, I believe, must be considered in the light of the total situation. We must see the world whole, and we must recognize the dangers that face us, not alone from within, but also from without.

"For this very reason I am personally planning in the near future a trip to England. I shall take the trip in order to see what conditions are over there, and to obtain a broader perspective on such matters as this current bill, and other problems with which the American people will inevitably be faced while democracy is under attack."

Wins Hyde Park Approval

Hyde Park, N. Y., Jan. 12 (AP)—Wendell L. Willkie's qualified endorsement of the Administration's "lease-lend" bill for aid to Britain produced expressions of gratification at the temporary White House tonight, but officials said they were unable to obtain immediate comment from President Roosevelt.

BULGARIA TERMED OPPOSED TO 'ISMS'

Philoff Says His Nation Is No Place For Red, Nazi Or Fascist Tenets

Premier Warns, However, That Country May Be Forced Into War

[By the Associated Press]

Ruse, Bulgaria, Jan. 12—Premier Bogdan Philoff told his people tonight that they might yet be brought into the war, but he said he was sure they "would not forgive anybody who tried to make Bulgaria National Socialist (Nazi), Communist or Fascist."

In a speech at this frontier town, just across the Danube from Rumania (where hundreds of thousands of German soldiers are massed), the Premier avoided reference to reports abroad of German pressure on Bulgaria, but said specifically that Bulgaria wants to follow her own traditions.

Not To Be Transplanted

"National Socialism, Fascism and Communism may be good for Germany, Italy and Russia," he said, "but they cannot be transplanted to Bulgarian soil," he declared.

President Roosevelt's recent statements, he said, reflects the dangers of the present "gigantic battle which threatens to go around the whole world."

The President's message to Congress, he went on, "unquestionably" is an indication of a long war which is likely to spread to other parts of the world.

To Guard Against War

The aims of Bulgarian foreign policy, he said, are "to guard the people from the terror of war and in general to keep Bulgaria and all the Balkans at peace," but he added:

"To keep the peace does not depend on Bulgaria. We must realize that one day we may have to enter the war."

Stressing that "the people must be prepared to defend their vital interests," the Premier thanked Italy, Germany and Russia for settlement of the Dobruja question. Southern Dobruja, by Axis arbitration, was returned to Bulgaria by Rumania some weeks ago.

30.24-6937

30.24-6937

Friendly To Rumania

He spoke in friendly fashion of Rumania and said Bulgaria hoped to obtain her other revisionist claims by peaceful means.

The general impression among Bulgarians was that Philoff foresaw that a power such as Germany might enter Bulgaria but it would be under Bulgarian protest. Should this involve other powers, they said, Bulgaria must defend her interests, if need be.

Philoff said the army is better equipped than even in the last war when Bulgaria was a German ally or in the Balkan wars, although rearmament has been under way only two years.

Philoff's address was broadcast. His audience was estimated at 10,000 persons. Other Ministers of the Government spoke along similar lines in other cities.

NAZI RAIDERS TRY AGAIN TO BURN LONDON

Capital Second Night In Row Fights Off 4-Hour Fire Bombardment

Defense Guns Force Many German Planes To Jettison Their Bombs

[By the Associated Press]

Geneva, Monday, Jan. 13—An air-raid alarm sounded in Geneva at 3.55 A. M. today. Air-raid alarms in Switzerland usually mean British planes are en route to or from raids on Italy.

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 12—The Nazi air force made another attempt to burn London tonight, showering down high explosives and incendiaries on certain districts while scores of regular firemen and auxiliary fire service men, aided by hundred of civilians, risked their lives to prevent the spread of flames.

Great numbers of planes passed over the city at intervals to the accompaniment of violent anti-aircraft fire.

Raiders also spread their operations over other parts of England, attacking a southwest town for some hours while the ground defenses tried to drive them off.

Many Raiders Turned Back

Reports said scores of Nazi planes were turned back at the Thames Estuary and jettisoned their loads in the marshes under the heavy anti-aircraft fire.

The incendiaries which dropped on one town in the Thames Estuary area were reported to have done little property damage and all fires were quickly controlled.

A dozen incendiary bombs fell on houses in a town near London and were quickly extinguished. Auxiliary territorial service girls and volunteer watchers helped extinguish these bombs.

On Heels Of Earlier Attack

The raiders began coming over early in the evening while the capital was still clearing away the debris of last night's four-hour raid which, due to the quick work of hundreds of citizens, fell in fire damage far below the big raid of December 29-30, when London's firemen found it impossible to cope with all the bombs.

As with last night, however, the all-clear sounded after the attack had lasted about four hours.

German planes also were reported over Liverpool and a town in northeast England.

Relays of bombers roared across the south coast and were reported to have fanned out for attacks as far as western England.

Heavy Explosions Frequent

Some time after the London sirens sounded, British fighters were heard circling overhead, indicating that an R. A. F. night combat force was taking the air against the raiders.

Heavy explosions were heard at frequent intervals rumbling over the steady clatter of anti-aircraft fire.

The authoritative Press Association said the Nazi invaders were flying in relays over the Thames Estuary at intervals of about three minutes.

Firefighters Run To Posts

Fire engines, sirens and anti-aircraft guns in London and the outskirts set up a terrific clamor and thousands of volunteer fire watchers ran to their posts.

Even as the guns roared and the Nazi planes could be heard high overhead, reports were still coming in on the extent of last night's raid, and people were still being dug out of the debris, some alive and some dead.

One report said eight pedestrians were killed and many injured by a bomb which fell in a London street. Eight persons were killed and many buried in a hit on a hospital and three were killed at another hospital.

Watcher Conscription Forecast

As a result of Saturday night's fire raid, the Press Association's lobby correspondent said today, there is likely to be further pressure on the Government for conscription of men for air-raid precaution duty.

The Ministry of Home Security announced that more than 100,000 Londoners had answered the urgent call of Herbert Morrison, Minister of Home Security, for fire-bomb fighters to man the roofs and streets, but said the total "was far short of the number required."

Morrison urged "at least one member of every family to volunteer to insure that not a single house, office, factory or building" be left unprotected.

The Air Ministry communique said one of last night's German raiders was shot down.

Nazis Report 3 British Planes Downed In France

Berlin, Jan. 12 (AP)—Military objectives in London and other British cities were subjected to a heavy German air bombardment early tonight, informed sources said.

Earlier in the day three British Hurricane planes attempting to fly into northern France in the region between Calais and Boulogne were shot down, they said.

A British raid on the piers of Zeebrugge Saturday did not cause any military damage, it was asserted. Four bombs were dropped and they all fell into the sea, the Germans said.

British Raids On Germany

British bombers attacking Northern Germany last night damaged buildings with high explosives and incendiary bombs, informed sources declared today.

"Not a single military objective was hit," these sources added.

The attack was said to have followed intensive Nazi raids directed against objectives in the London area.

Returning German pilots said they saw huge fires started in the British capital.

British Ship Declared Sunk

A 3,000-ton merchant vessel was reported sunk at the mouth of the Humber river by a German bomber who said he also scored direct hits on buildings and destroyed an unidentified British airport.

A later announcement said the wrecked airport was at Ramsgate.

This announcement said two German planes, attacking at low altitudes, bombed hangars and the administration building. One hangar was said to have been smashed by a direct hit.

Portsmouth Digging Out

PORTSMOUTH, England, Jan. 12 (AP).—Soldiers, sailors and civilians of this navy town passed the week end digging victims from buildings blasted during the heavy air attack Friday night.

Historic buildings and art treasures were among the things destroyed, but already a new civic center is planned to replace the old. All public services are expected to be working fully within a few days.

MOSCOW DENIES GIVING CONSENT TO NAZI TROOP PASSAGE INTO BULGARIA

Says Germany Never Asked Permission To Cross Danube

Asserts Sofia Made No Inquiries About Invasion Threat

[By the Associated Press]

Moscow, Jan. 12—Soviet Russia has not consented to any passage of German troops into Bulgaria, nor has she been informed of such a move if it has occurred, it was announced officially late tonight.

A special communique distributed by Tass was broadcast by the Moscow radio at 11 P. M., an hour ahead of the usual news bulletin.

The official news agency's statement, in denial of foreign press reports, asserted Germany never has asked Russia's consent to the entrance of German soldiers into Bulgaria and Bulgaria never has approached Russia with an inquiry regarding the passage of German troops through her borders.

Case Of Rumania Cited

A similar communique was issued at the time of the entry of the Germans into Rumania last fall.

Russia and Bulgaria traditionally have maintained close and friendly relations as "sister Slavic" nations.

[Tass denials of reports allegedly published outside Russia usually constitute the Kremlin's method of making its position known by indirection rather than by a direct statement.]

The Tass statement said that if German troops actually are in Bulgaria and if the further dispatch of German troops to Bulgaria is under way, "all this has occurred without the knowledge and consent of the U. S. S. R., since the German side never raised before the U. S. S. R. the question of the presence or dispatch of German troops to Bulgaria."

Moscow "Never Approached"

"In particular," Tass added, "the Bulgarian Government never approached the U. S. S. R. with an inquiry regarding the passage of troops to Bulgaria and consequently could not receive any reply from the U. S. S. R."

The Tass statement began with an assertion that the foreign press, "referring to certain Bulgarian circles as the source of information," had circulated a report that a certain number of German troops already had been sent to Bulgaria, that the dispatching of Nazi troops to Bulgaria was continuing with the knowledge and consent of Russia and that the Russian Government had "replied by consent to an inquiry by the Bulgarian Government concerning the passage of German troops to Bulgaria."

Molotoff Dines Nazis

Vyacheslaff M. Molotoff, Soviet Russian Premier-Foreign Commissar, was host last night at a dinner at his official residence, Spiridonovka, to the German trade mission headed by Karl Schnurre and the German Embassy staff, headed by Ambassador Count Friedrich Werner von der Schulenberg.

The dinner also was attended by A. I. Mikoyan, Commissar of Foreign Trade; Andrei Y. Vishinsky, Vice Commissar of Foreign Affairs; Marshal Gregory Kulik, Vice Commissar of Defense, and other high Soviet officials.

British Hopeful They Can Curb Night Bombers

Progress Seen in Germans' Admission of Losses; High Raiders a Problem

LONDON, Jan. 12 (AP).—The British Press Association's air correspondent said today that Germany's admission that six planes had failed to return from Friday night's raids, in which the British claimed only two, may mean "progress is being made in the search for a thoroughly convincing answer to the night bomber."

The writer added that a search was being made by the best brains of Great Britain for methods of locating high-flying raiders, and that there was reason to believe British instruments already in use were "in advance of anything yet evolved by the enemy."

Opinion varies as to the proportion of losses which any effective reply must entail. The Press Association's correspondent quoted one senior army expert as saying: "I shall not be content until we bring down 10 per cent of all night raiders."

Experts, the correspondent added, were not overlooking the possibility that the German air force might be using sub-stratosphere raiders when lower altitudes became too hot for them.

Already, against low-flying raiders, the Bofors gun, equipped with a new predictor, had shown itself to be an absolute "killer," scoring a hit in every twenty rounds, the correspondent said.

"There is evidence," he continued, "that concentration of fire on the estimated position of the raiders, as distinct from a barrage or 'wall of fire,' has proved effective. For instance, a high percentage of raiders in the later stages of the Coventry 'blitz' were thus turned away. Incidentally, rumors that the City's guns ran out of ammunition are groundless.

"Finally, it is calculated that the expenditure of British anti-aircraft shells instead of increasing, as the night blitz goes into its fifth month, has in fact dropped two-thirds."

British Leftists Open Drive for A 'People's' Rule

Pritt, Rebel Laborite, Asks Public Ownership, Peace 'Without Annexations'

LONDON, Jan. 12 (AP).—A campaign for a "people's government," with power to take over banks, land transport and big industries, was launched today by a "rebel" Laborite, Denis Pritt, at a meeting here of 2,000 workers' representatives.

Pritt, fifty-three years old, a lawyer educated at Winchester, one of England's most exclusive schools, offered a resolution demanding also a higher standard of living, adequate air-raid shelters, restoration of all trade-union rights, independence for India, friendship for Soviet Russia and "a people's peace."

Pritt is a former associate of Sir Stafford Cripps, now Great Britain's Ambassador to Russia. Pritt represents an extremist element of the British labor movement. A member of the House of Commons, he was expelled from the Labor party last March because he refused to join in condemnation of the Russian invasion of Finland.

"Our policy," he declared, "is to offer to the peoples of the enemy a peace of no annexations, no reparations or indemnities, with liberty to all peoples to determine their own destiny. "We know that the German people, freed from fears based on the declarations of British propagandists, will no longer be willing to fight and suffer for Hitler's aims but will accept such an offer, if it is made by a people's government in whom they have confidence."

In a disclaimer that the movement is pro-Hitler, Pritt said he and his followers had been enemies of the German Fuehrer for years, while "ministers, press lords, bankers and industrial bosses have been licking his boots, indorsing his submarines, financing him, building up his strength and presenting him with one country after another, one armament factory after another."

The resolution introduced by Pritt was adopted, as well as a resolution by W. J. R. Squance, former general secretary of the Locomotive Engineers and Firemen's Union, calling for a campaign to win support of workers in the struggle for a "people's government" and to end the policy of collaboration between Labor party leadership and Conservatives.

Sponsorship of the convention apparently was vested in no particular organization, but was merely that of a number of Leftists, with the Communist newspaper "The Daily Worker" giving prominence to accounts of its doings.

Church Services As Usual

London, Jan. 12 (AP).—Services as usual were conducted today in an 800-year-old London parish church, bombed last week, although a gaping hold in the roof let in a chilly wind, the heating-plant was out of order and crushed pipes silenced the organ.

British Meat Ration Stands

LONDON, Jan. 12 (AP).—The Food Ministry announced today that the meat ration for the week starting tomorrow and until further notice would be the equivalent of 23 cents weekly for adults and of sightly more than 11 cents for children. Thus the ration allowance is to remain at the level set last Wednesday, when it was reduced twopence (a little more than three cents).

Additional U.S. Stocks Taken Up By British

LONDON, Jan. 12 (AP).—The British Treasury announced tonight it had taken over all individual British holdings in another large block of American dollar securities in an order dated yesterday, listing prices to be paid their owners in six weeks.

The list included forty-five stocks and sixty bonds.

Holders of foreign securities were required to register them with the Treasury early in the war. The purpose was to give the Treasury an opportunity to obtain foreign exchange by assuming the securities and paying their owners in sterling.

The stocks affected by the new order include American Tobacco 6 per cent cumulative preferred, First National Bank of New York capital and General Motors $5 cumulative preferred.

The bonds include various issues of United States Treasury bonds and certain Union Pacific bearer and registered bonds.

Swiss Batteries Shell Waves of Foreign Planes

Geneva, Zurich and Basel Seek Shelter 5 Times, a Record

BERNE, Jan. 12 (AP).—Swiss anti-aircraft guns fired at waves of foreign planes which flew over Switzerland last night. There was no report of bombs dropped on Swiss soil but unconfirmed reports indicated bombs fell on the French town of Valence, on the Rhone River.

One plane described as British was said to have made a forced landing in France just across the Swiss border. The Italian high command said planes which last night attacked Turin and Savigliano, in northern Italy, were British.

Residents of Geneva, Zurich and Basel took shelter five times during the night, the most alarms in Switzerland on any night since the war started.

Tepelini Is Reported Captured By Greeks, With Italians Fleeing

Belgrade Hears Main Fascist Army Is Streaming Northward, Central Albanian Front Broken; Little Resistance Encountered in Town

By The Associated Press

BELGRADE, Jan. 12.—Capture by Greek soldiers of the mountain village of Tepelini, which the Greeks said meant a definite break of the whole Italian front in central Albania, was reported tonight in Yugoslav border dispatches. They said the little town had fallen with hardly any Fascist resistance and that the main Italian army in that sector was fleeing to mountains northwest of Tepelini.

[A United Press correspondent with the Greek forces near Tepelini reported that a battle for heights surrounding it was continuing, but said that Greek scouts had entered the village on Saturday, to find it looted and abandoned.]

The fall of Tepelini, if verified, means that the Greeks have achieved the object of a two-pronged offensive against Tepelini and Klisura, ten miles eastward of Tepelini. Klisura was captured Friday. Tepelini is fifty-five miles south of the important Fascist port of Valona, on the Adriatic Sea, and is connected with that city by a highway built by the Italians during the World War.

Border reports said the Greeks had entered Tepelini from the south and had encountered little resistance. The city already had been evacuated by the Italians, it was said.

The Greeks, after taking Klisura, were reported yesterday as driving onward toward Berati, thirty miles north of Klisura.

Commands River Valleys

[Tepelini commands the valleys of the Viosa (Aoos), Drin and Bensa Rivers. It has a population of 500. It possesses what the National Geographic Society describes as the most extensive ruin in Albania, the great castle of Ali Pasha, the "Lion of Tepelini," who became the most powerful pasha of the Ottoman Empire and an ally of Napoleon. Ali garnered great treasures, and the fortress at Tepelini was said to have been valued at one time at $10,000,000.]

Pursuit of Italians Continues

ATHENS, Jan. 12 (AP).—Italian troops, driven out of Klisura when the Greeks took that Albanian town Friday, continued their northward retreat tonight with the Greeks in close pursuit, it was reported here.

There was no confirmation that the Greeks had captured Tepelini, as reported in advices received on the Yugoslav frontier, but the town's fall had been expected.

Reports from the Albanian front said Greek planes again had machine-gunned the fleeing Italian columns, which included hundreds of trucks, tanks and other motorized equipment.

An Italian officer captured near Klisura was reported as saying the "Italians are in a most critical situation as a result of the break in their lines at this key point."

The Greeks continued to clean up isolated Italian detachments in the Klisura area while others fought around Tepelini.

In the coastal sector, the Greeks made further advances toward Valona despite desperate Fascist resistance, it was said.

The government spokesman gave this picture of the fighting:

"Despite difficulties of terrain and other difficulties governing operations in Albania, our units continued their attacks successfully and threw back the enemy from fortified positions which he was holding after extremely rapid action which took the Italians by surprise.

"The enemy left in our hands ten mortars of 81 millimeters, eight heavy and one light machine-gun and much material not yet counted. The Italian surprise was so great and the retreat so quick the enemy had no time to take away materials and suffered heavy losses, leaving forty dead.

"At another point of the front, we took seven officers and 114 prisoners. They are in very bad shape. Their feelings betrayed that they considered themselves happy the ordeal was over.

"The Italians during their retreat abandoned stores of clothing, food and supplies."

500 Greeks Abducted

Whole Families Reported Taken by Retreating Italians

ATHENS, Jan. 12 (AP).—Whole families of Greeks in the Albanian border region of Konitza were among a total of approximately 500 Greeks abducted by the retreating Italian army, the Ministry of Home Security declared tonight.

"Among those abducted are men, women, children, babes, priests, scientists, and agriculturists," the communique said. "Of these families, all members have been abducted in some cases. . . . Their fate is unknown."

Rome Reports 2 Cruisers Hit In Axis Attacks

Says One British Ship Was 'Seen Sinking' in Raids on Mediterranean Flotilla

ROME, Jan. 12 (AP).—In the continuing German-Italian Mediterranean offensive against Great Britain's naval might, the Italian high command reported today, a British cruiser was "seen sinking" after a torpedo attack and another cruiser was hit by German bombers from the air.

One of two Italian torpedo boats which attacked an array of British ships, the Italians said, was sunk, but their torpedoes left a cruiser in a sinking condition and two destroyers with flames visible on board.

"Units of the German Air Corps," the communique said, "continuing the brilliant action begun yesterday, carried out a scouting offensive against English squadrons. Two important groups of warships were attacked. One cruiser of the Birmingham type (9,100 tons) was hit for certain with a heavy bomb."

[The German high command said "one cruiser and several other warships suffered heavy bomb hits" during a "repeat attack on a British flotilla in the Mediterranean."]

The earlier attack was the first action for the Nazi air force in the Mediterranean, and the Italian communique yesterday listed these results attained by Axis airmen: A British aircraft carrier hit by an Italian aerial torpedo, another hit by Italian bombs and one also hit by German bombs; a cruiser hit twice in Italian dive-bomber attacks; a destroyer hit by German bombs.

The attacks reported today were said to have occurred "in the central Mediterranean"; those yesterday in the Sicilian channel, between the Italian island of Sicily and French Tunisia, in North Africa.

The battle between surface forces was placed Friday in the Straits of Sicily. The communique said it began when a patrol of two torpedo boats "sighted an important enemy naval formation composed of numerous surface units" at dawn.

A new overnight British air raid on the northern Italian industrial city of Turin and also on Savagliano was acknowledged. It was charged that the raiders had passed over neutral Switzerland to deliver the attack, but the results in both places were minimized.

At Turin, the communique said, "some civilian factories were hit," three persons were killed and four wounded; at Savagliano, "a military hospital, some dwellings and a parochial church" were damaged, but there were no casualties.

In the Palermo raid, the R. A. F. reported, shipping was the main objective.

"One bomb fell very close to a merchant vessel of about 8,000 tons," it said. "Of twelve ships along the outer mole, one received a direct hit and four others were believed to have been damaged. Fires and explosions were caused among warehouses."

The R. A. F. also raided Benina and Berka airdromes again and told of bombs straddling buildings, "causing large fires and a number of explosions near dispersed aircraft."

Other aircraft raided Bengasi, capital of Cirenaica, and, the British said, "one heavy bomb hit a large building of military importance. Fires were started on the jetty and shipping was believed to have been badly damaged."

The Caproni workshops and gasoline dumps were bombed in another raid on Maiadaga, Italian East Africa, the communique said. It also reported air attacks on Berbera, Somaliland, captured by the Italians last summer, and the Jig-Jiga landing ground. From these widespread operations, the British added, all planes returned safely.

British Step Up Tobruk Shelling With New Guns

Artillery Hauled 70 Miles Over Sands; Italians Quit Five Bombed Air Bases

By The Associated Press

CAIRO, Jan. 12.—Fresh British guns hauled across the Libyan sands joined the shelling of the besieged Italian seaport base of Tobruk tonight while the Royal Air Force continued to raid Fascist centers in Africa and reported that Italian planes had been chased from five air bases in eastern Libya.

The new artillery came seventy miles from the Bardia region, where it had played a major role in softening Italian defenses for the final British-Australian attack on that captured Fascist base. Tobruk, with a garrison believed smaller than the nearly 45,000 troops who were killed, wounded or captured at Bardia, has been caught in a ring of British steel for five days, with the defenders' retreat cut off.

An R. A. F. communique told tonight of more attacks on the Italians in Libya and a raid by the fleet air arm on Palermo, on Sicily's northern coast.

The R. A. F. said fighters, maintaining a constant patrol in eastern Libya, reported that "Derna, Martuba, El Tmimi and El Gazala were all clear of enemy aircraft except for a considerable number that were unserviceable" and that the Bomba seaplane base, between Tobruk and Derna, "appears to have been abandoned by the enemy."

"Twenty burned-out aircraft were reported as abandoned on the Gazala landing ground," the communique said.

Haile Selassie in Sudan Guiding Ethiopian Revolt

Gives British Guns to Former Subjects Who Fight Italians

KHARTUM, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Jan. 12 (AP).—Haile Selassie, dethroned by the Italian conquerors of Ethiopia five years ago, is receiving a constant stream of tribal revolutionary agents in this city, only 300 miles from the Ethiopian frontier.

These native tribesmen, loyal to the ex-Emperor, have been evading Italian border patrols to cross into the Sudan and establish contact with the Lion of Judah, who has set up an informal court here.

Here they receive guns and ammunitions furnished them by the British through their exiled leader, and re-enter Ethiopia to carry on guerrilla activities against the Italians.

Guerrilla fighting has been reported to be especially heavy in southern Ethiopia, and there have been estimates that 200,000 Ethiopians were active throughout the country.

The former Negus Negusti is ready to enter Ethiopia himself to head the revolt the moment he and the British deem it opportune.

Reds Map Industrial To Fill Consumer Need

Regional Commissariats Put in Control of Plants

MOSCOW, Jan. 12 (AP).—The Council of People's Commissars and the Central Committee of the Communist party decreed today a widesperad reorganization and expansion of local industries in Soviet Russia.. A decree said the "production of consumers' goods and food products from local materials lags behind the growing demands of the population." . . .

People's commissariats, committees in each region, were placed in control of local industries and were ordered to establish definite plans of production and consumption. Price fixing also was put under them.

Local authorities were ordered to increase the number of metal works, textile plants and other factories and shops.

Shipment of products from one area to another possessing the same resources was discouraged in order to relieve transport facilities and independently develop each district's industries.

Another decree established a new system of compulsory delivery of milk by collective farms to the state —putting it on a basis of acreage for each farm instead of the number of cattle. This decree was designed to increase cattle breeding.

Siam Records Gains in Thurst Into Cambodia

Omits Details in Reporting Fierce Fights; Threatens Bombardment of Saigon

BANGKOK, Jan. 12 (AP).—The Thai (Siamese) high command reported today that fierce fighting was developing in the French Indo-Chinese Province of Cambodia, which Thai troops invaded in force last week.

The communique said an advance was continuing steadily with effective co-operation from the air force, but it gave no place names or details. Well informed unofficial circles said they believed large stretches of Cambodia's frontier regions had been occupied. Heavy artillery fire was reported along the Mekong River, which separates Indo-China's Laos Province from Tailand."

In the exchange of retaliation threats over aerial bombardments by both Thailanders and the French, the Bangkok radio asked if the French authorities were prepared for bombardment of Saigon and other cities, adding "Thailanders cannot wait further."

Answering the Saigon radio's suggestion that France was prepared to negotiate a settlement of the frontier dispute, in whichThailand is pressing an old territorial claim, the Thai radio announced that this country always was ready for negotiations. It said, however, that any French delegation should come with recognition in principle of Thailand's claims, and that the French forces must suspend hostilities and withdraw from frontier regions.

China and Russia in New Deal

CHUNGKING, Jan. 12 (AP).—An agreement on the third part of a Chinese-Russian pact, providing for exchange of Chinese minerals, for Russian military machinery and supplies, was reported today by "Sao Tang Jih Pao," Chinese army newspaper. It said the goods exchanged would amount to the equivalent of $100,000,000.

The second part of the agreement, reported Jan. 3, was said to have involved exchange of Chinese wool for Russian supplies. The first part, providing for an exchange of Chinese tea for Russian material, was announced Dec. 11.

Norwegian Girls Marry Swedes at Boundary Line

By The Associated Press.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Jan. 12—Love, which has been known to laugh at locksmiths, is circumventing immigration restrictions between German-occupied Norway and Sweden.

Sources at Oslo, Norway, say a great many weddings are taking place along the Norwegian-Swedish border, with Norwegian girls standing just within the boundary and their Swedish sweethearts just over the line in Sweden.

When a couple is pronounced husband and wife, the girl steps across the border as a Swedish citizen.

GERMAN PRIEST ACCUSED

Action Is Begun to Deport Him From the Philippines

MANILA, Monday, Jan. 13 (AP)—The Rev. Luis Bogel, a German Catholic priest at Subic, location of a United States Navy base, was summoned today to appear before a deportation board Jan. 20 to show cause why he should not be deported from the Philippine Islands as an undesirable alien.

Three charges were lodged against him, that he conducted, under the guise of religious teaching, propaganda in favor of totalitarian nations; that he exalted the Aryan race by asserting that Aryans were responsible for the establishment of powerful, efficient governments in Europe, and that he emphasized the futility of resistance by small nations to peaceful overtures of strong nations.

Australia Directs Output To Equip Armored Cars

Produces Cruiser Tanks for Offensive Warfare

MELBOURNE, Jan. 12 (AP).—War production in Australia is being directed toward equipping a recently announced armored corps.

The Minister of Munitions, Senator McBride, said some mechanized equipment in the nature of offensive armament for the corps already was in production and progress was being made toward production of cruiser tanks which would be the main striking force of the corps.

Machine-gun carriers and fighting vehicles designed for mounting light and heavy machine guns have been produced here since last year and, owing to progress in production, it has not been difficult to meet the expanding delivery needs.

Engineers Enlisted to Plan Bomb Protection

Washington, D. C., Jan. 12 (AP).—The Army called on a group of outstanding engineers today to help devise plans to safeguard the civil population from air raids and other perils in the event of war.

Secretary Stimson announced creation of a committee of seven which will study problems "pertaining to bomb shelters, water supply and power," among others.

The War Department will provide the group "with pertinent information of the very latest successful methods employed abroad."

Stimson asked Walter D. Binger, of the American Society of Civil Engineers, New York, to be chairman. Other members, each representing a national engineering organization, are:

W. H. Carrier, American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, Syracuse.

Harry E. Jordan, American Waterworks Association, New York.

A. B. Ray, American Institute of Chemical Engineers, New York.

Abel Wolman, American Public Health Association, Baltimore.

James L. Welsh, American Society of Mechanical Engineers, New York.

Scott Turner, American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, New York.

There was no hint that actual construction of any air raid shelters was contemplated. Officials discouraged such speculation saying undue public concern over possible air raids should not be aroused.

AID PLAN TO MEAN WARFARE--WHEELER

Washington, D. C., Jan. 12 (AP).—Senator Wheeler (D-Mont.) said tonight that the Administration's bill empowering President Roosevelt to send vast quantities of war supplies to the democracies would mean "open and complete warfare" for the United States.

Discussing the legislation on the American Forum of the Air, Wheeler added that the form of the bill "definitely stamps the President as war-minded."

Senator Lee (D.-Okla.), speaking in support of the measure, contended that the United States' only chance of escaping war was to send aid to England—"the only barrier between America and a baptism of blood."

"Hitler Making War on Us."

"Hitler is making war on us economically, politically and morally," Lee declared.

The forum discussion furnished a foretaste of what is expected to be prolonged Senate debate on the measure which would give the President broad powers to transfer military equipment to Great Britain, China, Greece and other nations opposing the Axis.

Under plans of Democratic leaders, the House will act first on the legislation. Its Foreign Affairs Committee is scheduled to begin hearings tomorrow with Secretary Hull as the first witness. Chairman Bloom (D-N.Y.) said he was prepared to go ahead with the hearings despite an effort by the Military Affairs Committee to win the right to consider the bill. The House will vote tomorrow on the Military Committee's request.

In the Senate, opponents were talking of lengthy hearings by the Foreign Relations Committee and at least three weeks of debate in the Chamber itself. Committee Chairman George (D-Ga.) said there must be some limit on committee hearings, to begin Wednesday, or discussion would "take all session."

Nye Backs Up Wheeler

Talking with reporters, Senator Nye (R-N.D.) criticized the bill on much the same ground as did Wheeler.

"Make no mistake about it," Nye said, "This is a last ditch fight. This is our last fight before the question of war itself is raised. If we lose it, war is almost inevitable."

Nye said he and others had agreed informally to attack the bill itself rather than to try to amend it. A strategy meeting of opponents probably will be called Wednesday, he said.

RED CROSS TO SEND ENGLAND HOSPITAL

Pre-Fabricated Framework Of 22 Buildings Soon To Be Shipped Abroad

Harvard University Also Behind Project—Laboratory Work Is Aim

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 12—The pre-fabricated framework of twenty-two buildings will be shipped to England soon to be pieced together into a 126-bed "siege" hospital at an unnamed site in the southwestern part of the island, the Red Cross announced today.

The hospital, a joint project of the Red Cross and Harvard University, is expected to be set up next month. It will be used as a laboratory for the study of communicable diseases under wartime conditions and its findings will be reported to the United States Army, Navy and Public Health Service.

Type Of Construction

The Red Cross said that the buildings would be constructed of five-ply building board sandwiched between fire-resistant sheets. They will be bolted to a structural steel framework and camouflaged to match the surrounding terrain.

"At the end of each building," it added, "there will be a vestibule arrangement to allow doctors and nurses to enter and leave without light escaping. Windows will consist of three parts; heavy-duty plate glass reinforced with wire mesh, screen and blackout shutter.

"Ventilation experts have devised a system to circulate fresh air into the rooms during the nightly 'lockup' for blackouts. . . . Air-raid shelters, dug deep into the chalk strata at the site, will be an added safety feature. The entire hospital has been designed to minimize dangers of flying glass and other air-raid hazards."

Director En Route

Dr. John E. Gordon, of the Harvard Medical School, will be director gen eral of the undertaking. The Red Cross said he was en route to England accompanied by Dr. Paul B. Beeson, of Wooster, Ohio, chief physician of the hospital.

The staff will consist of seventy-five American physicians, Red Cross nurses and laboratory technicians.

SAYS AID TO BRITAIN CARRIES WAR RISK

Head Of Committee To Help Allies Asserts Now Is No Time For Faint Heart

Ernest W. Gibson Holds First Conference Since Succeeding W. A. White

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 12—Former Senator Ernest W. Gibson, of Vermont, new national chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, defined the committee's objective today as all possible material aid to the Allies—but he frankly declared it involved the risk of going to war.

In his first press conference since succeeding William Allen White, Emporia, Kan., editor, as the committee's leader, Gibson asserted "this is no time for a faint heart."

"As I see it," the 39- year-old chairman said, "the only chance the democracies have for peace is to keep those fighting for democracy supplied now, and if that isn't sufficient, then it looks like we will get into the war.

Predicts Axis Collapse

"On the other hand, if we do what the isolationists would have us do—that is, surround ourselves by a wall—then we'll get into the war just that much sooner."

Gibson declared he did not agree with the premises of a reporter's question that the United States, in effect, was already in the war and that the defeat of the Axis would require a landing in continental Europe. The question concluded, "so do you think the time is near when we must get in with men and ships?"

"I have confidence," Gibson said, "that the time is near when the Axis countries will collapse from within. I think that with our material, with our arsenal for democracy, the British can win the war."

Agrees With Willkie

The Brattleboro (Vt.) attorney, who succeeded his late father in the United States Senate to fill an unexpired term ending last year, expressed keen interest in the statement of Wendell L. Willkie approving in principle President Roosevelt's "lease-lend" arms bill, and declared himself in agreement with Willkie's assertion that the powers granted to the President should be fixed for a term "not too far in the future."

Gibson declared his committee would not formulate any rigid policy regarding aid to Britain because the policy committee must keep pace with "the quickly changing conditions in the world today."

The conference was held at the home of Clark M. Eichelberger, committee director, who asserted that Gibson would be "just as much in command of the committee as was William Allen White."

To Meet Congressmen

Gibson said he planned to meet Senators and Representatives of both parties during the debate on the Administration arms aid bill. He expressed belief that repeal of the Johnson and Neutrality acts might not be necessary unless they acted as too great a restriction on all possible aid to Britain and her allies.

A captain in the Three Hundred and Sixteenth Cavalry Reserve, Gibson said he had applied for active duty and that he expected to serve as chairman of the committee "until called into active service."

White Asked To Join "Lend-Lease" Bill Fight

Chicago, Jan. 12 (AP)—Gen. Robert E. Wood, national chairman of the America First Committee, today asked William Allen White if he would "join with us in uncompromising opposition" to the Administration's "lend-lease" bill.

In a telegram to White, honorary chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, General Wood asserted the bill "would destroy our republican form of government and make the President a dictator with power to override every law on the statute books and take us into war whenever he saw fit."

"Are you for this bill or against it? Will you join with us in uncompromising opposition to it or to any other suggestion that the American people can no longer govern themselves?"

General Wood recently invited White, who resigned as chairman but remains a member of his group's executive committee, to join the America First Committee.

DIES SAYS SPIES ENTER AS SEAMEN

Charges Some Shipowners Are Paid To Sign Foreign Government Agents

Prober Suspects More U. S. Money Is Going To Germany Than To England

[By the Associated Press]

White Plains, N. Y., Jan. 12—Representative Martin Dies (Dem., Texas), chairman of the House Committee Investigating Un-American Activities, charged tonight that agents of foreign governments were entering this country aboard ships whose owners had been paid to allow the men to ship as seamen.

In a speech at the Westchester County Center, Dies declared his committee knew "that certain foreign governments are paying steamship companies to allow the men to ship as seamen."

"These seamen," he said, "are agents of these governments, who ship with the express purpose of entering this country illegally."

No Means Of Registering Them

The Congresman asserted that because of a law permitting foreign seamen to debark and remain in this country sixty days, some undoubtedly remained.

"We have no means of registering them or fingerprinting them and we have no information on how many have deserted ship," he said.

Dies annuonced the establishment of a Foundation for Americanism, to which he said he was contributing money earned as a result of his committee chairmanship through speeches, radio addresses and magazine articles.

The purpose of the foundation, he declared, would be to educate Americans against the menace of unamericanism and to promote "racial, religious and class tolerance."

Japan Urged to Send Aid (Not Greetings) to Nazis

General Wants More Than New Year's Telegrams

The Domei (Japanese) radio broadcast Saturday, according to The Associated Press, a letter to the Tokio newspaper "Nichi Nichi" quoting a Lieut. Gen. Horinouchi as saying: "Japan should go to the assistance of her ally, Germany, with the same enthusiasm and to the same extent as the United States is going to the assistance of England."

While the United States is helping Great Britain far more than if she actually were participating in the war, Gen. Horinouchi said, relations between Japan and Germany appear to be limited to an exchange of New Year's telegrams.

He suggested the dispatch to Europe of a "corps of young Japanese volunteers" to contribute to an Axis victory.

War Communiques

British

LONDON, Jan. 12 (AP).—A communique of the Ministries of Air and Home Security:

There is nothing to report during daylight today.

It is now confirmed that last night an enemy bomber was destroyed by anti-aircraft fire.

Another communique of the Ministries of Air and Home Security:

Enemy aircraft made an attack on London last night.

It began soon after dark and continued for about three hours. Damage was caused by high-explosive bombs, and a number of people were killed and others injured.

Fires started by incendiary bombs were promptly dealt with, and most of them were soon put out.

Bombs also were dropped in other districts in the London area and at places in southern and southeastern England. Very few of these bombs did any damage and no one was killed.

A Royal Air Force communique:

In daylight yesterday, aircraft of the bomber command attacked a number of targets on or near the Dutch and Belgian coasts. Barges in a canal at Middelharnis were damaged. Two hits were obtained on the mole at Zeebrugge, and troops drilling on a barracks square at Domburg were machine-gunned from a low level.

During the night, bombers of the same command were active over Germany and northern Italy.

Shipbuilding yards at Wilhelmshaven were attacked. A small force went to Turin and scored direct hits on the royla arsenal, causing one major and several minor explosions. Four fires and a heavy explosion occurred in another target near by.

From all these operations two of our aircraft are missing, but the crew of one of them is known to be safe.

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 12 (AP).—The British headquarters communique:

Preparatory activities in the Tobruk area are continuing.

On the Sudan frontier, our patrols have again been active. Operating east of Gallabat, our troops carried out successful raids on Italian positions about Metemma, inflicting a number of casualties on the enemy.

The Royal Air Force communique:

During the night of Jan. 10-11 Benina and Berka airdromes were heavily raided. Bombs straddled buildings, causing large fires and a number of explosions near dispersed aircraft.

Our aircraft also raided Bengasi and one heavy bomb hit a large building of military importance. Fires started on the jetty and shipping was believed to have been badly damaged.

Aircraft of the fleet air arm also carried out a raid on Palermo, where shipping in the harbor was the main objective. One bomb fell very close to a merchant vessel of about 8,000 tons.

Of twelve ships along the outer mole, one received a direct hit and four others were believed to have been damaged. Fires and explosions were caused among warehouses.

Our fighters in eastern Libya maintained constant patrols and reported that Derna, Martuba, Tmimi and Gazala were all clear of enemy aircraft, except for a considerable number that were unserviceable.

Twenty burned-out aircraft were reported as abandoned on the Gazala landing ground.

One of our fighting squadrons accounted for two CR-42's shot down and one CR-42 destroyed on the ground on Jan. 9, and two S-79's destroyed while attempting to land at Derna and three G-50's shot down in combat Jan. 10. Bomba seaplane base appears to have been abandoned by the enemy.

In Italian East Africa a further raid was made on Maiadaga, where the Caproni workshops and petrol dumps were bombed. The defense position of Berbera, Somaliland, also was raided and one S-81 on the Jiga-Jiga landing ground was bombed and machine-gunned.

Numerous reconnaissance flights were carried out on all fronts. From all operations our aircraft returned without loss.

Greek

ATHENS, Jan. 12 (AP).—The Greek high command communique:

Restricted patrol and artillery activities. We took some prisoners.

The Ministry of Home Security communique:

No raids were made on Greece today.

As a result of investigations made by competent police authorities, it has been determined that the Italian Army, when retreating from the Greek region of Konitza, which was invaded in the first days of the war, abducted whole families.

Among those abducted are men, women, children, babies, priests, teachers, scientists, agriculturists, etc. Of these families all members have been abducted in some cases. In other cases only the male members or the female or both were taken.

About 500 men, women and children were abducted in all from this region. Their fate is unknown.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 12 (AP).—The German high command communique:

The air force yesterday carried out armed reconnaissance and mined additional British harbors.

Hits were scored on an airport in southeast England.

Two merchant ships were sunk, including one of 8,000 tons by a direct hit west of Ireland, and another of 3,000 tons off the British east coast.

Ouring a repeat air attack on a British flotilla in the Mediterranean one cruiser and several warships suffered heavy bomb hits.

Strong fighting units last night again attacked military important objectives in London. Numerous fires confirmed success.

During the early hours today the enemy dropped some explosive and incendiary bombs in north Germany, resulting in heavy damage to one dwelling, the death of three persons and serious injury to three others.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 12 (AP).—The Italian high command communique:

In Albania: enemy attacks along the 11th Army front. Our counter-attacks inflicted heavy losses on the enemy.

Central Metditerranean: Units of the German air corps, continuing the brilliant activity begun yesterday, carried out a scouting offensive against English squadrons. Two important groups of warships were attacked. One cruiser of the Birmingham type was hit for certain with a heavy bomb.

Cirenaica (in Libya): Artillery and patrol activity. Our planes bombed enemy formations near Jarabub (Giarabub). There were repeated enemy air attacks against some of our bases in Cirenaica.

East Africa: patrol activity on the Sudan-Kenya front. One of our outposts in the Ghallabat (Gallabat) zone repulsed an attack supported by artillery, inflicting loses on the enemy.

At dawn Jan. 10, a section of torpedo boats patroling the straits of Sicily sighted an important enemy naval formation composed of numerous surface units. Our two torpedo boats attacked the center of the line determinedly, hitting with two torpedoes one cruiser, later seen sinking.

A hot fight followed between enemy destroyers supported by cruisers and our torpedo boats whihc engaged them in long, intense firing during which fires were visible aboard two enemy destroyers.

30.24-6941

One of our Torpedo boats was reahced by a salvo which halted the motor and then by another in the munitions deposit (magazine) which caused it to sink. The other torpedo boat went immediately to the scene of the sinking to save the crew.

On the night between Jan. 11 and 12, enemy planes coming over Switzerland raided Turin and Savigliano, dropping explosives and fire bombs.

At Turin some civilian factories were hit. Three persons were killed and four wounded.

At Savigliano, a military hospital, some dwellings and a parochial church were hit. There was some damage but no victims.

Over Catania one of our fighter planes on the afternoon of Jan. 11 shot one English Glenn Martin down in flames.

THIS CONCLUSION WAS REACHED AFTER SIX DAYS SPENT CLIMBING SLUSHY MOUNTAIN TRAILS THOUSANDS OF FEET HIGH AND WALKING OVER MILE AFTER MILE OF FIGHTING GROUND.

NO ACCURATE ACCOUNTING MAY BE MADE UNTIL REGISTRATION LISTS ARE CHECKED FOR MISSING MEN AFTER THE WAR, FOR IN THE ISOLATED BRUSH AND GORGES WHOLE PATROLS WERE WIPED OUT AND THE MEN LEFT WHERE THEY LAY--LOST AND FORGOTTEN IN THE WILDERNESS.

ALMOST EVERY FOOT OF THESE AWESOME PEAKS HAS SEEN FIGHTING.

IF ONE STUMBLES OFF A MULE TRAIL A FEW FEET, ONE IS LIKELY TO BLUNDER ONTO SOME HIDDEN ITALIAN MACHINE GUN NEST WITH GRUESOME, GREEN-CLAD CREWS SPRAWLED UPON A LITTER OF UNEXPLODED HAND GRENADES, BAYONETS, PACKS OF AMMUNITION AND EXPLOSION-TORN REFUSE.

THESE NESTS OF SHALLOW TRENCHES HANG ONTO THE SIDES OF JAGGED PEAKS, CLOAKED IN MIST.

TRENCH MORTAR AND MACHINE GUN POSITIONS ARE CUNNINGLY CONCEALED.

THE STEEP SLOPES WITH BRUSH BELOW THEM ARE LACED WITH BARBED WIRE. THOUSANDS OF GRENADES AND RED AND BLACK TRENCH MORTAR BOMBS STREWN FOR HUNDREDS OF YARDS SPEAK FOR THE ABUNDANCE OF ITALIAN MUNITIONS.

THE POSITIONS LOOK IMPREGNABLE BUT THEIR OCCUPANTS LIE DEAD IN THE BRIGHT FEATHERED CAPS OF ALPINE DIVISIONS OR THE BRILLIANT INSIGNIA OF OTHER CHOICE ITALIAN REGIMENTS.

SOMEHOW GREECE'S BEARDED BAYONET INFANTRY WITH FULL PACKS ON BACKS CHARGE UP THE SLOPES ON THE RUN.

SOMEHOW THEY DODGE A RAIN OF BOMBS POURED DOWN BY HUNDREDS OF ITALIAN AIRCRAFT.

SOMEHOW THEY SMASH THROUGH THE TANGLED WIRES AND REACH THE TRENCHES, MACHINE GUN NESTS AND MORTAR POSITIONS WHICH, AS THE HUNDREDS OF STILL FORMS MUTELY TESTIFY, ARE STUBBORNLY DEFENDED.

ONCE THE POSITION IS WON, THE GREEKS SNATCH A HASTY MEAL OF BREAD AND CHEESE AND PUSH ON.

THEY GET LITTLE REST AND HARASS THE ITALIANS NIGHT AND DAY.

WRAPPED IN BLANKETS IN SNOW ON THE WINDSWEPT MOUNTAINSIDE, THEY SNATCH A FEW HOURS SLEEP.

DURING THESE HOURS CRAWLING LINES OF MULES STAGGER UP WITH SUPPLIES.

THE ANIMALS AND MEN ARE COVERED WITH THE SWEAT OF THREE OR FOUR DAYS OF ALMOST CONSTANT MARCHING.

THE SUPPLIES ARE UNLOADED AND SALVAGED ITALIAN EQUIPMENT IS LOADED FOR THE TRIP BACK BEHIND THE LINES, WHERE IT IS DISTRIBUTED.

SOME OF THE LESS SERIOUSLY WOUNDED ARE HELPED UPON THE MULES FOR THE LONG TRIP TO THE BASE HOSPITALS. SOLDIERS CARRY THE SERIOUSLY WOUNDED THOUSANDS OF FEET DOWN TO THE VALLEY FLOORS ON STRETCHERS.

UP FROM THE VALLEYS COME OTHER LINES OF MEN. SOMETIMES THEY CARRY HEAVY [illegible] ARTILLERY ON THEIR BACKS FOR SOME MOUNTAINS ARE TOO STEEP E[illegible] FOR GREECE'S STURDY LITTLE MULES.

BUT EVERYONE IN EGYPT ACCLAIMS HIM AS A GENIUS.

THE 57-YEAR-OLD GENERAL HAS BEEN PUTTING INTO PRACTICE SOME OF THE "CATCH-THE-CAT-NAPPING" TECHNIQUE OF DESERT WARFARE HE LEARNED DURING HIS SERVICE WITH THE LATE VISCOUNT ALLENBY IN THE PALESTINE CAMPAIGN DURING THE WORLD WAR.

THERE ARE STRIKING SIMILARITIES IN ALLENBY'S AND WAVELL'S CAMPAIGNS. ALLENBY'S PLAN CALLED AMONG TAKING JERUSALEM WITH THE GREATEST POSSIBLE SPEED. WAVELL'S PLAN DEPENDED ON THE TAKING OF BARDIA, AN ITALIAN STRONGHOLD 10 MILES SOUTH OF SIDI BARRANI, IN THE [illegible]

ALLENBY MOVED TROOPS BY NIGHT AND HAD THEM HIDE IN [illegible] BY DAY. THEN HE FLUNG A BRIGADE OF AUSTRALIAN LIGHT HORSE AT BEERSHEBA WITH SUCH SPEED THAT THE TURKS WERE PREVENTED FROM DESTROYING WELLS OR ESCAPING.

SIMILARLY, WAVELL MOVED TROOPS ACROSS THE DESERT BY NIGHT AND HID THEM HERE AS BEST THEY COULD IN THE DAYTIME. THEN HE HURLED THEM, FOLLOWED BY ARMOUR, AT BARDIA, SEIZING ALL SUPPLIES AND IMMEDIATELY TURNING THEM AGAINST THE ITALIANS.

AS IN THE PALESTINE CAMPAIGN, WAVELL FOLLOWED UP THE FIRST THRUST WITH SWIFT CROSSING BLOWS, CONTRIVING TO DEMORALIZE THE ENEMY AFTER THE ASSAULT BEGAN.

WAVELL PLANNED EVERYTHING METHODICALLY FOR THE DESERT AND THEN LET HIS MEN GO AHEAD, CHANGING PLANS AND IMPROVISING WHEN CHAOS ON THE BATTLEFIELD, WHERE NECESSARY.

IN THE MIDDLE EAST THERE IS NO SUPREME COMMANDER, BUT THREE [illegible] OF THE BRITISH FIGHTING FORCES, THE ARMY HAS A JOINT COMMAND THE NAVY OR THE AIR FORCE TO BE ANTIPATHY. HE HAS ONLY ONE, WAVELL, HOWEVER, IS ALWAYS ALIVE TO THE NECESSITY OF THE MOST ADVANCED DEVELOPMENT, ALWAYS HAS BEEN FULLY APPRECIATIVE OF THE IMPORTANCE OF THE SEA AND AIR ARMS AND GETS ALONG WELL WITH ADMIRAL SIR ANDREW CUNNINGHAM, COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN FLEET, AND WITH AIR MARSHAL SIR ARTHUR LONGMORE, CHIEFTAIN OF THE BRITISH AIR FORCES IN THAT AREA.

WHEN WAVELL ASSUMED COMMAND OF THE MIDDLE EAST, HE REPORTED THE FRENCH ARMY IN SYRIA TO FORM THE MAIN LAND FORCE IN THAT REGION, BRITAIN'S PRINCIPAL CONTRIBUTION BEING NAVAL.

THE COLLAPSE OF FRANCE AND ITALY'S ENTRY INTO THE WAR LEFT EGYPT [illegible] DEPENDENT ON U.S. BUT WAVELL GOT MEN AND SUPPLIES FROM [illegible] AND BY THE LONG [illegible] ROUND THE CAPE.

WHEN THE ITALIANS ENTERED EGYPT THREE MONTHS LATER, THE BRITISH FELL BACK TO DEFENSIVE LINES ESTABLISHED ABOUT HALF WAY FROM THE LIBYAN FRONTIER AND THE NILE VALLEY, HARASSING THE ENEMY ENOUGH TO MAKE THE ADVANCE COSTLY AND LEAVING NOTHING BEHIND.

STRENGTHENING OF DEFENSES AND TRAINING OF TROOPS TO REPEL AN EXPECTED ITALIAN ATTACK ON THE LINES WENT AHEAD STEADILY AND THOROUGHLY. THE ITALIANS APPARENTLY NEVER BELIEVED THE BRITISH WOULD ATTACK AND WAVELL DID NOTHING TO DISPEL THIS BELIEF.

FINALLY HE LET THEM HAVE IT, UNITING SURPRISE WITH FORCE AND SPICING BOTH WITH BLUFF.

BOTH SIDES MADE USE OF DUMMY GUNS IN THE DESERT, BUT THE BRITISH CLAIM TO HAVE USED ONE REAL ONE AMID SEVEN DUMMIES, FIRING SHELLS FROM THE REAL ONE AND MAKING NOISE FOR THE OTHERS WITH LARGE FIRE-CRACKERS WITH SUCH SUCCESS THAT A LARGE NUMBER OF ITALIANS SURRENDERED.

ARMY CHIEF CALLED HOME FROM ALBANIA

Gen. Soddu Is Replaced by Gen. Cavallero on Front Where Greeks Attack—Rome Says Former Is in Bad Health.

Rome, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—Premier Mussolini sent his Chief of Staff, Gen. Ugo Cavallero, to take command of Italian forces under Greek attack in Albania today in the third army shake-up in two months.

Gen. Ubaldo Soddu, who took command on the Albanian front November 10, soon after the Italian invasion of Greece was turned back, was relieved at his own request because of ill health, an official announcement said. Gen. Cavellero retains his position as Chief of Staff, in which he succeeded Marshal Pietro Badoglio December 6. Marshal Badoglio also was announced to have resigned at his own request.

The official announcement read:

"Gen. Ubaldo Soddu, commander of Italian troops stationed in Albania, has been relieved because of his health and replaced by Chief of Staff Gen. Ugo Cavallero."

Reports Rest Needed.

Stefani, the official Italian news agency, said Soddu asked to be relieved of command of the army group in Albania because of his health, which will force him to pass several months in treatment and rest.

Greek attacks on Italian positions, particularly those of Italy's Eleventh army on the southern front in Albania, have been reported in the daily war bulletins recently usually in the phrase: "Local actions" without announcements of any Italian losses of territory. Italian authorities insisted that conditions behind the lines in Albania were satisfactory. They categorically denied British reports of riots among Albanians, and said not a single incident had occurred which could justify such rumors.

Three Italian regiments cited for gallantry in dispatches from Albania have been proposed for Italy's highest decorations. They were the Eighth and Ninth Alpine regiments and the Third Alpine Artillery Regiment, which form the "lengendary Julia Davision and covered themselves with glory in bitter fighting against the enemy in recent months," Stefani said.

Gen. Girotti, division commander, was promoted on the field Christmas Eve.

Earlier Changes Recalled.

Little direct news has been heard of Gen. Soddu since he went to Albania, but his retirement recalled a series of resignations early in December after the Greek campaign had gone badly for weeks. Marshal Badoglio resigned December 6, Brig.-Gen. Cesare Maria de Vecchi Conte di Val Cismon resigned as Governor of the Dodecanese Islands December 7, and Admiral Domenico Cavagnari resigned as chief of the naval staff and as Under-Secretary of the Navy December 8.

As in the case of Marshal Badoglio, the only official explanation given for the other resignations was that each left his post at his own request.

Gen. Soddu, born fifty-seven years ago at Salerno, won his rank as brigadier-general through service in the world war. He was made a divisional general, commanding infantry in Sardinia, in 1936, and shortly after became assistant chief of staff for the army.

The sixty-year-old Gen. Cavallero, new commander in Albania, helped Mussolini take over the Italian military machine in 1925. He first fought in the Libyan war of 1912-13 and won the bronze medal for military valor. During the world war he was credited with having played a major role in reorganizing Italian defenses on the Piave after the Caporetto disaster and directing the campaign which led to the final Italian victory at Vittorio Veneto.

For his services in this campaign he won Italy's highest military award, the Order of Savoia. He represented Italy for two years on the Inter-Allied Military Commission at Versailles, and in 1925 he became Under-Secretary of War, a post he held for three years. He was named commander of the Italian forces in East Africa in 1937. He had been inactive for some time prior to his appointment to succeed Badoglio.

ALBANIA POST TAKEN OVER BY CAVALLERO

Shakeup Is Third Since Mussolini's Invasion Of Greece Backfired

Another 'Big Enemy Ship' Claimed Hit By Fascist Air Torpedo

Phillips In Milan

Milan, Italy, Jan. 13 (AP)—William Phillips, United States Ambassador, arrived here tonight in a private automobile from Genoa en route to Rome to resume his post there.

The Ambassador was accompanied by his secretary, Walter Dowling. They expect to leave tomorrow for Rome.

[By the Associated Press]

Rome, Jan. 13—After a month of trying to hold off Greek attacks, Gen. Ubaldo Soddu relinquished command of Italian forces in Albania today to Gen. Ugo Cavallero, Premier Mussolini's current No. 1 military chieftain, in the third army shakeup since November 10.

This latest overhauling of the Albanian command came as Italy credited the new German-Italian air offensive in the Mediterranean with the ninth bomb or torpedo hit on British warships within four days.

"Because Of His Heal'h"

An official announcement said General Soddu, 57-year-old veteran of every one of Italy's wars since 1900 and il Duce's Under-Secretary of War when he was sent to Albania, "has been relieved because of his health."

Italian authorities insisted that the situation behind the lines in Albania was satisfactory.

General Cavallero, himself a veteran of three wars, retains his position as chief of staff, a post in which he succeeded Marshal Pietro Badoglio, who resigned "at his own request" in a high command shakeup December 6.

"Big Enemy Ship" Torpedoed

Relating the latest fruits of the Nazi-Fascist aerial campaign against the British fleet, today's war bulletin said an Italian plane had torpedoed "a big enemy ship" in the eastern Mediterranean.

This brought to nine, the number of British men-o'-war listed as bombed or torpedoed since Friday. At least one of them, a cruiser, was declared to have been left in sinking condition. One of the others torpedoed was identified as a battleship of the 31,000-ton Malaya class.

[Authoritative quarters in London have made no comment on the Italian claims of successes in the Mediterranean.]

Seeks To Bottle Up Sea

The Axis air offensive is aimed at closing the Mediterranean to the British at the sea's middle, where British convoys pass through the Straits of Sicily.

The possibility of the Axis powers enlarging that threat by gaining air bases in French-owned Corsica and Tunisia is envisioned in some foreign circles. Tunisia is on the east coast of Africa, opposite Sicily, and the Island of Corsica is off the Italian west coast.

Although nothing has developed in Axis quarters to indicate such a move, some observers regard it is a logical maneuver.

Has Claimed Rights

Since long before the war's start Italy has claimed rights in both Corsica and Tunisia, the latter with a white population of many Italians friendly to Fascism.

With British forces widely dispersed in Africa, aiding Greece and obliged to reassure Turkey, some quarters express the belief that occupation of Tunisia might prove as easy for the Axis as Tangier did for Spain.

Diplomatic negotiations with the French presumably would have to be carried out by the Germans, but if Marshal Petain showed reluctance, observers say the Germans might remind him of some 1,900,000 war prisoners still in their hands.

Answer To Weygand

As for the possibility of resistance by Gen. Maxime Weygand, commander of French forces in Africa, the Axis powers have indicated their readiness to meet any situation raised there by his forces.

Military activity on Italy's land fronts was summed up briefly by today's communique, which told of continued artillery activity around besieged Tobruk, in Libya, and patrol and artillery activity in Albania.

It acknowledged British air raids last night on Turin, Venice and Catania. One person was killed and several were injured at Venice, and "some damage" was reported at all three places. Two British raiders were reported downed over Catania and Venice.

The Stefani correspondent in Albania reported "intense" activity of patrols along the entire front. He told of attacks and counter-attacks upon local objectives in some sectors by both the Greeks and Italians and said all Greek attempts were broken.

One large Italian unit "again distinguished itself by occupying an important position and inflicting notable losses on the enemy," the correspondent said.

Italian artillery was said to be subjecting the Greeks to daily hammering.

Greeks Press Valona Drive as Foes Crumble

Coastal Army Is 30 Miles From Port; New Gains Made North of Klisura

ATHENS, Jan. 13 (AP).—Greek soldiers, reporting scant resistance, stabbed deeper into Italian defense positions south and east of Valona today, and Greek spokesmen expressed the hope that this might prove the greatest offensive of the war in Albania.

Although they asserted Fascist lines were crumbling at some points, authorities in Athens still lacked confirmation of reports from the Yugoslav frontier that Tepelini, fortified mountain town guarding an Italian-built highway to the port of Valona, had fallen. Capture of Tepelini would give the Greeks a jumping-off place for a renewed thrust toward Valona, sole southern Albania port remaining in Italian hands.

A companion drive northward along the coast was said to have brought the Greeks within thirty miles of Valona. New gains were reported also for forces which swept on northward from Klisoura, a strategic central front point taken last week. From the battered city a road leads down from the mountains northwestward toward Berati.

A government spokesman said the Italians had strengthened their lines with reserves poured into Albania by sea and air but that news from the front showed the situation as "very satisfactory" for the Greeks. More prisoners and many abandoned wounded Italians were captured by Greek patrols, he added.

"Italian wounded and prisoners belong mostly to troops sent to Albania recently by ship and plane," the spokesman said.

He declared that the Greek drive had shaped into three spearheads; open toward Valona along the Tepelini road, the second toward Valona along the coast where large new gains were reported, and the third toward Berati and the general Albanian oilfields north of Klisoura.

A delayed dispatch from a correspondent accompanying the Greeks beyond Klisoura said the Italians there, driven from "naturally formidable" mountain positions, were compelled now to defend much less favorable terrain.

The best Greek infantrymen, equipped with automatic rifles and machine guns, have been thrown into the action there, the correspondent said, in hopes of chasing the Italians from the southern half of Albania. Greek progress was reported so swift that Italian dead still littered the battlefield. Behind the front six hundred seized Italian motor trucks were assembled.

In the Pogradetz sector, where bitter hand-to-hand fighting was reported, the Greeks reported capture of many pack mules, thus menacing Fascist supply lines. They contended the Italians would be unable to bring up more pack animals through snow-bound mountain passes.

British Warships Attacked

Italians Report Ninth Vessel in Four Days Hit by Flyers in Mediterranean.

Rome, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—An Italian plane torpedoed a British warship in the western Mediterranean, the Italian High Command reported today, bringing to nine the number of British warships listed as bombed or torpedoed in the last four days. At least one of these, a British cruiser, was declared to have been sunk in the course of operations in which Italian ships and German and Italian bombers co-operated.

The High Command identified one of the British ships reported struck by a torpedo in the Strait of Sicily last Friday as a battleship of the 31,100-ton Malaya class.

Meanwhile the week end attacks on British sea power in the Mediterranean were cited by the authoritative Fascist editor, Virginio Gayda, as proof that Italo-German war collaboration is now in full swing, that the Italian fighting forces are intact, efficient and ready for action, and that they continue to dominate the central Mediterranean, splitting the British east and west Mediterranean naval forces.

Yesterday the High Command reported that one of two Italian torpedo boats which attacked a British flotilla in the central Mediterranean was sunk by shellfire in an engagement in which one British cruiser was left sinking. A second cruiser, identified as one of the 9,100-ton Birmingham class, was reported hit by a heavy bomb dropped by a German plane. Torpedo-boat crews were said to have seen flames spurt from two British destroyers during the same bomb attack.

Cairo, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—The Fleet Air Arm last night reported hitting one merchant ship and possibly damaging four others in a raid on Palermo, Sicily.

HEAVIER GUNS SHELL TOBRUK

Italian Garrison Reported Running Out of Water.

Cairo, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—After a trek of seventy miles across the sand, big British field guns which had helped crack the Italian resistance at Bardia, joined today the ring of cannon pounding the defenses of the beleaguered Libyan seaport of Tobruk, while other British forces reported cutting off the important Fascist outpost of Giarabub oasis.

Thousands of Italians, cut off from re-enforcements by the band of steel around Tobruk were believed badly in need of water, and some members of the garrison were reported walking as much as three miles through heavy artillery fire to get it. The garrison is believed to be smaller than the 45,000 Fascist troops killed, wounded or captured at Bardia.

Haile Selassie at Khartoum.

At Giarabub the military supply problem is difficult even in peacetime and military spokesmen said today that it was only a question of time before that outpost, 150 miles due south of Bardia and near the Egyptian border, would fall. The British said they have thus far refrained from bombing the oasis, since it contains buildings and relics sacred to the Senussi sect of Moslems. The Italian garrison there is believed to be less than a brigade.

Meanwhile today a Khartoum, in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, less than 300 miles from the Ethopian border, Haile Selassie, the refugee Emperor of Ethiopia, received a steady stream of tribal revolutionary agents while awaiting an opportune moment to re-enter his country to head a revolt against the Italian conquerors. The tribesmen are being supplied by the British with guns and ammunition to carry on guerrilla warfare against the Italians.

The Royal Air Force reported last night that Italian planes have been driven from five East Libyan bases—Derna, Martuba, El Tmimi, Gazala and Bomba. In addition, the British said, airdromes at Benina and Berka were raided; Bengasi, the capital of Cirenaica, was bombed again; and attacks were made on Italian positions in Somaliland and Italian East Africa.

Reports Artillery Action.

Rome, Jan. 12 (A. P.).—The Italian High Command today reported artillery action around Tobruk, which is under siege by the British, and said that British attacks on Italian posts along the Sudan frontier had been repulsed. The communique also said that one of the Italian fast columns clashed with British forces in the desert around the Italian oasis stronghold at Giarabub. Air raiding by both sides in the battle in Africa was said to have continued.

R. A. F. Flyers In North Africa Bomb Air Base Near Bengasi

British Range Far Ahead Of Troops To Blast Italian Planes Grounded At Benina

[By the Associated Press]

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 13—R. A. F. squadrons ranging far ahead of General Sir Archibald Wavell's land forces have gained control of the air as far as Bengasi, or over a third of Italy's north African colony, British sources said tonight.

A string of airdromes and landing fields in the vicinity of beleaguered Tobruk were abandoned so speedily by the Italians that they had no time to destroy them, the British said.

R. A. F. flyers were said already to be using these fields as bases for heavy attacks on Tobruk like those credited with playing a major role in the fall of Bardia.

Massing Around Port

The British say that General Wavell's land forces are massing around the port of Tobruk with little or no harassment from the air.

British bombers are said to have carried on large-scale day and night attacks on Benina, large air supply base outside Bengasi, 280 miles west of the Egyptian frontier. A large number of aircraft on the ground at Benina were reported to have been set afire or destroyed.

From Bengasi, eastward to Bardia and south 150 miles to the Oasis of Giarabub, the British claimed air domination.

Only A Matter Of Time

It is only a question of time, they said, until Giarabub falls; they added that it has escaped bombing by the R. A. F. in deference to the Senussi sect of Moslems, whose sacred relics are there.

To date, the British claim they have destroyed 560 Italian aircraft in Africa, against a loss of fewer than one hundred.

British forces, in collaboration with those of former Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, continued guerrilla warfare on Italian columns across the Egyptian Sudan-Ethiopian frontier.

A British patrol was reported to have routed Italians in the Metemma area east of Gallabat on the Sudan-Ethiopian frontier.

Haile Selassie Active

Hailie Selassie, at Khartoum, was quoted as predicting that "the time is not far distant" when he would lead an army of Ethiopians against the Italians.

A Reuters dispatch said that the little "Lion of Judah," sitting on a wooden throne covered with purple silk, reviewed his small army being trained and armed by the British.

"The days of my former Italian ally who betrayed my country are numbered," he declared. "They built fine roads, killed and enslaved my people, but failed to break their spirit."

British Confidence

London, Tuesday, Jan. 14 (AP)—An Italian defeat in East Africa appears so highly probable that the British Government is ready not only to grant safe conduct but "facilities" for the removal of women and children from those Italian possessions, the authoritative British Press Association said today.

If Rome accepts, the British propose that these non-combatants should travel to Italy by way of Djibuti, French Somaliland, or from ports in Italian Somaliland and Eritrea, the agency said.

Ethiopian Offensive Next British Move?

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 13—Belief grew among observers today that Britain may soon attempt a major drive against Italian forces in Ethiopia with the aid of native rebellions in the Fascist-conquered East African empire.

Interest in a possible Ethiopian campaign as an accompaniment or sequel to the present British drive across Italian Libya increased after Prime Minister Gen. Jan Christian Smuts of the Union of South Africa declared in a week-end speech that South Africa's 1941 role would be to "help clear Abyssinia (Ethiopia) of the enemy, and not only Abyssinia, but British Somaliland."

South Africa's Objective

Smuts further expressed hope that the end of this year "may see the African continent free of the enemy right up to the shores of the Mediterranean. That is the task to which South Africa has dedicated herself."

The British Middle East command, in a communique issued at Cairo last week, told of an uprising of Ethiopian "patriots, encouraged by support from the Royal Air Force," compelling an Italian garrison to flee the post of Gubba, twenty miles from the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan frontier.

At the same time, the Fascist forces were reported to have withdrawn from another frontier post north of Kassala, near the Eritrean border.

Reports from Khartoum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, tell of Ethiopian tribesmen slipping across the border to receive British arms and ammunitions from their deposed Emperor, Haile Selassie, for carrying on guerrilla warfare against the Italians.

Italians Seek Haven

Travelers from Ethiopia asserted that Italian residents of the country, fearful of a native uprising, had asked French authorities at Jibuti to shelter them and their families if trouble began. They said the request was refused.

Authoritative sources in London, although unwilling to disclose whatever designs the Middle Eastern command might have against the Italians in Ethiopia, recalled a statement in Commons December 18 by Foreign Under Secretary Richard Butler that the Government's policy was to give "all possible assistance" to Haile Selassie and "all elements within Ethiopia willing to bear arms against the enemy."

ETHIOPIAN

LONDON, JAN 13-(AP)-A REUTERS (BRITISH NEWS AGENCY) DISPATCH FROM KHARTOUM, ANGLO-EGYPTIAN SUDAN, TODAY QUOTED HAILE SELASSIE AS SAYING THE "TIME IS NOT FAR DISTANT" WHEN HE WOULD LEAD AN ARMY OF ETHIOPIAN PATRIOTS AGAINST THE ITALIANS WHO DROVE HIM FROM HIS THRONE.

HE DECLARED HE WAS PLEASED WITH THE PROGRESS OF TRAINING HIS ARMY AND ADDED THAT REVOLT AMONG HIS TRIBESMEN WAS MAKING GREAT HEADWAY.

"THE DAYS OF MY FORMER ITALIAN ALLY WHO BETRAYED MY COUNTRY ARE NUMBERED," HE WAS QUOTED AS SAYING. "THEY BUILT FINE ROADS BUT KILLED AND ENSLAVED THOUSANDS OF MY PEOPLE, ALTHOUGH THEY FAILED TO BREAK THEIR SPIRIT. I LOOK FORWARD TO THE LIBERATION OF ETHIOPIA AND THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A JUST AND CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT."

HE SAID ROYAL WAR DRUMS WERE BEATING NIGHTLY AND "HUNDREDS OF MY FORMER SOLDIERS NOW FORCED TO FIGHT FOR THE ITALIANS UNDERSTAND THE MESSAGE OF THE DRUMS AND ARE NOW DESERTING AND RALLYING TO THE STANDARD RAISED AT GOJJAM BY THE FAITHFUL COMMANDER RAS MONGASHA."

FIRE BOMBS HIT COASTAL TOWN BY THOUSANDS

Casualties Feared High As Thousands Of Incendiaries Are Dropped

Two Hospitals, 2 Surface Shelters And Church Are Struck

[By the Associated Press]

London, Tuesday, Jan. 14—The German Luftwaffe concentrated a major assault on a southwest coastal town last night and early today, unleashing high-explosive bombs and dropping thousands of incendiaries which the townspeople said made the night "very much like a grotesque fairyland."

It was feared the casualty list would be heavy.

In singling out the town for the main raid of the night, the Nazis followed their custom of splashing it with incendiaries to light the way for bombers which unloaded the heavy explosives.

Two Hospitals Hit

The women's ward of one hospital suffered a direct bomb hit and another hospital was damaged. Two surface shelters also were hit, as was a church.

The Germans also dropped explosives on two towns in south Wales and machine-gunned a third.

Other favorite targets of the Nazis, including the Liverpool area, also were attacked last night, but London, the objective of a smashing fire raid Sunday night, was free of alarm long past the usual time for the nocturnal visits.

Follow Day Of Quiet

The after-dark attacks started after a day of quiet in which the Government announced "nothing to report."

Civilians by the hundreds gave firemen a hand in smothering Sunday night's three-and-a-half-hour firebomb shower and the Government announced the situation was quickly brought under control.

A town in southwest England was pummeled for several hours in another Sunday night raid. An official report said a small number of persons was killed.

The first bodies were brought out yesterday from the ruins of a London subway crossing hit by a German bomb Saturday night. Workers still probed the ruins for additional possible victims and cranes swung tons of debris from the gaping crater.

British Air Offensive

Earlier in the day the Air Ministry reported an air offensive by day and night, aimed at the Axis partners' shipping and oil resources and at German troops in trenches across the English Channel.

Attacks yesterday stretched from the invasion coast of Nazi-occupied France to oil refineries near Venice, at the head of the Adriatic.

British sources, crediting the Royal Air Force with a "slight edge" over the Luftwaffe, foresaw the newly begun daylight blows as preparation for an eventual British offensive on the Continent as well as an attempt to break up any Nazi invasion plans.

Fourth In Succession

The low-flying daylight attack on troops intrenched near the beach was the fourth in succession by British bombers and fighters and it was coupled with night bombing forays on the harbors of Brest, Le Havre and Lorient and the reported firing of oil storage and processing plants in Porto Marghera, Italy, near Venice; Regensburg, Germany, and Ostend, in German-occupied Belgium.

The British Press Association commented: "It is significant that, since the first daylight raids upon the airdromes nearest our shores, the enemy's night attacks have been of briefer duration."

Offensively, it was pointed out that the raids imperil Nazi communications on the Channel coast and undermine morale of the German occupation forces.

Blow Up Italian Bases

The Air Ministry gave a picture of devastation in the raid on Porto Marghera, Italian oil refining center near Venice, where it said one large building "blew up" after a bomb hit from low altitude and another fell to pieces after being hit twice.

Oil storage tanks were set aflame, it said, sheds and workshops were "machined-gunned from almost ground level" and "the target was left burning."

British bombers attacked dockyards there for an hour, a supplementary Air Ministry news service report said, and set them "alight from end to end." The fires could be seen clearly, it said, "when our bombers were back over the French Alps."

Sees One Blow Up Factory

It said one R. A. F. pilot, dropping far below 1,000 feet, "saw one of his heaviest bombs pierce the roof of a large factory and burst inside." Billows of fire-reddened smoke arose, it added, "and the building soon was completely hidden by leaping flames."

"Other pilots got direct hits on oil storage tanks. Unmistakable black smoke of burning oil rolled over the port."

It said Regensburg, a Danubian port where oil from Rumania is refined and stored, was attacked for the second time. Returning pilots said bombs collapsed the boiler house of one factory and set off flames which seemed to come from "an enormous explosion."

Sea-level attacks on Nazi naval forces, an Air Ministry news service statement said, swept the decks of two torpedo boats 800 yards off the French coast, a large schooner and other small vessels.

Hits Off Norway

Authoritative sources also reported direct hits on two merchant vessels off the Norwegian coast.

Three factors, British sources contended, give the Royal Air Force supremacy over the Luftwaffe in the struggle which may decide the success or failure of any German attempt at invasion.

They are continuous, systematic bombing of German industry and communications, a slight advantage over German planes in altitude and an increased flow from British and American factories.

R.A.F. Raids Bayreuth

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Jan. 13 — British planes dropped "some bombs" early today on southern Germany, including the Bavarian city of Bayreuth, where the Wagner music festivals are held, the German high command announced.

The daily war bulletin failed to say what damage was done, but authoritative sources said it was slight. They asserted the Bayreuth festival house and the villa where Composer Richard Wagner is buried were not endangered.

South Coast Hit

The high command reported Nazi raiders again blasted London overnight, starting several big fires north and south of the bend of the Thames river, below the British capital and in the southeast part of the city itself. Additional raids were said to have been aimed at targets on the English south coast. DNB, the German official news agency, said Brighton and Eastbourne were among the places attacked.

At noon yesterday, the communique said, "weak forces" of British planes attempted to penetrate German-occupied Continental bases and three invading craft were downed, two by anti-aircraft and the third by Nazi pursuit planes.

Attack Patrol Boats

D) B said the crews of three American-made Lockheed planes attempted to torpedo a German patrol boat in the North Sea yesterday, but were frustrated by "effective defense."

In another attack on German patrol boats, the news agency reported, two British Hurricane fighters were downed by anti-aircraft batteries on the shore.

Men in Trenches Attacked.

London, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—Day and night air attacks on both Axis allies, from swooping assaults on troops in trenches near the German-held French coast to diving bomb raids on oil refineries near Venice, were reported by the Air Ministry today.

Night flyers, it said, hit at the harbors of Brest, Le Havre and Lorient—much-raided Nazi submarine base—and at oil targets at Porto Marghera in northeastern Italy, the German city of Regensburg and the Belgian port of Ostend.

The daylight attack on the German-held channel coast yesterday—the fourth in as many days—was pictured not only as an attempt to break up any Nazi invasion plans, but also as preparation for the time when Britain might feel strong enough to carry the fight to the continent. The low level raids by day on the intrenched Germans, designed to dove-tail with night bombing of the channel ports, were said to be aimed at disrupting the organization and breaking the morale of the Nazi occupation forces.

With bombs dropping from only a few hundred feet and machine-guns firing almost at ground level, the Air Ministry described heavy damage at Porto Marghera, including the destruction of two large buildings.

"Anti-aircraft defenses first were silenced by machine-gun fire from a few hundred feet," its communique said. "Then a heavy bomb was released from very low level and blew up one of the large refinery buildings. More bombs set oil storage tanks on fire. A second large building near by was hit by two bombs and seen to collapse and fall in pieces. Finally, sheds and workshops were machine-gunned from almost ground level. The target was left blazing."

Several fires also were caused at Regensburg, it said, and at Ostend a large explosion followed by fire was observed by the British flyers. From these night attacks, the communique said, one British plane failed to return.

The Air Ministry News Service said that one pilot reported his bombs burst squarely on a factory and that the boiler house and a tall chimney collapsed in the eastern outskirts of Regensburg, which is a Danube port where oil from Rumanian fields is stored and refined. In this, the second raid on Regensburg, another pilot told of seeing a gigantic sheet of flame leap skyward after a big explosion. He said the flash was "vividly reflected all over the heavens."

A coastal town in southwest England was attacked in force early tonight by German raiders who followed their old tactics of first dropping fire bombs, then high explosives. Other outlying areas were raided after dark, but London had been free of alerts long past the usual time for the appearance of the night raiders. The Liverpool area was among those reporting raids.

England had a quiet day. A joint Air and Home Security ministries communique issued early tonight said only: "There is nothing to report during daylight today."

British Claim 'Slight Edge' on Nazis in Air; Blows at Reich Plants, Gain in Planes Cited

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Jan. 13—British air sources said today the Royal Air Force was winning a "slight edge" in the aerial conflict which they expected would decide the success or failure of any German invasion attempt.

Britain held supremacy, they said, because of continuous and systematic bombing of German industry and communications, because of a slight advantage over the German Air Fleet in the vital races for altitude and because of the increased number of planes coming from British and American factories.

"It must be remembered," one informant said, "that this position is being held despite engagements on three fronts, Greek, North African and home, and at a time when most American factories are not near maximum production."

Since the start of the air warfare, one source said, British planes had attacked Nazi military targets with such regularity "the Germans never get a chance to rebuild them."

This inability to repair damage, it was said, had considerable effect on the methodical Germans.

Augmenting these bombings now were the daylight attacks by fighter-escorted bombers against troops in Germany and Nazi-occupied countries and against communications.

Four types of United States-built planes are being or soon will be flown across the Atlantic to Britain, it was announced officially. They are the Lockheed-Hudson long-range reconnaissance bomber for the R. A. F.'s Coastal Command; the Lockheed Ventura bomber, described as "a larger and faster version" of the Lockheed-Hudson; the Boeing B-17 four-engined bomber, and the Consolidated two-engined flying boat.

HOPKINS MEETS KING

Roosevelt Envoy Received at Buckingham Palace.

London, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—Harry Hopkins, President Roosevelt's personal emissary to Britain, was received by King George VI at Buckingham Palace today and remained for more than half an hour.

The King also received Prime Minister Churchill for the first time since the Christmas holidays. Lord Halifax, British Ambassador-designate to the United States, and Lady Halifax were luncheon guests of the King and Queen.

Charles Peake of the Foreign Office, who will accompany Lord Halifax to Washington, also was received by the King.

Agriculture Minister Calls For 1,000,000 Additional Acres

Dublin, Eire, Jan. 13 (AP)—Dr. James Ryan, Ireland's Minister of Agriculture, appealed today for 1,000,000 additional acres to be cultivated to meet an expected shortage of wheat and stock feed.

He spoke before the Dublin county committee of agriculture.

PROPOSE PEACE PLAN

British Workers Would Put It Up to German People.

London, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—A resolution demanding what was described as a "people's peace"—an appeal to the German people over Adolf Hitler's head to end the war—was adopted yesterday by a meeting of 2,000 workers' representatives.

The resolution was sponsored by a rebel Laborite, Denis Pritt, a Member of Parliament, who also launched a campaign for a "people's government" with power to take over banks, land transport and big industries. He demanded in addition a higher standard of living, adequate bombproof shelters, restoration of all trade union rights, independence for India and friendship for Soviet Russia.

"Our policy is to offer to the peoples of the enemy a peace of no annexations, no reparations or indemnities, with liberty to all peoples to determine their own destiny," said Pritt, who was expelled from the Labor party last March for refusal to join in condemnation of the Russian invasion of Finland.

Daylight Alarm in Geneva.

Berne, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—An air raid alarm was sounded in Geneva in broad daylight today after a second successive night in which waves of foreign planes flew over neutral Switzerland. No planes were seen during the daylight alarm, but the sound of their motors could be heard.

The Swiss High Command in a communique which did not identify their nationality, said that between midnight and 5 A. M. western, southern and southeastern Switzerland were crossed "not once but many times."

NAZIS RENEW DIPLOMATIC MOVES IN SOFIA

German Minister Calls On Bulgarian Premier And Foreign Minister

May Take Philoff To Berlin Soon To Discuss Balkan Steps

[By the Associated Press]

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 13—Germany renewed diplomatic activity here tonight amid indications of a stronger Russian stand against possible transit of German troops through Bulgaria for an attack on Greece or the Dardenelles.

The German Minister, Baron Herbert von Richtofen, called on Premier Bogdan Philoff and Foreign Minister Ivan Popoff in conferences considered important in the wake of the denial by the Russian news agency that the Soviet had given consent to German entry into Bulgaria.

Richtofen and his wife accompanied Philoff on his recent "health trip" to Vienna and the German Minister was reported to have gone on to Berlin before returning to Sofia Saturday.

May Not Please Nazis

The Soviet denial and Philoff's speech yesterday in which he asserted Bulgarians "would not forgive anyone who tried to make Bulgaria National Socialist, Communist or Fascist" were regarded as not likely to please the Nazis.

German circles hinted that Philoff and Richtofen might shortly go to Berlin together.

Although the Russian statement which newspapers did not publish, was held to indicate a stronger Soviet stand, some informed sources did not discard the possibility that Moscow in the interests of its non-aggression pact with Germany, might overlook German entry into Bulgaria.

Meanwhile, Bulgaria and Russia opened negotiations for renewal of their 1940 trade treaty involving goods valued at $10,000,000.

More Men Are Called

In line with the preparedness note in Philoff's speech, Bulgaria ordered youths designated for, but excused from artillery training last year, to report by January 15. The published notices said only a few hundred for whom equipment was lacking during normal training periods were involved.

There has been speculation, however, that a new class also might start training this month to augment Bulgaria's small army.

Many Bulgarians felt that Philoff's preparedness emphasis was intended as a warning to Bulgaria's neighbors not to attack in the event of negotiations for movement of German troops, now massed on the Rumanian frontier

Philoff's Stand Draws Praise In Turkish Press

Ankara, Turkey, Jan. 13 (AP)—Turkey's official radio and press accepted Bulgarian Premier Philoff's expressed desire for neutrality today as proof that despite the Premier's recent visit to Germany he did not commit Bulgaria to a new pro-German policy in the Balkans.

Philoff's speech was hailed by the semi-official Turkish party organ, Ulus, as "drawing the line between the Balkans and war," and the official radio said "at least for the present" there will be no change in Bulgarian foreign policy.

British Officers Arrive

This praise of Bulgaria's stand was made as staff officers of Britain's Middle East command arrived for military discussions which observers said might affect the course of the war in the Mediterranean, the Balkans and Africa. The two-day military session will begin tomorrow.

The Turkish radio said it must have been "to justify Bulgaria's military preparations that Philoff said peace does not depend on Bulgaria."

Ulus said: "Philoff's address will cause only happiness in Turkey, and we wish the Bulgarian Government nothing but success in its efforts to prevent being dragged this way or that by foreign-inspired politicians."

Quotes Russian Press

The Russian press was quoted by the radio to show also that the new German-Russian trade pact had no political significance.

"German leaders only wish to assure the German public there will be no repetition of the 1914 blockade terror, and at the same time hope the pact will be accepted by their people as an answer to American announcements on aiding Britain."

The agenda for the British-Turkish military talks was not disclosed, but it is known that Turkey wants to regain the Dodecanese islands which Italy holds in the eastern Mediterranean. The country has manifested great interest in Greek and British successes over Italy in the Mediterranean area, as well as promised United States aid to Britain.

Parley In Ankara

New York, Jan. 13 (AP)—The Budapest radio in a broadcast heard by NBC said tonight the Turkish Foreign Minister Sukru Saracoglu had a "very long and significant" conference today with German Ambassador Franz von Papen at Ankara, Turkey. No details were given.

SOVIET DENIES BACKING MOVE INTO BULGARIA

Says Any Such Nazi Drive Is Without Knowledge or Consent of Russia.

NAZI ENVOY MEETS PHILOV

British Staff Officers Reach Ankara for Military Talks With Turks.

Moscow, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—If German troops are entering Bulgaria they are doing so without the knowledge and consent of Soviet Russia, because neither the German nor the Bulgarian Government has raised the question at Moscow, the Soviet announced in a special communique issued through Tass, the official Russian news agency, and made public over the Moscow radio late last night.

The Tass statement, denying foreign reports that Sofia had been notified of Russia's consent to the movement of German troops into Bulgaria, declared in part: "If German troops are really present in Bulgaria, and if the further dispatch of German troops to Bulgaria is really taking place, then all this occurred and is occurring without the knowledge and consent of the U. S. S. R., since the German side never raised before the U. S. S. R. the question of the presence or dispatch of German troops to Bulgaria. . . . In particular, the Bulgarian Government never approached the U. S. S. R. with an inquiry regarding the passage of German troops to Bulgaria and consequently could not receive any reply from the U. S. S. R."

The Soviet Government on October 15 last, likewise used the medium of a denial issued by Tass to comment on the entry of German troops into Rumania. On that occasion it denied that the Kremlin had been notified of "the aims and number of troops sent to Rumania."

Says Aim Is Peace.

Ruse, Bulgaria, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—The aim of Bulgarian foreign policy is to keep Bulgaria and all the Balkans at peace, Premier Bogdan Philov declared last night. But "one day we may have to enter the war," he asserted, adding that President Roosevelt's message to Congress last week unquestionably pointed to a long war, likely to spread to other parts of the world, and that to keep the peace "does not depend on Bulgaria."

Speaking before 10,000 people in this frontier town just across the Danube from Giurgiu, Rumania, where the advance guard of a mighty German army is stationed, the Premier said in his broadcast address that he was sure the Bulgarians would not forgive any one who tried to make Bulgaria Nazi, Communist or Fascist.

SCHMELING MUST REMAIN IN SERVICE

Fighter Refused Furlough to Accept Lazek Match.

Berlin, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—Max Schmeling, former world heavyweight boxing champion, has been denied an army furlough to accept a challenge by Heinz Lazek, Viennese heavyweight, for the European boxing championship.

The reason given today was that the German fighter's "parachute training has reached the stage which demands extreme exertion and the most intense concentration."

Schmeling, known as the Black Uhlan in the prize ring, won the world's title on a foul in the fourth round of a bout with Jack Sharkey in 1930, and lost it again to Sharkey in 1932. In 1936, he knocked out Joe Louis in twelve rounds, but lost to Louis by a first-round knockout in 1938.

According to the rules of the International Boxing Union, Schmeling must defend his title as European champion by January 15, since Lazek recently defeated the Italian Precio Merlo.

The German Boxing Commission today was unable to rule whether Schmeling's inability to meet Lazek at present will be regarded as a postponement due to the war or whether Schmeling must automatically yield the title.

Schmeling broke his left leg in October in his parachute training, and in November he was a hospital patient at Hehenlychen, in Uckermark, at a sanitorium for sports people.

He now has completely recovered and resumed his duties as a parachute trooper.

His actress wie, Anny Ondra, declared:

"Max will fight soon—but not in the boxing ring."

Schmeling volunteered in July, 1939, as a 'chutist.

Nazi U-Boat Captains Get Special Devices To Make Life Easier

Berlin, Jan. 13 (AP)—German submarine aces are making their winter raids in "custom-built" submarines.

Informed Germans said that outstanding underwater officers are getting special apparatus built into their craft just as such flyers as Captain Baron Manfred von Richthofen and Lieut. Gen. Ernst Udet, who had planes built to conform with their special desires and body measurements.

Lieut. Com. Guenther Prien, acclaimed by Germany as the "hero of Scapa Flow" and destroyer of the British battleship Royal Oak, was the first to get special equipment when the periscope on his submarine was altered to fit his height.

Joachim Scheppke, another top-flight U-boat commander, is especially tall and has been cramped by long weeks in the narrow submarine. He is having alterations made on his ship to make life easier.

Lieut. Com. Otto Kretschmer made technical suggestions which enabled dock workers to install new mechanism allowing his craft to submerge thirty per cent. faster than normally.

BRITISH PLAN LUMP SALE OF $850,000,000 IN U. S. PROPERTY TO BUY ARMS

Deal To Be One Of Largest Transfers At One Time In History

Cash To Be Used For Munitions Before Lease-Lend Plan Effective

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 13—One of the largest lump transfers of American property in history was indicated today in an announcement by Secretary of the Tresury Morgenthau that American investment trusts were negotiating for the purchase of the United Kingdom's "direct" investments in the United States.

A few minutes before making the disclosure at a press conference, the Secretary said Sir Frederick Phillips, Under Secretary of the British Treasury "informed me they (the British Government) are ready to do business." The proceeds, the Secretary said, will be used to pay for war purchases before the lease-lending plan takes effect.

Estimated At $850,000,000

Morgenthau said he was unable to estimate the amount of property involved, but a recent Federal Reserve Board estimate of these assets was $850,000,000.

Thus it was indicated that the contemplated deal, while it might be huge, would cover only a part of the total British investments in this country, which have been variously estimated at from $4,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 or even more.

"Direct" investments were understood to comprise land, factories, etc., directly owned by British citizens, but not readily negotiable on the public markets. In addition to the possible sale of these investments, the British have been selling readily disposable securities in a comparatively small but steady stream.

Demand British To Sell All

Some legislators have demanded that Britain dispose of all her assets here before seeking loans. Senator Wheeler (Dem., Mont.) said today that he had been advised by Harry L. Hopkins last summer that British assets here aggregated $14,000,000,000 then.

Wheeler said these assets now total at least $7,000,000,000, and added that Britain should exhaust her credit before asking any "loans, leased equipment or gifts."

Morgenthau said he had already given Sir Frederick the name of Cyril Quinn, of New York, the representative of one "very large group of investment trusts." He said a second group of investment companies was to see him tomorrow and also would be introduced to the British, and that any other groups interested in the purchase also were welcome.

David Schencker, head of the Securities and Exchange Commission's investment trust division, who has participated in the Quinn-Morgenthau conferences, said Quinn was chairman of the Tri-Continental Corporation, which was the leader of the first group of companies. He said he understood that the second group is headed by the Lehman Corporation of New York.

30.24-6949

30.24-6949

15 Companies Lined Up

Schencker quoted Quinn as saying that he had fifteen companies lined up with him, and that they had total assets of nearly $700,000,000.

Neither Morgenthau nor Schencker was able to describe the properties which may be involved in the huge transactions, but they indicated that all United Kingdom investments in the United States, except for stocks and bonds, which have a ready market on organized exchanges, were involved.

This meant that the British might sell many huge industries in this country, which are wholly or primarily British-owned. Also apparently included in the transactions were huge real-estate holdings.

Center On "Direct" Investments

Morgenthau and Schencker did not exclude the possibility that the investment trusts might buy some of the readily marketable securities now owned by the British, but said that since the sale of these securities presented no particular difficulties, discussions had been centered on "direct" investments.

Although saying the Administration "has no fixed policy" on the question of requiring the British to dispose of American investments before taking advantage of President Roosevelt's "lease-lending" bill in order to obtain munitions in this country, the Secretary said his actions today "speak louder than any comments."

He also declined to discuss the possibility, being studied in some Administration quarters, of requiring the British to post as collateral under the lease-lending plan those investments which prove unsalable in the current transactions.

The Secretary said today's negotiations dealt only with investments held in the United Kingdom, and did not apply to the rest of the British Empire, where at least $1,000,000,000 more American property is owned.

Asked If They Could Help

Morgenthau described his conference with Quinn in these words:

"One of the representatives of some investment trusts came to me and asked whether the investment trusts could be useful in the present situation to make their facilities available."

Morgenthau then explained since the Securities Commission supervision over investment trusts, he asked Commission Chairman Jerome Frank to look into the proposal.

Today, he said, he received a report that "a very large group of investment trusts had associated themselves informally and are ready to buy any direct investments the United Kingdom may hold in this country and I so informed Sir Frederick Phillips."

Frank said the SEC was studying the investment proposals to assure "fair distribution" of the purchases among the interested investment trusts.

Two Concerns Are Among Largest In Wall Street

New York, Jan. 13 (AP)—Tri-Continental Corporation and Lehman Corporation, reported by Washington authorities today to be prospective buyers of the United Kingdom's "direct" investments in the United States, are among the largest of the Wall Street investing companies.

Officials of the companies refused to comment on any details of their interest in the securities to be liquidated.

Tri-Continental Corporation reported total investment as of September 30, 1940, of $39,255,000 and total resources of $42,589,000. It has several investing company affiliates.

Lehman Corporation, formed by interests identified with the banking firm of Lehman Brothers, in its lates report showed total investments of $63,971,000.

British Sell U. S. Stock Valued At $3,120,000

New York, Jan. 13 (AP)—A block of 80,000 shares of common stock of Montgomery Ward & Co. was sold "over the counter" after the close of the New York Stock Exchange today in what brokerage circles said was a continuation of British liquidation of American securities to raise dollar exchange for war purchases.

The Montgomery Ward stock, worth about $3,120,000 at current market quotations, was offered by the investment firms of Dominick & Dominick and Lehman Bros. at $39 a share, the closing price on the exchange.

Other houses were reported planning to sell later in the week 40,000 shares of Union Pacific and 50,000 shares of F. W. Woolworth in the speedup of British sales.

Some security dealers said the British agents handling the liquidation had met with sufficient success in using the investment machinery to indicate continuation of the selling by that route.

2-Year Limit on F.D.R.'s Power Proposed in House

Washington, D. C., Jan. 13 (AP).—Amendments to the British aid bill, reflecting, in part at least, the ideas of Wendell Willkie, were introduced in the House today soon after Administration leaders had expressed a willingness to accept some restrictions on the powers which the measure would give President Roosevelt.

After telephoning Willkie, Representative Kenneth Simpson (R-N. Y.) proposed that the bill's grant of authority be limited to two years and that the legislation specifically name the nations which this country is to assist.

Simpson, a new member of the House, but long prominent in national Republican affairs, said he had talked with Willkie before presenting his proposals, but did not wish to commit the titular party leader to them. However, in announcing his general approval of the British aid bill yesterday, Willkie asked that a time limit be included. #

Wheeler Says Films Seek to Get U. S. in War

Threatens Legislative Curb on Screen Industry to Force Impartial Attitude

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 (AP).—Senator Burton K. Wheeler wrote "Paramount News" today that "The propaganda for war that is being waged by the motion picture companies" might make necessary some legislative restriction "unless the industry itself displays a more impartial attitude."

The Montana Senator sent a copy of the letter to Will Hays, who supervises the motion picture industry.

Senaor Wheeler told a press conference that "the motion picture industry is doing a terrific job of war propaganda," and added that he had information that "the Administration is encouraging propaganda pictures."

Mr. Roosevelt, Senator Wheeler said, is "using every agency at his command in trying to whip up the emotions of the people and make them war minded."

The text of Wheeler's letter follows:

"Will you kindly inform me when, if at all, you intend to carry my answer to the President's most recent fireside chat? And what, if anything, you are going to do about carrying both sides of the controversy on pending legislation which directly involves the question of war or peace?

"This question is so important that I believe the people should insist not only on equal radio coverage for both sides of this highly controversial question, but that newspapers and the motion pictures should do the same.

"The propaganda for war that is being waged by the motion-picture companies of this country is reaching a point at which I believe legislation will have to be enacted regulating the industry in this respect unless the industry itself displays a more impartial attitude."

"Many complaints are coming to me and to other members of Congress to the effect that the motion-picture industry is carrying on a violent propaganda campaign intending to incite the American people to the point where they will become involved in this war. As you well know, the motion picture and news reel is one of the great agencies for molding public opinion of this country, and if we are going to preserve this nation as a democratic republic, it is highly essential that both ides of each question be presented.

"I sincerely hope that you will call this to the attention of your people, as I am fast coming to the conclusion that legislation should be enacted to remedy the present situation."

Experts See Eire Invasion

Washington, D. C., Jan. 14 (Tuesday) (AP).—Belief spread among American military experts today that Adolf Hitler's next stroke would be an attempted invasion of Eire to secure bases for a fiercer air and submarine war on Britain's vital shipping. The current furious raids by the RAF upon the so-called invasion bases on the European continent were interpreted as a reflection of British apprehension in this regard.

Nazis Doubt Willkie Will Be Converted To Their Cause By Trip

New York, Jan. 13 (AP)—An official German radio broadcast in English, picked up tonight by NBC, had this to say about Wendell L. Willkie's qualified indorsement of the program to aid Britain:

"It should not be forgotten that Mr. Willkie, too, is the representative of big business and a member of those same circles which, in England, saw their salvation only in war and which did not hesitate to provoke the present conflict for the sake of saving their own skin and money bags. . . .

"We can, therefore, only hope that Mr. Willkie, during his trip to Europe, will travel with open eyes and an unprejudiced American mind. But to be frank, we very much doubt that he will be able to overcome his class prejudices and his personal economic interests."

PRINCESS IS GIVEN DEPORTATION RULE

Justice Department Reveals Warrant Has Been Served On Stephanie, Alleged Nazi

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 (AP)—The Justice Department said today that immigration agents had served a deportation warrant on Princess Stephanie Hohenlohe-Waldenburg in Palo Alto, Calif.

The princess, traveling on a Hungarian passport, was granted one extension of her visitor's visa but was denied a second. She had agreed to leave last Saturday, the department said, but she notified immigration officials on January 6 that she was suffering from a nervous condition and was unable to travel.

Two officers of the U. S. Public Health Service later certified she was suffering from "hysteria" and apparently was too ill to travel.

"However," the Justice Department added in its announcement, "the princess' own physician stated to immigration service officials that she was obtaining and taking sedatives which had not been prescribed, and this was largely responsible for her physical and mental condition. He indicated that she would continue in that condition so long as she continues to take sedatives."

Princess Hohenlohe has been characterized in the British House of Commons and elsewhere as a Nazi sympathizer. She has denied having any part in Nazi propaganda and has retained an attorney to fight such accusations.

FINNS FACE FAMINE, OFFICIAL WARNS U. S.

Nation's Grain Stocks Down to a 4-Month Supply, It Is Said

HELSINKI, Finland, Jan. 13 (AP)—Minister of Supply Vaino Kotilainen told American correspondents today that Finland faces famine by next Summer unless food shipments from the United States are received to augment the nation's grain stocks, now down to a four-month supply.

The Minister said that Finland could be tided over by $7,000,000 worth of food sought in the United States, but that the government's request for a loan in that amount, as suggested by the American Minister to Finland, had been rejected by the United States.

Mr. Kotilainen expressed amazement at this action.

"Surely the Finns proved their good faith in paying their (war) debts," he said. He attributed Washington's refusal to "malicious reports abroad" to the effect that Finland exports food to Germany.

The Minister added that Finland was the only country using the far northern port of Petsamo and that imports were passing through there to nobody but the Finns and neighboring Sweden.

Finland's food stocks are so low, he asserted, that his countrymen will be eating pine bark by next Summer, as they did during the 1918 famine, unless American aid is forthcoming.

NEW YORKER HEADS AIRCRAFT PRIORITY

Dun & Bradstreet Chief Helps Stettinius.

Washington, Jan. 13 (A. P.).—Arthur B. Whiteside, president of Dun & Bradstreet, New York, was made executive officer today of a new organization with powers to administer priorities in the field of commercial aircraft. Edward R. Stettinius Jr., director of the priorities division in the new Office of Production Management, announced the establishment of the commercial aircraft priorities section and the appointment of Mr. Whiteside.

Officials for the O. P. M. said that the section would have the authority to administer priorities in such a way as to keep commercial air lines supplied with the engine and aircraft production which could be spared by the military establishment. In other words, they said, the production available for commercial air lines would be apportioned by the section and by a commercial aircraft priorities committee which will function with it.

Mr. Whiteside was named a member of this committee. Other members will be announced later.

Conviction of Russian Spies Upheld

Supreme Court Rules Against West Coast Pair

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 (AP).—The Supreme Court today upheld the conviction of two men—one a citizen of Russia and the other a Russian-born naturalized American—on a charge of violating Federal anti-spy legislation by obtaining information from U. S. Naval Intelligence files.

Justice Reed delivered the opinion, which applied to Hafis Salich, former Russian, employed by Naval Intelligence at San Pedro, Cal., and Mikhail Nicholas Gorin, a Soviet citizen employed by a Los Angeles tour-

Salich was alleged to have supplied Gorin with data from naval files in 1938 after Gorin had solicited information concerning "Japanese activities in that area for use in the event of trouble between Japan and Russia." Salich was said to have received $1,700.

Donald R. Richberg, attorney for the two men, argued that conviction under the 1917 espionage act was justified only if the information related to a vessel, aircraft, navy yard or similar things specified in the statute.

He added that if the act were applied to everything "affecting national defense"—a phrase used in the legislation—it would be unconstitutional. This, he argued, would "subject millions to possible indictment," including newspaper and radio."

The Justice Dept. contended that violation of the act involved furnishing secret information of a military nature "with a conscious desire or with a reasonable expectation of causing injury to the U. S. or advantage to a foreign nation."

Gorin had been sentenced to six years' imprisonment and Salich to four years.

Jews Crowd Consulate In Berlin for U. S. Visas

Rush Follows Reported Easing of Immigration Restrictions

BERLIN, Jan. 13 (AP).—Several hundred Jews, encouraged by reports that the American immigration restrictions had been relaxed, jammed the American Consulate today to renew applicantions for visas.

Some officials said restrictions had been eased, particularly regarding the type of affidavits to be accepted from Jews and the question of their good character. During the closing months of 1940, each candidate for entry into the United States was required to pass a stiff examination and supply affidavits that he did not have a police record.

The Union of Jews in Germany reported a steady departure of Jews from the country last year. Statistics for the first quarter showed 4,755 Jews left Germany. The majority went to the United States, 1,100 to South America, 500 to Asia and 100 to Africa.

Netherland Jews Must Register

THE HAGUE, The Netherlands (via Berlin), Tuesday, Jan. 14 (AP).—All Jews must register within six weeks, under a decree issued today by the German Commissioner for the Netherlands. Persons having only one Jewish grandparent will be classified as Jews. A grandparent who belonged to a Jewish congregation will be regarded as a Jew. Failure to register will be punishable by fines and imprisonment up to five years.

Konoye Confers With War Chiefs On U. S. Policy

Studies 'Delicate Relations' at Secret Session; Press Attacks Lend-Lease Plan

By The Associated Press

TOKIO, Jan. 14 (Tuesday).—Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye and the highest army and navy officials met for four hours last night in a tea-house session which the press said was prompted by "the increased delicacy of United States-Japanese relations."

The Cabinet Information Bureau confirmed that such a meeting was held, but they said its nature could not be disclosed and that it was not regarded as "unusually important."

In view of the Japanese custom of transacting the most important business in tea houses, however, the gathering attracted special attention. Prince Konoye and the Cabinet secretary were the only civilians present, the others being the War and Navy Ministers, their chiefs of staff and other high-ranking military men.

The Tokio press left no doubt of Japanese concern over United States policies, reiterating the contention that the lease-lend program would drive America closer to war.

Simultaneously, the government opened four days of conferences with representative civilians to explain international and domestic problems and policies with "full frankness."

The newspaper "Miyako" reported that Prince Konoye and the Ministers of War and Navy would make the majority explanations at these meetings, "in view of the delicate international and domestic situation."

Norwegians Urged To Fight for Reich

Oslo (via Berlin), Jan. 13 (A. P.).—Major Vidkin Quisling, leader of the Norwegian Nazis, announced today creation of a Nordland regiment and appealed to Norwegian youth to join to fight for the German cause.

"Germany's struggle through a war forced upon her by England," he asserted, "has developed into a general European liberation and independence fight against English world tyranny."

His new regiment of Norwegian volunteers, he said, "shall fight shoulder to shoulder with Germany."

French Tell of Bombings on Both Sides of Mekong—Hull Calls In Thai Minister

BANGKOK, Thailand, Jan. 13 (AP)—The Thai [Siamese] Army, supported by the air corps, crossed into French Indo-China and claimed for Thailand a sector across the northeastern frontier, the Thai High Command reported tonight.

The communiqué did not specify where the frontier was crossed, but Thailand has claimed some territory in the Laos district of Indo-China across the Mekong River.

The High Command said the advance was continuing and that French forces were falling back.

The communiqué declared that another advance was being made farther south, into Cambodia, where fighting was described as fierce.

HANOI, French Indo-China, Jan. 13 (AP)—Bombings were reported today on both sides of the Mekong River frontier, where border warfare continued between Thai and French Indo-Chinese forces.

Three of Thailand's bombers were said to have attacked Pakse today and Thai guns were said to have shelled the Indo-China town of Vien Tiane for two hours yesterday, killing an undisclosed number of natives.

French bombers were reported to have attacked Tatphanom on the Thai side of the border last night.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 (AP)—Secretary of State Cordell Hull called in the Minister of Thailand, M. Pramoj, today for a discussion believed to have concerned hostilities between Thailand and French Indo-China.

Afterward the Secretary reported merely that the Minister and he had exchanged general information but did not discuss the question of a settlement of the difficulties.

It was said this action was taken because Australia and South Africa have not imprisoned German citizens in those countries.

Norwegian Regiment To Fight for Germans

Quisling Announces Special Inducements to Those Volunteering for Service

OSLO (via Berlin), Jan. 13 (AP).—Promises of German citizenship without relinquishment of Norwegian citizenship were offered today as an inducement for Norwegians to join a "Nordland" regiment and fight for the German cause. Creation of the regiment was announced by Maj. Vidkun Quisling, leader of the Norwegian Nazis. There was no indication how close a co-operation with German armed forces might be expected, nor whether the regiment would leave Norwegian soil. Norwegians serving one year in the new force would be entitled to government jobs, it was announced, and, in the event of active war service, veterans would be entitled to farms.

Maj. Quisling said "reorganization" of Europe was an aim. "Germany's struggle through a war forced upon her by England has developed into a general European liberation and independence fight against English world tyranny," he said. His new regiment of Norwegian volunteers, he said, "shall fight shoulder to shoulder with Germany."

FRENCH SHIP FAILS TO BREAK BLOCKADE

Mendoza Turns Back To Montevideo After Second Attempt

British Say Success Would Have Led Four Others To Make Attempt

[By the Associated Press]

Montevideo, Jan. 13—The 8,000-ton French freighter Mendoza was reported steaming back to Montevideo tonight from an apparently frustrated second attempt to run home through the British Atlantic blockade.

A report from Punta Del Este, a hundred miles east of Montevideo, said the Mendoza was seen returning to this port after she had put out from Maldanado Bay about noon today.

Cruiser Outside River Mouth

The British auxiliary cruiser Asturias, whose challenge of the Mendoza last night drove it back, had been reported lying outside the mouth of the River Plate, ready to give pursuit again.

The Mendoza first left here last night with a cargo of chilled beef, canned meat and wool.

Uruguayan Foreign Minister Alberto Guani was reported in some quarters to have protested to Britain against the halting of the Mendoza within the Pan-American neutrality zone. Guani himself said, however, that he was waiting to determine definitely where the interception occurred.

30.24 - 6951

30.24-6951

States British Viewpoint

Millington Drake, British Minister, who hurried back to Montevideo from Buenos Aires, said he had not received any formal protest from Guani, but that the Asturias had intercepted the Mendoza outside Uruguayan waters.

The Asturias sought to verify the sort of cargo aboard the Mendoza because she sailed without a British navicert, he said, but abandoned the effort as soon as the French ship reentered territorial waters.

British officials said the Mendoza's representatives had not asked for a navicert, the naval certificate which would let her pass the blockade.

Four More At Buenos Aires

They added that if the Mendoza had succeeded in cracking the blockade four other French merchantmen now at Buenos Aires would have been ordered out in an effort to duplicate the feat.

The Mendoza, which was carrying about fifteen passengers, including women and children en route to Marseille, was first stopped by the Asturias near the same spot where the German pocket battleship Graf Spee fought and fled from British warships December 13, 1939.

The Mendoza had not entered the port tonight. She was believed anchored in the outer roads. Agents of the Mendoza's operators made no comment.

Lord Halifax--Movies' Ideal British Envoy

By Drew Middleton

Associated Press Foreign Correspondent

London, Jan. 13—Viscount Halifax, widely labeled as "Britain's No. 2 appeaser" until the beginning of the war, is going to the United States as Ambassador with Prime Minister Winston Churchill's blessing as the best man who could be found for the job.

Speaking to the Pilgrim Society in London a few days ago, Churchill emphasized that the new Ambassador had vowed with other members of the Government to prosecute the war against "Nazi tyranny" at whatever cost until it was destroyed.

Churchill paid tribute to Halifax as a man who "never swerved from the path of duty as he saw it shining before him."

"Erred" With Many Others

It has been in the same way that friends of Halifax have answered criticism that he helped as Foreign Minister to formulate the Chamberlain policies which led to the Munich appeasement settlement.

After all, they say, if Halifax erred in supporting Munich, he erred with a high percentage of the British people on his side.

Halifax himself, at the same Pilgrim luncheon, expressed his philosophy of the war as being that now "with the legend of Axis invincibility broken, we face the future with sober confidence.

"We are encouraged by the knowledge that will to resist this German attempt to secure world domination is as strong on the other side of the Atlantic as it is here, and we do not doubt that achievement of our purpose is within the power of the English-speaking people."

Few statesmen have had so varied a career as Edward Frederick Lindley Wood, Third Viscount Halifax, First Baron Irwin.

This six-foot one-inch nobleman with a withered left arm is an arresting compound of country gentleman, cloistered theologian, hard-riding cavalryman and cautious diplomat.

He has debated with Gandhi translations from the Greek of the Sermon on the Mount. He has led a paper chase with gallants and girls of the vice-regal court at Delhi, India. He has described fox hunting to Reichsmarshal Hermann Willhelm Goering.

He has commanded a cavalry regiment and he knows the horror of war.

Before he decided to accept the post of Viceroy of India—the richest imperial plum—he and his aged father prayed in a tiny country church for guidance.

"I think you really ought to go, Edward," said the father.

"I think so, too," said the son.

It is a mistake, however, to think that Halifax is solely a religious country squire drawn into power politics less by personal ambition than because it is in the tradition of his blood.

First-Class Horseman

His blood is that of the Courtenays and Greys, country families. The first Baronet Irwin was created in 1784. The earlier Woods were valorous gentlemen at arms in the middle ages, others were among the ruffled swordsmen who singed the beard of Philip of Spain.

Despite his almost useless left arm, Halifax is an intelligent and resourceful tennis player and a first-class horseman. Legend holds that his favorite portrait is one showing him astride a hunter in hunting kit.

'But there is no legend in his remark: "I would rather be M. F. H. (master of foxhounds) than P. M. (Prime Minister)."

Two fortunes came to him by inheritance and before the war he lived in staid, solidly smart Eaton Square. Now he lives at the swank Dorchester Hotel.

Few people except Sir Nevile Henderson more closely approach the movie ideal of the British diplomat.

Halifax is spare, his handclasp and voice are firm and his manner inoffensively weighty. His clothes are inconspicuously good.

His manners and habits, as befit the son of the most churchly layman in Britain, are exemplary. His charming wife, three sons and daughter never are in the news.

Halifax arises each morning at 6 and unless pressure of events demands he is in bed by 10.30 each night.

His meals are simple, he drinks little wine and he smokes cigarettes almost exclusively. He is fond of good ale like his father, who gave it credit for his 94 years.

Positions He Has Held

He has held almost every high position to which a Briton can aspire except that of Prime Minister. He has been Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, president of the Board of Education, Minister of Agriculture, Secretary of State for War, Lord Privy Seal and Viceroy of India.

His speeches and his life of John Keble exhibit the striking characteristic of his mind—its kinship to those of the great New England exponents of "plain living and high thinking."

There are touches of Emerson and Thoreau about him. His speeches on foreign policy frequently are flavored with olympian detachment and preoccupation with broader issues which his enemies contend have nothing to do with the prospect before Britain.

On the other hand, Halifax frequently shows surprising ability—for one of his tastes and temperament—to wrestle successfully with practical problems.

A sample: When the Anglo-Indians of the "stick 'em up against a wall and shoot 'em" school advocated this treatment for the Indian rebels, Halifax stopped them with "And after that, what?"

Supported By Old Foes

His detachment from industry and commerce has made him foremost in planning a Britain with more equal opportunities for all. His interest in those plans plus his unblemished character are reasons why his old Parliamentary foes support his choice as Ambassador.

His detractors balance the famous description of him: "He is a man whose deep spirituality shines through all of his talk and all of his acts" with the biting criticism by Harold Laski, London economist and author, who said:

"He dislikes the clean-cut principles and the downright mind. He likes that twilight world of intuition in which fine sentiments are uttered which all men approve."

War Communiques

British

LONDON, Jan. 13 (AP).—An Air Ministry communique today:

During the hours of daylight yesterday, very small formations of our fighters patrolled the French coast of the Strait of Dover, attacking from a low level troops in trenches near the beach, as well as shipping and ground defenses.

From these and other day operations three of our fighters are missing.

An attack on enemy shipping also was carried out by aircraft of the Coastal Command yesterday in Norwegian waters. Direct hits were made on two merchant vessels, which also were machine-gunned.

Another Air Ministry communique:

Targets in France, Germany and Italy were objectives of the Royal Air Force last night. Docks at Brest were attacked with incendiary bombs and high explosives. A number of heavy bombs burst along the waterfront, and fires broke out. A warehouse was set ablaze and a large fire started in Port Militaire.

Le Havre and Lorient were also attacked, and high explosive bombs were seen to burst in docks at both of these enemy-occupied harbors.

Airdromes, including those at Vannes, Chartres, Evreux and Morlaix, were visited and good results observed. At Vannes and Chartres, airdrome buildings were set well alight, and at Evreux a number of hostile aircraft on the ground were fired.

From these operations over France none of our aircraft is missing. A further communique on operations over Germany and Italy will be issued later.

A later Atr Ministry communique:

Aircraft of the Bomber Command were over Germany, Belgium and Italy last night, with orders to make oil targets their main objectives. A small force was dispatched to Regensburg and another to Porto Marghrea, near Venice.

In both these towns there are important oil refineries. At Regensburg, in Germany, several fires were caused, and at Ostend a large explosion followed by fire was observed.

At Porto Marghera, in Italy, a target was set on fire by incendiaries dropped by the first of the attacking air force. An hour later, when the last arrived, the whole target was well alight.

Anti-aircraft defenses first were silenced by machine-gun fire from a few hundred fet. Then, a heavy bomb was released from a very low level and blew up one of the large refinery buildings.

More bombs set oil storage tanks on fire. A second large building near by was hit by two bombs and was seen to collapse and fall in pieces. Finally, sheds and workshops were machine-gunned almost from the ground level. The target was left blazing.

From these operations, one of our aircraft is missing.

A joint Air and Home Security Ministries communique:

There is nothing to report during daylight today.

CAIRO, Jan. 13 (AP).—A British headquarters communique tonight:

LIBYA: No change in the situation.

SUDAN: In the Kassala and Gallabat sectors, active patrolling continues, and we have inflicted casualties on the enemy.

OTHER FRONTS: Nothing to report.

German

BERLIN, Jan. 13 (AP).—A communique of the German high command today:

Our air force reconnoitered British territory yesterday.

Last night stronger combat formations attacked war vital objectives at London. Observations showed several large fires in the region north and south of the Thames bend and another conflagration with heavy smoke in the southeast portion of the city.

In addition, military objectives on the English south coast were bombed. Additional British harbors were mined.

During noon hours Sunday, the enemy, with weak forces, attempted again to penetrate the occupied area. During this attempt two enemy airplanes were shot down by anti-aircraft artillery and a third one by pursuit planes.

During the early morning hours today, isolated enemy airplanes dropped some bombs in southern Germany, including the town of Bayreuth. The enemy lost four airplanes yesterday.

Italian

ROME, Jan. 13 (AP).—The Italian high command communique today:

On the Greek front, normal patrol and artillery activity is taking place. Our planes machine-gunned and scattered troops on the march and columns of motor vehicles

In Cyrenaica (Libya), there was artillery activity on the Tobruk front and activity by one of our fast columns in the desert around Giarabub. An enemy advance base was effectively bombed.

Enemy planes bombed some places in Cyrenaica without causing victims.

In the eastern Mediterranean, one of our planes, piloted by Lieut. Capello with Lieut. Olivari as observer, torpedoed a big enemy warship.

The battleship reported hit in Friday's bulletin appears to have been of the Malaya class. Our air formation, which carried out well directed fire, was under command of Pilot Major Antonio Fadda.

In East Africa, enemy detachments attempted attacks on our posts on the Sudan front. They were repulsed with losses by fire and a counter-attack of our troops. Our air force bombed motor trucks, troops and defensive preparations in some places in Sudan.

The enemy carried out air attacks the night of Jan. 12 on Turin, causing some damage and wounding several; Venice, where one was killed and several wounded and damage caused, and Catania, where there was some damage but no victims.

At Catania, anti-aircraft defenses shot down a plane which crashed in the outskirts of the city. Another plane was shot down by naval artillery at Venice. The crew, consisting of six officers and non-commissioned officers, were made prisoners.

Hitler Seen Rushing to Beat Britain Before It Gets U. S. Aid

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

Developments over the week end tend to support the assertion of British Minister of Economic Warfare Dalton that the war will reach a climax in the "next few months, perhaps in the next few weeks"—a point which this column has been emphasizing for some time now.

Adolf Hitler's projected invasion of England undoubtedly has been the subject of the destructive argument between Nazi and British bombers. The nature of the objectives upon which they have been unloading their bombs lends substance to that view.

For Hitler the operations represent the necessary preparation for the actual attempt to land troops. For the British it is a question of stopping the invasion before it starts, by destroying transports and supplies accumulated for the assault.

That the German dictator should be looking for an opening at this unfavorable time of year is indication of the urgency of the matter from his standpoint. Flying conditions are bad and the English Channel is a raceway of peril for the transportation of hundreds of thousands of seasick troops and their mountainous equipment and supplies.

Expects Climax in Six Months.

The Fuehrer is spurred to take extreme chances by the determination of the United States administration to go all-out in aid for Britain. He is rushing against time in an effort to crush England before American help and her own resources give her sufficient strength to stand up against the might of the German war machine.

He will be lucky if fortune gives him a maximum of six months. Every day now is a golden one, for the turn of the war probably isn't farther away than that. He must strike quickly and surely before the combined Anglo-American resources descend on him.

Hitler's preliminary strategy must provide for the weakening of the defensive system which the British have constructed to ward off invasion. His weapon for that is his air force, since he is very weak in naval power. With his air fleet he must, so to speak, blast holes in the British ramparts to make way for his landing forces.

Attack on London.

For the past two nights the Germans have been pouring hell into London again. The point of that is two-fold: It is a continuation of the effort to break civilian morale; it is calculated to put this control-center of the country out of action before an attempt at invasion.

The answer of the Royal Air Force has been to slash savagely at the so-called invasion ports, from Norway down to Brest on the French coast. Brest has been raided several times in the past few days, and other objectives have included Flushing, Dunkirk, Calais and Rotterdam.

It is at these ports, and others of the occupied territories, that the Nazis have assembled their barges for the transportation of troops, and the supplies of all kinds necessary for such an adventure. John Bull's strategy has been to allow his enemy enough time to collect a lot of equipment, and then he would plaster it with bombs.

Hitler About to Strike.

The Royal Air Force also heavily bombed the German naval base of Wilhelmshaven. Here there is a great shipbuilding basin with three immense dry docks. The British Air Ministry today further anounced that low-flying fighting planes had attacked German troops in trenches near the beaches.

Yes, I think we may take it that Hitler is getting ready to strike. This isn't to say that the attempt an invasion of England necessarily will come first. He has alternative projects, and is an opportunist.

However, one thing still remains certain—England is the chief objective, since only through crushing the mother country could Hitler achieve a conclusive victory. All other operations are subsidiary, and directed to this same end.

REPATRIATION (PMS BUDGET-NEW)

BY LLOYD LEHRBAS

WASHINGTON,JAN.13-(AP)-UNCLE SAM IS MAKING ONE MORE EFFORT TO BRING HIS WORRIED AND WAR-TRAPPED NIECES AND NEPHEWS BACK FROM EUROPE.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT, ASSISTED BY THE AMERICAN RED CROSS, IS REPATRIATING CASH-SHY OR DESTITUTE AMERICANS WHO HAVE REMAINED IN FRANCE THROUGH THE WAR, EITHER BY CHOICE OR CIRCUMSTANCES BEYOND THEIR CONTROL.

MOST HAVE LOST THEIR PROPERTY OR THEIR JOBS AND FIND IT IMPOSSIBLE TO CONTINUE TO LIVE THERE UNDER GERMAN OCCUPATION OF NORTHERN FRANCE, INCREASING UNEMPLOYMENT, AND SEVERE FOOD RATIONING.

THE RED CROSS HAS UNDERTAKEN TO PROVIDE RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION AND MAINTENANCE THROUGH SPAIN AND PORTUGAL TO LISBON.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT, UTILIZING A SMALL EMERGENCY FUND, IS LENDING THE DESTITUTE AMERICANS MONEY -- AGAINST PROMISSORY NOTES -- SUFFICIENT FOR MINIMUM PASSAGE ON STEAMSHIPS FROM LISBON TO THE UNITED STATES. THE OFFER EXPIRES JANUARY 31.

OFFICIALS ESTIMATED THAT APPROXIMATELY 600 PERSONS THUS WOULD BE REPATRIATED, INCLUDING 500 FROM GERMAN-OCCUPIED FRANCE (MOSTLY PARIS), AND 100 FROM UNOCCUPIED FRANCE.

THE FIRST GROUP IS EN ROUTE TO NEW YORK ON AMERICAN EXPORT LINE SHIPS. THE OTHERS WILL BE RETURNED HOME, 50 EACH TRIP, BY OTHER AMERICAN, SPANISH OR PORTUGUESE SHIPS AS QUICKLY AS THEY CAN LEAVE FRANCE AND REACH LISBON.

COMPLICATIONS INVOLVING THEIR PASSAGE THROUGH PORTUGAL WERE CLEARED UP WHEN UNITED STATES OFFICIALS ARRANGED FOR PORTUGUESE CONSULS TO GRANT TRANSIT VISAS ON CERTIFICATION BY AMERICAN CONSULS.

OFFICIALS HERE ESTIMATE THAT, EVEN WHEN THE 600 ARE REPATRIATED, ABOUT 1,500 AMERICANS WILL REMAIN IN FRANCE, MOSTLY ALONG THE RIVIERA. IT WAS EXPLAINED THAT THEY HAVE "ROOTS" IN THE COUNTRY THROUGH BIRTH, MARRIAGE, OR LENGTH OF RESIDENCE.

TWELVE HUNDRED AMERICANS IN ENGLAND WOULD LIKE TO LEAVE THE BOMBINGS BEHIND AND COME HOME, OFFICIALS SAID, BUT THERE IS NO PROSPECT AT PRESENT THAT THEY CAN BE REPATRIATED AS A GROUP.

THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT REFUSED THE UNITED STATES' REQUEST FOR ASSURANCES OF SAFETY IF AN AMERICAN VESSEL WERE SENT TO AN ENGLISH PORT TO PICK UP AMERICANS. ONLY A FEW PERSONS, NOW AND THEN, ARE ABLE TO LEAVE BY THE RESTRICTED PLANE SERVICE BETWEEN BRITAIN AND LISBON.

AN ESTIMATED 3,000 AMERICANS, MOSTLY WOMEN AND CHILDREN, WERE REPATRIATED FROM THE FAR EAST ON THREE SPECIAL VESSELS, AND MORE ARE COMING ON AMERICAN AND JAPANESE SHIPS STILL MAKING REGULAR SAILINGS. OFFICIALS BELIEVE THAT ONLY A FEW AMERICANS WHO INTEND TO RETURN HOME REMAIN IN CHINA OR JAPAN.

OCCASIONAL AMERICANS GET OUT OF GERMAN-OCCUPIED BELGIUM AND THE NETHERLANDS, AND THERE IS SOME MOVEMENT OUT OF THE BALKAN COUNTRIES THROUGH THE SUEZ CANAL. OFFICIALS HERE SAID THAT VERY FEW AMERICANS REMAIN IN GERMANY OR ITALY, BUT THEY ARE COMING OUT BY TWOS AND THREES.

NEW YORK, JAN 13-(AP)-THE GERMAN RADIO PREDICTED IN A BROADCAST HEARD BY CBS TODAY THAT THE UNITED STATES COULD NOT TRANSFORM PEACE INDUSTRIES "INTO A PROGRAM OF ARMAMENT PRODUCTION WITHIN THE FEW MONTHS WHICH WILL BE OF DECISIVE IMPORTANCE FOR THE DESTINY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE."

THE GERMAN ANNOUNCER SAID BRITAIN HAD REQUIRED THREE YEARS TO ESTABLISH WAR-TIME PRODUCTION AND ADDED: "EVEN IF WE ASSUME FOR ARGUMENT'S SAKE THAT AMERICAN BUSINESSMEN ARE SMARTER, X X X AMERICAN INDUSTRY CANNOT PERFORM MIRACLES X X X."

NEW YORK, JAN. 13-(AP)-VERNE MARSHALL, CHAIRMAN OF THE NO FOREIGN WAR COMMITTEE, WAS SUBPOENAED TODAY TO APPEAR IN WASHINGTON TOMORROW BEFORE THE FEDERAL GRAND JURY INVESTIGATING CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.

ALMOST SIMULTANEOUSLY WITH SERVICE OF THE SUBPOENA HERE, O.K. ARMSTRONG, A COMMITTEE INCORPORATOR, ANNOUNCED IN WASHINGTON HE HAD RESIGNED AS A COMMITTEE MEMBER AND AS FIELD DIRECTOR BECAUSE OF DIFFERENCES WITH MARSHALL.

MARSHALL WAS NOT AVAILABLE FOR COMMENT ON ARMSTRONG'S RESIGNATION. THE COMMITTEE'S OFFICE SAID MARSHALL WAS BELIEVED ON HIS WAY TO WASHINGTON.

THERE HAD BEEN "PUBLIC CRITICISM" OF THE COMMITTEE, ARMSTRONG SAID, "AS A RESULT OF MR.MARSHALL'S PRESS CONFERENCE IN WASHINGTON" SEVERAL WEEKS AGO. AT THAT CONFERENCE, MARSHALL SAID W.R.DAVIS, NEW YORK CITY OIL MAN, BROUGHT AN "AGENDA" FOR PEACE FROM BERLIN AND HAD OFFERED TO HELP FINANCE THE COMMITTEE.

ASKED IF HE HAD DAVIS IN MIND WHEN SPEAKING OF "PUBLIC SUSPICION" CONCERNING FINANCES, ARMSTRONG SAID HE HELD "NO BRIEF FOR OR AGAINST MR DAVIS."

Arms Quiz Calls Willkie, Hoover, Kennedy, Dewey

WASHINGTON Jan. 14 (AP).—The most outstanding men on both sides of the controversy over President Roosevelt's aid-to-Britain bill will appear in a full-dress discussion of the proposal beginning tomorrow before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. This was indicated tonight after the President angrily accused his critics of the "rottenest" and "most dastardly" untruths when they said his plan would result in "plowing under every fourth American child."

Secretaries Hull, Morgenthau and Stimson will testify today, Secretary Knox and William S. Knudsen tomorrow, and the prospect is that such men as Wendell Willkie, Herbert Hoover, Alf M. Landon, Joseph P. Kennedy, William C. Bullitt, Charles Lindbergh and Thomas E. Dewey will appear later.

The President named no names in his bitter statement today, but it was immediately recalled that Senator Wheeler (D.-Mont.) said in a speech Sunday night that "the lend-lease-give program is the New Deal's Triple A foreign policy—plow under every fourth American boy."

As soon as he heard of the President's remarks today, Wheeler shot back with a statement that "apparently the President lost his temper." He said he hoped his "plow under" statement would prove to be untrue, but added that every speech of the President leads the nation "closer to war."

Asked to Comment

Mr. Roosevelt's remarks grew out of a discussion of the bill giving him broad powers to supply war materials to countries battling the Axis powers.

The President was asked at his press conference whether he had any comment on the description of the legislation as "blank check."

Yes, he replied, he supposed the best way to put it was to suggest that someone write him another bill that could not be so labeled and that would accomplish the same objectives.

"That is not an answer," he asserted, "to those, at all, who talk about plowing under every fourth American child, which I regard as the most untruthful, as the most dastardly, unpatriotic thing that has ever been said. Quote me on that.

"That really is the rottenest thing that has been said in public life in my generation."

Readily accepting the responsibility for making the charge, Wheeler issued the following statement:

"Apparently the President lost his temper.

"I sincerely hope my statement will prove to be untrue and that no American boys will be plowed under because of this Administration's war-minded foreign policy.

"I can think of nothing more unpatriotic than to try to fan the passions of the people of this country to the point that they will accept a program that will send American boys to be killed upon foreign battlefields.

"I am not unmindful that the President has said no American boys will be sent abroad, but I submit to the American people that every speech the President has made since election has taken this country one more step closer to the present foreign war. I hope his utterance will not intimidate the people from expressing their opinions."

Hull First Witness

Rep. Bloom (D.-N. Y.), Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, said Secretary of State Hull would be the first witness when hearings start tomorrow.

Any prospect of a rapid hearing appeared to have vanished.

Rep. Fish (R.-N. Y.) senior minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, announced that "as leader of the opposition" he had sent telegrams to the following persons saying he would like to have them present their views on what he termed "the President's dictator bill":

Wendell L. Willkie; Col. Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune; Charles Dawes, former United States Ambassador to Great Britain; Norman Thomas, Socialist leader; Hanford MacNider, former Assistant Secretary of War; Hugh Johnson, former NRA administrator; Cardinal William O'Connell, Boston; Charles A. Lindbergh; Roy Howard, publisher; Thomas E. Dewey, Alf M. Landon, and others.

[Mr. Willkie acknowledged the invitation in New York and said he would be "very glad to appear if the committee wishes me to."]

Refuses To Appear Before Grand Jury

Verne Marshall Declares Subpœna Was No Good, But Committee Issues Another

Washington, Jan. 14 (AP)—Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee, refused to appear today before a Federal grand jury investigating election campaign expenditures on the ground that his subpœna was no good, but the committee promptly issued a new one returnable Thursday.

Marshall said in New York that he had no comment "at this time" on the new subpœna. The first one bore the name of Frank E. Cunningham, late clerk of the court, instead of Charles E. Stewart, the present clerk.

Marshall, a former newspaper editor, flew here from New York last night to confer with his attorney, Elisha Hanson. Hanson advised him, he said, that the subpœna was "a nullity" and that he did not have to respond.

ROOSEVELT IRATE AT WHEELER GIBE

'Plowing Under' of Every Fourth Boy Resented.

Washington, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—President Roosevelt described today as "the rottenest thing that has been said in public life in my generation" a statement, which he said he had read in a newspaper, that every fourth American child would be plowed under. He made the statement in discussing aspects of the controversy over legislation to authorize him to carry out his policy of total aid to democracies.

He declined to say who had made the statement originally about plowing under every fourth child, but he said that it had been said by several persons. He added that it was a good time to kill a poor slogan at birth.

[In a radio speech on Sunday night Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana, a leader of the opposition to the administration's lease-lend bill, termed the measure "the New Deal's 'Triple A' foreign policy—plough under every fourth American boy."]

The President had been asked at his press conference if he had any comment on the description of the proposed legislation as "blank check" Yes, he replied, he supposed the best way to put it was to suggest that some one write him another bill that could not be so labeled and that would accomplish the same objectives.

"That is not an answer," he asserted, "to those, at all, who talk about ploughing under every fourth American child, which I regard as the most untruthful, as the most dastardly, unpatriotic thing that has ever been said. Quote me on that.

"That really is the rottenest thing that has been said in public life in my generation."

As for proposals to restrict to a specific time the powers which would be granted to him under the lease-lend measure, Mr. Roosevelt had no comment. He said that if he began commenting on one thing, reporters would be asking him to comment on two or three more every Tuesday and Friday as press conferences and that would start a chain. He urged that such a chain not be started.

Envoy to Britain Chosen

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14 (AP).—President Roosevelt said today that he has made his choice for a new ambassador to England but would give no indication as to whom he had selected.

The prospective envoy has not even been informed of the choice himself yet, the President told a press conference, and his name has not been submitted to the British government for approval. He did not comment when asked what was behind the delay on appointing an ambassador to succeed Joseph P. Kennedy, whose resignation has been on his desk for weeks.

He stopped one question along that line before it could be finished and laughingly remarked that reporters were confronted with an awful mystery about which they almost could write a novel—and probably would.

10,000 Fire Bombs Dropped By Nazi Planes on Plymouth

High Explosives Fall in Areas Set Aflame in Attack on British Port—London Has Long Period of Quiet.

Plymouth, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—More than 10,000 incendiary missiles and many tons of high explosive bombs were estimated to have been dropped on Plymouth in the night by German air raiders, but casualties were reported as being remarkably light. Figures on the dead and wounded were not immediately announced.

Several fires in one section of this important port in southwest England raged for several hours before being controlled. Eyewitnesses at dawn said the area was "a sorry sight" and bodies of some victims buried in debris still remained to be recovered.

Hospital Fortunate.

Plymouth citizens counted as fortunate the fact that only one patient was killed when a direct hit was scored on a women's ward in a hospital, tearing down ceilings and walls. Homes and business properties were demolished in some places.

Civilian fire watchers were credited by an eyewitness with saving Plymouth from an even greater disaster.

The raid was launched, one said, by a formation of approximately thirty German planes, which dropped "thousands" of incendiaries, immediately illuminating the city with a grotesque light.

Civilians were reported to have quenched the fire bombs in all but one area within ten minutes, but succeeding waves of heavy bombers used the light of flames in this area to guide them to the target. A brilliant moon also aided the raiders, who flew over in waves despite heavy anti-aircraft fire.

British Blast U-Boat Bases

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 14—British bombers defied bad weather last night to blast the German submarine base at Lorient and the Dunkirk area of the Nazi-held French coast, the Air Ministry announced today.

"Heavy bombs were observed to burst on the naval ordnance works and on buildings in the dock at Lorient," the announcement said. One large fire and several smaller ones were said to have been started in the Dunkirk area.

The raids were carried out by small forces of the coastal command, the Air Ministry said. All planes were declared to have returned safely.

In yesterday's patrol operations, one British plane was reported lost.

London Escapes.

London, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—A joint communique of the ministries of Air and Home Security said that there was nothing to report during daylight. There had been no bombing of London last night.

Small groups of raiders, however, ranged up the west coast of England, striking in the repeatedly attacked Liverpool area, bombing two towns in Wales and machine-gunning a third.

"In these," the communique said, "no one was killed or seriously injured, and little damage was done."

Nazi Planes Spread Mines.

Berlin, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—The High Command communique today named Plymouth, naval and shipping base on the southwest coast of England, as the principal target of the German air force in raids last night. In addition, planes were said to have continued the spreading of mines along England's vital sea lanes.

Four British planes were said to have been shot down yesterday.

Italian Vessel Sunk, 12 Planes Shot Down, Admiralty Says

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 14—Britain's 23,000-ton aircraft carrier Illustrious and the 9,100-ton cruiser Southampton were damaged last Friday, the Admiralty announced tonight, in the first reported use of German dive bombers in the Mediterranean area.

Italian and German planes cooperated in the attack on the warships, which were convoying merchant vesels to Greece with "material assistance" for the Albanian campaign.

Destroyer Damaged

The 1,335-ton destroyer Gallant was damaged earlier by a mine or a torpedo, the Admiralty said, when the convoy encountered two Italian destroyers. One of the Italian ships, a vessel of the Spica class (638 tons), was reported sunk, the other escaped. The Gallant reached port safely, it said.

The surface encounter and the later aerial attack, which the Admiralty said cost the Nazi-Fascist forces twelve planes and damage to "a further number," occurred in the Sicilian channel, between Sicily and the North Africa mainland.

New Challenge Seen

Informed sources in London said tonight the attack might be an indication that Germany's air force would make a new challenge to Britain's sea power, concentrating on the Mediterranean fleet, which has virtually swept away most of the Italian opposition.

The extent of the damage and the number of casualties suffered on board the Illustrious and the Southampton were not specified.

Naval circles, however, said one bomb on the flight deck of the Illustrious probably would put the carrier out of action until repairs could be made.

It was from the deck of the Illustrious that the British planes took off last November 11 for their major attack on the Italian naval base at Taranto.

[Since January 9, according to official Italian claims, the sea and air attacks of the Axis on Mediterranean naval strength have resulted in the sinking or damaging of ten British warships—a battleship of the 31,100-ton Malaya class, two aircraft carriers, two cruisers, three destroyers, on "big warship" and a submarine.]

The Southampton was damaged in October, 1939, when Nazi bombers raided the Edinburgh area of Scotland and the Firth of Forth.

In the summer of 1939 the cruiser was one of the British warships which escorted the Empress of Australia to Canada with King George VI and Queen Elizabeth.

Nazi Cooperation Seen

The idea that Germany might be intending to concentrate on the British Mediterranean fleet both to strengthen Italy and hold up supplies to Greece was supported in part by a Royal Air Force communique from Cairo today, which said nine planes, apparently Junker 87's (dive bombers), were destroyed in an R. A. F. raid on an air base at Catania, Sicily.

Informed London circles thought it likely that the Germans are on the point of throwing off all pretense of not having any interest in the Greek campaign by establishing a strong air base at Catania from which Nazi airmen would seek command of the stretch of Mediterranean between Sicily and Tunisia.

Reich Reports No Raids.

Berlin, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—No Royal Air Force activity over Germany during the night was reported here today. British bombers and pursuit planes attempted to cross over northern France, but Nazi officials reported they were turned back with two planes shot down before any bombs could be dropped.

Denies Heavy Damage.

Rome, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—British statements that extensive damage was caused in air raids on Porto Marghera, near Venice, the night of January 12 were denied today by an Italian spokesman. This informant said only extremely slight damage and a small fire soon brought under control, resulted from the bombing.

Swiss In New Protest.

Berne, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—The Swiss Federal Council announced today that it had made "the necessary diplomatic representations" after a session in which it discussed what was called "obviously intentional" violations of Swiss neutrality by foreign planes flying over the country. The council did not say whether the representations were made to London or Berlin or both.

Switzerland previously has protested to Britain on the ground that British planes en route to raid Italy have flown over Swiss territory and there have been recent reports of German planes also flying over the little republic.

The Government conceded that some of the violations were due to weather conditions.

A foreign plane flew over Zurich today, causing an alarm which lasted from 12:45 to 1:25 P. M., the second daylight alarm in this neutral area in two days.

NAZIS SAY THEY SANK SHIP

British Cruiser Reported Hit—Four R. A. F. Losses Alleged

BERLIN, Jan. 14 (AP)—Cruising German warplanes sank a 4,000-ton merchant ship and scored two bomb hits on a British cruiser, the German High Command reported today.

The High Command communiqué named Plymouth as the principal target in raids last night. In addition, planes were said to have continued the spreading of mines along Great Britain's vital sea lanes.

Four British planes were said to have been shot down yesterday.

No Royal Air Force activity over Germany during the night was reported. British bombers and pursuit planes attempted to cross over Northern France, but Nazi officials reported they were turned back with two planes shot down before any bombs could be dropped.

Axis Raids British Supply Ships

Rome Reports Attack on Re-enforcements Needed in Albania and Africa.

Rome, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—An intensive Axis sea-air offensive in the Mediterranean during the last five days has been aimed at heavy re-enforcements of British troops being sent to Greece in response to urgent calls for help and to North Africa to bolster Great Britain's own forces, Virginio Gayda, the Fascist editor, reported today.

Torpedo and bomb attacks, according to Italian claims have sunk or damaged fifteen enemy vessels, and Gayda said they were in a double convoy, one part headed for Greece and the other for Alexandria, Egypt.

The High Command has reported ten scores by Italian naval forces and co-operating Nazi-Fascist airforces. An enemy submarine sunk by Italian planes and motor torpedo boats on January 9 was reported today. Previous communiques have listed hits on a battleship of Great Britain's 31,000-ton Malaya class, two aircraft carriers, two cruisers, three destroyers and one "big warship."

Only Two Reported Sunk.

Only the submarine and one cruiser have been reported sunk.

In addition, however, Gayda reported the 1,335-ton British destroyer Gallant apparently sunk and the newspaper Il Popolo di Roma records a second submarine said to have been sunk, a third cruiser and two steamships hit.

Recovery of sailors' caps and bits of lifeboat wreckage bearing the name of the Gallant, Gayda said in Il Giornale d'Italia, indicated that the destroyer was sunk in an attack on January 10.

The convoy, he said, started through the Mediterranean at Gibraltar and was composed of two columns of ships. "One was headed for Alexandria, where large supplies urgently were requested after the big battle (of Bardia) in North Africa," he said. "The other was going to Greece, where the British command requested with equal urgency new, abundant supplies of men and equipment after the enormous losses suffered on the Albanian front."

Says Greeks Are Weak.

Gayda said that Greek forces "have been entirely employed and used up on the Albanian front and are now dangerously exposed at the rear and on land."

"Greek propaganda bulletins may tell of invariable and striking successes," he declared. "The reality of Greek defense appears to be darker every day."

Gayda said that the battleship of the Malaya class entered drydock as soon as she returned to Gibraltar and that an aircraft carrier of the Illustrious type (23,000 tons), was discovered damaged in Malta Harbor.

Today's communique acknowledged the sinking of a small Italian steamship by a Greek submarine in the Adriatic Sea off the Yugoslav coast on December 31 and charged that the submarine shelled a lifeboat, "against every rule of warfare," killing ten members of the crew.

[The Greek Ministry of Marine reported on January 5 that the Greek submarine Katsonis sank an Italian tanker by gunfire in the Adriatic after missing the ship with two torpedoes on December 31. The Ministry said the tanker was armed with two guns and was headed for the Albanian port of Giovanni

The Italian communique said the attack on the steamship, which it described as a cargo vessel, took place in Yugoslav territorial waters.

Agriculture Minister Says Supply Is Sufficient

Rome, Jan. 14 (AP)—Giuseppe Tassinari, Minister for Agriculture, told Italians tonight on the eve of a national food census, that supplies of prime foodstuffs were adequate for normal needs.

The census, which will require 3,000,000 producers and processors to fil out forms, will cover such items as grain, rice, flour and butter.

BRITISH SAILORS SEIZE GENERAL

Argentino Caught as He Hides in Africa.

Cairo, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—The British reported today that the Italian Blackshirt Gen. Francesco Argentino had been captured by a motor boat crew after he had been spotted from the air hiding by the water's edge in North Africa.

A British statement said that Gen. Argentino, 42 years old, identified as the commander of the second blackshirt division, was taken about seven miles east of Tobruk.

Gen. Argentino was said to have been commander of Italian forces at Sidi Barrani, recaptured Egyptian town which was the main advance base for Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's smashed offensive.

"Search for a large party of Italian generals and senior officers, which already has proved successful, still is being carried out by Hurricane aircraft of the R. A. F.," the British statement said. "These Italians are the vanguard of enemy troops who escaped from Bardia and were making for Tobruk along coastal paths before Bardia was surrounded and finally taken.

"R. A. F. Hurricanes are flying low, sometimes skimming cliffs at fifty feet, and spotting lurking Italians who are taking refuge in caves. Two days ago a Hurricane observed a small party of Italian officers hiding by the water's edge. An R. A. F. pilot reported it and a naval unit was advised. A British motor boat immediately took up the chase which resulted in the capture of the party, one of whom was Gen. Argentino, who was in command at Sidi Barrani."

R. A. F. headquarters told a story of a British pilot who spotted 150 armed Italians near the coast, fired a burst over their heads and, circling above, ushered the captives to a ground unit.

Taking Time at Tobruk.

With the same thoroughness they used in the siege of Bardia, the British continued preparations today for an attack on Tobruk, important Italian base in eastern Libya. The situation showed little change and the general headquarters communique reported nothing fresh. Artillery still was moving into position while the R. A. F., claiming virtual control of the air over the eastern third of Libya, carried on patrol work as far west as Bengasi.

When the British attempt to storm Tobruk would come was a matter of speculation. In the case of Bardia the artillery preparation lasted more than three weeks.

Widespread R. A. F. bombing forays in North and East Africa also were reported in a communique.

It said that six planes were seen blazing on the field at Benina, Italian air base for Bengasi, and many others there were believed to have been disabled by bomb fragments and machine gun fire.

Three hangars were reported set afire and one of them demolished at Benina and other hangars and barracks hit, with subsequent explosions, on the airfield at Berka.

In other raids, the communique said, the railroad and docks at Bengasi were attacked causing one large explosion, fires were set among barracks at Derna and hits were scored on airdromes, aviation workshops and motor transport concentrations in East Africa.

Attack Due in East Africa

London, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—British spokesmen expressed the belief today that Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, whose Army of the Nile is driving into Libya, virtually had completed plans for putting Italy's isolated garrisons in East Africa on the spot at the same time.

The Authoritative Press Association declared that an Italian defeat in East Africa seemed so probable that the British Government was ready to grant not only safe conduct but facilities for removal of women and children from Italian colonies there. Should Rome accept, the British propose that these non-combatants travel to Italy by way of Djibuti in French Somaliland, or from ports in Italian Somaliland and Eritrea, the association said.

Italian Artillery Active

Rome, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—The High Command reported today that Italian artillery inflicted losses on British mechanized forces near Tobruk, in Libya. Patrol and artillery action also was reported in the Giarabub section, where Italian forces are holding out in the desert 150 miles south of Bardia.

The war bulletin said British air attacks along the Libyan coast "failed to cause casualties."

Small-scale activity was reported on the East African front. The communique said there was artillery fire in the Gallabat region and air fighting along the Sudan and Eritrean frontiers.

Australian Losses 296.

The British Broadcasting Corporation reported today that it had been announced in London that the victory of Bardia cost the Australian troops 296 men, including thirty-one officers, according to a broadcast heard here by its National Broadcasting Company.

GERMAN BOMBERS BLASTED IN SICILY

R. A. F. Bags Nine Junkers in Night Raid.

Cairo, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—Destruction of nine airplanes believed to be German Junkers 87 dive bombers in a heavy raid on Catania, Sicily, was reported today by R. A. F. headquarters.

[Catania is on the east coast of Sicily near the strait where German bombers joined Italians in an attack on British ships last week.]

The communique said that three hangars were set on fire and one of them demolished in a night raid.

"Heavy explosions and numerous fires were started among administrative buildings," it said.

"A petrol dump was set on fire and at least nine aircraft thought to be German Junkers 87's were destroyed.

"Other bombers hit the main runways and railway line along the west side of the airdrome."

The communique said that two British planes were lost in the attack but that the crew of one was rescued after a forced landing.

NIGHT AIR DEFENSE DECLARED BETTER

British Air Ministry Says Fighters Are Showing Results Against Raiders

But London Admits It Still Has Far To Go In Beating Off Attackers

JAN

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 14—An Air Ministry statement that R. A. F. night fighters are "beginning to show results" against nocturnal raiders and the Admiralty's announcement of one of the smallest week's shipping losses of the war bolstered hopes of Britons tonight of overcoming eventually the two chief menaces to their embattled island.

Last night's massive fire-bomb raid on the southwest port of Plymouth, the target of 10,000 incendiaries and many tons of high explosives, showed, however, that Britain has far to go in coping with the night raiders—and the Air Ministry admitted as much.

Telling of efforts to fend off night raids, the Air Ministry news service said: "More and more Nazi bombers are being intercepted, and those getting through are being attacked with some success."

New Technique Needed

The number of night-fighter squadrons "is steadily increasing," it said, but added that progress necessarily was slow because the pilots have to be taught an entirely new technique.

Up to a late hour tonight there were no reports of German air activity over any part of Britain and it was believed that bad weather on the Continent, coupled with recent daylight raids by the R. A. F. on French airdromes, was responsible.

A dense mist in the Dover Straits restricted visibility to barely a hundred yards.

One night-fighter pilot was quoted as saying his job was "like trying to swap a wasp in a blacked-out room."

Nazis Trying Same Thing

Germany is working on similar lines, the news service asserted, but "so far the night tactics of the R. A. F. have proved more successful than those of the enemy because none of our night fighters has been lost in action."

An Admiralty statement asserted that in the week ended January 5 only four British merchantmen, totaling 14,687 tons, were sunk. In only four other weeks of the war have the figures been less.

The sharp decline was attributed by authoritative quarters to three factors—bad weather, increasingly heavy R. A. F. raids on Nazi-held French coast naval bases and the increased number of escort vessels assigned to convoys.

Still Digging For Victims

At Plymouth rescue squads still dug into the smoldering wreckage in search of victims. Several fires raged uncontrolled there for hours, but casualties were declared to have been "remarkably light."

Civilian fire fighters who pounced upon fire bombs were credited with saving Plymouth from "an even greater disaster." Homes and business houses were destroyed and the women's ward of a hospital received a direct hit.

The Air Ministry said that the R. A. F. kept up its night assaults on the German invasion ports, flying through dirty weather to blast the submarine base at Lorient and the Dunkerque area and starting large fires at both places.

BRITISH CLAIM CUT IN LOSSES AT SEA

Four Ships Totaling 14,687 Tons Sunk in One Week.

London, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—Four merchantmen, totaling 14,687 tons, were sunk during the week ended January 5, one of the lightest week's losses since the war began, the British Admiralty reported today. All four were British vessels. In only four other weeks since the outbreak of the war have the losses been lighter.

An authoritative source ascribed the decrease to three factors:

1. General weather conditions were bad, preventing extensive activity by German planes. This, he said, doubtlessly meant that fewer German aircraft were able to lay magnetic mines and fewer bombers were able to attack convoys.

30.24—6961

2. The Royal Air Force has heavily bombed Nazi naval bases in Germany and along the French coast on numerous occasions, possibly affecting the effective submarine strength.

3. The number of convoy escort vessels has been increasing gradually since higher losses were reported.

The informant emphasized these reasons were only his own conjectures.

The lightest week of the war for merchant ship losses reported by the Admiralty was that ending last April 7, when 2,326 tons were lost.

The Admiralty announcement said that "no German claims to sunk mercantile tonnage appeared to have been made this week other than a retrospective claim that a raider had sunk 64,155 tons of shipping in the Pacific. No comparison with our figure this week therefore is possible, raider losses having been included in earlier weekly totals."

CHEESE SALES LIMITED

Britain Acts—Potatoes Will Cost More in Italy.

London, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—Cheese no longer will be served in British restaurants unless it is the main course of a meal, a food ministry official announced today in a statement urging the public to eat more potatoes and carrots. Cheese, already short, will be scarce in the next few weeks, the statement said. It expressed hope, however, that this year's production, which is about a third of the national consumption, would be maintained at the peacetime level.

The food ministry official warned that the supply of rabbits, which many are using as a substitute for meat, will vary in the next month or two.

War Costs Britain $53,000,000 Daily

London, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—Britain's war effort now is costing about $53,000,000 a day. It cost $38,000,000 daily in 1940.

Army, navy and air force costs combined averaged about $47,628,000 daily in the first eleven days of 1941. The rest went for interest and management, national debt and ordinary expenditures.

New Government Whip In Commons Appointed

James Gray Stuart, Son Of Earl Of Moray, Moves Into Margessons Place

London, Jan. 14 (AP)—Appointment of James Gray Stuart as Government whip in the House of Commons in place of Capt. Henry David Reginald Margesson, who recently was named Secretary of State for War, was announced tonight at No. 10 Downing street. The chief whip corresponds to the majority leader in the United States House of Representatives.

Stuart, 43, a Conservative member of Parliament for Moray and Nairn since 1923, was privy counsellor in 1939 and an equerry to the Duke of York in 1920-21. He is a son of the Earl of Moray. His wife, the former Lady Rachael Cavendish, is a daughter of the Duke of Devonshire.

British Form Supply Council In America

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 14—The British Government announced tonight that, because of "the great increase in the volume of our supplies from North America," it has set up a new committee, called the British Supply Council in North America, headed by Arthur B. Purvis.

Purvis, who has been director general of the British Purchasing Commission, is succeeded by Sir Clive Baillieu. Morris Wilson was named deputy chairman of the new organization.

A statement issued at No. 10 Downing Street said the council "will deal with all issues of policy concerning supply, including representations to be made to the United States Administration."

In addition to Purvis, Wilson and Sir Clive, the members will be Sir Henry Self, director general of the British Air Commission, and Vice-Admiral A. E. Evans, head of the Admiralty mission in Canada.

"There will be no alteration in the relations between the supply departments in this country and the Department of Munitions and Supply in Canada," the statement said, "but, in view of the close interconnection between the Canadian and the United States program, Charles D. Howe, Canadian Minister of Munitions and Supply, has agreed to become a member of the British Supply Council."

Italian Changes Get Greek Laugh

Athens, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—Greek elation over the latest change in the Italian command in Albania was reflected today in a newspaper cartoon which showed a Greek evzone in a fight ring with the replaced Italian commanders, Generals Ubaldo Soddu and Sebastiano Prasca, hanging to the ropes.

"Bring on another one," the evzone says.

Gen. Ugo Cavallero became commander of Italians in Albania yesterday.

Greeks Reported Driving Toward Heart Of Albania

Klisura's Captors Swing North In Direction Of Berati.

R. A. F. Bombers Pave Way

[Copyright by New York Times]

Athens, Jan. 14—It was reported tonight that the Italians had ordered the civilian population to evacuate the towns of Elbasani, Berati and Valona, which might indicate that Gen. Ugo Cavallero, new commander in chief of the Italian army, is prepared for the loss of the whole of southern Albania in the near future.

[By the Associated Press]

Athens, Jan. 14—Greek infantrymen were reported driving toward Berati, in south-central Albania, today, while communiques told of a trading of blows by the British R.A.F. and Italian bombers on targets in Albania and Greece.

Although conceding sturdy Italian resistance at some points, Greek spokesmen asserted the fighting north of Klisura, whose fall opened the way for an advance on Berati, "continued to develop satisfactorily."

British Bomb Berati

Berati, south of Tirana, Albania's capital, and northeast of Valona, only major port in southern Albania still in Italian hands, was reported under British air bombardment. An R.A.F. communique told of bomb attacks yesterday on communications and military objectives there. Rising columns of smoke after the attack led to belief, it was said, that direct hits were scored.

[Editor's Note—Between Berati and Tirana lies Elbasani, toward which another Greek force is driving west from Lake Ochrid. From Berati there are hard roads north to Elbasani and southwest to Valona.]

Italians Raid Preveza

An Italian air raid on Preveza, Greek west coast naval base, was described by the Greek Ministry of Home Security. It announced a small number of casualties and destruction of several buildings, including a cathedral and a girls' school

In Athens, Greek elation over the removal of two Italian commanders in the Albanian campaign was demonstrated in a newspaper cartoon portraying a Greek Evzone fighter in a ring crying, "Bring on another one!" after he had left the two replaced generals, Ubaldo Soddu and Sebastiano Prasca, on the ropes.

Soddu, who replaced Prasca at the head of the Fascist armies in Albania November 10, was in turn succeeded yesterday by Gen. Ugo Cavallero.

Fighting Summed Up

The day's fighting was thus summed up tonight by a Greek Government spokesman:

"The Italians undertook an offensive on a very restricted scale by launching two local counter-attacks. The first was easily repelled and the enemy force retired quickly after abandoning a number of wounded and dead.

"The second counter-attack turned out worse. The Italians suffered heavier losses than during the first. They gave up this operation and returned to their position in disorder, having left wounded, dead and a group of prisoners, including two officers. Four tanks were captured. Three of them were immediately turned against the enemy.

"One enemy aircraft was shot down by machine-gun fire."

Albanian Guerrillas Raid Italian Supplies

Struga, Yugoslavia, Jan. 14 (AP)—Albanian guerrillas under the leadership of the insurgent Malik Debren are raiding Italian food and ammunition depots behind the Fascist front, reports reaching here tonight said.

Debren was said to have organized dissatisfied Albanian civilians as well as Albanian deserters from the Italian army and guerrilla activity has been reported as far inland as Berati, one of the immediate goals of the Greek army driving north from captured Klisura.

These border reports also said the Italian command had been forced to disband two Albanian battalions because they refused to go to the front.

BULGARS DENY TROOP MOVES

Official News Agency Says Germans Are Not There.

Sofia, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—Bulgaria issued a formal denial today that any foreign troops had entered this country, thereby taking the first official published notice of foreign reports of German troop movements here.

The denial was made through the Government News Agency. It said further there had been no representations to foreign Powers concerning such a possibility.

It was published with a denial along the same lines by Tass, official Russian news agency, and one by DNB, official German news agency. The Government previously was said to have avoided publishing the Tass dispatch on the grounds it concerned rumors which were not printed here.

The Bulgarian agency said that it was authorized to declare that no foreign troops have been entering Bulgaria and that the Bulgarian Government has made no moves toward foreign governments, as there has been no ground for such moves.

An unconfirmed rumor was circulated that the Third International had requested friends in Bulgaria to investigate the number of German civilians here. Private sources have said that several hundred were in the country, some as technical advisers of the army.

Reports persisted, especially in German circles, that there would be Bulgarian Cabinet changes by the middle of February, with the possibility of a more pro-Nazi regime.

British, Turkish Army Officers Begin Talks

Military Parley At Ankara Expected To Affect Course Of War In Middle East

Ankara, Turkey, Jan. 14 (AP)—Military discussions which observers said might affect the course of the war in the Mediterranean, the Balkans and Africa, began today between British and Turkish officers.

Turkish sources have made no comment on the meeting, although it is known Turkey is showing considerable interest in Greek and British successes and the United States promises of aid to Britain.

The British officers—members of the Middle East command—arrived from Egypt yesterday, were met by officers of the Turkish high command and then commenced a round of official calls.

Reds Say Vote Shows Baltic States for Soviet

Moscow, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—Pravda, the Communist party newspaper, declared today the results of the Supreme Soviet elections Sunday in the Baltic States and Bessarabia were a reproof to those who opposed incorporation of these territories into the Soviet Union.

Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia voted to join the Soviet Union last summer, and Bessarabia was ceded by Rumania after Russia in an ultimatum had demanded it.

Official returns in the voting for deputies in the Supreme Soviet showed that more than 90 per cent of the electors participated in Lithuania, 96 per cent in Latvia and Estonia, and 98 per cent in Bessarabia. All candidates of the Stalinist bloc were elected.

Man Dies in Germany For Attempted Treason

A German Peoples Court decreed he had committed a capital offense by looting a German compatriot's apartment.

Announcement of creation of the new regiment in Norway, the agency said, had "found an enthusiastic reception in the ranks of the Nasjonal Samling (Norwegian Nazis)."

KONOYE SCORES U. S. ATTITUDE TOWARD JAPAN

Premier Calls It Hostile in Speech to Members of Parliament.

FOUR-DAY CONFERENCE OPENS

Prince Is Said to Have Stressed Danger of Disturbance Due to American Pressure.

Japan's Premier, Prince Fumimaro Konoye, "emphasized the hostility of the attitude of the United States toward Japan" in a speech today to members of Parliament and business and financial leaders, Domei, the Japanese news agency, reported in a broadcast from Tokio.

The agency quoted the Premier as saying that "this hostility is sufficiently characterized by America's support of England and China."

Premier Konoye was addressing the first meeting of a four-day series of conferences among Cabinet Ministers, members of Parliament, leaders in the financial and business world and press representatives.

The agency said "it is understood that Premier Konoye stressed the danger of worldwide disturbance which is threatened by the growing pressure brought to bear on Japan by the United States and also by the latter's vigorous aid to Great Britain and the Chungking (China) regime."

The Associated Press revealed that Domei said that the Premier had "a heart to heart talk with more than seventy members of the Lower House of Parliament in the first session of a four-day conference of Government leaders and Diet members." He sought the parliamentarians' "co-operation with the Government in rendering national services to the State in pulling through the emergency period," the agency asserted.

Discusses World Situation.

"Konoye dwelt on developments in the international situation following conclusion of the three-Power pact between Japan, Germany and Italy, referring also to the British-American attitude toward Japan and China, relations between Japan and the Soviet Union, Japan's recogition of the Nanking regime (in China) . . . Japan's construction of a co-prosperity sphere for greater East Asia and the questions of French Indo-China and the Dutch East Indies."

Detailed explanations concerning the Japanese-Chinese war and the conflict in Europe were given by the War and Navy Ministers, Domei said, "and a frank exchange of views took place between the members of Parliament and Cabinet Ministers."

Leaders of all important factions in the lower house of the Diet attended.

Konoye Meets War Chiefs.

Tokio, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—"Increased delicacy of United States-Japanese relations" was reported by one Tokio newspaper today to have prompted a four-hour conference of Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye with top-ranking army and navy officials.

The Cabinet Information Bureau said, however, the nature of the meeting last night could not be disclosed, but that it was not regarded as "unusually important."

The newspaper Hochi said further conferences would be held if the gravity of the situation warranted. The newspaper Miyako said the conferees studied a possible emergency. The newspapers Asahi and Nichi Nichi made no mention of it.

Japanese-language newspapers reiterated their contention that President Roosevelt's plan of aid to Great Britain would drive the United States closer to war.

The Government opened a four-day conference with representative civilians to explain with "full frankness" Japan's international and domestic policies.

FRENCH INDO-CHINA CHANGES COMMAND

Gen. Mordant Reaches Saigon From Vichy to Take Charge of the Armed Forces

THAI TRADE IS SUSPENDED

Attackers Report New Gains—Say Moroccan Soldiers Fire on Indo-Chinese Troops

HANOI, French Indo-China, Jan. 14 (AP)—French Indo-China, confronted with pressure from Japanese forces in the northeast, and Thai (Siamese) border attacks to the west, prepared today to change military commanders.

General Mordant arrived at Saigon from France to become commander in chief of the Indo-China Army, succeeding General Maurice Martin, who will leave for France Jan. 16.

A government communiqué denied reports that Indo-China forces had withdrawn thirty-five miles from the Thailand border near Sisophon. The communiqué reported artillery duels across the Mekong River and a Thai air raid on Pakse.

SINGAPORE, Jan. 14 (AP)—Heavy losses to French Indo-China in men and material against attacking Thai land and air forces were reported today in a communiqué issued by the Thai Consulate here.

"In the northeast sector," it said, "Thai forces, supported by the air force, advanced and attacked. The enemy retreated.

"In the eastern sector the enemy continued to retreat, leaving many dead and a quantity of arms and ammunition. Thai forces occupied the abandoned positions and continued to pursue the enemy."

The Thai High Command reported a clash between French Moroccan soldiers and native Indo-Chinese troops at the frontier town of Thakhek, and said the Moroccan troops fired on the native soldiers when they picked up Thai pamphlets.

Dutch Warn Japanese

[By the Associated Press]

Batavia, Java, Netherlands East Indies, Jan. 14—Netherlands East Indies authorities have demanded that Japan present iron-clad guarantees that Indies commodities for which she is negotiating will not be transshipped to Germany, reliable sources said today.

These sources expressed belief this requirement might prove a serious snag in trade conversations, now suspended temporarily.

In preliminary talks, the Japanese delegation presented a list of materials in which Japan was interested, including rubber, tin and copra.

Dutch officials were said to have asked immediately why Japan needed more of these materials now than previously, raised the question of transshipment to Germany and declared emphatically that no such disposition of Indies products would be permitted.

Siam Claims Advance

[By the Associated Press]

Bangkok, Thailand, Jan. 14—French Indo-Chinese frontier forces have withdrawn steadily into the interior of the province of Cambodia, and the Thailand (Siamese) army has continued to advance without any fighting, the Thai high command reported last night.

Thai troops were reported in a high command communique yesterday to have crossed the frontier into Cambodia and the Mekong river frontier farther north, claiming disputed territory for Thailand.

Exchanges of gunfire all along the Mekong river frontier were reported. The Thai advance in the northeast sector, first announced on Sunday, was said to be continuing but there were no details.

French Halt Trade

Vichy, France, Jan. 14 (AP)—By official decree the French Government today temporarily suspended all commercial operations by land between French Indo-China and Thailand (Siam). The decree gave no explanation.

Japanese Demand Japanese Names

JAN. 14 AP

Bars, teahouses and cafes in Japan henceforth will have only Japanese names, a broadcast by Domei, the Japanese news agency, disclosed today. The agency reported that approximately 70 per cent of establishments must drop their foreign designations and be renewed in Japanese.

Several brands of cigarettes also have been renamed and the Japanese broadcasting service will refrain in the future from repeating news announcements in English, Domei announced.

2 Shepherds and Flocks Die of Cold in France

Vichy, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—Two shepherds and their flocks of more than 800 sheep were found frozen to death today near Arles, on the Rhone River, in the coldest weather of the French winter.

The Loire River was blocked by an ice jam near its mouth and rose more than six feet in a few hours, overflowing near Nantes. Floes threatened an important dike. An Alpine village was reported isolated by five avalanches.

FRANCE SEIZES GOLD

Confiscates Francs Used in Illegal Exchange.

Paris, (via Berlin) Jan. 14 (A. P.).—The French police have confiscated one million francs in gold pieces which were being used in illicit exchange business, DNB, the official German news agency, reported today.

Twenty franc pieces had been sold for between 550 and 600 francs apiece, the agency said, adding that the police had made many arrests, mostly among railroad employees.

PARIS - JAN 12 -

JEWS ARE NOT IMMEDIATELY EXCLUDED FROM THEIR PROPERTY, BUT MUST LEAST WHEN THE SALE IS MADE AND THE MONEY TRANSFERRED. GERMAN AUTHORITIES RETAIN THE RIGHT TO DECLARE A SALE VOID IF THEY FEEL THERE HAS BEEN AN ATTEMPT MADE TO CIRCUMVENT REGULATIONS.

JEWS ARE STILL PERMITTED TO WORK IN ARYAN BUSINESS HOUSES. WHAT WILL FINALLY BE DONE WITH THEM IS "A LATER CARE," AN OFFICIAL SAID. GERMAN RACE LAWS HAVE NOT YET BEEN APPLIED TO FRENCH JEWS AND THE MAIN TEST IS THE FRENCH LAW UNDER WHICH CONFESSION OF FAITH IS THE MOST IMPORTANT INDICATION OF FAITH.

Retail Stores Transferred First

PARIS, Jan. 12 (Delayed) (via Berlin) (AP)—The "Aryanization" of Jewish-owned concerns in Paris is going forward rapidly, officials said today. All establishments are expected to be in the hands of non-Jewish owners soon. Of the 11,000 businesses about 5,000 are retail stores. These are receiving first attention.

The stores were first placarded with yellow signs labeling them as Jewish. Lately red signs have appeared, indicating the businesses designated have been taken over by a commissioner, named by the French authorities with the approval of the German occupation authorities, whose duty is to sell to an "Aryan" purchaser.

So far as possible the commissioner picks a purchaser of the same nationality as the Jewish owner, thus permitting foreign-owned businesses to remain in the same foreign hands. German officials said American business concerns owned by Jews would be treated the same as all others.

The present anti-Jewish measures are only for occupied France, but it is expected that the Vichy government will enact laws affecting the Jews for the entire country.

PLANES WATCHING BLOCKADE RUNNER

British Send Aerial Scouts To Keep Eye On French Food Ship

Mendoza Turned Back Third Time Off Montevideo By Cruiser

[By the Associated Press]

Montevideo, Uruguay, Jan. 14—British aerial scouts from an unidentified warship joined the British auxiliary cruiser Asturias tonight on sentry patrol to forestall the French freighter Mendoza's effort to run home through the British blockade with sorely needed food.

The surprise disclosure that the British are using planes came when one of them set down, out of fuel, on waters of Maldona Bay tonight. Uruguayan officials said the crew did not come ashore, but they speculated that the plane was probably from the cruiser Enterprise, British South Atlantic flagship.

The landing raised the question for the Uruguayan Government as to whether the crew would be interned under international law.

Carries No Planes

The Asturias which three times in three days caused the Mendoza to hasten back to territorial waters, carries no planes, so it was considered evident that the British had brought up other units and were keeping the closest of watches on this test case.

The 8,199-ton Mendoza set out to try to run the blockade and reach France without navicerts—the British certificates of inspection attesting that a cargo is not contraband of war.

The British, insistent upon navicerts, have confronted the Mendoza with the Asturias every time the French ship has stuck her nose out of the River Plate estuary.

Test, British Officials Say

Asserting the Mendoza had not asked for a navicert, British officials said the sailing was staged to test the British refusal to allow food to pass the blockade.

Had the merchantman succeeded in passing, they added, four other French ships at Buenos Aires would have sought to do the same thing.

Millington Drake, British Minister, said after the first interception Sunday night that the Asturias halted the Mendoza because she had no navicert (British certificate permitting passage through a blockade) and to learn what cargo she carried. She was turned back again last night.

While Alberto Guani, Uruguayan Foreign Minister, said he would protest if an investigation revealed the British blockade patrol had violated Uruguayan waters, Millington contended the interceptions had taken place on the high seas.

U. S. MAY BUY UP MEXICAN MERCURY

Japan Has Paid Premium for Whole Output.

Mexico City, Jan. 14 (A. P.).—The United States Treasury has shown interest in purchasing mercury in Mexico, but might have to outbid Japanese buyers for the metal, it was learned today.

Almost all mercury produced in Mexico has been going to Japan for more than a year. Trade circles reported that the Japanese have been paying considerably above the New York market price.

Japanese interests recently were said to have paid as much as $40 a flask above the New York market price, leading observers here to believe that Japan either faced a serious shortage of mercury or was sending shipments on to Germany to supplement supplies from Spain.

At the United States embassy it was said the Treasury's procurement division had indicated a desire to buy Mexican mercury.

Mexico Would Resent Attack On Americas, Says Foreign Minister

Mexico City, Jan. 14 (AP)—Mexico would consider "aggression against any Pan-American country whatever as an aggression against Mexico," Foreign Minister Ezequiel Padilla said tonight at a press conference.

Mexico has an army of 52,000 and a small navy and air corps.

Asked by a German news agency correspondent what Mexico's stand would be if the United States declared war on Germany, the Minister declined to amplify his statement.

Cuba Will Cooperate

Havana, Jan. 14 (AP)—Gustavo Gutierrez, President of the Cuban House of Representatives, said today after a conference with President Fulgencio Batista that Congress would meet in a special session, probably in January, to approve defense legislation coordinated with that of the United States.

British Divert Quantity Of Vitamins From Paris

Declare Pills Seized From Designer Are Food, And Release Them To Unoccupied France

Hamilton, Bermuda, Jan. 14 (AP)—A large quantity of vitamin pills seized January 6 by British officials from Mme. Elsa Schiaparelli, the designer, who was en route to Paris, were released yesterday for conveyance to unoccupied France, the colonial secretary announced tonight.

The announcement said the pills would be delivered to the American Friends Service Committee. They were gifts of Americans. When seized, the British said they were food, and, as such, contraband.

5 American Bombers Bound For England

Long-Range Reconnaissance Planes Will Be Turned Over To British Flyers At Bermuda

Elizabeth City, N. C., Jan. 14 (AP)—Five long-range American built reconnaissance bombers took off from the Pasquotank river here today for Bermuda, their first stop on a flight to Great Britain to join in the Royal Air Force's defense of England.

The twin-motored planes, each with a cruising range of 4,000 miles, were built by the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation at San Diego, Cal. They were manned by American crews who will deliver them to British fliers in Bermuda.

Final inspection of the craft was made Friday by Wing Commander D. F. Anderson of the British Embassy in Washington.

Spies, Refugees And Diplomats Rub Shoulders In Gay Lisbon

Portuguese Capital, At Crossroads Of Old And New Worlds, Basks In New-Found Importance

Mr. McGaffin has just returned to the United States after three years in France and England.

By WILLIAM McGAFFIN
Associated Press Correspondent

New York, Jan. 14—A warm December sun was gilding the distant buildings of Lisbon as the British flying boat which had brought me from "somewhere in England" settled down on the waters of the muddy Tagus.

A giant Pan American clipper alongside us was tuning up to carry a new batch of important personages across the Atlantic.

I met some of them when I checked in an hour later at the Palace Hotel fifteen miles down the beach in the fashionable suburb of Estoril. Purvis, the British purchasing agent in America, was having a drink with an American naval attache from London.

Wheels Within Wheels

At another table in the bar sat an American broadcaster, who had come down from London to confer with his colleague fresh out of Berlin. He was playing poker dice with an American war corrsepondent on his way back to England after a quick visit to the States.

That night at the casino three minutes away down the palm-lined road I tried my luck at roulette. Far more fascinating than the revolutions of the numbered wheel, however, were the impassive faces about me. Spies and refugees rubbed shoulders with diplomats and officials from all over Europe.

Ideal Meeting Place

In the last war you would have seen them at The Hague or Stockholm or Bern. But in this war, Lisbon, with its faintly reminiscent air of Paris, is the only common meeting ground.

Located at the junction of the caravan routes of the Old World, this last free port on that side has become the diplomatic capital of Europe.

Basking in an importance she has not known for two centuries, Lisbon has become the favorite setting for direct as well as indirect diplomacy. Many a diplomatic huddle is called there. Agents from Germany and England and Italy and Spain find Portugal ideal soil for "letting it be known"—for propaganda and espionage purposes.

"Business" Over Drinks

Drop in at the Avenida Palace Hotel and you'll find the bar thronged day and night—not by Portuguese. The ordinary native seldom buys cocktails and when he does he can't afford the expensive concoctions of the Avenida Palace.

There are so many spies, buying drinks for each other and anyone else considered "useful," the situation is almost ludricrous. One reporter felt the old sign which used to hang in a Constantinople hotel before the last war should be revived:

"Messieurs, the spies are particularly requested not to bother the guests."

Refugee Capital

At the land plane port of Cintra, some twenty-five miles out, pilots of British, German, Dutch and Italian nationality all check in at the same customs house.

On the streets you hear a babel of Dutch, Belgian, French, Czecho-Slovakian, Polish and Austrian. Refugees who have fled to Lisbon with the hope of getting to America drink peacefully in the cafes at tables adjoining those of their German conquerors.

There are an estimated 20,000 refugees in the city.

Some of them have managed to escape with a good bit of money. You see them by day pestering the American legation for visas. By night they toss 500 escudo chips about at the casino as though they were worth 20 cents instead of approximately $20.

Largely Pro-British

How long Portugal, Britain's oldest ally, can manage to remain free no one can tell. Her tiny army and navy could not possibly hold off an invasion without help. Ninety per cent. of her 7,000,000 people are for the British who have bought their wine and lent them money since 1703.

But her clever dictator, Dr. Antonio de Oliveira Salazar, who hopes to remain at peace so as to continue his ambitious health and education-improving plans, has maintained good relations with the Axis powers.

If Portugal keeps her bright lights burning it will be because she is useful to all the belligerents—not only as a clearing house but as the last direct point of contact with the United States.

A standing joke advances a reason why the Germans do not try to shoot down the England-to-Portugal plane: They would then have no way of getting their spies into England.

3 BACK FROM PARIS AT NAZIS' REQUEST

Members Of U. S. Embassy Staff Reported To Have Aided Briton To Flee

One Of Group Indicates Germans Are Sorry They Detained Mrs. Deegan

[By the Associated Press]

New York, Jan. 14—Three American Embassy staff members whose recall from Paris had been demanded by the German Government on charges they aided a British officer to escape from the occupied zone, returned to the United States today, but declined to discuss the event.

"I'm sorry, but I can't talk," said Mrs. Elizabeth R. Deegan, former embassy receptionist, who had been held by the Germans for a week in Paris. She was taken in custody December 5.

With Cecil M. P. Cross, first secretary, and Leigh Hunt, embassy trade attache, Mrs. Deegan arrived aboard the Atlantic Clipper from Lisbon.

Cross declined to discuss the European situation because "things are so complicated," and added, "I might say the wrong thing and you might misinterpret it, or you might make an error and then I'd be in bad."

Suggests Report Accurate

Asked whether Mrs. Deegan was "held by the Nazis, or wasn't she?" Cross smiled and replied, "I understand your State Department said so, and they are usually accurate."

Then he added that he thought the Germans "regret it more now than they did then."

Cross said that the food situation in France was "bad," but that he was "not at liberty to discuss it."

Two French offices now are being maintained by the United States, he said—one at Vichy and one at Paris. The United States has been acting for Great Britain and its dominions, he explained, and until recently represented Egypt and Belgium.

Takes Over Egypt Affairs

Iran now has taken over Egypt's affairs and Germany those of Belgium, Cross disclosed.

The three planned to leave for Washington to report today. Mrs. Deegan said she hoped to visit her family at Asheville, N. C., as soon as possible.

Gerald W. Hignett, a British aviation squadron leader attached to the Air Ministry, said he was en route to Washington to report to the embassy air attache.

Bermuda Clipper Brings British And Canadians

Four British citizens, two Canadians and seven Americans arrived at the Baltimore seaplane base aboard the Pan American Bermuda Clipper yesterday afternoon. The flight from Bermuda was delayed three days because of bad weather.

Among the passengers were four persons on the last leg of journeys from London. They were Bertram Cruger, of the British War Relief; Harvey F. Schwartz, businessman returning to visit his wife; Frank L. Harley, managing director of the British division of a motion-picture company, and Arthur Jarrett, theater chain manager. They made the trip from Lisbon to Bermuda on board the American Export Liner Excalibur.

Also on board was Major Frank S. Gilman, U. S. M. C., of Quantico, Va., who said he had been in Bermuda surveying the possibility of a Marine Corps base there.

Other passengers included John Gale of New York; R. C. Morgan, of New York; Dr. Bryan Murphy, of Flinfoln, Manitoba; Capt. Hubert Marmineau, of Bermuda; Harry Ham of Hollywood, and Mrs. Ruth Bellah, of New York.

Capt. Charles Lorver piloted the ship from Bermuda, and then took it on to the New York Pan American base.

How Norse Trapped Nazis

[By the Associated Press]

Jersey City, N. J., Jan. 14—The American Export liner Excalibur, delayed thirty hours when she was forced to heave-to in a seventy-mile-an-hour gale, arrived from Lisbon today with 170 passengers, including 53 Americans.

Arne Sunde, 57, Norwegian Minister of Supply and Shipping, described how he had fled Oslo, with the coming of the Nazis, into the mountains north of the city, to take command of a group of fellow-countrymen resisting the invasion.

At the town of Dobie, Sunde said, his force surrounded a group of forty-seven parachute troops trapped in a building and demanded that they surrender.

Nazis Subterfuge Fails

The German commander sent back a message that the "German troops are not your enemies. We've come to protect Norway. Any opposition by you is fruitless. If you resist, you will have the strongest opposition."

Then, recalled Sunde, the note went o not explain, "We have one hundred Norwegian prisoners in this building, including fifty women and children. Will you uselessly shed the blood of your compatriots? I have a radio connection with Oslo and I can instantly order bombing planes to attack you. Highest greetings."

Asked what his response was, Sunde replied grimly, "I gave them ten minutes to surrender—and they did."

Sunde escaped from Norway to London aboard a British cruiser.

Freighter Loads Cargo Of U. S. Gifts To Greece

Major Part Of $2,000,000 Shipment Placed Aboard Vessel At Bayonne, N. J.

New York, Jan. 14 (AP)—A major part of a $2,000,000 shipment of medical supplies, food, clothing and ambulances was loaded aboard the Greek freighter Cassandra Louloudis at Bayonne, N. J., today for shipment to Greece.

The entire cargo space of the 7,500-ton freighter was filled with goods donated by the American people, through the American Red Cross and the Greek War Relief Association, Inc.

At the same time, the Medical and Surgical Supply Committee of America announced it had shipped $9,508 worth of surgical equipment and medical supplies, including 100,000 vitamin capsules, to Greece. It was the second such shipment within three weeks.

Bernard E. Smith Back From Foreign Travels

Wall Street Broker Says He Visited Vichy And London And Saw Number Of Officials

New York, Jan. 14 (AP)—Bernard E. (Sell 'Em Ben) Smith, Wall Street broker whose financial exploits have become almost legendary, arrived by clipper plane from Europe today and described his foreign travels as "purely personal."

Smith, who left Lisbon aboard the American Export liner Excalibur but changed to a clipper at Bermuda, said he had visited Vichy and London. He "saw" a number of officials in both places, he asserted, but "never talked to any of them."

He planned to fly at once to Toronto, continuing what he repeated was a "purely personal" mission.

Deadly Cartridges Are Found Among Blanks Given Troops

Fort Dix Commander Says Substitution Was Discovered Before Any Were Fired In Night Maneuver

[By the Associated Press]

Fort Dix, N. J., Jan. 14—Brig. Gen. Ralph K. Robertson, acting commanding general of the post and the Forty-fourth Division, disclosed today that a number of live cartridges had been discovered in supposedly blank ammunition being issued to troops for use in a combat problem.

The issue was "immediately recalled from the troops before any were fired," Robertson said. He added that "an investigation is being conducted."

Officials said the "guard cartridges" found in the allotment were capable of inflicting deadly wounds.

General Robertson's statement follows:

"On the night of January 13 a regiment of this division, during the issuance of blank ammunition for a night maneuver problem, discovered several guard cartridges in the lot. The issue of the blank ammunition was immediately recalled from the troops.

"The maneuver proceeded on schedule, and an investigation of the matter is being conducted."

Officers explained that guard cartridges are deadly and normally used by army sentries. It was stated at the post public relations office, however, that none is used here. Fort Dix sentries have blank ammunition in their rifles.

Guard cartridges differ from bullets used in combat in that they have lead instead of steel jackets and do not contain as much powder as the bullets used in the field. They are issued to sentries, an officer said, because it is not necessary for them to have bullets of such long range as those needed in battle.

Post officials did not disclose to which regiment the ammunition was being issued nor for what use it was intended. A regiment comprises about 2,000 men.

It was learned unofficially that the Seventy-first Infantry had been scheduled for night maneuvers, including a mock battle, last night.

union end its strikes in five plants of the Eaton Manufacturing Company, and that the company reopen its plants and rehire all strikers.

James F. Dewey, of the United States Department of Labor, said that "this marks the first time such a drastic step has been taken anywhere in the country."

After conferring with an Eaton official this afternoon, Dewey said he was "hopeful for a settlement by tomorrow morning" and that the company was cooperating in a "plan" to end the dispute.

May Reopen Thursday

Dewey, planning further conferences with company officials tonight, said that if the plan uder discussion is accepted the struck plants would reopen Thursday.

Dewey withheld details of his proposal, saying only that he was asking that CIO men be put back to work on a temporary basis pending final settlement.

'Punch 'Em' Bosses R. A. F.

(ADVANCE)

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 14—Air Marshal Sir Richard Edmund Charles Peirse—they call him "Lucky" Peirse and say he leads a charmed life—is the man who sends out British bombers to raid Axis territory from Narvik to Naples, from Bordeaux to Berlin.

He's proud of another nickname—"Punch 'Em" Peirse—given him since he became commander in chief of the bomber command.

Plans Attacks

Night and day he sits with the latest intelligence reports spread out before him, poring over large-scale maps of Germany and Italy and the territories they occupy, planning attacks on railroad junctions, oil refineries, shipbuilding yards and other military objectives.

Tall and broad-shouldered, Peirse has a touch of the quarterdeck about him—as befits a former sailor and the son of an admiral.

With a pipe jutting from a corner of his mouth, he paces the office carpet and replies heatedly to any suggestion that he is an armchair airman:

"I'm still as good a pilot as ever I was."

And official documents record his prowess in a career that has been full of excitement.

Peirse, who succeeded Air Chief Marshal Sir Charles Portal in the bomber command upon the latter's appointment as chief of air staff (in supreme command of the R. A. F.), was born at Croydon in Surrey in 1892, near the spot where London's principal airport now stands. His father was Admiral Sir Richard Peirse, and not unnaturally he had an inclination toward a life at sea.

He was educated in the training ship H. M. S. Conway and at King's College.

Peirse soon became associated with flying in its earliest days. His Royal Aero Club aviator's certificate carries the number 460. More than 20,000 have been issued since then.

He was a sub-lieutenant in the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve at the start of the World War. When the Admiralty called for volunteers to be trained as pilots, he transferred to the infant Royal Naval Air Service.

Honored For Daring

In 1915 he was awarded the distinguished service order for his repeated and daring bombing attacks on the German submarine bases at Ostende and Zeebrugge in occupied Belgium.

An official account of this exploit, dated January 27, 1915, reads: "During the day visits were paid to Zeebrugge by Squadron Commander Richard Davies and Flight Lieutenant Richard Peirse. Twenty-seven bombs were dropped on two submarines and on the guns on the mole. It is believed that one submarine was damaged considerably and that many casualties were caused among the gun crews."

During one of his raids, Peirse was wounded by shrapnel while flying over Antwerp, but the fact that he again came through a terrific barrage without disaster confirmed him in his nickname "Lucky."

Important Appointments

After the war ended, he received the Air Force Cross for distinguished war service, as well as the Italian Croix de Guerre for service in the Mediterranean with the men his bombers now are raiding.

When granted a permanent commission in the Royal Air Force (into which the old R. N. A. S. was merged) Peirse held a number of important appointments.

He was deputy director of operations and intelligence at the Air Ministry, air officer commanding British forces in Palestine and Transjordan, deputy chief of the air staff (1937) and vice-chief of the air staff (1939).

The King made him a Knight Commander of the Bath last April.

His luck did not desert him in May, 1936, when his sedan car was ambushed by Arabs on a lonely road near Nablus in Palestine. Bullets crashed on the plating of the armored cars accompanying him, but the attack was broken after sharp fighting and the attempt on his life failed.

Dared Falling Bombs

When the German Blitzkrieg on London began, Peirse was among the hundreds of Londoners who were "bombed out." He shocked his chauffeur by standing amid falling bombs at a corner of his street watching auxiliary firemen tackle a blazing gas main.

Peirse objects to "too much show." He hates his big official Daimler car with its tall glass windows—which have led some persons to dub it "the goldfish pond"—because he likes to travel as inconspicuously as possible and feels like a goldfish in it while crowds goggle outside. His air marshal's pennant never flies on the automobile.

He usually is at his desk at 8.30 A. M. and seldom leaves before 8.30 P. M.

He likes to spend his rest days quietly with his wife, Joyce, and their son and daughter at their country cottage near the Thames.

Peirse's hobbies range from a passion for fast automobiles to archæology.

He once said that if he could have chosen an age in which to live, he would have liked the sixteenth century. "These Elizabethans were men after my own heart," he said. "But I feel that to be part of the R. A. F. in this war is the next best thing."

War Communiques

British

LONDON, Jan. 14 (AP).—The Air Ministry communique today:

Last night in bad weather a small force of aircraft of the Coastal Command made a successful attack on the submarine base at Lorient.

Heavy bombs were observed to burst on the naval ordnance w and on buildings in the docks.

Aircraft of the Bomber Command also attacked targets in the Dunkerque area and started one large fire and several smaller fires.

From these operations, all our aircraft returned safely.

During daylight yesterday, one of our aircraft was lost on patrol operations.

A joint communique of the Ministries of Air and Home Security:

There is nothing to report during daylight today.

An Admiralty communique:

Our naval forces have been operating in the central Mediterranean during the period of Jan. 7 to 13, covering the passage of convoys through the Mediterranean.

On the morning of Jan. 10, when in the Sicilian Channel, two Italian destroyers were encountered. One of these, of the Spica class (638 tons), was sunk but the other managed to escape.

Later H. M. S. Gallant was damaged by a mine or a torpedo but has arrived in harbor.

German and Italian air forces, working from Italian bases and including a number of dive bombers, made great efforts against our ships during these operations.

H. M. S. Illustrious (Capt. D. W. Boyd, C. B E, D S C, R N) was hit and received some damage and casualties

One of the cruisers, H. M. S. Southampton (Capt. B. C. B. Rooke, R. N.), was also hit and suffered casualties.

Twelve enemy aircraft at least were shot down, and a further number was damaged.

The main object of the operation, which was that of passing a convoy from west to east, was carried out according to plan. This convoy carried important material assistance to Greece.

The next of kin of casualties have been informed.

CAIRO, Jan. 14 (AP).—A British general headquarters communique:

LIBYA: Nothing fresh to report.

SUDAN: In the neighborhood of Kassala, patrol activity is continuing.

OTHER FRONTS: Nothing to report.

A Royal Air Force communique:

The airdrome at Catania, Sicily, was heavily raided by bombers of the R. A. F. during the night of Jan. 12-13. A series of attacks was made, during which very heavy damage was caused. Two hangars on the west side of the airdrome were hit and set on fire, one of them being demolished. Another hangar on the east side of the airdrome was also hit and set ablaze.

Heavy explosions occurred and numerous fires were started among the administrative buildings. A petrol dump was set afire, and at least nine aircraft, thought to be German Junkers 87's, were destroyed. Other bombers hit the main runways and the railway line along the west side of the airdrome.

Fires and explosions were visible from Cap Passero, forty-five miles away. Two of our bombers failed to return to their base, but the crew of one of them was rescued when the aircraft had a forced landing.

On the same night raids were carried out on airdromes at Berka and Benina. Large fires were started at Benina, where six enemy aircraft were seen blazing on the ground, and many others were believed to have been put out of action by bomb splinters and subsequent machine-gun attacks. Large fires were still burning fiercely when our aircraft left.

Hangars and barracks were hit at Berka, with subsequent explosions.

On the previous night the railway and docks at Bengazi were attacked, one large explosion occurring.

Raids were also made on barracks and defenses at Derna, fires being started among barracks.

Military concentrations at Berati (Albania) were bombed by our aircraft yesterday. Bombs fell in the target area and although full observation of the results was not possible owing to weather conditions, it is believed direct hits were registered. Smoke was seen rising from a bridgehead in the south end of the town when our aircraft, all of which returned safely, left the target.

In Italian East Africa night raids were made on airdromes at Asmara, Baerntu and the Agordat on Jan. 12-13, while at Mai Adaga further attacks were made on the Caproni (airpalne) workshops, where a large fire was caused among the buildings.

At Tessenei yesterday a dive attack was made on motor transport concentrations, one large and several small fires being started.

From these operations in East Africa all our aircraft returned safely.

The enemy bombed some localities, causing only a few wounded.

A Greek submarine sank a small cargo steamer of ours which was moving in Yugoslav territorial waters the morning of Dec. 31. The submarine, against every rule of warfare, then shelled a lifeboat from the steamer, killing ten members of the crew.

All our aircraft returned safely.

Channel Fortifications Indicate Hitler Sees Stalemate Possible

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

The disclosure that Hitler is building a defensive line of fortifications along the English Channel is a further indication that he is getting set to try to hold the war to a stalemate if he fails to defeat Britain.

The immediate purpose of the defenses obviously is to prevent the Allies from invading the continent through France or the Low Countries and thus getting at Germany. The underlying strategy is clear. Both sides in the conflict recognize that invasion of enemy territory with land forces probably will be necessary for a complete victory.

The fact that the Fuehrer is building these defenses doesn't mean that he won't go all out to defeat England. But he is pretty far-sighted in military matters—let none doubt that. He is safeguarding himself in case he is unable to knockout John Bull.

Hitler apparently figures that if he can at least achieve a stalemate, this will leave him in control of the whole continent, clear through to the Russian border—and maybe beyond. He expects to organize the entire territory politically, economically and industrially, and so build up the Reich that it will be in an impregnable position.

Efforts at Consolidation.

As a matter of fact this isn't the first time that we have had evidence of the Nazi chief's line of thought. His effort has been to achieve politico-economic consolidation along with the necessary military developments. We have seen that in his cautious dealings with the French Government and Spain, as well as in the Balkans.

Hitler cannot ignore the terrible menace of the British blockade which has done him and Mussolini so much damage already. He figures, however, that if he can hold the Anglo-Allies off the Continent, he can reorganize agriculture and industry so as to offset the blockade. Thus in due course the Reich would wax all powerful.

The German political and military maneuvers in the Balkans are in my view partly calculated to strengthen preparations for a stalemate. Hitler may use his troops in southeastern Europe for offensive purposes, but whether he does or not, the fact remains that he must be master of the Balkans, and also must be able to defend himself against Russia or an Anglo-Allied invasion from the Near East.

Should Hitler be able to force a stalemate it will mean that he really has achieved a great degree of victory, even though he has failed to crush the British. He will be lord of the Continent, with all other European nations co-operating—voluntarily or otherwise—in the new order. The indications are that those countries which aren't annexed will be bound to the Reich by ironclad customs unions.

LONDON, JAN 14-(AP)-INFORMATION MINISTER ALFRED DUFF COOPER TOLD THE BBC'S RADIO AUDIENCE TONIGHT THAT THE SPIRIT OF FRANCE IS "ALIVE TODAY AND GROWING IN VIGOR."

BRITAIN, HE SAID, HAS EVIDENCE THAT SYMPATHY FOR HER CAUSE IN FRANCE IS "GROWING WITH REMARKABLE RAPIDITY."

THAT SENTIMENT, HE ADDED, "NOT UNNATURALLY" IS GROWING FASTER IN OCCUPIED FRANCE "WHERE THE HATEFUL PRESENCE OF THE GERMANS REMINDS THE PEOPLE DAY BY DAY OF WHAT THEY HAVE LOST AND WHAT IS THEIR ONE HOPE OF REGAINING IT."

THE FRENCH PEOPLE, DUFF COOPER SAID, WERE "EXHAUSTED AND STUNNED" LAST JUNE AND THE WAR "SEEMED TO THEM AS THOUGH IT WERE OVER."

BUT, HE ASSERTED, THAT NO LONGER IS THE FRENCH PEOPLE'S MOOD.

"FOR MONTHS NOW THEY HAVE BEEN CONTEMPLATING, AT FIRST WITH ASTONISHMENT AND THEN WITH DAUNING AND NOW WITH INCREASING CONFIDENCE, THE GREAT FIGHT THAT THE BRITISH HAVE PUT UP, THE INDOMITABLE RESISTANCE AGAINST WHICH THE MIGHT OF GERMAN AGGRESSION GRADUALLY HAS BEEN EXHAUSTING ITSELF," HE SAID.

LONDON, JAN.14-(AP)-THE RAF'S LEAD IN THE RACE FOR ALTITUDE IS ONE OF THE PRIME REASONS BRITISH AVIATION EXPERTS GIVE IT AN "EDGE" OVER THE LUFTWAFFE.

A HINT OF THE NECESSITY FOR THE GREATEST POSSIBLE ALTITUDE IS SEEN IN THE COMPARISON BETWEEN THE AVERAGE WORLD WAR DOGFIGHT A MILE IN THE AIR AND AIR BATTLES IN THIS WAR FIVE AND SIX MILES HIGH.

THE ADVANTAGE IN AIR FIGHTING RESTS WITH THE FIGHTER WHO CAN CLIMB HIGHER AND FASTER THAN HIS OPPONENT, ALL ELSE BEING EQUAL. ALTITUDE MAY MEAN LIFE OR DEATH TO THE FIGHTER PILOT WHO OFTEN STAKES ALL ON A DEATH-DEALING DIVE ON AN UNSEEN PLANE BELOW.

TO BOMBERS, ALTITUDE IS IMPORTANT ALSO FOR KEEPING OUT OF ANTI-AIRCRAFT RANGE AND TO ESCAPE DETECTION BY GROUND CREWS OR DEFENSE FIGHTER FORMATIONS.

ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUNS HAVE IMPROVED "AMAZINGLY," BRITISH SOURCES SAY.

THE TWIN OBJECTIVES OF BRITISH AERONAUTICAL RESEARCH RIGHT NOW ARE EFFECTIVE EIGHT FIGHTERS AND NEW ALTITUDE PEAKS FOR ALL PLANES.

PART OF BRITAIN'S "EDGE" IS CREDITED TO "BIG AMERICAN-BUILT BOMBERS" AND FOUR NEW TYPES, IT WAS DISCLOSED YESTERDAY, HAVE BEEN OR SOON WILL BE FLOWN ACROSS THE ATLANTIC FOR THE RAF--LOCKHEED-HUDSONS, LONG-RANGE RECONNAISSANCE BOMBERS; LOCKHEED-VENTURAS, DESCRIBED AS A LARGER VERSION OF THE LOCKHEED-HUDSONS; BOEING-17 FOUR-ENGINED BOMBERS AND CONSOLIDATED TWO-ENGINED FLYING BOATS.

HOW SURGERY USES BLITZ

METHODS TO KEEP PACE

WITH LIGHTNING WAR

BY RENNIE TAYLOR

ASSOCIATED PRESS SCIENCE WRITER

(ADVANCE) SAN FRANCISCO, JAN.14--A REPORT ON HOW SURGERY USES "BLITZ" METHODS ON THE BATTLEFIELDS OF MODERN WAR, AMPUTATING LEGS AND ARMS AND DRESSING WOUNDS AT HIGH SPEED WITH AMAZINGLY LITTLE EQUIPMENT, YET SENDING MANY OF THE WOUNDED AWAY FROM THE OPERATING TABLE UNDER THEIR OWN POWER, HAS BEEN MADE BY DR.LEO ELOESSER, AN AMERICAN WHO SERVED IN SPAIN.

FOR SEVERAL MONTHS DR.ELOESSER, A PROFESSOR OF SURGERY AT THE STANFORD UNIVERSITY MEDICAL SCHOOL, HEADED A MOBILE MEDICAL UNIT IN SPAIN, WHICH SERVED AS A PROVING GROUND FOR THE NEW HIGH-SPEED TYPE OF WARTIME SURGERY. HIS REPORT APPEARED IN THE JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

IN MODERN WAR, HE SAID, THE SURGEON HAS TO TREAT "GREAT MASSES OF WOUNDED." HIS SUPPLY TRUCK MAY BE LOST OR SHOT UP, BOTTLES OF PRECIOUS DRUGS MAY BE SMASHED. HE MAY NOT HAVE THE RIGHT ANAESTHETICS. THERE MAY BE LITTLE OR NO HOT WATER AVAILABLE. YET HE HAS TO OPERATE--QUICKLY.

30.24—6969

HE CANNOT PLY MEN WITH DRUGS AND LEAVE THEM LYING ABOUT UNCONSCIOUS. WAR MOVES TOO FAST FOR THAT. WOUNDED HAVE TO BE CARED FOR SPEEDILY. IF THEY CAN WALK AWAY FROM THE OPERATING TABLE, OR IF THEY CAN HELP THEMSELVES EVEN A LITTLE, SO MUCH THE BETTER. ANAESTHESIA UNDER FIRE USUALLY IS A MATTER OF A FEW MINUTES.

"A LITTLE ETHYL CHLORIDE, INHALED WHEN ALL IS READY IS SUFFICIENT FOR THE FEW MINUTES NEEDED TO AMPUTATE A MANGLED ARM THROUGH THE SITE OF THE FRACTURE. THE MAN WAKES UP IMMEDIATELY, MAY OFTEN WALK TO HIS BED, TRAVEL SEATED IN AN AMBULANCE AND CAN BE GIVEN HOT DRINKS WITHOUT NAUSEA.

"A COMPOUND FRACTURE (ONE IN WHICH THE BROKEN END OF THE BONE PROTRUDES THROUGH THE SKIN) WITH A COLD, PULSELESS LIMB CALLS FOR AMPUTATION UNLESS EXCEPTIONAL VIGILANCE IS POSSIBLE DURING THE FIRST FEW DAYS AFTER INJURY."

ONE WAY TO SAVE BLOOD: THE ARM OR LEG TO BE AMPUTATED IS SUSPENDED BY ROPE AND PULLEY UNTIL IT POINTS STRAIGHT UP IN THE AIR. WHEN THE AMPUTATION IS MADE, THE BLOOD IN THE VEINS SETTLES DOWNWARD INSTEAD OF BEING LOST.

THE COOPERATION OF THE WOUNDED MAN IS HELPFUL TO THE SURGEON.

"SOLDIERS AT THE FRONT," DR.ELOESSER REPORTED, "ARE NOTORIOUSLY EASY TO ANAESTHETIZE; THEY USUALLY ARE IN GOOD PHYSICAL CONDITION, NOT OVERFED OR ALCOHOLIC, AND WHEN WOUNDED THEY OFTEN ARE ON THE VERGE OF SHOCK, SO THAT A LITTLE MORPHINE, A LITTLE SEDATIVE OR A SNIFF OF ANAESTHETIC GOES A LONG WAY TOWARD FREEING THEM FROM PAIN."

ON THE BATTLEFIELD, ONE OF THE MOST SATISFACTORY DISINFECTANTS FOR SURGEONS, DR.ELOESSER ADDED, IS ORDINARY CHLORIDE OF LIME, A CHEAP CHEMICAL WHICH IS SOLD INDUSTRIALLY BY THE CARLOAD AND IS USED FOR PURIFYING RESERVOIRS, SEWERS AND THE LIKE.

BEFORE AN OPERATION CAN BE PERFORMED, A GENROUS AREA AROUND THE WOULD HAS TO BE STERILIZED. INSTEAD OF THE MORE HIGH PRICED DISINFECTANTS, CHLORIDE OF LIME CAN BE USED FOR THE PRELIMINARY CLEANSING AND FOR STERILIZING THE SURGEON'S HANDS.

HULL URGES FULLEST AID TO BRITAIN

Tells House Committee British Navy Is Our First Line of Defense Against Destroyers of Civilization.

Washington, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Secretary Hull told the House Foreign Affairs Committee today that "control of the high seas by law-abiding nations is the key to the security of the Western Hemisphere."

The State Department chief appeared before the committee as the first witness on President Roosevelt's bill for aiding Great Britain and other nations fighting aggression by lending or leasing them war materials ranging from bullets to battleships. Secretary Hull described the measure as one which would "make it possible for us to allocate our resources in ways best calculated to provide for the security of this nation and of this continent."

Speed Is Greatest Need.

Above all, he declared, "it will do all these things in the speediest posible manner, and, overwhelmingly, speed is our greatest need today." The Secretary of State asserted that "the proposed so-called new order in the Pacific" means the domination by one country to the exclusion of the interests of other nations.

Before the House committee, he declared that "such a program for the subjugation and exploitation" of so many people by one nation was of great concern to the entire world. Nevertheless, he said, the United States has tried to show Japan that her best interests would be in friendly relations with this nation.

Chairman Bloom, Democrat, of New York, started the hearing at 10:26 A. M.—twenty-six minutes late. The Secretary began by saying that he did not intend to discuss the details of the bill, asserting that that would be done by others, but he said that he preferred to place before the committee the facts as to the dangers confronting this hemisphere "and, therefore, this country."

Review of Situation.

In a comprehensive review of the international situation, Secretary Hull declared that three nations—Germany, Japan and Italy—had made abundantly clear "their determination to repudiate and destroy the very foundations of a civilized world order under law and to enter upon the road of armed conquest, of subjugation of other nations and of tyrannical rule over their victims."

In describing the importance of command of the seas the Secretary declared that "should that control be gained by the partners of the tripartite pact (Germany, Italy and Japan) the danger to our country, great as it is today, would be multiplied many fold."

"Were Britain defeated and were she to lose control of the seas, Germany easily could cross the Atlantic, especially the South Atlantic, unless we were ready to do what Britain is doing now," the Secretary of State said. "Were the Altantic to fall into German control, the Atlantic would offer little or no assurance of security."

Maximum Aid Wanted.

He urged the importance of giving maximum material assistance to Britain and the other countries fighting the Axis Powers.

President Roosevelt's angry assertion that "the rottenest thing said in public life in my generation" was being used as an argument against the aid-to-Britain program brought an opposition rejoinder today that the President had made the danger of war the foremost issue in the lease-lend armaments bill.

Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana, who readily assumed responsibility for the statement which aroused Mr. Roosevelt, said with seeming elation that the President's criticism had raised a clean cut question: "Whether or not this bill would lead us into war."

The actual start of legislative work on the momentous measure took on heightened interest because of Mr. Roosevelt's unexpected, blunt-spoken denunciation of the tactics he laid to some opponents of the bill.

Retort From Wheeler.

Senator Wheeler, who in a radio speech Sunday referred to the lease-lend bill as "the New Deal's 'Triple A' foreign policy—plow under every fourth American boy," retorted at once that Mr. Roosevelt "appeared to have lost his temper."

Following this up today, he contended that in view of the President's words the bill's foremost issue now was the war danger.

"This bill," he told reporters, "is a violation of the Hague treaty and international law. When you violate international law, as it is suggested that we do in several ways in this measure, you run the risk of direct involvement in war. That is what we are doing if we pass this measure—moving a long step toward war."

A colleague, Senator Clark, Democrat, of Missouri, claimed gains for the anti-lease-lend ranks, estimating that there was a "nucleus" of twenty-five votes in the Senate against the bill now. This would represent a gain of ten since the first opposition canvass of rock-bottom strength. Senator Clark said he expected additional gains as debate progressed.

Victory Is Predicted.

House sponsors of the bill meanwhile made flat predictions that the bill would win approval in that chamber without substantial change.

Speaker Rayburn and Representative Bloom said they anticipated little difficulty in speeding the measure to the Senate in a few weeks.

"I am for it in its present form," Mr. Bloom said, "but i may be that some constructive suggestions will be made and adopted." He thought the House might complete action in two weeks.

30.24-6973

Representative Fish, Republican, of New York, disputed Mr. Bloom's opinions both on the question of time and on the final form of the measure. The committee hearings, he said, alone would consume at least two weeks.

Mr. Fish, who has offered a number of amendments to curtail the broad presidential powers provided in the bill, announced he proposed to seek completely new legislation.

"It is our duty to scrap this monstrosity, this dictator bill and write a new one within the Constitution that will expedite all aid to Britain."

Apropos of Mr. Roosevelt's press conference remarks, Mr. Fish commented:

"Mr. Wheeler's remarks have gotten under the skin of the President; but if the shoe fits, let him wear it."

Would Call Hoover.

The ranking minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. Fish said that he would ask the committee to call such persons as former President Herbert Hoover, Wendell L. Willkie, former United States Ambassadors to Germany and Great Britain and "at least one authority on the constitutionality of the bill."

Mr. Bloom said that Navy Secretary Knox and William S. Knudsen, defense commission chieftain, would be heard tomorrow, then a few other "Government witnesses."

As for the seventeen witnesses suggested by Mr. Fish, Mr. Bloom said that he had not requested the appearance of any of them, but would arrange for the testimony of those who thought they had constructive recommendations.

Delay in Senate.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee meanwhile deferred until tomorrow a scheduled meeting to decide on the procedure for the lease-lend bill. The absence of Senator George, Democrat, of Georgia, committee chairman who is ill with a cold occasioned the delay.

Elsewhere in the Senate, Senator Bankhead, Democrat, of Alabama, announced support for the lease-lend plan.

"I don't think there is any danger this will involve us in war with the Axis," he said. "Mr. Hitler won't try war with us until he's ready."

Senator Gurney, Republican, of South Dakota, said he would seek a one-year limitation on presidential powers if the bill did not contain such a provision when it reached the Senate.

Senator Austin, Republican, of Vermont, acting Republican leader, predicted that when debate started every Senator would "have a different idea about this bill."

Hull's Statement Declaring British-Aid

Bill Vital to Protect U. S. From Attack by Axis

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The text of Secretary of State Cordell Hull's statement before the House Foreign Affairs Committee follows:

We are here to consider a bill designed to promote the defense of the United States. I shall not discuss the technical details of the proposed measure, since that will be done by other departments of the government more directly concerned with these matters. I shall place before you briefly the controlling facts relating to the manner in which the dangers that now confront this hemisphere and, therefore, this nation have arisen, and the circumstances which render imperative all possible speed in our preparation for meeting these dangers.

During the past eight years, our government has striven, by every peaceful means at its disposal, to secure the establishment in the world of conditions under which there would be a reasonable hope for enduring peace. We have proceeded in the firm belief that only if such conditions come to exist will there be a certainty that our country will be fully secure and safely at peace. The establishment of such conditions calls for acceptance and application by all nations of certain basic principles of peaceful and orderly international conduct and relations.

Accordingly, in the conduct of our foreign relations, this government has directed its efforts to the following objectives: (1) peace and security for the United States, with advocacy of peace and limitation and reduction of armament as universal international objectives; (2) support for law, order, justice and morality and the principle of non-intervention; (3) restoration and cultivation of sound economic methods and relations, based on equality of treatment; (4) development, in the promotion of these objectives, of the fullest practicable measure of international co-operation; (5) promotion of the security, solidarity and general welfare of the Western Hemisphere.

The Road to Tyranny

Observance and the advocacy of the basic principles underlying these policies and efforts toward their acceptance and application became increasingly important as three nations, one after another, made abundantly clear, by word and by deed, their determination to repudiate and destroy the very foundations of a civilized world order under law and to enter upon the road of armed conquest, of subjugation of other nations, and of tyrannical rule over their victims.

The first step in this fatal direction occurred in the Far East in 1931 with forceful occupation of Manchuria in contravention of the provisions of the nine-power treaty and of the Kellogg-Briand pact. The equilibrium in the Far East which had been established by the Washington Conference treaties of 1921-'22 became seriously disturbed by the setting up by forceful means in a part of China of a regime under Japanese control under the name of "Manchukuo." This control over Manchuria has been marked by the carrying out of a policy of discrimination which has resulted in forcing out American and other foreign interests.

During the years that followed, Japan went steadily forward in her preparations for expansion by force of arms. In December, 1934, she gave notice of her intention to terminate the naval treaty of Feb. 6, 1922. She then proceeded with intensified construction of military and naval armaments, at the same time undertaking, from time to time, limited actions directed toward an extension of her domination over China and involving disregard and destruction of the lawful rights and interests of other countries, including the United States.

In July, 1937, the armed forces of Japan embarked upon large-scale military operations against China. Invading forces of more than a million men occupied large areas along the seaboard and in the central provinces. In these areas there were set up puppet regimes which instituted systems of controls and monopolies discriminatory in favor of the interests of the invading country.

Would Control Half the World

It has been clear throughout that Japan has been actuated from the start by broad and ambitious plans for establishing herself in a dominant position in the entire region of the western Pacific. Her leaders have openly declared their determination to achieve and maintain that position by force of arms and thus to make themselves masters of an area coniatning almost one-half of the entire population of the world. As a consequence, they would have arbitrary control of the sea and trade routes in that region.

Previous experience and current developments indicate that the proposed "new order" in the Pacific area means, politically, domination by one country. It means, economically, employment of the resources of the area concerned for the benefit of that country and to the ultimate improvement of other parts of the area and exclusion of the interests of other countries. It means, socially, the destruction of personal liberties and the reduction of the conquered peoples to the role of inferiors.

It should be manifest to every person that such a program for the subjugation and ruthless exploitation by one country of nearly one-half of the population of the world is a matter of immense significance, importance and concern to every other nation wherever located.

Notwithstanding the course which Japan has followed during recent years, this government has made repeated efforts to persuade the Japanese government that her best interests lie in the development of friendly relations with the United States and with other countries which believe in orderly and peaceful processes among nations. We have at no time made any threats.

In Europe, the first overt breach of world order was made by Italy when, in 1935, that country invaded and conquered Ethiopia, in direct contravention of solemnly accepted obligations under the covenant of the League of Nations and of the Kellogg-Briand Pact. In 1939 Italy seized Albania in violation of unequivocal treaty obligations. In the summer of 1940 she entered the European war on the side of Germany with the openly avowed purpose of participating with that country in a remodeling of the world on the basis of a "new order" founded upon unlimited and unrestricted use of armed force. Finally, without provocation, she has attacked Greece.

War Became Inevitable

Throughout this period the government of the United States made known to the government of Italy its anxious concern over the growing deterioration of peaceful international relationships. Both on the occasion of the Italo-Ethiopian controversy and during the period preceding Italy's entry into the European war, this government addressed numerous communications to the government of Italy in an effort to prevent new breaches of world order.

Germany, from the time that Hitler and his associates came to power in 1933, began feverishly to construct vast armaments, while following a program of repeatedly made and repeatedly broken promises as a part of a skillful diplomatic game designed to lull the suspicions of other countries. After employing for several months at the disarmament conference in Geneva tactics which have since become a distinct pattern of German policy—further demands as previous demands are met—Germany, in October, 1933, rendered impossible any effective international agreement for limitation of armaments by withdrawing from the disarmament conference. There then followed nearly six years during which Germany, having determined upon a policy of unlimited conquest, moved inevitably toward the catastrophe of war.

Germany's work of preparation followed two main lines. The first consisted in the creation of armed force. To this end her entire national economy was transformed into a highly regimented and highly disciplined war economy. Every phase of national activity became harnessed to the requirements of preparation for war. More than half of the national income was expended for military purposes. Foreign trade and foreign payments became rigidly controlled for the same purpose. The production of planes and tanks and guns and all the other countless accessories of a modern war machine became the immediate objective of the whole national effort.

The second line consisted of a series of steps directed toward improving the strategic position of Germany. The first of these was the occupation and fortification of the Rhineland in 1936, in direct violation of the Locarno treaty, voluntarily entered into by Germany ten years earlier. Then followed, in rapid succession, the absorption of Austria, in direct violation of pledges given by Hitler to respect the sovereignty and independence of that country; the dismemberment and final seizure of Czecho-Slovakia, in spite of Hitler's assurances after the seizure of Austria that Germany desired no additional territory in Europe and in violation of a solemn pledge to respect the independence of that country, officially given in October, 1938; the annexation of Memel, and, finally, on Sept. 1, 1939, a brutal attack upon, and the devastation and partitioning of, Poland.

U. S. Raised Voice for Peace

The period of the war has witnessed the invasion and occupation of Denmark, Norway, Holland, Belgium and Luxemburg, in violation of the scrupulously observed neutrality of these countries and in contravention, in the cases of some of these countries, of assurances expressly given by Germany of her intention to respect their independence and sovereignty; the invasion and partial occupation of France; the splitting up of Rumania and the German occupation of the remaining portion of that country.

These seizures have been accomplished through a combined use of armed force applied from without and of an almost unbelievable amount of subversive activity from within. Each of the invaded and occupied countries has been subjected to a reign of terror and despotism. By word and by deed, the invaders have made unmistakably clear their determination to impose permanently upon these unfortunate countries a rule of tyranny frequently reminiscent of the worst pages of ancient history.

So long as there seemed to remain even a faint hope of inducing the leaders of Germany to desist from the course which they were following, the government of the United States neglected no opportunity to make its voice heard in restraint. It went further, and repeatedly offered its assistance in economic readjustments which might promote solution of the existing difficulties by peaceful means. All hope disappeared when the Nazi legions struck at Poland and plunged Europe into a new war.

Since then, it has become increasingly apparent that mankind is today face to face, not with regional wars or isolated conflicts, but with an organized, ruthless and impacable movement of steadily expanding conquest. We are in the presence of forces which are not restrained by considerations of law or principles or morality; which have fixed no limits for their program of conquest; which have spread over large areas on land and are desperately struggling now to seize control of the oceans as an essential means of achieving and maintaining their conquest of the other continents.

Control of the high seas by law-abiding nations is the key to the security of the Western Hemisphere in the present-day world situation. Should that control be gained by the partners of the tripartite pact, the danger to our country, great as it is today, would be multiplied manyfold.

U. S. Invasion No Impossibility

It is frequently said that there can be no danger of an invasion of the New World. It is said: As Germany has not been able to cross the British Channel, how can she cross the Atlantic?

German forces could cross the Channel in an hour's time were it not for the fact that Britain, now thoroughly prepared and well armed, is fighting every hour of the day to prevent that crossing, and is fortified with ever known device to repel a landing. The twenty miles of water between continental Europe and Britain are under British, not German, control. Were Britain defeated, and were she to lose command of the seas, Germany could easily cross the Atlantic—especially the south Atlantic—unless we were ready and able to do what Britain is doing now. Were the Atlantic to fall into German control, the Atlantic would offer little or no assurance of security.

Under these conditions our national security would require the continuous devotion of a very great part of all our work and wealth for defense production, prolonged universal military service, extremely burdensome taxation, unending vigilance against enemies within our borders, and complete involvement in power diplomacy. These would be the necessities of a condition as exposed as ours would be.

Great Britain is today a veritable fortress. So will this country be when our preparations for armed defense are completed. Most likely, however, it will not be by direct and frontal attack that the would-be invaders will undertake the conquest of this country, if they ever have a chance to embark upon such an enterprise. It is rather to be anticipated that their efforts would first be directed against other portions of this hemisphere, more vulnerable than this country, and then against us.

Subversive forces are hard at work in many American countries, seeking to create internal dissension and disunion as a now-familiar prelude to armed invasion. Today these forces are held in check and are being steadily eradicated. But the entire situation would change if control of the high seas were to pass into the hands of the would-be attackers. Under such conditions, the difficulties of continental defense would demand from us vastly greater efforts than we are now called upon to envisage.

Control of Seas Is Crux

The most serious question today for this country is whether the control of the high seas shall pass into the hands of powers bent on a program of unlimited conquest. It is in this light, above all, that we should order our present-day thinking and action with respect to the amount of material assistance which our country is prepared to furnish Great Britain.

On no other question of public policy are the people of this country so nearly unanimous and so emphatic today as they are on that of the imperative need, in our own most vital interest, to give Great Britain and other victims of attack the maximum of material aid in the shortest possible space of time. This is so because it is now altogether clear that such assistance to those who resist attack is a vital part of our national self-defense. In the face of the forces of conquest now on the march across the earth, self-defense is and must be the compelling consideration in the determination of wise and prudent national policy.

For us to withhold aid to victims of attack would not result in a restoration of peace. It would merely tend to perpetuate the enslavement of nations already invaded and subjugated and provide an opportunity for the would-be conquerors to gather strength for an attack against us.

The protagonists of the forces against which we are today forging the instrumentalities of self-defense have repudiated in every essential respect the long-accepted principles of peaceful and orderly international relations. They have disregarded every right of neutral nations, even of those to which they themselves had given solemn pledges of inviolability. Their constantly employed weapons for the government of their unfortunate victims are unrestricted terrorization, firing squads, deceit, forced labor, confiscation of property, concentration camps and deprivations of every sort.

Speed Is Greatest Need

The most scrupulous observance by peaceful countries of legal concepts provides today no security whatever. Many nations which trusted to the integrity of their intentions and the care with which they observed their legal obligations have been destroyed.

I am certain that the day will come again when no nation will have the effrontery and the cynicism to demand that, while it itself scoffs at and disregards every principle of law and order, its intended victims must adhere rigidly to all such principles—until the very moment when its armed forces have crossed their frontiers. But so long as such nations exist, we cannot and must not be diverted, either by their threats or by their hypocritical protests, from our firm determination to create means and conditions of self-defense wherever and in whatever form we find essential to our own security.

The present bill sets up machinery which will enable us to make the most effective use of our resources for our own needs and for the needs of those whom, in our own self-defense, we are determined thus to aid. The great problem of democracy is to organize and to use its strength with sufficient speed and completeness. The proposed legislation is an essential measure for that purpose. This bill will make it possible for us to allocate our resources in ways best calculated to provide for the security of this nation and of this continent in the complex and many-sided conditions of danger with which we are and are likely to be confronted. Above all, it will enable us to do all these things in the speediest possible manner. And, overwhelmingly, speed is our greatest need today.

England Lacks Cash To Buy More Arms, Morgenthau Asserts

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 15—Secretary Morgenthau testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee today that the British "just haven't got" dollars enough to pay for "anything like what they need" in war supplies from the United States.

Morgenthau asserted that Britain's total dollar assets as of January 1 were $1,775,000,000. Alongside this figure, he placed another $1,555,000,000, representing Britain's estimated dollar receipts during the calendar year, and a third figure, $3,019,000,000, the total of expenditures already contracted for during the year.

Leaves Figure Blank

He left a fourth figure blank, to be supplied later by the War and Navy departments. It was the total of what Britain expects to purchase in 1941 over and above what she has already ordered.

Then, in explanation, he said:

"They can pay this year for what they have already bought in dollars, but when it comes to finding the dollars to pay for anything like what they need—they just haven't got it." His voice dropped to an ominous tone as he reached the last sentence.

Supports Program

The Secretary of the Treasury was testifying in support of the Administration's bill empowering the President to manufacture war implements here, pay for them from the Treasury and then lend them to the British to be returned or replaced in kind after the war.

Officials in other departments said that Morgenthau's $1,775,000,000 estimate of British assets available for American purchases covered only the most easily available wealth. They pointed out also that the Morgenthau figure was limited only to the United Kingdom.

Morgenthau's statement said the British had $1,516,000,000 of American investments that could be liquidated. The Commerce Department recently said total United Kingdom investments in the United States at the end of August were $2,561,000,000, while Canada had $1,393,000,000 invested here, and other parts of the empire had smaller, unestimated investments.

Prospective Gold Sales

Morgenthau's figures also showed $760,000,000 of prospective gold sales to the United States, while the Federal Reserve Board last week estimated that new gold production of the empire is now nearly $1,000,000,000 per year.

British Empire investments outside the United States, were estimated by Morgenthau today at £3,868,000,000. (A pound is currently worth about $4.02.)

In reply to repeated questions from members of the committee, Morgenthau said that even if the British Government could convert securities held abroad into currency it would still be difficult to convert the funds into dollars for use here. At another point he said that buying by the British purchasing commission had "practically stopped because the money isn't in sight."

311 Million Left

Morgenthau did not add the figures for British assets and estimated receipts, but their total was $3,330,000,000. Deducting $3,019,000,000, the total of war supplies contracted for, this left $311,000,000 to be applied to the bill for supplies still to be ordered during the year.

Committee members were curious about British assets in South America and elsewhere and Morgenthau produced the list that showed total United Kingdom investments outside the United States were 3,868,000,000 pounds sterling. For Latin America the figure was £1,002,000,000.

Representative Fish (Rep., N. Y.) who has opposed numerous segments of the Administration foreign policy, was quick to challenge certain of Morgenthau's figures. The Federal Reserve Board had said, he asserted, that Britain had foreign balances of more than $7,000,000,000 that could be transferred here.

Morgenthau had come prepared for that one. He produced the Reserve Board statement in question, noted that it was dated August, 1939, before the war began, noted that the board's total included central gold reserves of members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, running to $2,735,000,000, and private dollar balances totaling $1,050,000,000.

Termed Accurate

"These figures of the Federal Reserve and ours are not in conflict," he said. He went on to say that his figures had come from the British treasury, had been carefully checked against other available figures and found to reflect accurately the foreign balances which the British Government controls.

The totals given are expected to become a central point of discussion in the controversy over assistance to England, especially by those who would endeavor to prove that Britain has ample funds to pay for her purchases here.

One other figure entered into Morgenthau's testimony, at the request of Representative Fish. The Secretary said that since the war began, the British purchasing commission had gotten delivery on and paid out dollars for American products totaling $1,337,000,000.

Representative Tinkham (Rep., Mass.) asked Morgenthau why Great Britain should not sell or segregate some of her foreign assets, so that the United States might have the benefit of them.

Picture Of Security Dollars

"I haven't attempted," Morgenthau answered, "to say what Britain should or shouldn't do. All I have attempted to do is lay before the committee a picture of the security dollars that the British empire has. I haven't attempted to say they should or should not make them available."

Mrs. Rogers (Rep., Mass.) asked how much the program would cost.

"I don't know," the Cabinet officer replied.

He went on to say that if the bill passes he and others would come before the Congressional committees asking appropriations, and that at that time some estimate would be available.

"I think," said Mrs. Rogers, "you should tell us the total ingredients in the medicine before we take it."

Foreign Relations Post Urged On Senator Glass

Washington, Jan. 15 (AP)—Administration leaders were reported today to have urged Senator Glass (Dem., Va.), supporter of President Roosevelt's program for aiding Britain, to accept a place on the Foreign Relations Committee, which soon will take up the "lend-lease" bill.

If Democratic leadership plans work out, Glass and Senator Byrnes (Dem., S. C.), who aided in drafting the Administration measure, probably will be added to the committee in a day or so to fill two vacancies.

Glass said of the reports merely that he had told friends he would serve on the committee if elected. He said he wanted it understood, however, that he was not an applicant for the place.

The 83-year-old Virginian is chairman of the Appropriations Committee which would be called on to consider funds for financing the British-aid program once the pending authorization legislation was approved.

KNOX SAYS NAVY WANTS 72-HOUR WEEK IN YARDS

Asserts Increased Working Schedule Depends on Finding Foremen.

FUNDS FOR 400 SHIPS ASKED

Urgent Need Described After Congress Committee Votes Anti-aircraft Money.

Washington, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Secretary Knox said today that the navy was attempting as rapidly as possible to organize its shipyards for operation on a seventy-two-hour week basis.

At present, Mr. Knox told his press conference, most yards are operating on a forty-eight-hour week, with time and a half paid to workers employed in excess of forty hours a week.

Some departments in some yards are working three shifts, Mr. Knox said, and additional shifts will be added in other yards toward the seventy-two-hour goal as soon as sufficient competent foremen are available.

The Secretary also announced that ships of the Atlantic fleet and army and navy forces would stage joint training maneuvers in the Caribbean beginning January 21.

He described the maneuvers as a routine annual affair and said that he did not think the new Atlantic bases acquired from Great Britain would figure in the war games.

The exercises are to center in the vicinity of Puerto Rico, presumably at Culebra Island, east of Puerto Rico, where similar maneuvers have been held in the past.

Mr. Knox said that selected units of the army's first division would sail from New York January 21.

Requests to Congress.

The navy asked Congress today for authority to build 400 small vessels, including submarine chasers, mine sweepers and torpedo boats, and asked also for extra facilities to construct them.

Rear Admiral Samuel M. Robinson, Chief of the Bureau of Ships, informed the House Naval Committee that 280 of the vessels were urgently needed and that Congress would be asked immediately for $310,460,000 for tehir construction and armament and $25,000,000 for expansion of building facilities.

The bulk of the small craft which will be completed in a year would be constructed on the great lakes.

The 280 vessels include thirty-six 165-foot seagoing submarine chasers for use as escort vessels; thirty 110-foot wooden submarine chasers; twenty-four motor torpedo boats; eighteen 165-foot mine sweepers, thirty-two fleet mine sweepers; ninety motor mine sweepers and fifty coastal mine sweepers.

For Anti-aircraft Fund.

Earlier in its session the committee unanimously indorsed the navy's request for a $300,000,000 strengthening of the fleet's anti-aircraft power.

Rear Admiral W. R. Furlong, Chief of Ordnance, told the committee that a major part of the program would involve the installation aboard larger warships of a new type of five-inch anti-aircraft gun which he called "the best we've ever had." He said that it was effective 31,000 feet in the air and had a great horizontal range.

In addition to the new guns, the committee was told, the program provides for splinter protection for gun crews and other deck personnel.

Rear Admiral Robinson testified that protection included the installation of thin plates of high tensile steel around the anti-aircraft guns, opening at the top so as to allow the guns to be aimed in any direction.

In all, the committee is considering requests for authority to spend a total of $809,000,000.

German Bases on Skagerrak And at Stavanger Are Bombed

British Report Direct Hits Scored on Ship and Norwegian Railroad Bridge—Nazi Planes Again Raid Britain.

London, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Aircraft of the Royal Air Force Coastal Command attacked enemy air bases at Mandal and Forus and other targets in German-occupied Norway last night, the Air Ministry reported today.

"Bad weather made observation difficult," the communique said, "but bombs were seen to burst on the airdrome of Mandal. One aircraft scored two direct hits on a motor ship in Stavanger Roads, and another bombed an important railway bridge."

All British aircraft returned safely, it was added, and military spokesmen explained that Forus is the air base for Stavanger, one of Norway's most important west coast ports. Mandal is on the southern tip of Norway at the entrance to the Skagerrak.

The Air Ministry News Service said later that a heavy bomb made a direct hit on a hangar at Mandal and that fires were started in the woods adjoining the airdrome.

Ground mist and bad weather generally over the Continent were reported to have prevented the R. A. F. from making its usual night attack on Germany and the so-called invasion ports along the coast of occupied France and Belgium.

Nazi Raiders Active.

German planes invaded Great Britain again tonight, flying over the Midlands as the skies cleared after a snowy day. London had no alarm up to a late hour, however, and no bombs were reported dropped in the Midlands. The snow fell through most of the day, restricting Nazi air activity, but a few planes came over and at least two villages were attacked.

Observers on the coast saw two German bombers loom through the storm over the Strait of Dover and soon there was a report that one had dropped sixteen bombs at a southeast of England village. There were no casualties. Most of the bombs were said to have hit a marsh.

A lone wolf raider flew over Scotland after a quiet night, dropped one bomb and raked a town with machine-gun fire. Other planes were reported over East Anglia.

Alarm in Freiburg.

Freiburg, Germany, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—The air raid sirens sounded a daylight alarm today in this city of northwest Germany. The all-clear was given twenty minutes later without incident.

Limited to Scouting.

Berlin, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—The German High Command reported today that Nazi air activity over Britain yesterday was limited to scouting flights because of the unfavorable weather. "The good effect of raids on war-essential objectives at Plymouth and Portsmouth carried out on recent nights was observed," the communique added.

Informed German spokesmen said earlier that there were no British flights over Germany last night.

Geneva Has Alarm.

Geneva, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—An air raid alarm was sounded here today at 9:55 A. M. The all-clear followed at 10:18 A. M.

English Shatter Precedents; Name Second Minister To U. S.

Sir Gerald Campbell, High Commissioner To Canada, Sent To Washington In Addition To Halifax And Butler

[By the Associated Press]

London, Jan. 15—In a move that makes diplomatic history, Great Britain has named Sir Gerald Campbell, British High Commissioner to Canada, as a second Minister to the United States.

The British Foreign Office made the announcement officially tonight, less than a week after it had confirmed the elevation of Sir Neville Butler, counselor of the embassy at Washington, to the rank of Minister.

Never before in history has the British Government had one Minister, let alone two, in addition to its Ambassador at Washington.

Although Sir Neville was appointed first, informed sources here said Sir Gerald would take precedence and act as second in rank to the new Ambassador, Viscount Halifax.

Sir Gerald acquired wide popularity and a broad knowledge of United States during his service as British consul general in San Francisco and New York. He left the latter post in 1938 to become High Commissioner to Canada.

His familiarity with both United States and Canadian affairs is expected to dovetail excellently with the thorough knowledge of British policy which Halifax acquired as Foreign Minister.

Sir Gerald is expected to take up his duties in Washington immediately upon Halifax's arrival there.

Some high official in the Dominions Office is expected to be named as Sir Gerald's successor to the Canadian post.

Nazi Raids Over Britain Curbed by Bad Weather

Berlin Says Scouting Flights Observed Bomb Damage

BERLIN, Jan. 15 (AP).—The German high command reported today that Nazi air activities over Great Britain yesterday were limited to scouting flights because of "unfavorable weather."

"In this action," the high command said, "the good effect of raids on war-essential objectives at Plymouth and Portsmouth carried out on recent nights was observed."

REDS SAID TO PLAN TRADE IN AMERICAS

British Fear Goods Would Be Given to Nazis.

London, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—The British Minister of Economic Warfare, Hugh Dalton, was said authoritatively today to be investigating reports that Soviet Russia proposes to form a 200-vessel merchant fleet to carry produce from the Americas to Russia.

This reported intention of Moscow was seen here as of great significance to Britain's attempt to strangle Germany by the blockade, since informed persons say it is clear that Russia's trade obligations with the Reich cannot be fully met from her own resources unless Russians themselves are to go short. Imports of oil, cotton and corn, for example, would release equivalent quantities for Germany.

The number of vessels is regarded as probably exaggerated, but any substantial move by Russia would have serious repercussions on the blockade and would give rise to some uneasiness, it was said.

Some Britons said they believed some United States producers were helping the Axis by selling Russia commodities in which Germany was deficient. The sale of cotton is one example cited.

American Bomber Unit Sought as Part of R.A.F.

Whitehead Hopes to Get Force Like Eagle Squadron

LONDON, Jan. 15 (AP).—Charles B. Whitehead, believed to be the only American serving as a bomber pilot in the Royal Air Force, said today he hoped to form an American bomber squadron similar to the Eagle fighter unit.

[The Eagle squadron is a volunteer air force of Americans organized by Col. Charles Sweeny.]

"I'm going to ask permission of the bomber command to form a squadron, which would be financed by American money and flown by American pilots," Whitehead said. "I bet I know 500 people back home right now who would give $100 each. I don't care whether the planes are American or British, so long as we get an American squadron attacking Germans in Germany."

Whitehead, who is training to fly long-range bombers, has a wife in Brooklyn. He left a job with a commercial air line in Mexico to join the R. A. F. after France's military collapse. Previously he served in the United States Air Corps and then as chief engineer of the Peruvian air force during the 1930 revolution.

All Britons, 16 To 60, Including Women, Must Register For Fire Duty

London, Thursday, Jan. 16 (AP)—All Britons between the ages of 16 and 60 will be compelled to register as fire guards under a draft order signed last night by Herbert Morrison, Minister of Home Security.

This most drastic call on civilians since the war began will affect men first. Women must register, but will be called only in extreme cases.

The rich will not be allowed to hire others to do their guard duty, but must stand by in person.

All must be prepared to give forty-eight hours a month without pay. Exemption is granted only to the fighting services and their auxiliaries.

Publication of the order is expected in the next few days, but the effective date has not yet been set.

Bevin Is Urged to Use Power to Draft Labor

Committee Also Recommends Reduction of Hours

LONDON, Jan. 15 (AP).—Wider use of compulsory powers to shift workers from place to place for "the maximum amount of dilution" and more training in factories were urged today by a government committee on national expenditure to meet a shortage of skilled labor in British war industries. The committee report also recommended that reduced hours, now in effect for many workers, "be universally applied, in order to prevent men from moving from place to place in search of overtime rates."

"The three-shift system," it said, "is an ideal to be aimed at in every possible case."

NEW FIGHTER FORCES DRIVE OFF RAIDERS

Two Attacks Follow Day Of Comparative Quiet In British Isles

English Brave Snow And Mist To Blast German Bases In Norway

[By the Associated Press]

Berlin, Thursday, Jan. 16—British planes dropped several bombs at an undesignated spot in the north German coastal region last night, DNB announced today.

The news agency said the bombs caused only small fires in apartment houses and that only a small number of R. A. F. planes entered the region.

It said that at the same time German formations headed for vital points in central England.

[By the Associated Press]

London, Thursday, Jan. 16—London had a minor bedtime air raid just before midnight and early today—the first air attack after dark since Sunday, but the show put on by the German bombers and challenging British night fighters surpassed any previous midnight performance over the capital.

A few insignificant fires flared briefly. The real show for which thousands poured into the streets to see was the smoky vapor patterns woven upon the crystal clear heavens by the raiders and the darting, circling, machine-gunning fighters.

The raid began at an unusually late hour for attacks on London. The all-clear sounded during the early morning hours.

Another Alarm Follows

Another alarm about two hours later was preceded by a series of heavy explosions.

During the clear interval the pinpoints of distant bursting shells could be seen on London's outer defenses as a new wave of night raiders approached. However, the defenders apparently were so confident in the strength of the new fighter forces and the anti-aircraft barrage that no sirens were sounded and the Germans flew away.

One German raider was reported shot down during the London attacks.

Shortly before the air alarm in the capital, gunfire burst out over one London district.

Before London was attacked, raiding Nazi planes were in fight over other areas of England.

Drone High Over Midlands

Three bombs were dropped at one Midlands town, falling in a cemetery and recreation grounds and causing no casualties.

As the hostile planes droned high over the Midlands, the force of anti-aircraft fire appeared to make them fly in circles in an effort to avoid being hit.

Two East Anglian towns reported raiders also.

During the day wintry weather brought comparative peace to the British Isles. Only a few German planes came over during the daylight hours.

Two dropped sixteen bombs on a southeastern village without casualties, one machine-gunned a Scottish town and others appeared over East Anglia.

London itself had been clear of air alarms since Sunday night.

A few German planes, apparently on scouting duty, were reported early in the night over the Midlands and Liverpool. Snow had fallen over the Dover Strait for most of the day and there was a heavy fog.

British Raid Bases In Norway

Earlier the British surmounted snow and mist for attacks on Nazi bases in German-occupied Norway.

In the only continental operations reported by the Air Ministry, flyers of the coastal command were said to have scored direct hits on the air base at Mandal, on Norway's Skaggerak coast line, and Forus, airdrome for the west Norwegian port of Stavanger.

One plane also scored two direct hits on a motorship in Stavanger Roads, the communique continued, and another bombed an important railway bridge.

Fires Near Mandal Airdrome

The British said weather made observation of the effects difficult, but fires were seen in the woods adjacent to the Mandel airdrome.

All aircraft returned safely, the Ministry said.

The usual attacks on the "invasion" ports of German-occupied France and on Germany proper were prevented by snow and mist.

NAZI AFRICAN THREAT SEEN IN NEW AIR WAR

British Expect Attempt To Transport Troops To Libya Will Follow

"One More Good Smash" At Italy Before Help Arrives Anticipated

By DREW MIDDLETON
Associated Press Correspondent

London Jan. 15—The developing German aerial offensive in the Mediterranean is intended to cut a way through the British navy for transport of Nazi troops to the aid of the hard-pressed Italians in North Africa, British military informants said today.

The attack by Nazi dive bombers on a British naval flotilla January 10 was described as the first major incident in this campaign—a campaign which is recognized to hold potential danger to the British but which is expected here to fail. The aircraft carrier Illustrious and the cruiser Southampton were damaged January 10.

Nazis' "Makeshift" Bases

The Germans, said an informed source, must operate from "makeshift" bases on the island of Sicily while the R. A. F. is flying from well protected and well equipped bases.

Too, he added, the Nazi dive bombers have only a limited range and, operating from Sicily, are able to attack the British fleet only when it is in that range.

The Germans, he said, "will themselves be open to repeated attacks on their airdromes. Our air superiority is so well established in those regions that no influx of German planes could wrest it from us."

Would Ease Pressure On Britain

To a suggestion that heavy Nazi bombers might be brought south to assault the British army and its bases, the informant responded:

"Fine, let them come."

Any such movement, he remarked, would lift some of the pressure from Britain and show strong German preoccupation with the reverses suffered by Italy.

Direct attempts to send German troops to North Africa were not expected before the British "give Italy one more good smash," he added, "but they can't allow all of North Africa to fall without a fight, leaving Italy at our mercy.

Nazis And Desert Warfare

"If the Germans do get a couple of divisions through, we'll be delighted. . . ."

For, he said, the Nazis had no experience in the kind of warfare adapted to the desert and would have to depend on communications maintained by the Italians—"which can be described with charity as uncertain."

Positive British Results In Africa Seen By Reds

Moscow, Jan. 15 (AP)—Red Army Col. V. Vasilieff said in the newspaper Trud today that the British were driving to "end the war in Africa so they may soon concentrate all efforts in the decisive European theater."

"The British offensive in Africa," he wrote, "has already brought positive results."

Sugar Council Maintains Quotas

London, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—It was disclosed today that the International Sugar Council at its meeting in London, January 6, confirmed an earlier decision to maintain for the year ending next August the same sugar quotas prevailing in the year ended last August 31.

The council established a subcommittee under the chairmanship of Dr. G. H. C. Hart, head of the Netherlands delegation, and including representatives of the United States, United Kingdom, Australia, Cuba and Dominican Republic, to study and present a report on the world sugar position after the war.

Sir Hugh Elles, head of the British delegation, was re-elected chairman and Dr. Hart was re-elected vice-chairman of the council.

2 British Vice-Admirals Are Appointed Admirals

Promotions Of Cunningham And Horton Are Announced By Admiralty

London, Jan. 15 (AP)—Vice-Admiral Sir Andrew Cunningham, commander in chief of the British Mediterranean fleet, and Vice-Admiral Sir Max Horton, head of the British submarine service, have been promoted to the rank of admiral, the Admiralty announced tonight.

Cunningham, born in 1883, was naval aide-de-camp to the late King George V in 1932, and later was assigned as rear admiral to command the destroyer flotillas with the Mediterranean fleet. He was promoted to vice-admiral commanding the cruiser squadron in 1937 and in 1939 he was out in command of the Mediterranean fleet.

Admiral Horton entered the navy in 1900 and was a submarine commander in the World War. He torpedoed the German light cruiser Hela at Heligoland and the German cruiser Prinz Adalbert in the Baltic, as well as three German destroyers and several merchant ships. For his World War service he was rewarded with the D. S. O. with two bars. He was made a vice-admiral in 1936.

Average Wage $17 Weekly

By Hugh Wagnon and Edwin Stout
Associated Press Foreign Correspondents

London, Jan. 15—One million arms workers on whom Britain is counting heavily have asked their Government, "How are we going to live on our wages?" The wages average $17 a week.

"We want a better deal now," they declared. "We don't want to wait until the war is over."

Their demand for 5 cents an hour more was heard behind closed doors. An official arbitration tribunal is considering the case. No final decision is expected, however, until sometime after another secret hearing, starting tomorrow, at which shipbuilding workers will ask the same increase. They, too, average about $17 a week.

Strikes Are Banned

Workers in scores of trades have carried their pleas for higher wages to the tribunals. Under the wartime ban on strikes, that is the only thing they can do. True, a few "unofficial" strikes have been attempted, but they failed every time.

The tribunals already have granted many small wage increases. The Ministry of Labor reported that in the first ten months of 1940, a total of 7,500,000 workers received raises averaging a dollar a week. But the workingmen claimed, on the other hand, that the Government failed in attempts to keep down living costs as a means of controlling the "vicious spiral" of wages and prices. Instead, they said, this has become a one-track spiral—with prices already out of sight.

Employers' Replies

The reply of many employers to the demands of the workers has been:

1. When the whole nation is at war for survival, it is no time to slow output or force wages up.
2. Pay raises would bring increased sales at home of goods the nation should sell abroad to help pay the bills of war.
3. The British are better off now than the workingmen anywhere else in Europe.
4. Wage increases will be granted whenever workers actually are in want.
5. There will be a new deal when the war is won.

Labor has argued that there still are almost a million jobless in England, that living costs have far outdistanced wages, despite price fixing and heavy subsidies to keep food prices down.

Some have said, too, that the pinch of rationing is not felt by the rich. These said they would endure anything for victory, as long as all were treated alike.

An official survey by the Ministry of Labor said $17 was the general weekly average wage for metal industries—machine shops, foundries, shipbuilding yards, steel works and factories. This was said to be an increase of forty-three per cent. over the prewar weekly average except that working hours now are longer.

Usual Week 44 Hours

The usual peacetime factory week is five and a half days, or forty-four hours. Although many seven-day weeks were worked at the height of a speedup in July, most plants are getting back to the six-day week for each individual on the theory that the fatigue of continual work would retard output more than taking a day off. Factories now are often working nine-and-a-half-hour days, shutting down an hour early on Saturday, making a total of fifty-six hours.

The wage figures covered total weekly pay envelopes. The Ministry of Labor explained that "in many establishments engaged in production of munitions . . . very long hours, often with a seven-day week" were being worked with "a consequent increase in earnings."

Overtime Varies

Neither the Ministry nor the unions involved have yet compiled statistics on how much overtime was worked, or the average overtime pay. Conditions vary from factory to factory.

Workers in some industries where the pay is "by the shift" reported that they were given no overtime but that bonuses were granted in some cases. As an example, the general over-all earnings survey in highly skilled sections of the metal industry showed that riveters, molders, lathe operators and others averaged $21 a week at piecework rates and worked an average of fifty-nine hours. Textile workers averaged $10 and building trades workers $16.

"Trick Statistics"

Official figures show living costs as rising only one-fourth since the start of the war, but unions have said they were "trick statistics" based on "economic unrealities."

The individual earning $17 a week asks how he can pay $6 a week rent, $1.20 for coal, 30 cents a pack for cigarettes, 35 cents a pound for beef roast, 30 cents for lamb, 7 cents each for eggs, 40 cents a pound for bacon, 3 cents a pound for flour, 16 cents a pound for beans and 2 cents a pound for potatoes.

A Workingman's War

There seems to be no disagreement here that this is a workingman's war. Factories, trains, mills and shipyards are main targets of German bombs. The unions, the Cabinet Ministers and the press all say work is the key to victory in a war fought by machines and money as much as by men.

The Government called on workmen to stay at their benches seven days a week, to brave bombs and to leave grievances to arbitration. The workingmen responded and won the thanks of Aircraft Production Minister Lord Beaverbrook and Ernest Bevin, Minister of Labor and National Service.

"People's Government"

D. N. Pritt, Laborite member of Parliament and leader of the "People's Convention," which claims to represent 1,000,000 members of left-wing trade unions and political groups, said the British Trades Union Congress and the Labor party had ceased to represent the workingman and had gone into partnership with the "Tory Government."

Pritt, a soft-spoken, red-faced lawyer, tells interviewers that a "People's Government" will be called to power before the end of the war. That's because, he says, in Prime Minister Churchill's administration, Labor Minister Bevin is the only one who "tries to retain the workingman's viewpoint."

Bomber on a Breakfast-to-Teatime Flight From Newfoundland to Britain Sets Record

LONDON, Jan. 15 (AP)—United States-made bombers have achieved a breakfast-to-teatime schedule and set a transatlantic record in delivery flights to Britain, it was disclosed today.

The pre-war record for transatlantic flights between Newfoundland and the British Isles was set by the Cambrai, Imperial Airways flying boat, in September, 1937, when she flew from Botwood to Foynes, Ireland, in 10 hours and 33 minutes.

"That mark has been broken time and again," said an authoritative aviation source in discussing the speed achieved in the ferrying which the British hope will bring hundreds of planes by midsummer. This source would not, however, divulge the new record nor say who holds it.

[It is about 2,000 miles from Newfoundland to Britain, the shortest route from North America. Modern bombers, under favorable conditions, could fly that distance in well under ten hours.]

Captain Pat Eves of British Airways, who was flying airliners over India before the war, is one of the latest to achieve the breakfast-to-teatime schedule. Captain Eves, 31, said he was bothered only by the "terrific cold."

In disclosing that fliers who breakfasted in North America had tea the same day in England, the British gave no close hint of the elapsed time, since breakfast could be any time before dawn and teatime from 3:30 P. M. to 6.

It is to be noted, however, that a flier enroute to England from Newfoundland would "lose" four and one-half hours between the time zones.

It is understood that some of the machines—limited to long-range bombers—have been piloted by Americans and Canadians, all volunteers. A school for training transatlantic pilots, it is understood authoritatively, has been opened in Canada. One of the most important phases of instruction is the take-off with heavy fuel loads.

The planes thus being delivered are said to be Lockheed Hudsons, Boeing 17's, Lockheed Vega Venturas and Consodilated flying boats.

Air experts are talking of the possibility that the larger bombers might be loaded with wingless fuselages of small fighting planes for delivery to England. This has been done over shorter distances by Italy in reinforcing aviation in Africa.

Tobruk Guns Firing.

Rome, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—British armored car attacks on Italian outposts on the Sudanese frontier were repulsed, the Italian High Command reported today, and there was artillery and patrol activity around beleagured Tobruk, on the Libyan coast, and around the oasis stronghold at Giarabub, 150 miles south of Bardia.

Italian bombers effectively scattered British armored motor vehicles and bombed British artillery in Libya, the communique also stated, and British air attacks were said to have done some damage to buildings at places in Libya.

NOW SOME OF THEM HAVE RAISED QUESTIONING VOICES. AND HERE'S WHAT THEY HAVE TO SAY:

ADD-JAN 15

A WELSH LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEER WHO HAS RAILROAD 27 YEARS TO EARN $18 A WEEK PULLING TRAINS THROUGH BOMBS AND BLACKOUTS COMMENTED: "WE WORK ALL HOURS AND IN ALL KINDS OF WEATHER WHILE THE BOMBS ARE FALLING, AND GET NO OVERTIME PAY. WHY NOT HAVE THE GOVERNMENT TAKE OVER THE RAILROADS? THEN I'D FEEL THE WORK I'M DOING REALLY WAS FOR MY COUNTRY INSTEAD OF THE STOCKHOLDERS."

THE THIRD MATE OF A COASTAL SHIP WHO EARNED $20 A WEEK PLUS $8 WAR RISK BONUS SAID: "IF I'M KILLED THE BONUS STOPS AND MY WIFE GETS NOTHING BUT A WIDOW'S PENSION OF ABOUT $2 A WEEK. THERE OUGHT TO BE WAR RISK INSURANCE FOR US."

SOON AFTERWARD HE WAS KILLED WHEN HIS SHIP WAS MACHINE-GUNNED BY A GERMAN PLANE.

IN LUXURY HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS ANYONE WITH $20 CAN DINE ON OYSTERS, LOBSTER, PHEASANT, BEEFSTEAK AND CREPES SUZETTES, THEN WASH IT DOWN WITH THE BEST FRENCH OR GERMAN WINES AND BRANDY.

THE MAN WHO CAN'T AFFORD TO EAT OUT IS LIMITED BY LAW TO A QUARTER'S WORTH OF MEAT A WEEK -- ENOUGH FOR ABOUT TWO MEALS.

WITHIN SIX HOURS AFTER THE NEWSPAPERS STARTED THEIR CAMPAIGN, THE FOOD MINISTRY ANNOUNCED THAT THEREAFTER DINERS-OUT WOULD HAVE TO CHOSE BETWEEN POULTRY, EGGS, FISH, CHEESE AND MEAT AT ANY ONE MEAL.

THE FACT IS THAT SOME RESTAURANTS WHICH CHARGE TH. EQUIVALENT OF $3 TO $5 FOR A MEAL THAT COSTS $1 IN BALTIMORE OR KANSAS CITY STILL SERVE FISH, MEAT AND CHEESE TOGETHER -- AND THE WAITERS GET AN EXTRA SHILLING TIP.

GUERRILLA WAR ON IN ETHIOPIA

British Say Italians Are Harassed by Natives.

Khartoum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—British spokesmen asserted today that native guerrilla raids had left Italian soldiers in control of only towns and main roads in parts of Fascist-conquered Ethiopia and even those are not always safe.

While British patrols harass Italians guarding Ethiopia's western border, these spokesmen said, thousands of native tribesmen raid isolated interior posts, attack military convoys on roads and even snipe at the Italians in towns. In official quarters, confirmation was given to earlier reports that Ethiopian tribal chiefs had been slipping over the border to confer in Khartoum with their Fascist-deposed Emperor, Haile Selassie, and to smuggle British arms and ammunition back to their warriors. Tribesmen thus armed were said by the British already to have routed the Italian garrison at Gubba, twenty miles from the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan frontier.

Say Ethiopians Desert.

British officials asserted that tribesmen were known in some instances to have persuaded Ethiopian conscripts to desert the Italians. This, they said, was not difficult after heavy British bombings. In British circles it was reported that the natives were impressed when the Royal Air Force attacked only Italian objectives in Ethiopia, avoiding bombing of native areas. This was said in official quarters to have caused Italians to move out of their own areas and seek safety from air raids in native districts.

Belief that Britain may soon attempt a major drive to oust the Italians from their East African Empire already has been expressed by observers both in Egypt and in London.

Patrol Activity Reported.

Cairo, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Britain's Middle East command disposed of all military activity on the widely separated African fronts today with this brief communique: "On all fronts, successful patrol activity continues."

No other operations were reported from the Tobruk region in eastern Libya, where for several days British siege lines have been drawn steadily tighter.

TOM-TOM CALL TO WAR SOUNDS IN ETHIOPIA

Haile Selassie's Drums Carry Revolt Signal To His Followers

Warriors Slip Across Border To Form Army To Fight Italians

[By the Associated Press]

On the Ethiopian-Sudanese Frontier, Jan. 15—The rhythmic tom-tom of forty-four royal war drums has broken the desolate silence of this desert area with a summons to Ethiopian patriots to rise in arms against their Italian masters.

From peak to peak the thumping carried the message from former Emperor Haile Selassie last night, and today hundreds of trained Ethiopians slipped across the border back to their homeland to help their comrades reported assembling an army at Gojjam, near Lake Tana in northwestern Ethiopia.

Signal From "King Of Kings"

The signal tells the natives the one-time Negus, "the King of Kings," is near, and that the moment for armed revolt approaches.

Already native guerrilla raids have so harassed Italian posts, the British say, that only towns and main roads now are held by the Fascists and even these no longer are safe.

The British have trained and armed the Ethiopians for sniping duty and even for forays against military convoys and isolated desert posts.

Supported By Coptic Church

As the remainder of the patriots learned the arts of modern war at Khartoum—even to handling tanks and airplanes—the Coptic Christian Church, through its Patriarch at Cairo, declared its full support of Haile Selassie's attempt to regain his country and throne.

The ex-Emperor, a devoted member of the church, recently was given apostolic blessings by the Patriarch.

Died Or Were Killed

The patriarchate charged that the Italians in Ethiopia refused to recognize its archbishop-designate for Ethiopia, and appointed instead one Father Abraham, blind excommunicate, who died soon after he accepted the post.

Four other archbishops who agreed to serve under Italian jurisdiction, the patriarchate added, either died or were killed.

BATTERED PLANE CARRIER REACHES PORT AFTER SEA FIGHT WITH NAZI PLANES

Witness Aboard British Vessel Describes Fierce Seven-Hour Pounding By 50 German Aircraft. 100,000 Pounds Of Bombs Dropped

By LARRY ALLEN
Associated Press Correspondent

Aboard Aircraft Carrier Illustrious, With British Mediterranean Fleet, Jan. 15—This scarred aircraft carrier, attacked for seven hours last Friday by German dive bombers, came into a Mediterranean port under her own power today.

Forty to fifty Nazi planes, making the heaviest attack upon a single British warship of this war, flung torpedoes at the Illustrious' sides and 100,000 pounds of high-explosive bombs at her flight deck in an unsuccessful attempt to sink this newest of Britain's carriers.

Nazis Dive Into Wall Of Fire

The German pilots, diving head-on, plunged into a great wall of gunfire; they spattered the decks with machine-gun bullets and dropped scores of bombs on the Illustrious' port and starboard sides.

Seven hours of this violent assault ended at dark.

The German pilots dived so low that the markings could be easily seen on their big Junker planes. They dropped bombs all around the deck. Bomb splinters flew about the bridge and the rest of the carrier like hailstones; near misses so shook her that it seemed they would hurl her over on her side.

Was Escorting Big Convoy

The Germans attacked while the Illustrious and units of the British Mediterranean fleet units were escorting a big eastbound convoy, and after a British cruiser had sunk the 642-ton Italian destroyer Vega.

At 12.30 January 10 the marine bugler sounded the warning and a voice over the loud-speaker system called out:

"All hands to action stations."

I reached the bridge just as a big German bomb struck the ship. There was a shattering blast. Almost simultaneously a 1,000-pound bomb crashed alongside and a blinding flash seemed to envelop the ship.

"Like All The Fires Of Hell"

One officer put it this way: "It was the most tremendous, terrifying thing I have ever seen. It seemed like all the fires of hell had been kindled. A blast of a 1,000-pound bomb is so crushing, so incredible, that there are no words to describe it."

The first bomb fell almost at the moment some British fighter planes took off to engage the Germans.

Another bomb tore holes in the carrier's side. Still another crashed and fragments from a near miss struck a gun crew at a pom-pom station. They stood up unflinchingly to face German machine-gun fire and pumped shells as fast as they could into the bombers.

Nazis Keep Diving In

Every gun on the Illustrious roared at the Germans, but they kept diving in, bombs and torpedoes narrowly missing the carrier.

British battleships, cruisers and destroyers attacked both German and Italian bombers. Huge splashes from near misses helped to hide the ships from the bombers.

Gather Up Wounded

The entire crew of the Illustrious, except the officers on the bridge and crew firing the pom-poms gathered to help their wounded companions and carried them across the flight deck to medical stations under direct fire of machine guns and bombs.

As soon as a few surviving seriously wounded mechanics were pulled out of the wreckage their comrades dashed in to get others.

The few fighter planes which the Illustrious was able to get into the air before the first bombs struck forced the Germans off temporarily, but that short respite was the only break in the attack in the whole afternoon; less than an hour later the Nazis returned to drop more bombs.

Like Monster Of Fire

Again there was the deadly vibrating drone of bombers; again flame erupted in sheets from all the carrier's guns until, with smoke hanging over her flight deck, she looked like a moving monster of fire. Bombs fell to port and starboard; at bow and stern.

Another bomb crashed, causing casualties—including one R. A. F. officer who had come to sea, as he termed it, "just for a week's rest."

Windows in the entrance to the captain's glass-inclosed bridge were shattered by bomb blasts and the explosions of the ship's guns. A dive bomber swooped just in front of the bridge on the starboard side; a bomb threw a column of water over the bridge and the blast blew me down the hatchway to aviation intelligence quarters one deck below. A sheet of fire burned my face.

Bomb Creases Side

Another German dived head-on. The bomb creased the side of the carrier.

"We are hit," mumbled an officer, his face pressed against the deck floor. Between 2 and 7.30 P. M. there never were more than a few minutes free of the sound of projectiles crashing about the Illustrious, her gun crews flinging shells on and on at the attacking planes in the face of machine-gun fire.

Just before dusk small columns of smoke poured from the the flight deck. Shell casings and bomb splinters formed a strange carpet there.

In the engine room the men kept one turbine and then another operating and then resorted to steam pressure to keep the Illustrious going steadily on eastward to the nearest Mediterranean port. When that port was near the German torpedo bombers dived again.

Rear Admiral A. L. St. George

Lyster watched the Germans dive in and shouted orders to his aides while shrapnel and machine-gun bullets peppered about him. On the bridge below Capt. Dennis Boyd puffed his pipe and again ordered:

"All hands to action stations."

Torpedoes Miss

Three Germans dived in and dropped torpedoes; a moment before, the captain had ordered full speed, and the torpedoes cut harmlessly through the water a few feet off the stern.

During all the struggle by the Illustrious, the British planes which had taken off her decks had made the Germans pay. The final score in Nazi planes shot down was twelve.

Soon after the Illustrious reached port fire squads had extinguished a small fire in her interior while shipwrights plugged the bomb holes, getting her ready to go to sea again.

The dead on the Illustrious were taken out for burial at sea in the areas where they had fought. The wounded were sent to shore hospitals.

Even in port, German and Italian planes have tried to sink the Illustrious. They have found her guns still firing.

Damage Serious, Say Nazis

Berlin, Thursday, Jan. 16 (AP)—The British plane carrier Illustrious received direct bomb hits last Friday which caused extensive damage to her port side near the stack, and machinery was hit so hard that a long time will be required for repairs, DNB said early today.

Italian Submarine Fails In Attack on Policeman

Bangs Away at Lone Officer on Greek Isle, Then Dives

ATHENS, Jan. 15 (AP).—The Greek Ministry of Home Security told tonight of a brush between a country policeman and an Italian submarine.

The policeman was sitting on the shore of an island in the Aegean Sea, the ministry related, when the submarine emerged at close range, banged away at him with a machine gun—without success—then dived and departed.

Greeks Report Driving Italians From Heights

Surprise Foe in Storm and Repel Counter-Attacks; Seize Guns and Supplies

ATHENS, Jan. 16 (AP).—Greek soldiers, in a surprise attack started during a snowstorm, have blasted the Italians out of important high positions in the central sector of the Albanian front and held the positions against several counter-attacks, the government spokesman said tonight. The speedy arrival of Greek reinforcements helped the attackers to retain their grip on the positions, he said.

Mortars, machine guns, munitions and other material were captured in this action. In another part of the front the Greeks captured three guns in good condition.

Earlier, the government reported that the Greeks had driven their foes back in a thrust toward Berati and that the Italians, after two unsuccessful counter-attacks, had withdrawn to "naturally fortified" positions north of Klisura, which fell last week.

30.24-6979

30.24-6979

The unfavorable weather limited fighting along the entire Albanian front to sharp local engagements, the Greeks said. Both Italian and Greek planes were reported grounded.

Fascist positions in the coastal sector, where a Greek force recently claimed heavy gains in a drive on Valona, the only southern Albania seaport remaining in Italian hands, were said in Greek dispatches to have been subjected to heavy artillery fire. Artillery activity was noted also in the Klisura region.

On a plane trip I saw thousands of captives still camping in the desert sand, awaiting transportation eastward to Egypt.

Official United States observers of the siege of Tobruk are Major Bonner Fellers, military attache to the United

"Tobruk Tom," and are assdiuously trying to put it out of action.

Artillery Main Resistance

British planes are active all along the coast in the Tobruk-Derna regions, but Italian aircraft apparently are giving beleaguered Tobruk as little help as they did at Bardia. The main resistance, it seems, will be with artillery, as at Bardia.

One reason for this is that the Italians often have removed some small vital parts which cannot be reproduced here in the desert. Sometimes British soldiers, arriving at the fields before the R. A. F. mechanics, have taken away such parts for souvenirs.

Specter Of Nazi Air Power

Behind the Italian air lethargy is the specter of German air power entering the Libyan show. The Germans already are operating in the central Mediterranean, and it would be only a slight hop for them to visit the North African shores.

The strain on British motor transport in rolling supplies across the desert into Libya is becoming very great, since the railhead is at Mersa Matruh, 200 miles from the present scene of operations.

Many thousands of vehicles have been put to use, including eighty armored by powerful trucks from Canada.

It's Churchill Street Now

Hundreds of captured Italian vehicles, mostly big five-ton Diesels, are in service for the British, and the Italians seem embarrassed by lack of motor transport.

Press correspondents' headquarters now have been established in what is left of the Italian Officers' Club in Bardia.

The club faces on Bardia's main street, which formerly was the Via Benito Mussolini. The British now call it Churchill street.

and has his own car, a twelve-year-old American flivver. The day the Italians invaded Greece, Mike was on his way to the front as a supply driver, nursing along his rattling sedan. His buses also entered service. He has been at it ever since.

Under the hood of the old car, working furiously with an engine that sputtered like an outboard motor with the hiccups, he told the Associated Press correspondent that he had had two hours' sleep in the last three days—driving 400 miles a day on roads where, in some places, a mistake would send him hurtling 1,000 feet down a mountainside.

"Our soldiers need those things," he said, gesturing toward the back seat piled high with rifle cartridges. A grin spread over his swarthy features as he jammed down the starter and heard the motor pick up. And when the war is over?

"There's just one thing I want to do," he declared. "I want to buy a brand new car—with a radio."

Called Unimportant.

Rome, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Activity on the Albanian front was described by the Italian High Command today as local and unimportant.

Albanians Harass Italians.

Struga, Yugoslavia, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Reports from the Albanian frontier last night said that Albanian guerrillas, led by the insurgent Malik Debren are raiding food and ammunition depots behind the Italian defense lines. Some of the raids were said to have occurred in the vicinity of Berati, toward which the Greeks are advancing.

Two Albanian battalions had to be disbanded because they refused to fight for the Italians, the reports added.

Captive General Consigns Desert To British---"I Myself Am A Poet"

By EDWARD KENNEDY
Associated Press Correspondent

With the British Forces in Libya, Jan. 15—Gen. Francesco Argentino, the dejected Black Shirt officer captured on the Mediterranean strand by a British motor-boat crew three days ago, ended a sulky hunger strike today, swept a tearful eye over the barren stretches of sand and cried out:

"For all I care about this desert, you can have it! I myself am a poet."

British officers, who pressed food and drink upon him agreed that the desert itself was certainly not worth fighting for.

His reserve broken, Argentino talked on almost amicable terms, though with a lump in his throat.

He was the commander at Sidi Barrani, Egypt, first Italian stronghold to fall in the British onslaught, but the tears came when he referred to the fall of Bardia, Libya, an even greater defeat for the Fascist forces.

Argentino made his escape from both doomed fortresses, but was spotted by an R. A. F. plane Sunday while hiding at the edge of the sea. A motor boat went out and took him prisoner.

The British officers said his attitude toward the desert fighting was no unusual. They said correspondence seized at Sidi Barrani and Bardia disclosed considerable friction and jealousy among the Italian officers as well as a constant spying upon them by subordinates who reported on the extent of their loyalty to Fascism.

Even as the siege of the Libyan stronghold of Tobruk continues, the British still are busy rounding up and transporting to camp additional Italian stragglers.

States legation in Egypt; Col. G. E. Brower, or the Air Corps, and Col. William J. Donovan, who arrived at Cairo a week ago and showed up for a short visit.

Colonel Brower has been making daily inspection trips by plane over the front where desert sandstorms for the past week have hampered the conflict on both sides.

Today the wind died, weather cleared and the sands subsided. The British troops took quick advantage of the opportunity to hasten the movement of all equipment into positions surrounding Tobruk in preparation for an attack.

Only yesterday the sands were swirling through the air by the ton, catching in men's throats and nostrils and filtering into machinery.

The air was pure and brisk today.

Soldiers went about their work with redoubled energy, welcoming the calm while asking one another how long it would last.

The insidiousness of the desert sandstorms and their enervating effects can scarcely be appreciated unless one has endured them.

Guns Firing Into Tobruk

But storm or no storm, British guns are firing into Tobruk, the perimeter of the fortifications containing the Italian artillery being their main target. The withering fire such as poured into Bardia just before its final fall has not yet started here.

The Italians are replying, sometimes with a show of energy but usually in weaker fashion.

As at Bardia, they have at least one big naval gun planted ashore. The British soldiers have dubbed it

British armored units have firmly in their grasp the region west of Tobruk, right up to the edge of the sea. The line they dominate is at least fifteen miles wide, so they are not far from Derna, either.

The British artillery batteries are lined up within four miles of the Tobruk perimeter, and night patrols have made "feeler" excursions out in front clear into the rim of the town's defenses.

Italian Air Bases Abandoned

As a result of British air bombardment, the Italians have abandoned every air base this side of the Akdar Mountains with the exception of Derna, British flyers say. Bases abandoned include the big seaplane port at Bomba, craft there having been flown to the Dodecanese Islands.

At several of these abandoned fields, Italian planes still lie disabled on the ground. A visit to El Adem air field—biggest in Libya—to the south of Tobruk and now in British hands, showed eighty-seven such Fascist planes—more than twice the number the R. A. F. had claimed as destroyed.

Dent In Italy's Air Strength

The total of Italian planes abandoned in Libyan air fields, added to the more than 500 which the British have reported shot out of the air in the Near East arena, must have made a serious dent in Italy's aerial strength and may account for reduced Italian air activity.

Some of the planes at El Adem suffered only slight damage, which apparently could have been repaired easily. So far, the British have not put such planes in shape for possible use against their makers.

Supply Train Conquers All.

With the Greek Army in Albania, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Truck drivers with rickety old cars and farmers with trains of stubborn mules are conquering transportation problems as fantastic as any army ever faced, in order to keep food and ammunition flowing to their comrades in the Greek front lines. Day after day, this supply force is getting through to the fighting men whose advances steadily lengthen the communication lines northward into Albania.

Determined men, ancient trucks and balky mules carry on through ice, slush and ankle-deep mud, through mountains as wild as the American Rockies, in a country where the best roads are only ruts frozen on the mountainsides.

Hundreds Of Plain-Clothed Nazis Reported In Bulgaria

"We Are Coming," Say German Signs—"We Dare You" Is Retort In Working Districts

[By the Associated Press]

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 15—Several hundred Germans have entered Bulgaria in civilian dress and presumably are acting as listening posts.

On the side of buildings in Sofia may be seen occasionally roughly chalked Nazi insignia with the words: "We are coming."

Especially in the workers' districts one frequently sees signs—attributed to Communists—saying in effect:

"We dare you."

Theodossy Daskaloff, the War Minister, said today Bulgaria must be ready for sacrifices "with the belligerents preparing for decisive battle."

It might be that danger could be avoided by careful maneuvering he added, but perhaps Bulgaria must "overcome those dangers by force."

Bulgarians, so far as one can judge from oral comment, strongly believe that Germany has delayed, not abandoned, a plan for military action in the Balkans, probably involving Bulgaria.

The belief is expressed almost unanimously by persons close to the Government and to diplomatic sources that the delay has been partly due to weather, but largely to indications that Germany and Russia do not yet see eye to eye on the division of influence in southeastern Europe.

Few seriously believe that Bulgaria could or would resist the Nazi army; they fear that if the Germans enter this country it will provoke a conflict with Turkey, Britain's non-belligerent ally.

The Hague, Jan. 15 (Via Berlin, (AP)). Because three German army cars standing in the street in the last few weeks have been deliberately damaged, a "number" of citizens of The Hague have been fined 60,000 guilders. (Nominally about $30,000.)

It was assumed by the German authorities that the inhabitants permitted or did nothing to prevent the damage. Announcement of the fine did not say that those ordered to pay actually committed the acts.

This was the first time that a recent decree of the German commissar has been enforced. The law provides for fining of persons, associations, foundations or cities when there is a suspicion that they agreed to or furthered sabotage against German interests.

The decree embraces acts dating from last May 25.

IT WAS A DARING ASSIGNMENT ALLEN UNDERTOOK NEXT. A BRITISH SQUADRON DECIDED TO INVADE THE VIRTUALLY LAND-LOCKED ADRIATIC TO ATTACK VALONA, ITALIAN BASE ON THE ALBANIAN COAST. IT WAS A POTENTIAL TRAP INTO WHICH THE BRITISH, AND ALLEN WITH THEM, WERE VENTURING.

Italian Mail Plane Forced Down on Atlantic; 10 Aboard Craft 300 Miles Off Brazil's Coast

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Jan. 15 (AP)—The Italian transatlantic mail plane Ibayr sent out an SOS this afternoon after coming down on the Atlantic Ocean with ten persons aboard about 300 miles off Fernando de Noronha, Brazil.

The three-engined plane was forced to alight when an engine ceased functioning several hours after it left Natal, Brazil, for Cape Verde, Africa, and Europe.

The call for help was reported by officials of the Italian Transatlantic Line in Recife.

Five hours after the ship was reported afloat, there was no answer to repeated calls from Radio Olinda, one of Brazil's most powerful stations.

The first report of trouble aboard the plane came in a radio message at 12:05 P. M., saying the engine was not functioning but that the flight would continue. At 1 P. M. the plane radioed that the engine still was disabled and that the craft was turning back.

The call for help came at 4 P. M., the first report heard from the plane since it turned back.

The Savoia Marchetti 75 carried four crewmen, four other airline employes returning to Italy from another plane and two passengers. [Italian planes have been used regularly since the war began to ferry German and Italian officers between Europe and South America.

The Condor Syndicate, Brazilian affiliate of the German concern Lufthansa, said one of its planes would be ready at Natal to give any possible assistance to the Ibayr.

The Ibayr arrived in Recife last week from Cape Verde.

Swiss Allow French Soldiers To Go Home

Horses Of Interned Troops To Return, Too, But Arms Must Be Given To Germany

Bern, Switzerland, Jan. 15 (AP)—Return to France of French soldiers interned in Switzerland was authorized by the Swiss Federal Council today under an agreement previously reached between France and Germany.

Horses of the interned troops are to be restored for use on French farms, but war equipment of the Forty-fifth French Corps held in Switzerland will be released to Germany.

In addition to approximately 43,000 French, there are more than 20,000 Polish internes in Switzerland. It was reported that the French also had agreed in principle to take the Poles, subject to negotiation.

War materials ceded to Germany will be credited to France for a post-war settlement.

PHILLIPS IN ROME

Returns Without Message for King or Il Duce.

Rome, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—The United States Ambassador to Italy, William Phillips, returned to his post today without a message, he said, for either King Victor Emanuel or Premier Mussolini.

"I did not bring any special message," the Ambassador said.

After a slow trip through Portugal, Spain and France from Lisbon, the envoy reached Rome by train from Florence. He had transferred from his automobile at Florence because of snow and intense cold.

Mr. Phillips expected to see Foreign Minister Count Ciano for the customary visit of an Ambassador returning from vacation. He may try to see Mussolini in the near future, he said, but he disclaimed any intention of asking an audience with the King.

Mr. Phillips went to the United States last July for a three-week vacation which was prolonged by illness.

Italy Reports Replacing TNT With Pentrite T4

Said to Have Large Supply of Essential Elements

ROME, Jan. 15 (AP).—Italy was reported today to have devised a 100 per cent Italian explosive with which to replace TNT, supplies of which are being used up by the munitions industry. Authorized sources identified the explosive as pentrite T 4, composed of formaldehyde, lime and ammonia, all available in abundance in Italy.

Manufactured in U. S.

ALTON, Ill., Jan. 15 (AP).—Fred Olsen, head of the technical department of the Western Cartridge Company, commented today that pentrite, Italian substitute for TNT, was a "standard explosive" in use in the United States for about twenty years. It is being made in this country by several companies, Mr. Olsen said, but its use has been limited because of higher cost, due to more complicated manufacturing processes than TNt.

Italian use of pentrite for munitions, the explosives expert surmised, would mean that Italy had developed a cheaper method of manufacture or had been forced to resort to it because of lack of the constituents of TNT.

New Nitrogen Fixation Method Reported Found

Discovery Expected To Make India Self-Sufficient In Ammonia Nitric Acid And Nitrates

Bombay, India, Jan. 15 (AP)—A new method of nitrogen fixation which is expected to make India self-sufficient in ammonia nitric acid and nitrates was reported today to have been perfected by Ramchandr Narayan Bhagwat, professor at St. Xavier's College here.

Bhagwat, it was said, found that water and air can be made to combine by the use of catalysts prepared from waste materials and yield ammonia or nitric acid directly.

Nitric acid is used extensively in the manufacture of explosives, nitrates as fertilizer.

Present methods of ammonia production—the Haber (German) and Claude (French)—do not get the ammonia directly, but have to purify the nitrogen and hydrogen they get before it can be subjected to catalysts to produce ammonia.

Windsors Conclude Their Yachting Trip

Return To Nassau And Are Not Expected To Visit Miami And Havana

Nassau, Bahamas, Jan. 15 (AP)—The Duke and Duchess of Windsor returned to Nassau today after a yachting trip. While they were away, the Duke flew to Miami to attend the all-American air maneuvers. The Duchess remainded at Cat Cay while he was gone.

Capt. Vyvyan Drury, the Duke's aide de camp, said it was unlikely the Windsors would go to Miami to attend the President's birthday balls, held for the benefit of infantile paralysis sufferers.

A visit to Havana for the air show there also was unlikely, he added. The Duke, Governor of the Bahamas, had planned visits during his cruise to Abaco and Andros Islands, but rough seas prevented landings.

2 Mines Found in Caribbean

BOGOTA, Colombia, Jan. 15 (AP).—The newspaper "El Liberal" reported today that two magnetic mines had been found off the Colombian islands of San Andre and Providencia, in the Caribbean. The islands are off the Nicaraguan coast and some 250 miles northwest of the Panama Canal. The mines were sent to the Colombian naval base at Cartagena for examination, it was stated.

Mendoza Sails From Uruguay, British Cruiser Lurking On Horizon

Has No Navicert—May Be Made War Prize, London Ministry Says

[By the Associated Press]

Montevideo, Uruguay, Jan. 15—The 8,199-ton French merchantman Mendoza, thrice halted in attempts to put out with a cargo of food for blockaded France, steamed to sea again today from Punta Del Este, sixty miles up the coast.

As she disappeared from view another vessel, presumably her old nemesis, the British auxiliary cruiser Asturias, also dropped behind the horizon.

Three times before the Asturias has caused the Mendoza to turn back to harbor.

May Become British War Prize

London, Jan. 15 (AP)—Britain has no intention of lifting her blockade to permit free passage, without navicerts, of French ships carrying food from South America to France, the Ministry of Economic Warfare disclosed today.

A spokesman asserted that the ministry's position was "clear" and there was no question of easing the blockade for the French merchant ship Mendoza, which turned back to Uruguayan territorial waters for a third time yesterday after spotting the British auxiliary cruiser Asturias awaiting her offshore and which later put to sea again.

No Application For Navicert

No application has been made for a navicert—a certificate to show her cargo is not contraband—the ministry announced.

Without a navicert, it was said, the Mendoza would be intercepted if she sailed for France and, if necessary, would be made a war prize.

The ministry said its stand applied not only to the Mendoza but also to four other vessels reported loading food cargoes for France at South American ports. They are the Katolia, Formose, Campana and Aurigny.

Japanese Say British Burma Port Is "Filled" With Supply Ships

TOKIO, Jan. 15 (AP).—The port of Rangoon, one of the principal seaports of British Burma, is "filled" with American and British ships loaded with war materials, a Foreign Office official said today.

The official, Isamu Ishikawa, who has just returned from a three-month trip through the Malay Peninsula and the Indies, did not mention the destination of the cargoes, but Japanese concluded the materials were for the Chinese government.

CZECH LOSSES PUT AT BILLION

$100,000,000 a Year Tax Is Also Reported.

Washington, Jan. 15 (A. P.).—Germany's economic conquest of Czecho-Slovakia has cost the Czechs at least $1,000,000,000 since the occupation twenty-two months ago, according to authoritative information received in diplomatic quarters here. The reports, compiled by non-Czechs, state that the Germans have also imposed tribute taxes to assist in financing the war against Britain, and the yield from these is estimated at an additional $100,000,000 a year.

On the heels of the military occupation of Czecho-Slovakia on March 15, 1939, the reports say, an estimated 500,000 Nazis poured in and took over practically all key positions in Government, industry and trade. Nazi decrees enforced by these men, the survey states, have enabled German interests to dominate Czech banking, industry and commerce completely, and to reap handsome profits for Germany.

The shift of Czecho-Slovakia's resources from Czech to German ownership has been effected, according to the reports, by these means:

1. The Deutsche Bank and the Dresdener Bank took over Czecho-Slovakia's two dominant banking institutions, the Bohemian Union and Escompte banks which, in turn, controlled a considerable number of business enterprises.

2. Through Aryanization proceedings, all large Jewish-owned industries and companies were acquired, including the Sigmund Pump Works, one of the world's largest manufacturers specializing in poison gas.

3. Using German marks, German promissory notes and Czech currency borrowed from the Czech National Bank or acquired in the previously annexed Sudeten region, German interests purchased all or the controlling interest in the nation's largest plants, factories and businesses, including Bata, one of the world's greatest shoe factories, and Skoda, one of the world's largest munitions plants.

4. Movable property, needed or useful to Germany's military plans, valued at 22,000,000,000 crowns (when the crown was worth roughly 3 cents) was purchased with marks or crowns and transported to Germany. This included a vast amount of military arms, equipment and supplies gathered for Czecho-Slovakia's deefnse. There were 1,500 planes and equipment enough to arm 1,500,000 men.

5. Practically every large concern not bought or taken over has a Nazi economic commissar making sure that its activities are conducted in accordance with German policies.

Over and above the normal taxes collected by the German authorities, the reports declare, German war taxes have been introduced which bring the Reich an estimated 600,000,000 crowns a year. Since the Customs Union decree has abolished customs barriers an estimated 2,500,000,000 crowns in consumption and turnover taxes now flow directly to the German Treasury, providing the Reich with 3,000,000,000 crowns ($100,000,000) annually from Bohemia and Moravia.

DEFENSE PLANT SETTLEMENT ENDS STRIKE

Men To Return To Work Today At Plane Parts Factories

U. S. Demanded Halt In 2-Day Tieup, Affecting 3,500

[By the Associated Press]

Detroit, Jan. 15—James F. Dewey, Federal conciliator, announced tonight settlement of the strike affecting 3,500 workers in five plants of the Eaton Manufacturing Company.

Terms ending the two-day strike, to which Dewey had demanded an end in view of national defense orders to the Eaton company, were not immediately announced. Dewey said the strikers would return to work tomorrow.

In making his demands on company and union, Dewey said it was the first time "such a drastic step" had been taken in the nation. He said he was acting under authorization of the National Defense Commission.

Settlement Demanded

The United Automobile Workers (CIO) had called a strike at the Wilcox-Rich division plant of the company at Saginaw, Mich., on Monday in demand that approximately 250 unionists be rehired from a previous walkout.

The strike spread yesterday to the remaining plants in Detroit, Battle Creek and Marshall, Mich., and Cleveland.

Dewey had insisted that the U. A. W.-CIO end the strike, that all strikers be rehired pending final arbitration of the dispute, and that the company, which manufactures airplane engine and automotive parts, reopen the plants.

Announcement that the strike had been settled followed a six-and-one-half-hour conference among company officials, union representatives and Dewey.

To Open Soon As Possible

"The company," Dewey said, "has agreed with Gov. Murray D. Van Wagoner and myself, as representing the defense commission, on a method by which the employes at Saginaw will be returned to work.

"All the plants of the company will be opened as rapidly as possible, either Thursday morning or afternoon. The settlement does not involve the AFL contract, nor does it interfere with the status of the AFL."

The U. A. W.—CIO walked out at the Saginaw plant last November. Subsequently, it charged the company failed to honor a rehiring agreement, and another strike ensued Monday.

Marshall Reorganizes No Foreign War Staff

Office Force Reduced One-Third And Directorate Of Ten Persons Is Named

New York, Jan. 15 (AP)—Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee, has reduced his office staff by one-third and has named a directorate of ten persons in a reorganization move.

Marshall said Bronson Batchelor, public relations counsel, and Mark M. Jones, Akron (Ohio) economist, had assisted him in the reorganization and were members of the board.

Others listed were: Robert M. Lancaster, treasurer; Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, widow of Gen. James Longstreet, Confederate general; Clarence Budington Kelland, writer; Harry W. Colmery, Topeka, Kan., former national commander of the American Legion; Dr. Henry M. Gage, president of Coe College; Mayor Frank K. Hahn and Don Barnes, lawyer, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Kelland Issues Denial

Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 15 (AP)—Clarence Budington Kelland, the author, said tonight he was neither a member nor a director of the No Foreign War Committee.

Exact Destination Secret

Army officials declined to give the exact destination of the vessel—once the pride of Kaiser Wilhelm's merchant marine.

They did say the ship would be used as a floating barracks for about five months while land barracks were being constructed. Lumber for the buildings was in the liner's holds and army trucks were lashed to her decks.

The soldiers were under the command of Col. Maurice D. Welty, recently of the War Department in Washington. Capt. William Joensen was in command of the ship.

One hopeful doughboy drew a huge, collective laugh when he appeared with a fishing rod. Another brought a small oil burner to fight the cold.

Huge U. S. Flags On Sides

Renamed the Edmund B. Alexander, the 21,329-ton vessel was painted a dull camouflage gray with huge American flags on her sides.

Instead of rooms housing one hundred men, she was fitted out for four privates to a room. Two non-commissioned officers shared a room and higher ranking officers had private rooms.

Moving pictures, an elaborate "sick bay," dental chairs and a modern-style cafeteria were at the disposal of the men.

Built in 1905, the Amerika had been laid up in Patuxent river, near Solomons Island, Md., before the army called her back to duty.

In the ranks were doughboys from the Second, Third and Seventh Army Corps areas—New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland and the mid-West. Officers asked that the exact number of men aboard and "the type or numerical designation of units" be excluded from press reports "in the best interests of national defense."

PARIS PLANNING FASHION SHOWS

But There Is No Exporting of French Models.

By ALICE MAXWELL.

Paris (via Berlin), Jan. 12 (delayed) (A. P.).—Spring showings of French dressmakers will begin in Paris on February 10, but there is still no exporting of their models.

Announcement of the spring fashion plans came from Lucien Lelong, the designer, now acting for the couture group in the Comite D'Organisation Professionel de Vetements, created by the French Ministry of Work and Industrial Production to direct the clothing industry.

M. Lelong explained in an interview that his group "includes the entire couture, in addition to millinery and millinery trimming sections, fine lingerie and blouses, men's made-to-order suits and haberdashery, and a section devoted to laces, nets and embroideries."

Lelong Heads Industry.

M. Lelong's powers appear to make him a czar of dressmaking and these allied industries. His control is exercised over all France, and French North Africa. He has, however, appointed a consulting committee of seven men. His decisions will become law immediately after being favorably passed upon by two men—the general director and a commissioner for the Government—whose rulings on any measure must be given within forty-eight hours.

Drastic penalties may be imposed on dressmaking and other houses not conforming to rules or decisions of the group, it was pointed out. Fines may be imposed or the offending establishments closed.

Other clothing groups regulated through the new organization are men's and women's ready-made wear, ready-made underwear, mass umbrella production, buttons, ties and similar accessories, and a final group of textile retailers.

M. Lelong said he had recently gone to Berlin after the French Government ordered him to undertake an economic mission.

As for dressmaking, he concluded, even without the export trade "the fashion business is keeping up and is better than was expected."

GENERAL SIR ARCHIBALD WAVELL

commadner-in-chief of British forces which have been pushing the Italians westward across Libya, has a way with words as well as with his beloved infantry.

His rise to the role of a hero to the British is bringing into print some quotations from this 57-year-old veteran of 39 years of military service.

The Wavell description of an ideal infantryman:

"A mixture of poacher, cat burglar and gunman."

Of a commander-in-chief:

One possessed of "the spirit of adventure and a touch of the gambler."

Of a general's appearance:

"An imposing presence can be a most useful asset, but good generals, like good racehorses, run in all shapes."

Of aerial warfare:

"No one should hold the rank of higher commander in the army without having had at least six months' really close association with the RAF."

Of the Empire:

"The British Empire will continue the struggle until victory has been won. Dictators fade away; the British Empire never dies."

Of military convention:

"There is too much stress on spit and polish, on details of the regulations and of dress, at the expense of mental liveliness and independence of thought."

He is a military writer of distinction. His book on the Palestine campaigns of the World war is the standard work on the operations conducted by the late Field Marshal Lord Allenby. Appearance of the book in 1928 gave British officers a text on strategy to replace one detailing the campaigns of Stonewall Jackson, which had been required reading for many years.

Allenby His Idol

Wavell was one of Allenby's chiefs of staff during the final stages of operations against the Turks. He considers Allenby the greatest general since Wellington.

The attack on Sidi Barrani, involving secret movements on the open desert, hiding of troops and supplies by night, a feint at the enemy's front and surprise assaults on the flank, followed the strategy employed by Allenby when he rolled up the Turkish army in 1918.

He is a military man by inheritance. His grandfather was a soldier of fortune; his father was a major general.

Wavell's army career began with the famous Scottish Black Watch regiment in final phases of the Boer war. He served on the northwest frontier in India and in France, Belgium and Russia as well as in Palestine during the World war. He was on the Allies' supreme war council at Versailles.

He has been commander of Britain's Middle East forces since the outbreak of the present war. Carefully laid plans for joint operations with the French in defense of Suez, the naval base at Alexandria, and the oil outlet at Haifa have had to be scrapped

Bases in Eire Would Be Worth Weight in Rubies to Either Side

By DEWITT MACKENZIE.

When the European belligerents get to accusing each other of having the self-same scheme in mind, it's a fair guess that their thoughts do indeed run in the same channel.

I have a feeling that's the way the wind blows in the matter of the strategic naval bases of Eire. England and Germany are charging each other with intending to invade Ireland to occupy these ports—which would be worth their weight in rubies to either side—and personally I wouldn't bet a ha'penny that both aren't right.

It wouldn't be surprising to see the two of them, at any moment now, racing for southern Ireland to snatch these prizes. Each can use the customary explanation for such operations—that he was forced to act in order to head the other fellow off. The respective viewpoints of Britain and Nazidom are these:

Use of these bases is among England's most pressing needs to enable her to combat the grave dangers of the German submarine campaign against shipping.

Would Aid Invasion.

Should Hitler occupy strategic points in Eire, he would acquire ideal naval and air bases to strengthen his attack on British vessels. These bases also would increase Nazi chances for a successful invasion of Britain, since England would have to defend herself against attacks from both east and west.

Small wonder then that uneasy Eire should be sitting in a mighty drafty spot, with no better place to go. However, Prime Minister Eamon De Valera has squared his chin against abandonment of neutrality, and Eire has sworn to fight if any one of the belligerents sets foot upon a shamrock.

Mr. De Valera is a fighter. His point in refusing to allow Britain to use the bases is that if to do so turns Eire into a battlefield. London challenges the wisdom of this argument, though there can be no doubt of its truth.

The ports involved are Cobh (Queenstown) on the south coast, Bantry Bay on the southwest, and Lough Swilly on the northwest as in the world war, many brave ships are going to their deaths off this coast. The Lusitania was torpedoed off Queenstown.

Belfast Important.

In the last conflict, however, the British had these naval bases and were able to combat the U-boat menace. Were it not for England's big naval base at Belfast, in Northern Ireland, there's no telling how much of a disaster the Nazis might have piled up already with their sinkings of Allied shipping in those waters.

The British position today is serious. Germany's occupation of the Continental channel ports has enabled her to render the big harbors on the west and south shores of Britain virtually unusable, and little Atlantic commerce is able to pass even into the Irish Sea from the south.

This means that most of Britain's shipping has to take the far route around Northern Ireland and down to such ports as Glasgow and Liverpool. This route has become pretty much a life-line for beleagued Britain, doubly important because of the increasing volume of shipping from America.

The Germans are able to strike from both France and Norway at this commerce, because the British lack the Irish bases which would move her defenses some 200 miles nearer the life-line. That 200 miles might spell the difference between security and disaster.

In view of this, it is easy to see that Eire's neutrality might be shot to pieces at any time. Should the Germans invade Ireland they would immediately encounter large British forces which are maintained in Northern Ireland, as well as war planes both from Northern Ireland and Britain. Then Premier De Valera's fears would become a reality.

Stimson Warns U. S. of Invasion By Air if Britain's Navy Is Lost, Would Send Warships if Needed

JAN 7 1941

Secretary of War Asserts Nazi Invasion by Air Is Not Impossible

BACKS LEND-LEASE BILL

Says Central Purchasing Is Best for Speeding Up Work of Rearmament.

Washington, Jan. 16 (A. P.).—Secretary Stimson objected today to writing into the lease-lend bill any prohibition against releasing American warships to Britain or any other nation, because he said that he could foresee conditions which might make it desirable that the navy be transferred. He stated his position to the House Foreign Affairs Committee, before which he appeared in support of the administration measure.

He also told the committee, in response to a question by Representative Fish, Republican, of New York, that "I think we are in very great danger of an invasion by air in the contingency that the British Navy should be destroyed or surrendered."

Naval Ban Not Favored.

Under the lease-lend bill, as drawn, warships could be turned over to the British on whatever terms Mr. Roosevelt found acceptable. Secretary Stimson replied to Mr. Fish's inquiry with the explanation that the question was one for the Secretary of the Navy to answer, but that he personally would object to such a prohibition because he could envision an advantageous transfer; he did not describe the conditions under which that might occur, however.

Mr. Fish started the questioning by asking if the Secretary thought that, with this country's naval strength, any foreign nation could invade our shores.

"Not now, probably not," he replied slowly.

"Any time this year," Mr. Fish pressed.

"I wouldn't dare say any time this year."

Mr. Fish then raised the question whether the United States Army could repel a force of 50,000 troops, should they be landed.

"I think they probably could, if the gentleman means a land invasion," Secretary Stimson responded, adding that he thought that air forces would accompany an attempted invasion by infanty.

"Is there any airplane built which could span the Atlantic, drop bombs here and return across the Atlantic?" Mr. Fish inquired.

"Probably not the width of the Atlantic," Mr. Stimson said, "but they are rapidly developing in that direction and there are many bases short of the full width of the Atlantic."

Bases and Ships.

Asked by Mr. Fish what bases he had in mind, Secretary Stimson said:

"Newfoundland would be a base within easy range of all of our New England coast. North Canada would be within easy range of the New England coast."

"Does the Secretary believe," Mr. Fish continued, "that our navy would remain locked up in our harbors if any such invasion were attempted?"

"No," said Secretary Stimson, "but where is our navy now?" (Most big warships are based in the Pacific.)

Mr. Fish then inquired if there was any "fear of invasion," and the Secretary replied that there was a danger of an air invasion if the British fleet were destroyed or otherwise rendered ineffective for this country's protection.

The present situation with regard to the production of munitions, Secretary Stimson said, is much more acute than was that of 1917. At that time, he said, "the munitions factories and supplies of Great Britain were so abundant that they were able to supply, and did supply to us, the great bulk of the weapons which we then needed."

Today, he said, "instead of being assisted by other nations in obtaining the weapons needed for our own defense, we are obliged to prepare our defense in consideration of their needs." He gave this description of the program which the bill would authorize the President to undertake:

"It is the essence of the President's plan, as I understand it, that the United States shall become virtually the sole purchasing unit for war materials to be ordered from the manufacturers of this country; that there will thus be constituted one great funnel through which all the production of such materials in this country will be ordered and through which the materials, when finished, will flow from the production lines, and that, consistent with our national policy, as it has been enunciated and indorsed by the Congress and the people, we shall then be in a position to apportion these munitions among ourselves and other democracies whose defense is important to us.

A Summing Up.

"This plan has many advantages. It will eliminate the competition of many different purchasing agencies from different countries: It enables us to build a well-ordered system of placing contracts and to utilize and carry into effect the studies which have been made over a period of twenty years by our army and navy officials in preparation for just such an emergency as we now face."

Secretary Stimson summed up the measure as "a forthright and clear grant of power which will enable the President to place in operation the best and simplest plan to carry out a national policy many times stated and indorsed."

In view of the needs of Britain today as contrasted with the resources of the Allied Powers of 1917, Secretary Stimson said he thought that it was apparent that "every possible effort should be made to simplify all steps in production of the munitions which, in the last analysis, are to constitute our defense. I also think it is manifest that expeditious means and clear authority must be provided to assure the prompt distribution of munitions to countries whose defense is important to us."

No Surrender of Rights.

He added that distribution "will be governed by the interests of the defense of this country. Far from being a surrender of our rights to other interests, however worthy, the provisions of this bill make it possible to place in American hands this important power and responsibility."

The measure, Secretary Stimson continued, is not a radical departure from existing legislation. He cited the so-called Pittman act under which the President was authorized to aid American republics.

Secretary Stimson noted that the bill would permit the transfer to other countries of materials produced in governmental arsenals. Many laws permitting the disposition of governmental war materials already are in existence, he said, but never have been codified "to form a reasonable or workable program of action."

The Secretary of War was the only witness called today. Secretary of the Navy Knox and William S. Knudsen, director-general of defense production, will testify tomorrow.

Tinkham Speaks Out

Asserting that President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull had committed this country to active participation in the European and Asiatic wars, Representative Tinkham accused them in the House today of having "betrayed the American people." Mr. Tinkham, who long has opposed the administration's foreign policy, declared that the President and Mr. Hull had committed four "overt acts in committing the country to war."

The first, he asserted, was Mr. Roosevelt's quarantine speech at Chicago in 1937. "The second overt act was revealed by Winston Churchill in Parliament on March 7, 1938," he continued, saying that Mr. Churchill "disclosed that an agreement had been made for the 'pooling' of the American and British fleets in case of war in Europe."

30.24-6987 30.24-6987

The third listed by Mr. Tinkham was "a political alliance in the Pacific by assuming 'joint control' (with Britain) over the strategically located Enderbury and Canton Islands." Abrogation by this country in 1939 of its commercial treaty with Japan was cited as the fourth "overt act."

Roosevelt And Kennedy

[By the Associated Press]

Washington, Jan. 16—President Roosevelt and Joseph P. Kennedy, who has submitted his resignation as Ambassador to England, conferred at the White House today about a successor to Kennedy and about a speech the envoy will make Saturday night.

Kennedy told reporters he had no preference as to his successor. He said that there was no possibility of his retaining the post.

Kenneday said his address probably would supply "an accent on staying out of war," and that it would "explain my position entirely" on foreign policy.

Kennedy said he would appear Tuesday before the House Foreign Affairs Committee to testify on the lease-lend bill.

giving effective help to Great Britain, and perhaps to other nations defending themselves against the Axis Powers.

The fact that this policy is favored by our people seems to be abundantly established by the long series of events during the past sixteen months since the war broke out, and I do not propose to discuss it here.

It is sufficient to recall to your committee the consistent utterances of the President throughout that period on this subject; the action of the Congress in October, 1939, in repealing the automatic embargo legislation, and thus permitting Great Britain and France to purchase weapons from our nationals; the statements of the two candidates during the past campaign on the subject of rendering assistance to Great Britain; and the various well-known actions which have been taken by our government, with the obvious approval of the people as a whole, in assisting Great Britain by the transfer to it, directly and indirectly, of munitions of both military and naval character.

Calls Situation Worse than 1917

On its face this bill is intended "further to promote" the defense of the United States by facilitating this assistance to governments "whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States." With these things assumed or admitted, I propose to discuss from the standpoint of my own observation the importance of the enactment of such a bill in order to expedite the production of arms and munitions; to produce them with much greater economy to all governments involved; and eventually to provide assurance to this country that the distribution of these weapons and munitions at the time of their completion will be to the governments which can use them most effectively with reference to the defense and welfare of the United States.

In the first place, let me point out how much more acute is the present emergency and how much more dangerous is the situation of our own country with reference to the time element in the production of munitions of defense than it was in 1917. Then, as now, we were engaged in the same problem of preparing munitions for our defense.

In 1917 there was a stable front line in France, safely held by the Allies against Germany. Italy and Japan were arrayed against Germany on the side of Britain and France. The British, French, Italian and Japanese fleets were in practically complete control of all oceans of the world. Today Italy and Japan are members of the German Axis. France is conquered and her fleet is incapable of opposing the Central Powers. The British fleet today stands alone as an obstacle to German control of the Atlantic.

Britain and France Supplied

In 1917 the munition factories and supplies of Great Britain and France were so abundant that they were able to supply, and did supply us, the great bulk of the weapons which we then needed. In spite of our own efforts at munition production during the year and a half of our participation in the war, France and Britain furnished us with substantially all of the airplanes, the artillery and with a large proportion of the rifles and machine guns which we use, as well as with great stores of ammunition for those weapons.

In other wards, those countries constituted our principal arsenals and furnished us with the bulk of our most important weapons. Today many arsenals in conquered countries such as France are at the service of the Axis nations; and Great Britain, far from being in a position to come to our assistance with munitions, is compelled to enter our markets for a substantial quantity of weapons for her own use.

Instead of being assisted by other nations in obtaining the weapons needed for our own defense, we are obliged to prepare our defense in consideration of their needs. This constitutes almost a complete reversal of the situation with which we were then confronted.
